bleibe auch nach der Taufe, und sagen dazu, derselbe Artikel sei billig verdammt von Papst Leo X. Aber kaiserliche Majestät wird hier öffentlich finden, daß sie uns ganz unrecht tun; denn die Widersacher verstehen fast [sehr] wohl, auf was Meinung D. Luther das geredet will haben, da er sagt, die Erbsünde bleibe nach der Taufe. Er hat allzeit klar also geschrieben, daß die heilige Taufe die ganze Schuld und Erbpflicht der Erbsünde wegnimmt und austilgt, wiewohl das Material (wie sie es nennen) der Sünde, nämlich die böse Reigung und Lust, bleibt. Darüber in allen seinen Schriften setzt er noch dazu vom selben Material, daß der Heilige Geist, welcher gegeben wird durch die Taufe, anfängt, inwendig die übrigen bösen Lüfte täglich zu töten und zu löschen, und bringt ins Herz ein neues Licht, einen neuen Sinn und Mut. Auf die Meinung redet auch Augustinus, da er also sagt: „Die Erbsünde wird in der Taufe vergeben, nicht daß sie nicht mehr sei, sondern daß sie nicht zugerechnet werde.“ Da bekennet Augustinus öffentlich, daß die Sünde in uns bleibt, wiewohl sie uns nicht zugerechnet wird. Und dieser Spruch Augustini hat den Lehrern hernach so wohl gefallen, daß er auch im Dekret angezogen wird. Und wider Iulianus sagt Augustinus: „Das Gesez, das in unsern Gliedern ist, ist weggetan durch die geistliche Wiedergeburt und bleibt doch im Fleische, welches ist sterblich. Es ist hinweggetan, denn die Schuld ist ganz los durch das Sakrament, dadurch die Gläubigen neugeboren werden; und bleibt noch da, denn es wirkt böse Lüfte, wider welche kämpfen die Gläubigen.“ Daß D. Luther so hält und lehrt, können ansechten, sondern selbst bekennen müssen, die Wahrheit nicht ansechten, sondern selbst bekennen müssen, die Wahrheit unterzubrüden, so an Christum glauben, nicht wird zugerechnet: doch an ihr selbst ist es gleichwohl wahrlich eine Sünde, des Todes und ewiger Verdammnis schuldig.

Aber weiter disputieren die Widersacher, daß die böse Lust eine Last und aufgelegte Strafe sei und sei nicht eine solche Sünde, die des Todes und Verdammnis schuldig [sei]. Darnider sagt D. Luther, es sei eine solche verdammliche Sünde. Ich habe hier oben gesagt, daß Augustinus auch solches meldet, die Erbsünde sei die angeborene böse Lust. Soll dieses übel geredet sein, mögen sie es mit Augustino ausfechten. Darüber sagt Paulus Röm. 7, 23: „Die Sünde erkannte ich nicht ohne durch das Gesez; denn ich wußte nichts von der Lust, wo das Gesez nicht gesagt hätte: Laß dich nicht gelüsten.“ Da sagt je Paulus dürre heraus: Ich wußte nicht, daß die Lust Sünde war usw. Item: „Ich sehe ein ander Gesez in meinen Gliedern, das da widerstreitet dem Gesez in meinem Gemüte und nimmt mich gefangen in der Sünde Gesez, welches ist in meinen Gliedern.“ Dieses sind Pauli helle, gewisse Worte und klare Sprüche; da vermag keine Glosse, kein listiges Fündlein nichts wider; diese Sprüche werden alle Teufel, alle Menschen nicht mögen [können] umstoßen. Da nennt er klar die böse Lust eine remains after Baptism." They add that this article was justly condemned by Leo X. But His Imperial Majesty will find on this point a manifest slander. For our adversaries know in what sense Luther intended this remark, that original sin remains after Baptism. He always wrote thus, namely, that Baptism removes the guilt of original sin, although the material, as they call it, of the sin, i. e., concupiscence, remains. He also added in reference to the material that the Holy Ghost, given through Baptism, begins to mortify the concupiscence, and creates new movements [a new light, a new sense and spirit] in man. In the same manner, Augustine also speaks, who says: Sin is remitted in Baptism, not in such a manner that it no longer exists, but so that it is not imputed. Here he confesses openly that sin exists, i. e., that it remains, although it is not imputed. And this judgment was so agreeable to those who succeeded him that it was recited also in the decrees. Also against Julian, Augustine says: The Law, which is in the members, has been annulled by spiritual regeneration, and remains in the mortal flesh. It has been annulled because the guilt has been remitted in the Sacrament, by which believers are born again; but it remains, because it produces desires, against which believers contend. Our adversaries know that Luther believes and teaches thus, and while they cannot reject the matter, they nevertheless pervert his words, in order by this artifice to crush an innocent man.

But they contend that concupiscence is a penalty, and not a sin [a burden and imposed penalty, and is not such a sin as is subject to death and condemnation]. Luther maintains that it is a sin. It has been said above that Augustine defines original sin as concupiscence. If there be anything disadvantageous in this opinion, let them quarrel with Augustine. Besides Paul says, Rom. 7, 7. 23: I had not known lust (concupiscence), except the Law had said, Thou shalt not covet. Likewise: I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. These testimonies can be overthrown by no sophistry. [All devils, all men cannot overthrow them.] For they clearly call concupiscence sin, which, nevertheless, is not imputed to those who are in Christ, although by nature it is a matter worthy of death where it is not forgiven. Thus, beyond all controversy, the Fathers believe. For Augustine, in a long discussion, refutes the opinion of those who thought that concupiscence in man is not a fault, but an adiaphoron, as color of the body or ill health is said to be an adiaphoron [as to have a black or a white body is neither good nor evil].

But if the adversaries will contend that the fomes [or evil inclination] is an adiaphoron, not only many passages of Scripture, but simply the entire Church [and all the Fathers] will contradict them. For [even if not entire consent, but only the inclination and desire be there] who ever dared to say clesia. Quis enim unquam ausus est dicere haec esse ἀδιάρπαγα, etiamsi perfectus consensus non accederet: dubitare de ira Dei, de gratia Dei, de Verbo Dei, irasci iudiciis Dei, indignari, quod Deus non eripit statim ex afflictionibus, fremere, quod impii meliorem fortuna utuntur quam boni, incitari ira, [R. 58 43] libidine, cupiditate gloriae, opum etc. Et haec agnoscunt in se homines pii, ut apparet in psalmis ac prophetis. Sed in scholis transulerunt huc ex philosophia prorsus alienas sententias, quod propter passiones nec boni nec mali simus, nec laudemur nec vituperemur. Item nihil esse peccatum, nisi voluntarium. Hae sententiae apud philosophos de civili iudicio dictae sunt, non de iudicio Dei. Nihil prudentius assuunt et alias sententias, naturam non esse malam. Id in loco dictum, non reprehendimus; sed non recte detorqueatur ad extenuandum peccatum originis. Et tamen hae sententiae leguntur apud scholasticos, qui intempestive commiscunt philosophicam seu civilem doctrinam de moribus cum evangelio. 44] Neque haec in scholis tantum disputantur, sed ex scholis, ut fit, efferebantur ad populum. Et hae persuasiones regnabant et alebant fiduciam humanarum virium et opprimebant cognitionem gratiae Christi. Ita 45] que Lutherus, volens magnitudinem peccati originalis et humanae infirmitatis declarare, docuit reliquias illas peccati originalis non esse sua natura in homine ἀδιάρπαγα, sed indigere gratia Christi, ne imputentur, item Spiritu Sancto, ut mortificentur.

Lüste und Gedanken inwendig nicht Sünde sind, wenn ich nicht ganz drein verwillige. Dieselben Reden und Worte in der Philosophen Büchern sind zu verstehen von äußerlicher Ehrbarkeit vor der Welt und auch [von] äußerlicher Strafe vor der Welt. Denn da ist's wahr, wie die Juristen sagen: L. cogitationis, „Gedanken sind slossfrei und straffrei“. Aber Gott erforscht die Herzen; mit Gottes Gericht und Urtheil ist's anders. Also stiden sie auch an diese Sache andere ungereimte Sprüche, nämlich: Gottes Geschöpf und die Natur könne an ihr selbst nicht böse sein. Das feste ich nicht an, wenn es irgend geredet wird, da es statthat; aber dazu soll dieser Spruch nicht angezogen werden, die Erbsünde gering zu machen. Und dieselben Sprüche der Sophisten haben viel unfälligen Schaden getan, durch welche sie die Philosophie und die Lehre, welche äußerliches Leben vor der Welt belangen, vermischen mit dem Evangelio und haben doch solches nicht allein in der Schule gelehrt, sondern auch öffentlich unterschämt vor dem Volk gepredigt. Und die ungöttlichen, irrigen, gefährlichen, schädlichen Lehren hatten in aller Welt überhandgenommen; da ward nichts gepredigt denn unser Verdienst in aller Welt; dadurch ward die Erkenntnis Christi und das Evangelium ganz unterdrückt. Derhalben hat D. Luther aus der Schrift lehren und erklären wollen, wie eine große Todesschuld die Erbsünde vor Gott sei, und wie in großem Elend wir geboren werden, und daß die übrige Erbsünde, so nach der Taufe bleibt, an ihr selbst nicht indifferens sei, sondern bedarf des Mittlers Christi, daß sie uns Gott nicht zurechne, und ohne Unterlaß des Lichtes und Wirkung des Heiligen Geistes, durch welchen sie ausgelegt und getödet werde.

46] Quamquam scholastici utrumque extenuant, peccatum ac poenam, quum docent hominem propriis viribus posse mandata Dei facere: in Genesi aliter describitur poena imposita pro peccato originis. Ibi enim non solum morti et aliis corporalibus malis subiicitur humana natura, sed etiam regno diaboli. Nam ibi, Gen. 3, 15, fertur haec horribilis sententia: Inimicitias ponam inter te et mulierem, et inter semen tuum et semen illius. Defectus et concupiscentia sunt poenae et peccata; mors et alia corporalia mala et tyrannis diaboli proprie poenae sunt. Est enim natura humana in servitutum [R. 59 tradita, et captiva a diabolo tenetur, qui eam impiis opinionibus et erroribus dementat et

Schrift dawider sein, sondern auch die ganze Kirche und alle Väter. Denn alle erfahrenen, christlichen Herzen wissen, daß diese Stüde leider uns in der Haut fteden, angeboren sind, nämlich daß wir Geld, Gut und alle andern Sachen größer denn Gott achten, sicher dahingehen und leben; item, daß wir immer nach Art fleischlicher Sicherheit also gedenken, Gottes Zorn und Ernst sei nicht so groß über die Sünde, als er doch gewiß ist; item, daß wir den edlen, unaussprechlichen Schatz des Evangelii und Veröhnung Christi nicht herzlich [von Herzen] so teuer und edel achten, als sie [er] ist; item, daß wir wider Gottes Wert und Willen murren, daß er in Trübsalen nicht bald hilft und macht's, wie wir wollen. Item, wir erfahren täglich, daß es uns wehe tut, wie auch David und alle Heiligen geklagt, daß [es] den Gottlosen in dieser Welt wohl geht. Darüber fühlen alle Menschen, wie leicht ihr Herz entbrennt, jeund mit Ehrgeiz, dann mit Grimm und Zorn, dann mit Unzucht. So nun die Widerjager selbst bekennen müssen, daß solcher Unglaube, solcher Ungehorsam wider Gott im Herzen ist, wenn schon nicht ganze Verwilligung (wie sie davon reden), sondern allein die Reizung und Lust da ist, wer will so kühn sein, daß er diese groben Stüde weder böse noch gut achte? Nun sind die klaren Palmen und klaren Worte der Propheten da, daß sie bekennen, daß sie sich also fühlen. Aber die Sophisten in Schulen haben zu dieser Sache wider die klare, öffentliche Schrift geredet und aus der Philosophie ihre eigenen Träume und Sprüche erdichtet, sagen, daß wir um der bösen Lüste willen weder böse noch gut, noch zu schelten noch zu loben sind; item, daß

Wiewohl nun die Sophisten und Scholastici anders lehren und beide von der Erbsünde und von derselben Strafe der Schrift ungemäß lehren, da sie sagen, der Mensch vermöge aus seinen Kräften Gottes Gebote zu halten, so wird doch die Strafe, so Gott auf Adams Kinder auf die Erbsünde gelegt, im ersten Buch Moses viel anders beschrieben. Denn da wird die menschliche Natur verurteilt nicht allein zum Tod und [zu] anderm leiblichen übel, sondern dem Reich des Teufels unterworfen. Denn da wird dieses schredliche Urtheil gefällt: „Ich will Feindschaft zwischen dir und dem Weibe, zwischen ihrem Samen und deinem Samen setzen“ usw. Der Mangel erster Gerechtigkeit und die böse Lust sind Sünde und Strafe. Der Tod aber und die andern leiblichen that these matters, even though perfect agreement could not be attained, were adiaphora, namely, to doubt concerning God's wrath, concerning God's grace, concerning God's Word, to be angry at the judgments of God, to be provoked because God does not at once deliver one from afflictions, to murmur because the wicked enjoy a better fortune than the good, to be urged on by wrath, lust, the desire for glory, wealth, etc.? And yet godly men acknowledge these in themselves, as appears in the Psalms and the prophets. [For all tried, Christian hearts know, alas! that these evils are wrapped up in man's skin, namely, to esteem money, goods, and all other matters more highly than God, and to spend our lives in security; again, that after the manner of our carnal security we always imagine that God's wrath against sin is not as serious and great as it verily is. Again, that we murmur against the doing and will of God, when He does not succor us speedily in our tribulations, and arranges our affairs to please us. Again, we experience every day that it hurts us to see wicked people in good fortune in this world, as David and all the saints have complained. Over and above this, all men feel that their hearts are easily inflamed, now with ambition, now with anger and wrath, now with lewdness.] But in the schools they transferred hither from philosophy notions entirely different, that, because of passions, we are neither good nor evil, we are neither deserving of praise nor blame. Likewise, that nothing is sin, unless it be voluntary [inner desires and thoughts are not sins, if I do not altogether consent thereto]. These notions were expressed among philosophers with respect to civil righteousness, and not with respect to God's judgment. [For there it is true, as the jurists say, L. cogitationis, thoughts are exempt from custom and punishment. But God searches the hearts; in God's court and judgment it is different.] With no greater prudence they add also other notions, such as, that [God's creature and] nature is not [cannot in itself be] evil. In its proper place we do not censure this; but it is not right to twist it into an extenuation of original sin. And, nevertheless, these notions are read in the works of scholastics, who inappropriately mingle philosophy or civil doctrine concerning ethics with the Gospel. Nor were these matters only disputed in the schools, but, as is usually the case, were carried from the schools to the people. And these persuasions [godless, erroneous, dangerous, harmful teachings] prevailed, and nourished confidence in human strength, and suppressed the knowledge of Christ's grace. Therefore, Luther wishing to declare the magnitude of original sin and of human infirmity [what a grievous mortal guilt original sin is in the sight of God], taught that these remnants of original sin [after Baptism] are not, by their own nature, adiaphora in man, but that, for their non-imputation, they need the grace of Christ, and, likewise for their mortification, the Holy Ghost.

Although the scholastics extenuate both sin and punishment when they teach that man, by his own strength, can fulfil the commandments of God; in Genesis the punishment, imposed on account of original sin, is described otherwise. For there human nature is subjected not only to death and other bodily evils, but also to the kingdom of the devil. For there, Gen. 3, 15, this fearful sen-

Scimus enim nos recte et cum catholica ecclesia Christi sentire. Sed si renovabunt hanc controversiam adversarii, non defuturi sunt apud nos, qui respondeant et veritati patrocinentur. Nam adversarii in hac causa magna ex parte, quid loquantur, non intelligunt. Saepe dicunt pugnantia, nec formale peccati originis nec defectus, quos vocant, recte ac dialectice expediunt. Sed nos hoc loco noluimus istorum rixas nimis subtiliter excutere. Tantum sententiam sanctorum patrum, quam et nos sequimur, communibus et notis verbis duximus esse recitandam.

Art. III. De Christo.

52] Tertium articulum probant adversarii, in quo confitemur duas in Christo naturas, videlicet naturam humanam, assumptam a Verbo in unitatem personae suae; et quod idem Christus passus sit ac mortuus, ut reconciliaret nobis Patrem; et resuscitatus, ut regnet, iustificet et sanctificet credentes etc. iuxta Symbolum Apostolorum et Symbolum Nicaenum.

Art. IV. (II.) De Iustificatione.

übel, die Tyrannei und Herrschaft des Teufels sind eigentlich die Strafen und poenae der Erbsünde. Denn die menschliche Natur ist durch die Erbsünde unter des Teufels Gewalt dahingegeben und ist also gefangen unter des Teufels Reich, welcher manchen großen, weisen Menschen in der Welt mit schrecklichem Irrtum, Regerei und anderer Blindheit betäubt und verführt und sonst die Menschen zu allerlei Lastern dahinreißt. Wie es aber nicht möglich ist, den listigen und gewaltigen Geist, Satan, zu überwinden ohne die Hilfe Christi, also können wir uns aus eigenen Kräften aus dem Gefängnis auch nicht helfen. Es ist in allen Historien vom Anfang der Welt zu sehen und zu finden, wie eine unfähig große Gewalt das Reich des Teufels sei. Man sieht, daß die Welt vom Höchsten bis zum Niedrigsten voll Gotteslästerung, voll großer Irrtümer, gottloser Lehre wider Gott und sein Wort ist. In den

Dieses, achten wir, solle die kaiserliche Majestät ihr billig lassen genug sein wider das lose, kindische, ungegründete Vorbringen der Widersacher, durch welches sie der Unsern Artikel ohne Ursache ganz unbillig anfechten. Denn sie singen, sagen, wieviel, was und wie lange sie wollen, so wissen wir eigentlich das und find's fürwahr gewiß, daß wir christlich und recht lehren und mit der gemeinen christlichen Kirche gleich stimmen und halten. Werden sie darüber weiter mutwilligen Zank einführen, so sollen sie sehen, es sollen hier, will's Gott, Leute nicht fehlen, die ihnen antworten und die Wahrheit dennoch erhalten. Denn die Widersacher wissen das mehrere Teil nicht, was sie reden. Denn wie oft reden und schreiben sie ihnen selbst Widerwärtiges? Verstehen auch ihre eigene Dialektika nicht vom Formale der Erbsünde, das ist, was eigentlich an ihrem

Artikel III. Von Christo.

Den dritten Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher gefallen, da wir bekennen, daß in Christo zwei Naturen sind, nämlich, daß Gottes Sohn die menschliche Natur hat angenommen und also Gott und Mensch eine Person, ein Christus ist; und daß derselbe für uns hat gelitten und ist gestorben, uns dem Vater zu versöhnen; und daß er auferstanden ist, daß er ein ewig Reich besitze, alle Gläubigen heilige und gerecht mache usw., wie das Credo der Apostel und Symbolum Nicaenum lehrt.

Artikel IV. (II.)

Wie man vor Gott fromm und gerecht wird.

Im vierten, fünften und sechsten und hernach im zwanzigsten Artikel verdammen die Widersacher unser Bekenntnis, daß wir lehren, daß die Gläubigen Vergebung der Sünden durch Chri-

tence is proclaimed: I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. The defects and the concupiscence are punishments and sins. Death and other bodily evils, and the dominion of the devil, are properly punishments. For human nature has been delivered into slavery, and is held captive by the devil, who infatuates it with wicked opinions and errors, and impels it to sins of every kind. But just as the devil cannot be conquered except by the aid of Christ, so by our own strength we cannot free ourselves from this slavery. Even the history of the world shows how great is the power of the devil's kingdom. The world is full of blasphemies against God and of wicked opinions, and the devil keeps entangled in these bands those who are wise and righteous [many hypocrites who appear holy] in the sight of the world. In other persons grosser vices manifest themselves. But since Christ was given to us to remove both these sins and these punishments, and to destroy the kingdom of the devil, sin and death, it will not be possible to recognize the benefits of Christ unless we understand our evils. For this reason our preachers have diligently taught concerning these subjects, and have delivered nothing that is new, but have set forth Holy Scripture and the judgments of the holy Fathers.

We think that this will satisfy His Imperial Majesty concerning the puerile and trivial sophistry with which the adversaries have perverted our article. For we know that we believe aright and in harmony with the Church catholic of Christ. But if the adversaries will renew this controversy, there will be no want among us of those who will reply and defend the truth. For in this case our adversaries, to a great extent, do not understand what they say. They often speak what is contradictory, and neither explain correctly and logically that which is essential to [i. e., that which is or is not properly of the essence of] original sin, nor what they call defects. But we have been unwilling at this place to examine their contests with any very great subtlety. We have thought it worth while only to recite, in customary and well-known words, the belief of the holy Fathers, which we also follow.

Article III: Of Christ.

The Third Article the adversaries approve, in which we confess that there are in Christ two natures, namely, a human nature, assumed by the Word into the unity of His person; and that the same Christ suffered and died to reconcile the Father to us; and that He was raised again to reign, and to justify and sanctify believers, etc., according to the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed.

Article IV (II): Of Justification.

In the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and, below, in the Twentieth Article, they condemn us, for teaching that men obtain remission of sins, not because of their own merits, but freely catorum fide in Christum. Utrumque enim damnant, et quod negamus homines propter sua merita consequi remissionem peccatorum, et quod affirmamus homines fide consequi remissionem peccatorum et fide in Christum 2) iustificari. Quum autem in hac controversia praecipuus locus doctrinae Christianae agitur, qui recte intellectus illustrat et amplificat honorem Christi et affert necessariam et uberrimam consolationem piis conscientis, rogamus, ut Caesarea Maiestas de rebus tantis clementer nos audiat. Nam adversarii, quum neque quid remissionem peccatorum, neque quid fides, neque quid gratia, neque quid iustitia sit, intelligant, misere contaminant hunc locum, et obscurant gloriam et beneficia Christi, et eripiunt piis conscientis propositas in Christo consolationes. Ut autem et confirmare confessionem nostram et diluere ea, quae adversarii obiciunt, possimus, initio quaedam praefanda sunt, ut fontes utriusque generis doctrinae, et adversariorum et nostrae, cognosci possint.

zu verstehen, was Vergebung der Sünden sei, was Glaube, was Gnade, was Gerechtigkeit sei, so haben sie diesen edeln, hochnötigen, vornehmsten Artikel, ohne welchen niemand Christum erkennen würde, jämmerlich befudelt und den hohen, theuren Schatz der Erkenntnis Christi, oder was Christus und sein Reich und Gnade sei, gar unterdrückt und den armen Gewissen einen solchen, so edeln, großen Schatz und ewigen Trost, daran es gar gelegen, jämmerlich geraubt. Daß wir aber unser Bekenntnis besträffigen und was die Widersacher vorgebracht, verlegen [widerlegen] mögen, so wollen wir zuvor erst anzeigen Grund und Ursache beiderlei Lehre, damit jeder Theil klarer zu vernehmen sei.

5) Universa Scriptura in hos duos locos praecipuos distribui debet: in legem et promissiones. Alias enim legem tradit, alias tradit promissionem de Christo, videlicet quum aut promittit Christum venturum esse, et pollicetur propter eum remissionem peccatorum, iustificationem et vitam aeternam, aut in evangelio Christus, postquam apparuit, promittit remissionem peccatorum, iustificationem et vitam aeternam. Vocamus autem legem in hac disputatione Decalogi praecepta, ubicunque illa in Scripturis leguntur. De ceremoniis et iudicialibus legibus Mosis in praesentia nihil loquimur.

7) Ex his adversarii sumunt legem, [R. 61 quia humana ratio naturaliter intelligit aliquo modo legem (habet enim idem iudicium scriptum divinitus in mente), et per legem quaerunt remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem. Decalogus autem requirit non solum externa opera civilia, quae ratio utcunque efficere potest, sed etiam requirit alia longe supra rationem posita, scilicet vere timere Deum, vere diligere Deum, vere invocare Deum, vere statuere, quod Deus exaudiat, et expectare auxilium Dei in morte, in omnibus afflictionibus; denique requirit obedientiam erga Deum in morte et omnibus afflictionibus, ne has fugiamus aut aversemur, quum Deus imponit.

allein anrufen und sonst auf nichts einigen Trost sehen. Item, daß Gesetz will haben, daß wir nicht weichen noch wanken sollen, sondern aufs allergewisseste im Herzen schließen, daß Gott bei uns sei, unser Gebet erhört, und daß unser Seufzen und Bitten Ja sei; item, daß wir von Gott noch Leben stun ohne alles Verdienst allein durch den Glauben erlangen, und verwerfen gar trotziglich beides. Erstlich, daß wir nein dazu sagen, daß den Menschen durch ihre Verdienste sollten die Sünden vergeben werden. Zum andern, daß wir halten, lehren und bekennen, daß niemand Gott versöhnt wird, niemand Vergebung der Sünden erlangt denn allein durch den Glauben an Christum. Diemeil aber solcher Zank ist über dem höchsten, vornehmsten Artikel der ganzen christlichen Lehre, also daß an diesem Artikel ganz viel gelegen ist, welcher auch zu klarem, richtigem Verstande der ganzen Heiligen Schrift vornehmlich dient und zu dem unaussprechlichen Schatz und der rechten Erkenntnis Christi allein den Weg weist, auch in die ganze Bibel allein die Tür aufthut, ohne welchen Artikel auch kein arm Gewissen einen rechten, beständigen, gewissen Trost haben oder die Reichthümer der Gnade Christi erkennen mag: so bitten wir, kaiserliche Majestät wolle von dieser großen, tapfern [ernsten], hochwichtigen Sache nach Rathurst und gnädiglich uns hören. Denn diemeil die Widersacher gar nicht verstehen noch wissen, was durch diese Worte in der Schrift

Die ganze Schrift beide Alten und Neuen Testaments wird in die zwei Stücke geteilt und lehrt diese zwei Stücke, nämlich Gesetz und göttliche Verheißungen. Denn an etlichen Orten hält sie uns vor das Gesetz, an etlichen bietet sie Gnade an durch die herrlichen Verheißungen von Christo; als, wenn im Alten Testament die Schrift verheißt den zukünftigen Christum und bietet ewigen Segen, Venedelung, ewiges Heil, Gerechtigkeit und ewiges Leben durch ihn an, oder im Neuen Testament, wenn Christus, fieder [seitdem] er gekommen ist auf Erden, im Evangelio verheißt Vergebung der Sünden, ewige Gerechtigkeit und ewiges Leben. Hier aber, an dem Orte, nennen wir das Gesetz die zehn Gebote Gottes, wo dieselben in der Schrift gelesen werden. Von den Ceremonien und den Gesetzen der Gerichtshandel wollen wir hier nicht reden.

Von diesen zwei Stücken nehmen nun die Widersacher das Gesetz vor sich. Denn diemeil das natürliche Gesetz, welches mit dem Gesetz Moses oder [den] zehn Geboten übereinstimmt, in aller Menschen Herzen angeboren und geschrieben ist, und also die Vernunft eitschermachen die zehn Gebote fassen und verstehen kann, will sie wähnen, sie habe genug am Gesetz, und durchs Gesetz könne man Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Die zehn Gebote aber erfordern nicht allein ein äußerlich ehrbar Leben oder gute Werke, welche die Vernunft eitschermachen vermag zu tun, sondern erfordern etwas viel Höheres, welches über alle menschlichen Kräfte, über alles Vermögen der Vernunft ist; nämlich will das Gesetz von uns haben, daß wir Gott sollen mit ganzem Ernst von Herzensgrund fürchten und lieben, ihn in allen Räten for Christ's sake, through faith in Christ. [They reject quite stubbornly both these statements.] For they condemn us both for denying that men obtain remission of sins because of their own merits, and for affirming that, through faith, men obtain remission of sins, and through faith in Christ are justified. But since in this controversy the chief topic of Christian doctrine is treated, which, understood aright, illumines and amplifies the honor of Christ [which is of especial service for the clear, correct understanding of the entire Holy Scriptures, and alone shows the way to the unspeakable treasure and right knowledge of Christ, and alone opens the door to the entire Bible], and brings necessary and most abundant consolation to devout consciences, we ask His Imperial Majesty to hear us with forbearance in regard to matters of such importance. For since the adversaries understand neither what the remission of sins, nor what faith, nor what grace, nor what righteousness is, they sadly corrupt this topic, and obscure the glory and benefits of Christ, and rob devout consciences of the consolations offered in Christ. But that we may strengthen the position of our Confession, and also remove the charges which the adversaries advance against us, certain things are to be premised in the beginning, in order that the sources of both kinds of doctrine, i. e., both that of our adversaries and our own, may be known.

All Scripture ought to be distributed into these two principal topics, the Law and the promises. For in some places it presents the Law, and in others the promise concerning Christ, namely, either when [in the Old Testament] it promises that Christ will come, and offers, for His sake, the remission of sins, justification, and life eternal, or when, in the Gospel [in the New Testament], Christ Himself, since He has appeared, promises the remission of sins, justification, and life eternal. Moreover, in this discussion, by Law we designate the Ten Commandments, wherever they are read in the Scriptures. Of the ceremonies and judicial laws of Moses we say nothing at present.

Of these two parts the adversaries select the Law, because human reason naturally understands, in some way, the Law (for it has the same judgment divinely written in the mind); [the natural law agrees with the law of Moses, or the Ten Commandments] and by the Law they seek the remission of sins and justification. Now, the Decalog requires not only outward civil works, which reason can in some way produce, but it also requires other things placed far above reason, namely, truly to fear God, truly to love God, truly to call upon God, truly to be convinced that God hears us, and to expect the aid of God in death and in all afflictions; finally, it requires obedience to God, in death and all afflictions, so that we may not flee from these, or refuse them when God imposes them.

und allerlei Trost erwarten sollen mitten im Tode, in allen Anfechtungen seinem Willen uns gänzlich [an]heimgeben, in Tod und Trübsal nicht von ihm fliehen, sondern ihm gehorsam sein, gerne alles tragen und leiden, wie es uns geht.

9) Hic scholastici secuti philosophos tantum docent iustitiam rationis, videlicet civilia opera, et affingunt, quod ratio sine Spiritu Sancto possit diligere Deum supra omnia. Nam donec humanus animus otiosus est, nec sentit iram aut iudicium Dei, fingere potest, quod velit Deum diligere, quod velit propter Deum benefacere. Ad hunc modum docent homines mereri remissionem peccatorum, faciendo quod est in se, hoc est, si ratio dolens de peccato eliciat actum dilectionis Dei, aut 10) bene operetur propter Deum. Et haec opinio, quia naturaliter blanditur hominibus, peperit et auxit multos cultus in ecclesia, vota monastica, abusus missae, et subinde alii alios cultus atque observationes hac opinione ex- 11) cogitaverunt. Et ut fiduciam talium operum alerent atque augerent, affirmaverunt Deum necessario gratiam dare sic operanti, necessitate non coactionis, sed immutabilitatis.

achtet und verdienen möchten, hat unzählig viel mißbräuchliche Gottesdienste in der Kirche angerichtet und geursacht, als [da] sind die Klostergebäude, Mißbräuche der Messe, wie denn solches unzählig, immer ein Gottesdienst über den andern, aus diesem Irrtum erdacht ist. Und daß nur solch Vertrauen auf unsere Verdienste und Werke immer weiter ausgebreitet worden, haben sie unerschämmt dürfen sagen und schließen, Gott der Herr müsse von Not Gnade geben denjenigen, die also gute Werke tun, nicht daß er gezwungen wäre, sondern da dieß die Ordnung also sei, die Gott nicht übergehe noch ändere.

12) In hac opinione multi magni et perniciosi errores haerent, quos longum esset enumerare. Tantum illud cogit prudens lector: Si haec est iustitia Christiana, quid interest inter philosophiam et Christi doctrinam? Si meremur remissionem peccatorum his nostris actibus elicitis, quid praestat [R. 62] Christus? Si iustificari possumus per rationem et opera rationis, quorsum opus est 13) Christo aut regeneratione? Et ex his opinionibus iam eo prolapsa res est, ut multi irrideant nos, qui docemus aliam iustitiam 14) praeter philosophicam quaerendam esse. Audivimus quosdam pro concione, ablegato evangelio, Aristotelis ethica enarrare. Nec errabant isti, si vera sunt, quae defendunt adversarii. Nam Aristoteles de moribus civilibus adeo scripsit erudite, nihil ut de his requi- 15) rendum sit amplius. Videmus exstare libellos, in quibus conferuntur quaedam dicta Christi cum Socratis, Zenonis et aliorum dictis, quasi ad hoc venerit Christus, ut traderet leges quasdam; per quas mereremur remissionem peccatorum, non acciperemus 16) gratis propter ipsius merita. Itaque si recipimus hic adversariorum doctrinam, quod mereamur operibus rationis remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, nihil iam intererit inter iustitiam philosophicam, aut certe pharisaicam, et Christianam.

selbst einen großen Prediger gehört, welcher Christi und des Evangeliums nicht gedacht und Aristotelis „Ethicorum“ predigte; heißt das nicht kindisch, närrisch unter Christen gepredigt? Aber ist der Widerfacher Lehre wahr, so ist das „Ethicorum“ ein löstlich Predigtbuch und eine feine neue Bibel. Denn von äußerlich ehrbarem Leben wird nicht leicht jemand besser schreiben denn Aristoteles. Wir sehen, daß etliche Hochgelehrte haben Bücher geschrieben, darin sie anzeigen, als stimmten die Worte Christi und die Sprüche Sokratis und Zenonis sein zusammen, gleich als sei Christus gekommen, daß er gute Gesetze und Gebote gebe, durch welche wir Vergebung der Sünden verdienen sollten, und nicht

Hier haben die Scholastici den Philosophis gefolgt, und wenn sie wollen sagen, wie man vor Gott fromm wird, lehren sie allein eine Gerechtigkeit und Frömmigkeit, da ein Mensch äußerlich vor der Welt ein ehrbar Leben führt und gute Werke tut, und erdichten diesen Traum dazu, daß die menschliche Vernunft ohne den Heiligen Geist vermöge Gott über alles zu lieben. Denn wohl ist's wahr, wenn ein Menschenherz müßig ist und nicht in Anfechtungen, und diem Weil es Gottes Zorn und Gericht nicht fühlt, so mag es einen solchen Traum ihm erdichten, als liebe es Gott über alles und tue viel Gutes, viele Werke um Gottes willen; aber es ist eitel Heuchelei. Und auf die Weise haben doch die Widerfacher gelehrt, daß die Menschen Vergebung der Sünden verdienen, wenn sie so viel tun, als an ihnen ist, das ist, wenn die Vernunft ihr läßt die Sünde leid sein und erdichtet einen Willen dazu, Gott zu lieben. Und diese Meinung und irrige Lehre, diem Weil die Leute natürlich dazu geneigt sind, daß ihre Verdienste und Werke vor Gott etwas ge-

Und in diesen Stücken, eben in dieser Lehre, sind viel andere große, ganz schädliche Irrtümer und schredliche Väterungen Gottes begriffen und verborgen, welche alle bei Namen zu erzählen jezt zu lang wäre. Allein das wolte doch um Gottes willen ein jeglicher christlicher Leser bedenken: Können wir durch solche Werke vor Gott fromm und Christen werden, so wolte ich gerne hören und versucht alle euer Bestes, hier zu antworten), was doch für Unterschied sein wolte zwischen der Philosophen und Christi Lehre. So wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen mögen durch solche unsere Werke oder actus elicitos, was hilft uns dann Christus? Können wir heilig und fromm vor Gott werden durch natürliche Vernunft und unsere eigenen guten Werke, was [be]dürfen wir denn des Blutes und Todes Christi, oder daß wir durch ihn neugeboren werden, wie Petrus 1 Petr. 1, 18 ff. jagt? Und aus dem [ge]fährlichen Irrtum (diem Weil man solchen öffentlich in Schulen gelehrt und auf den Predigtstühlen getrieben), ist es leider dahin geraten, daß auch große Theologen zu Löwen, Paris usw. von keiner andern christlichen Frömmigkeit oder Gerechtigkeit gewußt haben (obwohl alle Buchstaben und Sylben im Paulo anders lehren) denn von der Frömmigkeit, welche die Philosophie lehrt. Und so es uns billig fremd sein sollte, und wir billig sie verachten sollten, verachten sie uns, ja verspotten Paulum selbst. Also gar ist der schändliche, greuliche Irrtum eingerissen. Ich habe

Here the scholastics, having followed the philosophers, teach only a righteousness of reason, namely, civil works, and fabricate besides that without the Holy Ghost reason can love God above all things. For, as long as the human mind is at ease, and does not feel the wrath or judgment of God, it can imagine that it wishes to love God, that it wishes to do good for God's sake. [But it is sheer hypocrisy.] In this manner they teach that men merit the remission of sins by doing what is in them, i. e., if reason, grieving over sin, elicit an act of love to God, or for God's sake be active in that which is good. And because this opinion naturally flatters men, it has brought forth and multiplied in the Church many services, monastic vows, abuses of the mass; and, with this opinion the one has, in the course of time, devised this act of worship and observances, the other that. And in order that they might nourish and increase confidence in such works, they have affirmed that God necessarily gives grace to one thus working, by the necessity not of constraint, but of immutability [not that He is constrained, but that this is the order which God will not transgress or alter].

In this opinion there are many great and pernicious errors, which it would be tedious to enumerate. Let the discreet reader think only of this: If this be Christian righteousness, what difference is there between philosophy and the doctrine of Christ? If we merit the remission of sins by these elicit acts [that spring from our mind], of what benefit is Christ? If we can be justified by reason and the works of reason, wherefore is there need of Christ or regeneration [as Peter declares, 1 Pet. 1, 18 ff.]? And from these opinions the matter has now come to such a pass that many ridicule us because we teach that an other than the philosophic righteousness must be sought after. [Alas! it has come to this, that even great theologians at Louvain, Paris, etc., have known nothing of any other godliness or righteousness (although every letter and syllable in Paul teaches otherwise) than the godliness which philosophers teach. And although we ought to regard this as a strange teaching, and ought to ridicule it, they rather ridicule us, yea, make a jest of Paul himself.] We have heard that some, after setting aside the Gospel, have, instead of a sermon, explained the ethics of Aristotle. [I myself have heard a great preacher who did not mention Christ and the Gospel, and preached the ethics of Aristotle. Is this not a childish, foolish way to preach to Christians?] Nor did such men err if those things are true which the adversaries defend [if the doctrine of the adversaries be true, the Ethics is a precious book of sermons, and a fine new Bible]. For Aristotle wrote concerning civil morals so learnedly that nothing further concerning this need be demanded. We see books extant in which certain sayings of Christ are compared with the sayings of Socrates, Zeno, and others, as though Christ had come for the purpose of delivering certain laws through which we might merit the remission of sins, as though we did not receive this gratuitously, because of His merits. Therefore, if we here receive the doctrine of the adversaries, that by the works of reason we merit the remission of sins and justification, there will be no difference between philosophic, or certainly pharisaic, and Christian righteousness.

vielmehr Gnade und Frieden Gottes zu verkünden und den Heiligen Geist auszuteilen durch sein Verdienst und Blut. Darum so wir der Widersacher Lehre annehmen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden verdienen mögen aus Vermögen natürlicher Vernunft und [durch] unsere Werke, so sind wir schon arketisch und nicht kristlich, und ist kein Unterschied zwischen ehrbarem, heidnischem, zwischen pharisaischem und kristlichem Leben, zwischen der Philosophie und dem Evangelio.

17] Quamquam adversarii, ne Christum omnino praetereant, requirunt notitiam historiae de Christo et tribuunt ei, quod meruerit nobis dari quandam habitum, sive, ut ipsi vocant, primam gratiam, quam intelligunt habitum esse inclinantem, ut facilius diligamus Deum, exiguum tamen est, quod huic habitui tribuunt, quia fingunt actus voluntatis ante habitum illum et post illum habitum eiusdem speciei esse. Fingunt voluntatem posse diligere Deum; sed habitus ille tamen exstimulat, ut idem faciat libentius. Et iubent mereri hunc habitum primum per praecedentia merita; deinde iubent mereri operibus legis incrementum illius habitus et 18] vitam aeternam. Ita sepeliunt Christum, ne eo mediatore utantur homines, et propter ipsum sentiant se gratis accipere remissionem peccatorum et reconciliationem, sed [R. 63] somnient se propria impletione legis mereri remissionem peccatorum et propria impletionem legis coram Deo iustos reputari; quum tamen legi nunquam satisfiat, quum ratio nihil faciat nisi quaedam civilia opera, interim neque timeat Deum, neque vere credat se Deo curae esse. Et quamquam de habitu illo loquuntur, tamen sine iustitia fidei neque existere dilectio Dei in hominibus, neque quid sit dilectio Dei, intelligi potest.

gebung der Sünden durch ihn erlangen, sondern bringen ihre Träume auf, als könnten wir durch gute Werke und des Gesetzes Werke Vergebung der Sünden verdienen, so doch die ganze Schrift sagt, daß wir das Gesetz nicht vermögen zu erfüllen oder zu halten. Und so die Vernunft am Gesetz nichts ausgerichtet, denn daß sie allein äußerliche Werke tut, im Herzen aber fürchtet sie Gott nicht, so glaubt sie auch nicht, daß Gott ihrer wahrnehme. Und wiewohl sie von dem habitus also reden, so ist es doch gewiß, daß ohne den Glauben an Christum rechte Gottesliebe in keinem Herzen sein kann; so kann auch niemand verstehen, was Gottes Liebe ist, ohne den Glauben.

19] Et quod fingunt discrimen inter meritum congrui et meritum condigni, ludunt tantum, ne videantur aperte πελαγιστεύειν. Nam si Deus necessario dat gratiam pro merito congrui, iam non est meritum congrui, sed meritum condigni. Quamquam quid dicant, non vident. Post habitum illum dilectionis fingunt, hominem de condigno mereri. Et tamen iubent dubitare, utrum adsit habitus. Quomodo igitur sciunt, utrum de congruo an 20] de condigno mereantur? Sed tota haec res conficta est ab otiosis hominibus, qui non morant, quomodo contingat remissio peccatorum, et quomodo in iudicio Dei et terroribus conscientiae fiducia operum nobis excutitur. Securi hypocritae semper indicant se de condigno mereri, sive adsit habitus ille, sive non adsit, quia naturaliter confidunt homines propria iustitia; sed conscientiae perterrefactae ambigunt et dubitant, et subinde alia opera quaerunt et cumulant, ut acquiescant. Hae nunquam sentiunt se de condigno mereri, et ruunt in desperationem, nisi audiant praeter doctrinam legis evangelium de gratuita remissione peccatorum et iustitia fidei.

Wiewohl nun die Widersacher, damit sie des Namens Christi nicht gar als die gottlosen, rohen Heiden schweigen, also vom Glauben reden, daß sie sagen, es sei eine Erkenntnis der Historie von Christo, und wiewohl sie von Christo auch dennoch etwas sagen, nämlich daß er uns verdient habe einen habitum oder, wie sie es nennen, primam gratiam, die erste Gnade, welche sie achten für eine Reigung, dadurch wir dennoch Gott leichter denn sonst lieben können: so ist es doch eine schwache, geringe, kleine, schlechte Wirkung, die Christus also hätte, oder die durch solchen habitus geschähe. Denn sie sagen nichtsdestoweniger, daß die Werke unserer Vernunft und Willens, ehe derselbe habitus da ist, und auch danach, wenn derselbe habitus da ist, eiusdem speciei, das ist, vor und nach einerlei und ein Ding sei. Denn sie sagen, daß unsere Vernunft und menschlicher Wille an ihm selbst vermöge, Gott zu lieben, allein der habitus bringe eine Reigung, daß die Vernunft dasselbe, das sie zuvor wohl vermag, desto lieber und leichter tue. Darum lehren sie auch, daß derselbe habitus müsse verdient werden durch unsere vorgehenden Werke, und daß wir durch die Werke des Gesetzes Vermehrung solcher guten Reigung und das ewige Leben verdienen. Also verbergen uns die Leute Christum und begraben ihn aufs neue, daß wir ihn nicht für einen Mittler erkennen können. Denn sie schweigen gar, daß wir lauter aus Gnaden, ohne Verdienst Ver-

Daß sie aber einen Unterschied erdichten unter dem meritum congrui und meritum condigni, unter dem gebührlchen Verdienst und rechtem, ganzem Verdienst, spielen und zanken sie allein mit Worten, damit sie sich nicht öffentlich als Pelagianer merken lassen. Denn so Gott von Not muß Gnade geben um Gebührverdienst, so ist es nicht Gebührverdienst, sondern eine rechte Pflicht und ganz Verdienst, wiewohl sie selbst nicht wissen, was sie sagen. Denn sie erdichten und träumen, daß, wenn der habitus der Liebe Gottes (davon oben gesagt), da ist, so verdiene der Mensch gebührlch oder de congruo [de condigno, mit ganzem Verdienst] die Gnade Gottes, und sagen doch, es könne niemand so gewiß sein, ob derselbe habitus da sei. Nun hört, liebe Herren, wie wissen sie denn, oder wann wissen sie es, ob sie gebührlch oder durch ganz Verdienst, für voll oder halb, unserm Herrgott seine Gnade abverdienen? Aber, ach lieber Herr Gott! das sind eitel kalte Gedanken und Träume müßiger, heillosen, unerfahrener Leute, welche die Bibel nicht viel in Praktiken bringen, die gar nicht wissen noch erfahren, wie einem Sünder ums Herz ist, was Ansechtungen des Todes oder des Teufels sind, die gar nicht wissen, wie rein wir alles Verdienstes, aller Werke vergessen, wenn das Herz

Although the adversaries, not to pass by Christ altogether, require a knowledge of the history concerning Christ, and ascribe to Him that it is His merit that a habit is given us, or, as they say, prima gratia, "first grace," which they understand as a habit, inclining us the more readily to love God; yet, what they ascribe to this habit is of little importance [is a feeble, paltry, small, poor operation, that would be ascribed to Christ], because they imagine that the acts of the will are of the same kind before and after this habit. They imagine that the will can love God; but nevertheless this habit stimulates it to do the same the more cheerfully. And they bid us first merit this habit by preceding merits; then they bid us merit by the works of the Law an increase of this habit and life eternal. Thus they bury Christ, so that men may not avail themselves of Him as a Mediator, and believe that for His sake they freely receive remission of sins and reconciliation, but may dream that by their own fulfilment of the Law they merit the remission of sins, and that by their own fulfilment of the Law they are accounted righteous before God; while, nevertheless, the Law is never satisfied, since reason does nothing except certain civil works, and, in the mean time, neither [in the heart] fears God, nor truly believes that God cares for it. And although they speak of this habit, yet, without the righteousness of faith, neither the love of God can exist in man, nor can it be understood what the love of God is.

Their feigning a distinction between meritum congrui and meritum condigni [due merit and true, complete merit] is only an artifice in order not to appear openly to Pelagianize. For, if God necessarily gives grace for the meritum congrui [due merit], it is no longer meritum congrui, but meritum condigni [a true duty and complete merit]. But they do not know what they are saying. After this habit of love [is there], they imagine that man can acquire merit de condigno. And yet they bid us doubt whether there be a habit present. How, therefore, do they know whether they acquire merit de congruo or de condigno [in full, or half]? But this whole matter was fabricated by idle men [But, good God! these are mere inane ideas and dreams of idle, wretched, inexperienced men, who do not much reduce the Bible to practise], who did not know how the remission of sins occurs, and how, in the judgment of God and terrors of conscience, trust in works is driven out of us. Secure hypocrites always judge that they acquire merit de condigno, whether the habit be present or be not present, because men naturally trust in their own righteousness; but terrified consciences waver and hesitate, and then seek and accumulate other works in order to find rest. Such consciences never think that they acquire merit de condigno, and they rush into despair unless they hear, in addition to the doctrine of the Law, the Gospel concerning the gratuitous remission of sins and the righteousness of faith. [Thus some stories are told that when the Gottes Zorn fühlt, oder das Gewissen in Ängsten ist. Die sicheren, unerfahrenen Leute gehen wohl immer dahin in dem Wahn, als verdienten sie mit ihren Werken de congruo Gnade. Denn es ist ohne das uns angeboren natürlich, daß wir von uns selbst und unsern Werken gern etwas viel wollten halten. Wenn aber ein Gewissen recht seine Sünde und Jammer fühlt, so ist aller Schmerz, so sind alle Spielgebanten aus, und ist eitel großer, rechter Ernst; da läßt sich kein Herz noch Gewissen stillen noch zufriedensstellen, sucht allerlei Werke und aber[mals] Werke und wollte gern Gewißheit, wollte gern Grund fühlen und gewiß auf etwas fußen und ruhen. Aber dieselben erschrockenen Gewissen fühlen wohl, daß man de condigno noch de congruo nichts verdienen kann, sinken bald dahin in Verzagen und Verzweiflung, wenn ihnen nicht ein anderes Wort denn des Gesetzes Lehre, nämlich das Evangelium von Christo, daß der für uns gegeben ist, gepredigt wird. Daher weiß man etliche Historien, daß die Barfüßermönche, wenn sie etlichen guten Gewissen an [in] der Todesstunde lange haben umsonst ihren Orden und gute Werke gelobt, daß sie zuletzt haben müßen ihres Ordens und St. Franzisten schweigen und dies Wort sagen: Lieber Mensch, Christus ist für dich gestorben! Das hat in Ängsten erquickt und erlöhlt, Frieden und Trost allein gegeben.

21) Ita nihil docent adversarii nisi iustitiam rationis aut certe legis, in quam intuentur sicut Iudaei in velatam Mosis faciem, et in securis hypocritis, qui putant se legi satisfacere, excitant praesumptionem et inanem fiduciam operum et contemptum gratiae Christi. Econtra pavidas conscientias adiungunt ad desperationem, quae operantes [R. 64 cum dubitatione nunquam possunt experiri, quid sit fides et quam sit efficax; ita ad extremum penitus desperant.

22) Nos autem de iustitia rationis sic sentimus, quod Deus requirat eam, et quod propter mandatum Dei necessario sint facienda honesta opera, quae Decalogus praecipit, iuxta illud Gal. 3, 24: Lex est paedagogus; item 1 Tim. 1, 9: Lex est iniustis posita. Vult enim Deus coerceri carnales illa civili disciplina, et ad hanc conservandam dedit leges, litteras, doctrinam, magistratus, poenas. Et 23) potest hanc iustitiam utcumque ratio suis viribus efficere, quamquam saepe vincitur imbecillitate naturali et impellente diabolo ad 24) manifesta flagitia. Quamquam autem huic iustitiae rationis libenter tribuimus suas laudes; nullum enim maius bonum habet haec natura corrupta, et recte inquit Aristoteles: Neque hesperum neque luciferum formosiores esse iustitia [Aristoteles, Ethicorum ad Nicomachum, lib. V. c. 3: Πολύκις κρατίστη τῶν ἀρετῶν εἶναι δοκεῖ ἡ δικαιοσύνη, καὶ οὐδ' ἑσπερος οὐδ' ἑώς οὕτω θανναστός], ac Deus etiam ornat eam corporalibus praemiis: tamen non debet cum contumelia Christi laudari.

25) Falsum est enim, quod per opera nostra mereamur remissionem peccatorum.

26) Falsum est et hoc, quod homines reputentur esse iusti coram Deo propter iustitiam rationis.

27) Falsum est et hoc, quod ratio propriis viribus possit Deum supra omnia diligere et legem Dei facere, videlicet vere timere Deum, vere statuere, quod Deus exaudiat, velle obedire Deo in morte et aliis ordinationibus Dei, non concupiscere aliena etc., etsi civilia opera efficere ratio potest.

Also lehren die Widersacher nichts denn eine äußerliche Frömmigkeit äußerlicher guter Werke, welche Paulus des Gesetzes Frömmigkeit nennt, und sehen also, wie die Juden, das verdeckte Angesicht Moses, tun nichts, denn daß sie in etlichen sicheren Heuchlern die Sicherheit und Härte stärken, führen die Leute auf einen Sandgrund, auf ihre eigenen Werke, dadurch Christus und das Evangelium verachtet wird, geben manchen elenden Gewissen Ursache zur Verzweiflung; denn sie tun gute Werke auf ungewissen Wahn, erfahren nimmer, wie ein groß, kräftig Ding der Glaube ist, fallen zuletzt ganz in Verzweiflung.

Wir halten und reden von der äußerlichen Frömmigkeit also, daß Gott wohl fordert und haben will ein solch äußerlich ehrbar Leben, und um Gottes Gebotes willen müssen man dieselben guten Werke tun, welche in [den] zehn Geboten werden geboten. Denn das Gesetz ist unser Zuchtmeister und das Gesetz ist den Ungerechten gegeben. Denn Gott der Herr will, daß den groben Sünden durch eine äußerliche Zucht gewehrt werde, und daßelbe zu erhalten, gibt er Gesetze, ordnet Obrigkeit, gibt gelehrte, weise Leute, die zum Regiment dienen. Und also äußerlich ehrbaren Wandel zu führen, vermag etlichermaßen die Vernunft aus ihren Kräften, inwieviel sie oft durch angeborne Schwachheit und durch List des Teufels auch daran gehindert wird. Wieso ich nun einem solchen äußerlichen Leben und den guten Werken gerne so viel Lobes lasse, als ihm gebührt; denn in diesem Leben und im weltlichen Wesen ist je nichts Besseres denn Redlichkeit und Tugend, wie denn Aristoteles sagt, daß weder der Morgenstern noch Abendstern lieblicher und schöner sei denn Ehrbarkeit und Gerechtigkeit, wie denn Gott solche Tugend auch belohnt mit leiblichen Gaben: so soll man doch gute Werke und solchen Wandel nicht also hoch heben, daß es Christo zur Schmach [ge]reiche.

Denn also schließe ich und bin des gewiß: erdichtet ist's und nicht wahr, daß wir durch unsere Werke sollten Vergebung der Sünden verdienen.

Auch ist's Lüge und nicht wahr, daß ein Mensch vor Gott könne gerecht und fromm werden durch seine Werke und äußerliche Frömmigkeit.

Auch ist es Ungrund und nicht wahr, daß die menschliche Vernunft aus ihren Kräften vermögen sollte, Gott über alles zu lieben, sein Gebot zu halten, ihn zu fürchten, gewiß darauf zu stehen, daß Gott das Gebet erhöhe, Gott zu danken und gehorsam zu sein in Trübsalen und andern, was Gottes Gesetz gebietet, als, nicht fremdes Gut begehren usw. Denn das alles vermag die Vernunft nicht, inwieviel sie äußerlich ehrbares Leben und gute Werke etlichermaßen vermag.

Barefooted monks had in vain praised their order and good works to some good consciences in the hour of death, they at last had to be silent concerning their order and St. Francis, and to say: "Dear man, Christ has died for you." This revived and refreshed in trouble, and alone gave peace and comfort.]

Thus the adversaries teach nothing but the righteousness of reason, or certainly of the Law, upon which they look just as the Jews upon the veiled face of Moses; and, in secure hypocrites who think that they satisfy the Law, they excite presumption and empty confidence in works [they place men on a sand foundation, their own works] and contempt of the grace of Christ. On the contrary, they drive timid consciences to despair, which, laboring with doubt, never can experience what faith is, and how efficacious it is; thus, at last they utterly despair.

Now, we think concerning the righteousness of reason thus, namely, that God requires it, and that, because of God's commandment, the honorable works which the Decalog commands must necessarily be performed, according to the passage Gal. 3, 24: The Law was our schoolmaster; likewise 1 Tim. 1, 9: The Law is made for the ungodly. For God wishes those who are carnal [gross sinners] to be restrained by civil discipline, and to maintain this, He has given laws, letters, doctrine, magistrates, penalties. And this righteousness reason, by its own strength, can, to a certain extent, work, although it is often overcome by natural weakness, and by the devil impelling it to manifest crimes. Now, although we cheerfully assign this righteousness of reason the praises that are due it (for this corrupt nature has no greater good [in this life and in a worldly nature, nothing is ever better than uprightness and virtue], and Aristotle says aright: Neither the evening star nor the morning star is more beautiful than righteousness, and God also honors it with bodily rewards), yet it ought not to be praised with reproach to Christ.

For it is false [I thus conclude, and am certain that it is a fiction, and not true] that we merit the remission of sins by our works.

False also is this, that men are accounted righteous before God because of the righteousness of reason [works and external piety].

False also is this, that reason, by its own strength, is able to love God above all things, and to fulfil God's Law, namely, truly to fear God, to be truly confident that God hears prayer, to be willing to obey God in death and other dispensations of God, not to covet what belongs to others, etc.; although reason can work civil works.

28) Falsum est et hoc et contumeliosum in Christum, quod non peccent homines facientes praecepta Dei sine gratia.

29) Huius nostrae sententiae testimonia habemus non solum ex Scripturis, sed etiam ex patribus. Nam Augustinus copiosissime disputat contra Pelagianos, gratiam non dari propter merita nostra. Et De Natura et Gratia inquit: Si possibilitas naturalis per liberum arbitrium et ad cognoscendum, [R. 85] quomodo vivere debeat, et ad bene vivendum sufficit sibi, ergo Christus gratis mortuus est, ergo evacuatum est scandalum crucis. Cur [R. 86] non etiam ego hic exclamem? Imo exclamabo et istos increpabo dolore Christiano: Evacuati estis a Christo, qui in natura iustificamini; a gratia excidistis, Gal. 5, 4; cf. 2, 21. Ignorantes enim iustitiam Dei et vestram volentes constituere, iustitiae Dei non estis subiecti. Sicut enim finis legis, ita etiam naturae humanae vitiosae salvator Christus est ad iustitiam omni credenti. Rom. 10, 3, 4. 31) Et Ioh. 8, 36: Si vos Filius liberaverit, vere liberi eritis. Non igitur possumus per rationem liberari a peccatis et mereri remissionem peccatorum. Et Ioh. 3, 5 scriptum est: Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu, non potest introire in regnum Dei. Quodsi opus est renasci per Spiritum Sanctum, iustitia rationis non iustificat nos coram Deo, non 32) facit legem. Rom. 3, 23: Omnes carent gloria Dei, id est, carent sapientia et iustitia Dei, quae Deum agnoscit et glorificat. Item Rom. 8, 7, 8: Sensus carnis inimicitia est adversus Deum. Legi enim Dei non est subiectus ac ne potest quidem ei subiaci. Qui autem in carne sunt, Deo placere non possunt. 33) Haec adeo sunt aperta testimonia, ut non desiderent acutum intellectorem, sed attentum auditorem, ut Augustini verbis utamur, quibus ille in eadem causa usus est. Si sensus carnis est inimicitia adversus Deum, certe caro non diligit Deum; si non potest legi Dei subiaci, non potest Deum diligere. Si sensus carnis est inimicitia adversus Deum, peccat caro etiam, quum externa civilia opera facimus. Si non potest subiaci legi Dei, certe peccat, etiamsi egregia facta et digna laude 34) iuxta humanum iudicium habet. Adversarii intuentur praecepta secundae tabulae, quae iustitiam civilem continent, quam intelligit ratio. Hac contenti putant se [R. 86] legi Dei satisfacere. Interim primam tabulam non vident, quae praecipit, ut diligamus Deum, ut vere statuamus, quod Deus irascatur peccato, ut vere timeamus Deum, ut vere statuamus, quod Deus exaudiat. At humanus animus sine Spiritu Sancto aut securus contemnit iudicium Dei, aut in poena fugit et 35) odit iudicantem Deum. Itaque non obtemperat primae tabulae. Quum igitur haereant in natura hominis contemptus Dei, dubitatio de Verbo Dei, de minis et promissionibus, vere peccant homines etiam, quum honesta opera faciunt sine Spiritu Sancto, quia faciunt ea impio corde, iuxta illud Rom. 14, 23: Quicquid non est ex fide, peccatum est. Tales enim operantur cum contemptu Dei, Auch ist es erdichtet und nicht wahr und eine Lästerung wider Christum, daß diejenigen sollten ohne Sünde sein, die Gottes Gebote allein äußerlich halten ohne Geist und Gnade im Herzen.

Dieses meines Beschlusses habe ich Zeugnis nicht allein aus der Heiligen Schrift, sondern auch aus den alten Vätern. Augustinus redet und handelt solches aufs allerreichlichste wider die Pelagianer, daß die Gnade nicht gegeben wird um unsers Verdienstes willen. Und im Buche De Natura et Gratia, das ist, von der Natur und Gnade, sagt er also: „So das Vermögen der Natur durch den freien Willen genug ist, beide, zu erkennen, wie man leben soll, und also recht zu leben, so ist Christus umsonst gestorben. Warum sollte ich hier auch nicht rufen und schreien mit Paulo? Ich mag billig schreien: Ihr habt Christum verloren, die ihr durch des Gesetzes Werke gerecht werden wollt, und seid von der Gnade gefallen.“ Denn ihr erkennt die Gerechtigkeit nicht, die vor Gott gilt, und trachtet eure eigene Gerechtigkeit aufzurichten, und seid der Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, nicht unterthan. Denn wie das Ende des Gesetzes Christus ist, also ist auch der Heiland der verderbten Natur Christus. Item, Joh. 8, 36: „So euch der Sohn freimacht, so seid ihr recht frei.“ Verbalten können wir durch die Vernunft oder unsere guten Werke nicht frei werden von den Sünden oder Vergeltung der Sünden verdienen. Item, Joh. am 3, 5 steht geschrieben: „Es sei denn, daß jemand neugeboren werde aus dem Wasser und Geist, so kann er nicht in das Reich Gottes kommen.“ So nun das dazu gehört, daß wir durch den Heiligen Geist müssen neugeboren werden, so werden uns unsere guten Werke oder eigen Verdienst nicht rechtfertig machen vor Gott, so können wir das Gesetz nicht halten noch erfüllen. Item, Röm. 3, 23: „Sie find allzumal Sünder und mangeln des Ruhmes, den sie an Gott haben sollten“, das ist, ihnen mangelt die Weisheit und Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, dadurch sie Gott recht erkennen, groß achten und preisen sollten. Item, Röm. 8, 7, 8: „Fleischlich gefinnet sein, ist eine Feindschaft wider Gott, fintemal es dem Gesetz Gottes nicht unterthan ist, denn es vermag es auch nicht; die aber fleischlich gefinnet sind, mögen Gott nicht gefallen.“ Das sind so gar klare, helle Sprüche der Schrift, daß sie nicht so scharfes Verstandes bedürfen, sondern allein, daß man's lese und die klaren Worte wohl ansehe, wie auch Augustinus in der Sache sagt. Ist nun die Vernunft und fleischlich gefinnet sein eine Feindschaft wider Gott, so kann kein Mensch ohne den Heiligen Geist herzlich Gott lieben. Item, ist fleischlich gefinnet sein wider Gott, so sind wahrlich die besten guten Werke unrein und Sünde, die immer ein Adamskind tun mag. Item, kann das Fleisch Gottes Gesetz nicht unterthan sein, so sündigt wahrlich auch ein Mensch, wenn er gleich ehle, schöne, köstliche gute Werke tut, die die Welt großachtet. Die Widersacher sehen allein die Gebote an der andern Tafel Moses, die da auch von der äußerlichen Ehrbarkeit redet, welche die Vernunft besser vernimmt, und wollen wäghen, mit solchen äußerlichen guten Werken halten sie Gottes Gesetz. Sie sehen aber die erste Tafel nicht an, welche gebietet und von uns haben will, daß wir Gott herzlich sollen lieben, daran gar nicht manken noch zweifeln

False also and dishonoring Christ is this, that men do not sin who, without grace, do the commandments of God [who keep the commandments of God merely in an external manner, without the Spirit and grace in their hearts].

We have testimonies for this our belief, not only from the Scriptures, but also from the Fathers. For in opposition to the Pelagians, Augustine contends at great length that grace is not given because of our merits. And in De Natura et Gratia he says: If natural ability, through the free will, suffice both for learning to know how one ought to live and for living aright, then Christ has died in vain, then the offense of the Cross is made void. Why may I not also here cry out? Yea, I will cry out, and, with Christian grief, will chide them: Christ has become of no effect unto you whosoever of you are justified by the Law; ye are fallen from grace. Gal. 5, 4; cf. 2, 21. For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. For Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Rom. 10, 3, 4. And John 8, 36: If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. Therefore by reason we cannot be freed from sins and merit the remission of sins. And in John 3, 5 it is written: Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. But if it is necessary to be born again of the Holy Ghost, the righteousness of reason does not justify us before God, and does not fulfil the Law, Rom. 3, 23: All have come short of the glory of God, i. e., are destitute of the wisdom and righteousness of God, which acknowledges and glorifies God. Likewise Rom. 8, 7, 8: The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. These testimonies are so manifest that, to use the words of Augustine which he employed in this case, they do not need an acute understanding, but only an attentive hearer. If the carnal mind is enmity against God, the flesh certainly does not love God; if it cannot be subject to the Law of God, it cannot love God. If the carnal mind is enmity against God, the flesh sins, even when we do external civil works. If it cannot be subject to the Law of God, it certainly sins even when, according to human judgment, it possesses deeds that are excellent and worthy of praise. The adversaries consider only the precepts of the Second Table, which contain civil righteousness that reason understands. Content with this, they think that they satisfy the Law of God. In the mean time they do not see the First Table, which commands that we love God, that we declare as certain that God is angry with sin, that we truly fear God, that we declare as certain that God hears prayer. But the human heart without the Holy Ghost either in security despises God's judgment, or in neugeboren werden, alle der Art aus Adam, daß unser Herz in Sicherheit Gottes Zorn, Urteil und Dräuen verachtet, seinem Urteil und Strafen gehässig und feind ist. So nun alle Adam'stinder in so großen Sünden geboren werden, daß wir alle von Art Gott verachten, sein Wort, seine Verheißung und Dräuen in Zweifel setzen, so müssen wahrlich unsere besten guten Werke, die wir tun, ehe wir durch den Heiligen Geist neugeboren werden, sündliche und verdammte Werke vor Gott sein, wenn sie gleich vor der Welt schön sind; denn sie gehen aus einem bösen, gottlosen, unreinen Herzen, wie Paulus sagt Röm. 14, 23: „Was nicht aus dem Glauben gehet, das ist Sünde.“ Denn alle solche Wertheilige tun Werke ohne Glauben, verachten Gott im Herzen und glauben als wenig, daß Gott sich ihrer annehme, als Epifurus geglaubt hat. Die Verachtung Gottes inwendig muß je die Werke unflätig und sündlich machen, wenn sie gleich vor den Leuten schön sind; denn Gott forschet die Herzen.

36] Postremo hoc imprudentissime scribitur ab adversariis, quod homines, rei aeternae irae, mereantur remissionem peccatorum per actum elicitum dilectionis, quum impossibile sit diligere Deum, nisi prius fide apprehendatur remissio peccatorum. Non enim potest cor, vere sentiens Deum irasci, diligere Deum, nisi ostendatur placatus. Donec terret et videtur nos abicere in aeternam mortem, non potest se erigere natura humana, ut diligit 37] iratum, iudicantem et punientem. Facile est otiosis fingere ista somnia de dilectione, quod reus peccati mortalis possit Deum diligere super omnia, quia non sentiunt, quid sit ira aut iudicium Dei. At in agone conscientiae et in acie expiriter conscientia vanitatem illarum speculationum philosophicarum. 38] Paulus ait Rom. 4, 15: Lex iram operatur. Non dicit, per legem mereri homines remissionem peccatorum. Lex enim semper accusat conscientias et perterrefacit. Non igitur iustificat, quia conscientia perterrefacta lege fugit iudicium Dei. Errant [R. 67] igitur, qui per legem, per opera sua mereri se remissionem peccatorum confidunt. Haec 39] de iustitia rationis aut legis, quam adversarii docent, satis sit dixisse. Nam paulo post, quum nostram sententiam de iustitia fidei dicemus, res ipsa coget plura testimonia ponere; quae etiam proderunt ad illos errores adversariorum, quos hactenus recensuimus, evertendos.

halben macht das Gesetz niemand fromm und gerecht vor Gott; denn ein erschrocken Gewissen fleucht vor Gott und seinem Urteil. Derhalben irren diejenigen, die durch ihre Werke oder durch das Gesetz wollen verdienen Vergebung der Sünden. Dieses sei genug gesagt von der Gerechtigkeit der Wertheiligen oder der Vernunft, welche die Widersacher lehren. Denn bald hernach, wenn wir werden sagen von der Frömmigkeit und Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, die aus dem Glauben kommt, wird die Sache an ihr selbst mit sich bringen, mehr Sprüche aus der Schrift einzuführen, welche denn alle auch gleich stark brennen werden, die obangezeigten Irrtümer der Widersacher umzustößen.

Et haec promissio non habet conditionem meritorum nostrorum, sed gratis offert remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, sicut Paulus ait

Zulezt, so ist je das auch aufs närrischste und ungeschickteste von den Widersachern geredet, daß die Menschen, die auch ewiges Zornes schuldig sind, Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch die Liebe oder actum elicitum dilectionis, so es doch unmöglich ist, Gott zu lieben, wenn das Herz nicht erst durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden ergriffen hat. Denn es kann je ein Herz, das in Ängsten ist und Gottes Zorn recht fühlt, Gott nicht lieben, er gebe denn dem Herzen Lust, er tröste und erzeuge sich denn wieder gnädig. Denn diem Weil er schreit und also uns angreift, als wolle er uns in ewiger Ungnade in den ewigen Tod von sich stoßen, so muß der armen schwachen Natur das Herz und Mut entfallen und muß je vor so großem Zorn erzittern, der so greulich schreit und strast, und kann je alsdann, ehe Gott selbst tröstet, kein Fünklein Liebe fühlen. Müßige und unerfahrene Leute mögen ihnen wohl selbst einen Traum von der Liebe erdichten, darum reden sie auch so kindisch davon, daß einer, der gleich einer Tod'sünde schuldig ist, könne gleichwohl Gott über alles lieben; denn sie wissen noch nicht recht, was Sünde für eine Last, was für eine große Qual sei, Gottes Zorn fühlen. Aber fromme Herzen, die es im rechten Kampf mit dem Satan und rechten Ängsten des Gewissens erfahren haben, die wissen wohl, daß solche Worte und Gedanken eitel Gedanken, eitel Träume sind. Paulus sagt: „Das Gesetz richtet nur Zorn an“, Röm. 4, 15. Er sagt nicht, daß durch das Gesetz die Leute verdienen Vergebung der Sünden. Denn das Gesetz klagt allzeit das Gewissen an und erschreckt's. Der-punishment flees from, and hates, God when He judges. Therefore it does not obey the First Table. Since, therefore, contempt of God, and doubt concerning the Word of God, and concerning the threats and promises, inhere in human nature, men truly sin, even when, without the Holy Ghost, they do virtuous works, because they do them with a wicked heart, according to Rom. 14, 23: Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. For such persons perform their works with contempt of God, just as Epicurus does not believe that God cares for him, or that he is regarded or heard by God. This contempt vitiates works seemingly virtuous, because God judges the heart.

Lastly, it was very foolish for the adversaries to write that men who are under eternal wrath merit the remission of sins by an act of love, which springs from their mind, since it is impossible to love God, unless the remission of sins be apprehended first by faith. For the heart, truly feeling that God is angry, cannot love God, unless He be shown to have been reconciled. As long as He terrifies us, and seems to cast us into eternal death, human nature is not able to take courage, so as to love a wrathful, judging, and punishing God [poor, weak nature must lose heart and courage, and must tremble before such great wrath, which so fearfully terrifies and punishes, and can never feel a spark of love before God Himself comforts]. It is easy for idle men to feign such dreams concerning love, as, that a person guilty of mortal sin can love God above all things, because they do not feel what the wrath or judgment of God is. But in agony of conscience and in conflicts [with Satan] conscience experiences the emptiness of these philosophical speculations. Paul says, Rom. 4, 15: The Law worketh wrath. He does not say that by the Law men merit the remission of sins. For the Law always accuses and terrifies consciences. Therefore it does not justify, because conscience terrified by the Law flees from the judgment of God. Therefore they err who trust that by the Law, by their own works, they merit the remission of sins. It is sufficient for us to have said these things concerning the righteousness of reason or of the Law, which the adversaries teach. For after a while, when we will declare our belief concerning the righteousness of faith, the subject itself will compel us to adduce more testimonies, which also will be of service in overthrowing the errors of the adversaries which we have thus far reviewed.

Because, therefore, men by their own strength cannot fulfil the Law of God, and all are under sin, and subject to eternal wrath and death, on this account we cannot be freed by the Law from sin and be justified, but the promise of the remission of sins and of justification has been given us for Christ's sake, who was given for us in order that He might make satisfaction for the sins of the world, and has been appointed as the [only] Mediator and Propitiator. And this promise

Rom. 11, 6: Si ex operibus, iam non est gratia. Et alibi, Rom. 3, 21: Iustitia Dei iam manifestatur sine lege, id est, gratis offertur remissio peccatorum. Nec pendet reconciliatio 42) ex nostris meritis. Quodsi ex nostris meritis penderet remissio peccatorum et reconciliatio esset ex lege, esset inutilis. Quia enim legem non facimus, sequeretur etiam promissionem reconciliationis nunquam nobis contingere. Sic argumentatur Paulus Rom. 4, 14: Si ex lege esset hereditas, inanis esset fides et abolita promissio. Si enim promissio requireret conditionem meritorum nostrorum ac legem, quum legem nunquam faciamus, sequeretur promissionem inutilem esse.

Gesetz das Erbe ist, so ist der Glaube nichts, und die gründete auf unser Verdienst und auf das Gesetz, so daß die Verheißung vergeblich wäre.

43) Quum autem iustificatio contingat per gratuitam promissionem, sequitur, quod non possumus nos ipsi iustificare. Alioqui quorsum opus erat promittere? Quumque promissio non possit accipi nisi fide, evangelium, quod est proprie promissio remissionis peccatorum et iustificationis propter Christum, praedicat iustitiam fidei in Christum, quam non docet lex; neque haec est iustitia legis. 44) Lex enim requirit a nobis opera nostra et perfectionem nostram. Sed promissio (R. 88) offert nobis, oppressis peccato et morte, gratis reconciliationem propter Christum, quae accipitur non operibus, sed sola fide. Haec fides non affert ad Deum fiduciam priorum meritorum, sed tantum fiduciam promissionis seu 45) promissae misericordiae in Christo. Haec igitur fides specialis, qua credit unusquisque sibi remitti peccata propter Christum, et Deum placatum et propitium esse propter Christum, consequitur remissionem peccatorum et iustificat nos. Et quia in poenitentia, hoc est, in terroribus, consolatur et erigit corda, regenerat nos et affert Spiritum Sanctum, ut deinde legem Dei facere possimus, videlicet diligere Deum, vere timere Deum, vere statuere, quod Deus exaudiat, obedire Deo in omnibus afflictionibus, mortificat con- 46) cupiscentiam etc. Ita fides, quae gratis accipit remissionem peccatorum, quia opponit mediatorem et propitiorem Christum irae Dei, non opponit nostra merita aut dilectionem nostram, quae fides est vera cognitio Christi, et utitur beneficiis Christi et regenerat corda et praecedit legis impletionem. Et 47) de hac fide nulla syllaba exstat in doctrina adversariorum nostrorum. Proinde reprehendimus adversarios, quod tantum tradunt iustitiam legis, non tradunt iustitiam evangelii, quod praedicat iustitiam fidei in Christum.

Sünde, ist rechtschaffen, der gegen Gottes Zorn nicht sein Verdienst oder Werk setzt, welches ein Federlein gegen einen Sturmwind wäre, sondern der Christum den Mittler darstellt; und derselbe Glaube ist eine rechte Erkenntnis Christi. Wer also glaubt, der erkennt die große Wohlthat Christi und wird eine neue Kreatur; und ehe ein solcher Glaube im Herzen ist, kann niemand das Gesetz erfüllen. Von demselben Glauben und Erkenntnis Christi ist nicht eine Sylabe, nicht ein Tütel in allen Büchern der Widersacher. Darum schelten wir auch die Widersacher, daß sie allein das Gesetz lehren von unsern Werken und nicht das Evangelium, daß da lehrt, daß man gerecht werde, wenn man an Christum glaubt.

gebung der Sünden, wie Paulus sagt: „So aus den Werken Vergebung der Sünden ist, so ist's nicht Gnade.“ Und an einem andern Ort: „Diese Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, ist ohne Gesetz offenbart“, das ist, umsonst wird Vergebung der Sünden angeboten. Und darum liegt's nicht an unserm Verdienst, daß wir Gott verjöhnt werden. Denn wenn's an unserm Verdienst läge, Vergebung der Sünden und die Verjöhnung Gottes aus dem Gesetz wäre, so wäre es verloren und wären wir wahrlich übel Gott bereinigt und verjöhnt. Denn wir halten das Gesetz nicht und vermögen es nicht zu halten; so würde folgen, daß wir auch die zugesagte Gnade und Verjöhnung nimmermehr erlangten. Denn also schleußt Paulus zu den Römern am 4, 14: „So aus dem Verheißung ist ab.“ So sich nun die Verheißung folgte, diem Weil wir das Gesetz nicht halten können,

So wir aber vor Gott fromm und gerecht werden allein aus lauter Gnade und Barmherzigkeit, die in Christo verheißung ist, erfolgt, daß wir durch unsere Werke nicht fromm werden. Denn was wäre sonst der herrlichen göttlichen Verheißungen vonnöten, und was dürfte Paulus die Gnade so hoch heben und preisen? Derhalben lehrt, rühmt, predigt und preißt das Evangelium die Gerechtigkeit, die aus dem Glauben kommt an Christum, welche nicht eine Gerechtigkeit des Gesetzes ist. So lehrt auch das Gesetz davon nichts, und ist gar viel eine höhere Gerechtigkeit, denn des Gesetzes Gerechtigkeit ist. Denn das Gesetz fordert von uns unsere Werke und will haben, daß wir inwendig im Herzen gottesfürchtig und ganz rechtschaffen sind. Aber die göttliche Zusage, die bietet uns an, als denjenigen, die von der Sünde und Tode übermächtig sind, Hilfe, Gnade und Verjöhnung um Christus' willen, welche Gnade niemand mit Werken fassen kann, sondern allein durch den Glauben an Christum. Derselbe Glaube bringt noch schenkt Gott dem Herrn kein Werk, kein eigen Verdienst, sondern baut bloß auf lauter Gnade und weiß sich nichts zu trösten noch zu verlassen denn allein auf Barmherzigkeit, die verheißung ist in Christo. Derselbe Glaube nun, da ein jeder für sich glaubt, daß Christus für ihn gegeben ist, der erlangt allein Vergebung der Sünden um Christus' willen und macht uns vor Gott fromm und gerecht. Und diem Weil derselbe in rechtschaffener Ruhe ist, unsere Herzen auch im Schreden der Sünde und des Todes wieder aufrichtet, so werden wir durch denselben neugeboren, und kommt durch den Glauben der Heilige Geist in unser Herz, welcher unsere Herzen verneuert, daß wir Gottes Gesetz halten können, Gott recht lieben, gewißlich fürchten, nicht wanken noch zweifeln, Christus sei uns gegeben, er erhöhe unser Rufen und Bitten, und daß wir in Gottes Willen uns fröhlich geben können auch mitten im Tode. Also derselbe Glaube, der aus Gnaden umsonst empfängt und erlangt Vergebung der has not the condition of our merits [it does not read thus: Through Christ you have grace, salvation, etc., if you merit it], but freely offers the remission of sins and justification, as Paul says, Rom. 11, 6: If it be of works, then is it no more grace. And in another place, Rom. 3, 21: The righteousness of God without the Law is manifested, i. e., the remission of sins is freely offered. Nor does reconciliation depend upon our merits. Because, if the remission of sins were to depend upon our merits, and reconciliation were from the Law, it would be useless. For, as we do not fulfil the Law, it would also follow that we would never obtain the promise of reconciliation. Thus Paul reasons, Rom. 4, 14: For if they which are of the Law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect. For if the promise would require the condition of our merits and the Law, which we never fulfil, it would follow that the promise would be useless.

But since justification is obtained through the free promise, it follows that we cannot justify ourselves. Otherwise, wherefore would there be need to promise? [And why should Paul so highly extol and praise grace?] For since the promise cannot be received except by faith, the Gospel, which is properly the promise of the remission of sins and of justification for Christ's sake, proclaims the righteousness of faith in Christ, which the Law does not teach. Nor is this the righteousness of the Law. For the Law requires of us our works and our perfection. But the Gospel freely offers, for Christ's sake, to us, who have been vanquished by sin and death, reconciliation, which is received, not by works, but by faith alone. This faith brings to God, not confidence in one's own merits, but only confidence in the promise, or the mercy promised in Christ. This special faith, therefore, by which an individual believes that for Christ's sake his sins are remitted him, and that for Christ's sake God is reconciled and propitious, obtains remission of sins and justifies us. And because in repentance, i. e., in terrors, it comforts and encourages hearts, it regenerates us, and brings the Holy Ghost, that then we may be able to fulfil God's Law, namely, to love God, truly to fear God, truly to be confident that God hears prayer, and to obey God in all afflictions; it mortifies concupiscence, etc. Thus, because faith, which freely receives the remission of sins, sets Christ, the Mediator and Propitiator, against God's wrath, it does not present our merits or our love [which would be tossed aside like a little feather by a hurricane]. This faith is the true knowledge of Christ, and avails itself of the benefits of Christ, and regenerates hearts, and precedes the fulfilling of the Law. And of this faith not a syllable exists in the doctrine of our adversaries. Hence we find fault with the adversaries, equally because they teach only the righteousness of the Law, and because they do not teach the righteousness of the Gospel, which proclaims the righteousness of faith in Christ.

Quid Sit Fides Iustificans.

48] Adversarii tantum fingunt fidem esse notitiam historiae, ideoque docent eam cum peccato mortali posse existere. Nihil igitur loquuntur de fide, qua Paulus toties dicit homines iustificari, quia, qui reputantur iusti coram Deo, non versantur in peccato mortali. Sed illa fides, quae iustificat, non est [R. 69] tantum notitia historiae, sed est assentiri promissioni Dei, in qua gratis propter Christum offertur remissio peccatorum et iustificatio. Et ne quis suspicetur tantum notitiam esse, addemus amplius: est velle et accipere oblatam promissionem remissionis peccatorum et iustificationis.

ganzem Herzen die Zusage Gottes für gewiß und wahr halte, durch welche mir angeboten wird ohne mein Verdienst Vergebung der Sünden, Gnade und alles Heil durch den Mittler Christum. Und damit daß niemand wähne, es sei allein ein bloßes Wissen der Historie, so setze ich das dazu: Der Glaube ist, daß sich mein ganzes Herz desselben Schatzes annimmt, und ist nicht mein Tun, nicht mein Schenken noch Geben, nicht mein Werk oder Bereiten; sondern daß ein Herz sich des tröstet und ganz darauf verläßt, daß Gott uns schenkt, uns gibt, und wir ihm nicht, daß er uns mit allem Schatz der Gnade in Christo überschüttet.

49] Ac facile potest cerni discrimen inter hanc fidem et inter iustitiam legis. Fides est largela, quae accipit a Deo oblata beneficia; iustitia legis est largesia, quae offert Deo nostra merita. Fide sic vult coli Deus, ut ab ipso accipiamus ea, quae promittit et offert.

50] Quod autem fides significet non tantum historiae notitiam, sed illam fidem, quae assentitur promissioni, aperte testatur Paulus, qui ait Rom. 4, 16, iustitiam ideo ex fide esse, ut sit firma promissio. Sentit enim promissionem non posse accipi nisi fide. Quare inter se correlative comparat et connectit promissionem et fidem. Quamquam facile erit iudicare, quid sit fides, si Symbolum consideremus, ubi certe ponitur hic articulus: Remissionem peccatorum. Itaque non satis est credere, quod Christus natus, passus, resuscitatus sit, nisi addimus et hunc articulum, qui est causa finalis historiae: Remissionem peccatorum. Ad hunc articulum referri cetera oportet, quod videlicet propter Christum, non propter nostra merita, donetur 52] nobis remissio peccatorum. Quid enim opus erat Christum dari pro peccatis nostris, si nostra merita pro peccatis nostris possunt satisfacere?

53] Quoties igitur de fide iustificante loquimur, sciendum est haec tria obiecta concurrere: promissionem, et quidem gratuitam, et merita Christi tamquam pretium et propitiationem. Promissio accipitur fide; gratuitum excludit nostra merita et significat tantum per misericordiam offerri beneficium; Christi merita sunt pretium, quia oportet esse aliquam certam propitiationem pro peccatis 54] nostris. Scriptura crebro misericordiam implorat. Et sancti patres saepe dicunt nos

Was der Glaube sei, der vor Gott fromm und gerecht macht.

Die Widersacher wollen wähnen, der Glaube sei dieses, daß ich wisse oder gehört habe die Historie von Christo; darum lehren sie, ich könne wohl glauben, ob ich gleich in Todssünden sei. Darum, von dem rechten christlichen Glauben, davon Paulus an allen Orten so oft redet, daß wir durch den Glauben vor Gott fromm werden, da wissen oder reden sie gar nichts von. Denn welche vor Gott heilig und gerecht geachtet werden, die sind je nicht in Todssünden. Darum, der Glaube, welcher vor Gott fromm und gerecht macht, ist nicht allein dieses, daß ich wisse die Historie, wie Christus geboren, gelitten u. u. (das wissen die Teufel auch), sondern ist die Gewißheit oder das gewisse, starke Vertrauen im Herzen, da ich mit

Aus diesem ist leicht zu merken Unterschied zwischen dem Glauben und zwischen der Frömmigkeit, die durchs Geheh kommt. Denn der Glaube ist ein solcher Gottesdienst und latría, da ich mir schenken und geben lasse. Die Gerechtigkeit aber des Gehehes ist ein solcher Gottesdienst, der da Gott anbietet unsere Werke. So will Gott nun durch den Glauben also geehrt sein, daß wir von ihm empfangen, was er verheißt und anbietet.

Daß aber der Glaube nicht allein sei die Historie wissen, sondern der da festhält die göttlichen Verheißungen, zeigt Paulus genugsam an, der da sagt zu den Römern am 4, 16: „Verhalben muß die Gerechtigkeit durch den Glauben kommen, auf daß die Verheißung fest bleibe.“ Da heftet und verbindet Paulus die zwei also zusammen, daß, wo Verheißung ist, da muß auch Glaube sein u. u.; und wiederum correlative, wo Verheißung ist, da fordert Gott auch Glauben. Wiewohl noch klarer und schlechter zu zeigen ist, was der Glaube, der da gerecht macht, sei, wenn wir unser eigen Credo und Glauben ansehen. Denn im Symbolo steht je dieser Artikel: Vergebung der Sünden. Darum ist's nicht genug, daß ich wisse oder glaube, daß Christus geboren ist, gelitten hat, auferstanden ist, wenn wir nicht auch diesen Artikel, darum das alles endlich geschehen, glauben, nämlich: Ich glaube, daß mir die Sünden vergeben seien. Auf den Artikel muß das andere alles gezogen werden, nämlich, daß um Christus' willen, nicht um meines Verdienstes willen, uns die Sünden vergeben werden. Denn was wäre not, daß Gott Christum für unsere Sünden gäbe, wenn unser Verdienst für unsere Sünden könnte genügen?

Verhalben, sooft wir reden von dem Glauben, der gerecht macht, oder fide iustificante, so sind allezeit diese drei Stücke oder obiecta beieinander: erstlich, die göttliche Verheißung, zum andern, daß dieselbe umsonst, ohne Verdienst Gnade anbietet, für das dritte, daß Christi Blut und Verdienst der Schatz ist, durch welchen die Sünde bezahlt ist. Die Verheißung wird durch den Glauben empfangen; daß sie aber ohne Verdienst Gnade anbietet, da geht alle unsere Würdigkeit und Verdienst unter und zu Boden, und

What Is Justifying Faith?

The adversaries feign that faith is only a knowledge of the history, and therefore teach that it can coexist with mortal sin. Hence they say nothing concerning faith, by which Paul so frequently says that men are justified, because those who are accounted righteous before God do not live in mortal sin. But that faith which justifies is not merely a knowledge of history, [not merely this, that I know the stories of Christ's birth, suffering, etc. (that even the devils know,)] but it is to assent to the promise of God, in which, for Christ's sake, the remission of sins and justification are freely offered. [It is the certainty or the certain trust in the heart, when, with my whole heart, I regard the promises of God as certain and true, through which there are offered me, without my merit, the forgiveness of sins, grace, and all salvation, through Christ the Mediator.] And that no one may suppose that it is mere knowledge, we will add further: it is to wish and to receive the offered promise of the remission of sins and of justification. [Faith is that my whole heart takes to itself this treasure. It is not my doing, not my presenting or giving, not my work or preparation, but that a heart comforts itself, and is perfectly confident with respect to this, namely, that God makes a present and gift to us, and not we to Him, that He sheds upon us every treasure of grace in Christ.]

And the difference between this faith and the righteousness of the Law can be easily discerned. Faith is the λατρεία [divine service], which receives the benefits offered by God; the righteousness of the Law is the λατρεία [divine service] which offers to God our merits. By faith God wishes to be worshiped in this way, that we receive from Him those things which He promises and offers.

Now, that faith signifies, not only a knowledge of the history, but such faith as assents to the promise, Paul plainly testifies when he says, Rom. 4, 16: Therefore it is of faith, to the end the promise might be sure. For he judges that the promise cannot be received unless by faith. Wherefore he puts them together as things that belong to one another, and connects promise and faith. [There Paul fastens and binds together these two, thus: Wherever there is a promise faith is required, and conversely, wherever faith is required, there must be a promise.] Although it will be easy to decide what faith is if we consider the Creed, where this article certainly stands: The forgiveness of sins. Therefore it is not enough to believe that Christ was born, suffered, was raised again, unless we add also this article, which is the purpose of the history: The forgiveness of sins. To this article the rest must be referred, namely, that for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our merits, forgiveness of sins is given us. For what need was there that Christ was given for our sins if for our sins our merits can make satisfaction?

As often, therefore, as we speak of justifying faith, we must keep in mind that these das Wort Barmherzigkeit in der Schrift oder in den Vätern finden, sollen wir wissen, daß da vom Glauben gelehrt wird, der die Vergebung solcher Barmherzigkeit sagt. Wiederum, sooft die Schrift vom Glauben redet, meint sie den Glauben, der auf lauter Gnade baut; denn der Glaube nicht darum vor Gott fromm und gerecht macht, daß er an ihm selbst unser Werk und unser ist, sondern allein darum, daß er die verheißene, angebotene Gnade ohne Verdienst aus reichem Schatz geschenkt nimmt.

57] Et hic cultus, haec largoria, in prophetis et psalmis passim praecipue laudatur, quum tamen lex non doceat gratuitam remissionem peccatorum. Sed patres norant promissionem de Christo, quod Deus propter Christum vellet remittere peccata. Igitur quum intelligeret Christum fore pretium pro nostris peccatis, sciebant opera nostra non esse pretium rei tantae. Ideo gratuitam misericordiam et remissionem peccatorum fide accipiebant, sicut sancti in novo testamento. 58] Huc pertinent illae crebrae repetitiones misericordiae et fidei in psalmis et prophetis ut hic, Ps. 130, 3 sq.: Si iniquitates observaveris, Domine, Domine, quis sustinebit? Hic constitetur peccata, nec allegat merita sua. Addit: Quia apud te propitiatio est. Hic erigit se fiducia misericordiae Dei. Et citat promissionem: Sustinuit anima mea in verbo eius, speravit anima mea in Domino, id est, quia promisisti remissionem peccatorum, hac 59] tua promissione sustentor. Itaque et patres iustificabantur, non per legem, sed per promissionem et fidem. Ac mirum est adversarios adeo extenuare fidem, quum videant ubique pro praecipuo cultu laudari, ut Ps. 50, 15: Invoca me in die tribulationis et erigam te. Ita vult se coli, ut ab ipso accipiamus beneficia, et quidem accipiamus propter ipsius misericordiam, non propter merita nostra. Haec est amplissima consolatio in omnibus afflictionibus. Et huiusmodi consolationes abolent adversarii, quum fidem extenuant et vituperant, et tantum docent homines per opera et merita cum Deo agere.

heilig auch nicht durchs Gesetz, sondern durch Gottes Zusage und den Glauben. Und sollte wahrlich jedermann sich hoch verwundern, warum die Widersacher doch so wenig oder gar nichts vom Glauben lehren, so sie doch sehen gar nahe in allen Syllaben der Bibel, daß der Glaube für den allerhöchsten, edelsten, heiligsten, größten, angenehmsten, besten Gottesdienst gelobt und gepriesen wird. Also sagt er im 50. Psalm: „Rufe mich an in der Zeit der Noth, und ich will dich erretten.“ Also nun und durch diese Weise will Gott uns bekannt werden. Also will er geehrt sein, daß wir von ihm Gnade, Heil, alles Gute nehmen und empfangen sollen, und nämlich aus Gnaden, nicht um unser Verdienstes willen. Diese Erkenntnis ist gar eine edle Erkenntnis und ein großmächtiger Trost in allen Anfechtungen, leiblichen und geistlichen, es komme zu sterben oder zu leben, wie fromme Herzen wissen; und denselben edeln, theuren, gewissen Trost rauben und nehmen die Widersacher den armen Gevissen, wenn sie vom Glauben so kalt, so verächtlich reden und lehren und dagegen mit Gott, der hohen Majestät, durch unser elend, bettelisch Werk und Verdienst handeln.

Quod Fides in Christum Iustificet.

61] Primum, ne quis putet nos de otiosa notitia historiae loqui, dicendum est, [R. 71 quomodo contingat fides. Postea ostendemus, et quod iustificet et quomodo hoc intelligi wird gepriesen die Gnade und große Barmherzigkeit. Das Verdienst Christi aber ist der Schatz; denn es muß je ein Schatz und edles Pfand sein, dadurch die Sünden aller Welt bezahlt sind. Die ganze Schrift, Alten und Neuen Testaments, wenn sie von Gott und Glauben redet, braucht viel dieses Wortes: Güte, Barmherzigkeit, misericordia. Und die heiligen Väter in allen ihren Büchern sagen alle, daß wir durch Gnade, durch Güte, durch Vergebung selig werden. Sooft wir nun den Vätern finden, sollen wir wissen, daß da vom Glauben gelehrt wird, der die Vergebung solcher Barmherzigkeit sagt. Wiederum, sooft die Schrift vom Glauben redet, meint sie den Glauben, der auf lauter Gnade baut; denn der Glaube nicht darum vor Gott fromm und gerecht macht, daß er an ihm selbst unser Werk und unser ist, sondern allein darum, daß er die verheißene, angebotene Gnade ohne Verdienst aus reichem Schatz geschenkt nimmt.

Und solcher Glaube und Vertrauen auf Gottes Barmherzigkeit wird als der größte, heiligste Gottesdienst gepriesen, sonderlich in Propheten und Psalmen. Denn wiewohl das Gesetz nicht vornehmlich predigt Gnade und Vergebung der Sünden wie das Evangelium, so sind doch die Verheißungen von dem künftigen Christo von einem Patriarchen auf den andern geerbt, und [sie] haben gemußt, auch geglaubt, daß Gott durch den gebenedeiten Samen, durch Christum, wollte Segen, Gnade, Heil und Trost geben. Darum, so sie verstanden, daß Christus sollte der Schatz sein, dadurch unsere Sünden bezahlt werden, haben sie gewußt, daß unsere Werke eine solche große Schuld nicht bezahlen könnten. Darum haben sie Vergebung der Sünden, Gnade und Heil ohne alles Verdienst empfangen und sind durch den Glauben an die göttliche Verheißung, an das Evangelium von Christo, selig geworden als wohl als wir oder die Heiligen im Neuen Testament. Daher kommt's, daß diese Worte: Barmherzigkeit, Güte, Glaube, so oft in Psalmen und Propheten wiederholt werden. Als im 130. Psalm: „So du willst, Herr, achthaben auf Missethat, Herr, wer wird bestehen?“ Da bekennet David seine Sünde, rühmt nicht viel Verdienst, sagt auch weiter: „Denn bei dir ist Vergebung, daß man dich fürchte.“ Da küßt er wieder Trost und verläßt sich auf Gnade und Barmherzigkeit, verläßt sich auf die göttliche Zusage und spricht: „Meine Seele harret des Herrn, und ich warte auf sein Wort.“ Und aber[maß]: „Meine Seele wartet doch auf den Herrn.“ Das ist, diemeil du verheißest hast Vergebung der Sünden, so halte ich mich an die Zusage, so verlasse und wage ich mich auf die gnädige Verheißung. Darum werden die heiligen Patriarchen vor Gott fromm und

Daß der Glaube an Christum gerecht macht.

Für das erste, daß niemand gedенke, wir reden von einem schlechten Wissen oder Erkenntnis der Historie von Christo, so müssen wir erstlich sagen, wie es zugeht, wie ein Herz anfängt zu glauben, three objects concur: the promise, and that, too, gratuitous, and the merits of Christ, as the price and propitiation. The promise is received by faith; the "gratuitous" excludes our merits, and signifies that the benefit is offered only through mercy; the merits of Christ are the price, because there must be a certain propitiation for our sins. Scripture frequently implores mercy; and the holy Fathers often say that we are saved by mercy. As often, therefore, as mention is made of mercy, we must keep in mind that faith is there required, which receives the promise of mercy. And, again, as often as we speak of faith, we wish an object to be understood, namely, the promised mercy. For faith justifies and saves, not on the ground that it is a work in itself worthy, but only because it receives the promised mercy.

And throughout the prophets and the psalms this worship, this latreia, is highly praised, although the Law does not teach the gratuitous remission of sins. But the Fathers knew the promise concerning Christ, that God for Christ's sake wished to remit sins. Therefore, since they understood that Christ would be the price for our sins, they knew that our works are not a price for so great a matter [could not pay so great a debt]. Accordingly, they received gratuitous mercy and remission of sins by faith, just as the saints in the New Testament. Here belong those frequent repetitions concerning mercy and faith, in the psalms and the prophets, as this, Ps. 130, 3 sq.: If Thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Here David confesses his sins, and does not recount his merits. He adds: But there is forgiveness with Thee. Here he comforts himself by his trust in God's mercy, and he cites the promise: My soul doth wait, and in His Word do I hope, i. e., because Thou hast promised the remission of sins, I am sustained by this Thy promise. Therefore the fathers also were justified, not by the Law, but by the promise and faith. And it is amazing that the adversaries extenuate faith to such a degree, although they see that it is everywhere praised as an eminent service, as in Ps. 50, 15: Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee. Thus God wishes Himself to be known, thus He wishes Himself to be worshiped, that from Him we receive benefits, and receive them, too, because of His mercy, and not because of our merits. This is the richest consolation in all afflictions [physical or spiritual, in life or in death, as all godly persons know]. And such consolations the adversaries abolish when they extenuate and disparage faith, and teach only that by means of works and merits men treat with God [that we treat with God, the great Majesty, by means of our miserable, beggarly works and merits].

That Faith in Christ Justifies.

In the first place, lest any one may think that we speak concerning an idle knowledge of the history, we must declare how faith is obtained [how the heart begins to believe].

debeat, et diluamus ea, quae adversarii ob-62] iiciunt. Christus Lucae ultimo, 24, 47, iubet praedicare poenitentiam in nomine suo et remissionem peccatorum. Evangelium enim arguit omnes homines, quod sint sub peccato, quod omnes sint rei aeternae irae ac mortis, et offert propter Christum remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, quae fide accipitur. Praedicatio poenitentiae, quae arguit nos, perterrefacit conscientias veris et seriis terroribus. In his corda rursus debent concipere consolationem. Id fit, si credant promissioni Christi, quod propter ipsum habeamus remissionem peccatorum. Haec fides in illis pavoribus erigens et consolans accipit remissionem peccatorum, iustificat et vivificat.
Nam illa consolatio est nova et spiritualis 63] vita. Haec plana et perspicua sunt, et a piis intelligi possunt, et habent ecclesiae testimonia. Adversarii nusquam possunt dicere, quomodo detur Spiritus Sanctus. Fin-gunt sacramenta conferre Spiritum Sanctum ex opere operato sine bono motu accipientis, quasi vero otiosa res sit donatio Spiritus Sancti.

denn derselbe starke Trost ist eine neue Geburt und ein neu Leben. Dieses ist je einfältig und klar ge-redet; so wissen fromme Herzen, daß es also ist; so sind die Exempel, daß es mit allen Heiligen so gegangen von Anfang, in der Kirche vorhanden, wie an der Belehrung Pauli und Augustini zu sehen ist. Die Widersacher haben nichts Gewisses, können nirgend recht sagen oder verständig davon reden, wie der Heilige Geist gegeben wird. Sie erdichten ihnen eigene Träume, daß durch schlecht leib-
lich Empfangen und Brauchen der Sacramente, ex opere operato, die Leute Gnade erlangen und den
Heiligen Geist empfangen, wennschon das Herz gar nicht dabei ist; gleich als sei das Licht des Heiligen Geistes so ein schlecht, schwach, nichtig Ding.

potest dici de conversione impii seu de modo regenerationis simplicius et clarius? Proferrant unum commentarium in Sententias [Petri

66] de modo regenerationis dixerit. Quum
loquuntur de habitu dilectionis, fingunt [R. 72

agi, Deus non potest apprehendi nisi per Verbum. Ideo iustificatio fit per Verbum, sicut Paulus inquit Rom. 1, 16: Evangelium est po-tentia Dei ad salutem omni credenti. Item 10, 17: Fides est ex auditu. Et vel hinc argu-mentum sumi potest, quod fides iustificet, quia, si tantum fit iustificatio per Verbum et Verbum tantum fide apprehenditur, sequi-maiores rationes. Haec diximus hactenus, ut modum regenerationis ostenderemus, et ut in-telligi posset, qualis sit fides, de qua loquimur.

nicht handeln, so läßt sich Gott nicht erkennen, suchen wie Paulus sagt: „Das Evangelium ist eine Kraft Römern am 10: „Der Glaube ist aus dem Gehör.“ Und aus dem allein sollte je klar genug sein, daß wir allein durch den Glauben vor Gott fromm werden. Denn so wir allein durchs Wort Gottes zu Gott kommen und gerecht werden, und das Wort kann niemand fassen denn durch den Glauben, so folgt, daß der Glaube gerecht macht. Doch sind andere Ursachen, die sich zu dieser Sache besser reimen.
Dieses habe ich bisher gesagt, daß ich anzeige, wie es zugeht, wie wir neugeboren werden, und daß man versprechen möchte, was der Glaube ist oder nicht ist, davon wir reden.

wie es zum Glauben kommt. Danach wollen wir anzeigen, daß derselbe Glaube vor Gott fromm macht, und wie das zu verstehen sei, und wollen der Widersacher Gründe eigentlich klar und gewiß ablehnen. Christus befiehlt Lucä am letzten, zu predigen „Buße und Vergebung der Sünden“. Das Evangelium auch kraft alle Menschen, daß sie in Sünden geboren seien, und daß sie alle schuldig des ewigen Zorns und Todes seien, und bietet ihnen an Vergebung der Sünden und Gerechtigkeit durch Christum. Und dieselbe Ver-gebung, Versöhnung und Gerechtigkeit wird durch den Glauben empfangen. Denn die Predigt von der Buße oder diese Stimme des Evangelii:
„Bessert euch, tut Buße“, wenn sie recht in die Herzen geht, erschreckt sie die Gewissen und ist nicht ein Scherz, sondern ein groß Schrecken, da das Gewissen seinen Jammer und Sünde und Gottes Zorn fühlt. In dem Erschrecken sollen die Herzen wieder Trost suchen. Das geschieht, wenn sie glauben an die Verheißung von Christo, daß wir durch ihn Vergebung der Sünden haben.
Der Glaube, welcher in solchem Fagen und Schrecken die Herzen wieder aufrichtet und tröstet, empfängt und empfindet Vergebung der Sünden, macht gerecht und bringt Leben;

ein neu Leben. Dieses ist je einfältig und klar ge-redet; so wissen fromme Herzen, daß es also ist; so sind die Exempel, daß es mit allen Heiligen so
gegangen von Anfang, in der Kirche vorhanden, wie an der Belehrung Pauli und Augustini zu
sehen ist. Die Widersacher haben nichts Gewisses, können nirgend recht sagen oder verständig davon reden, wie der Heilige Geist gegeben wird. Sie erdichten ihnen eigene Träume, daß durch schlecht leib-
lich Empfangen und Brauchen der Sacramente, ex opere operato, die Leute Gnade erlangen und den
Heiligen Geist empfangen, wennschon das Herz gar nicht dabei ist; gleich als sei das Licht des Heiligen Geistes so ein schlecht, schwach, nichtig Ding.

So wir aber von einem solchen Glauben reden, welcher nicht ein müßiger Gedanke ist, sondern ein solch neues Licht, Leben und Kraft im Herzen, welche Herz, Sinn und Mut verneuert, einen an-dern Menschen und neue Kreatur aus uns macht, nämlich ein neues Licht und Wert des Heiligen Geistes: so versteht ja männiglich, daß wir nicht von solchem Glauben reden, dabei Todsünde ist, wie die Widersacher vom Glauben reden. Denn wie will Licht und Finsternis beieinander sein?
Denn der Glaube, wo er ist, und diemeil er da ist, gebiert er gute Früchte, wie wir danach sagen wollen. Dieses ist je mit klaren, deutlichen, einfältigen Worten geredet, wie es zugeht, wenn ein Sünder recht sich belehrt, was die neue Geburt sei oder nicht sei. Trotz [sei] nun geboten alle den Sententiariis, ob sie unter den unzähligen Kommenten, Glossen und Stribenten über Sententia-rum [des Petrus Lombardus] einen können vor-bringen, der e i n Wörtlein, e i n e n Züttel recht davon setzt, wie es zugeht, wenn ein Sünder be-lehrt wird. Wenn sie von der Liebe reden, oder wenn sie von ihrem habitu dilectionis reden, so bringen sie wohl ihre Träume vor, daß denselben habitus die Leute verdienen durch ihre Werke, reden aber gar nichts von Gottes Verheißung oder Wort, wie auch zu dieser Zeit die Wiedertäufer lehren. Nun kann man mit Gott doch je noch fassen denn allein im Wort und durchs Wort Gottes allen, die daran glauben.“ Item, zu den
Gottes, so wir allein durchs Wort Gottes zu
Gott kommen und gerecht werden, und das Wort kann niemand fassen denn durch den Glauben, so folgt, daß der Glaube gerecht macht. Doch sind andere Ursachen, die sich zu dieser Sache besser reimen.

Afterward we will show both that it justifies, and how this ought to be understood, and we will explain the objections of the adversaries. Christ, in the last chapter of Luke, 24, 47, commands that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name. For the Gospel convicts all men that they are under sin, that they all are subject to eternal wrath and death, and offers, for Christ's sake, remission of sin and justification, which is received by faith. The preaching of repentance, which accuses us, terrifies consciences with true and grave terrors. [For the preaching of repentance, or this declaration of the Gospel: Amend your lives! Repent! when it truly penetrates the heart, terrifies the conscience, and is no jest, but a great terror, in which the conscience feels its misery and sin, and the wrath of God.] In these, hearts ought again to receive consolation. This happens if they believe the promise of Christ, that for His sake we have remission of sins. This faith, encouraging and consoling in these fears, receives remission of sins, justifies and quickens. For this consolation is a new and spiritual life [a new birth and a new life]. These things are plain and clear, and can be understood by the pious, and have testimonies of the Church [as is to be seen in the conversion of Paul and Augustine]. The adversaries nowhere can say how the Holy Ghost is given. They imagine that the Sacraments confer the Holy Ghost ex opere operato, without a good emotion in the recipient, as though, indeed, the gift of the Holy Ghost were an idle matter.

But since we speak of such faith as is not an idle thought, but of that which liberates from death and produces a new life in hearts, [which is such a new light, life, and force in the heart as to renew our heart, mind, and spirit, makes new men of us and new creatures,] and is the work of the Holy Ghost; this does not coexist with mortal sin [for how can light and darkness coexist?], but, as long as it is present, produces good fruits, as we will say after a while. For concerning the conversion of the wicked, or concerning the mode of regeneration, what can be said that is more simple and more clear? Let them, from so great an array of writers, adduce a single commentary upon the Sententiae that speaks of the mode of regeneration. When they speak of the habit of love, they imagine that men merit it through works, and they do not teach that it is received through the Word, precisely as also the Anabaptists teach at this time. But God cannot be treated with, God cannot be apprehended, except through the Word. Accordingly, justification occurs through the Word, just as Paul says, Rom. 1, 16: The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Likewise 10, 17: Faith cometh by hearing. And proof can be derived even from this that faith justifies, because, if justification occurs only through the Word, and the Word is apprehended only by faith, it follows that faith justifies. But there are other and more important reasons.

We have said these things thus far in order that we might show the mode of regeneration, and that the nature of faith [what is, or is not, faith], concerning which we speak, might be understood.

60] Nunc ostendemus, quod fides iustificet. Ubi primum hoc monendi sunt lectores, quod, sicut necesse est hanc sententiam tueri, quod Christus sit mediator, ita necesse sit defendere, quod fides iustificet. Quomodo enim erit Christus mediator, si in iustificatione non utimur eo mediatore, si non sentimus, quod propter ipsum iusti reputemur? Id autem est credere, confidere meritis Christi, quod propter ipsum certo velit nobis Deus placatus esse. Item sicut oportet defendere, quod praeter legem necessaria sit promissio Christi, ita necesse est defendere, quod fides iustificet. Lex enim non potest fieri, nisi prius accepto Spiritu Sancto. Necesse est igitur defendere, quod promissio Christi necessaria sit. At haec non potest accipi nisi fide. Itaque qui negant fidem iustificare, nihil nisi legem abolito evangelio et abolito Christo docent.

daß Geseß können wir nicht erfüllen noch halten, ehe wir den Heiligen Geist empfangen. Darum muß das bestehen, daß zur Seligkeit die Verheißung Christi vonnöten ist. Dieselbe kann nun niemand fassen noch empfangen denn allein durch den Glauben. Darum diejenigen, so lehren, daß wir nicht durch den Glauben vor Gott gerecht und fromm werden, was tun die anders, denn daß sie Christum und das Evangelium unterdrücken und das Geseß lehren?

71] Sed nonnulli fortassis, quum dicitur, quod fides iustificet, intelligunt de principio, quod fides sit initium iustificationis seu praeparatio ad iustificationem, ita ut non sit ipsa fides illud, quo accepti sumus Deo, sed opera, quae sequuntur, et somniant fidem ideo valde laudari, quia sit principium. Magna enim vis est principii, ut vulgo dicunt: Αρχή ημιν παντός, ut si quis dicat, quod grammatica efficiat omnium artium doctores, quia [R. 73] praeparet ad alias artes, etiamsi sua quemque ars vere artificem efficit. Non sic de fide sentimus, sed hoc defendimus, quod proprie ac vere ipsa fide propter Christum iusti reputentur. 72] mur seu accepti Deo simus. Et quia iustificari significat ex iniustus iustos effici seu regenerari, significat et iustos pronuntiarum seu reputari. Utrouque enim modo loquitur Scriptura. Ideo primum volumus hoc ostendere, quod sola fides ex iniusto iustum efficiat, hoc est, accipiat remissionem peccatorum.

73] Offendit quosdam particula SOLA, quum et Paulus dicat Rom. 3, 28: Arbitramur hominem iustificari fide, non ex operibus; item Eph. 2, 8, 9: Dei donum est, non ex vobis neque ex operibus, ne quis gloriatur; item Rom. 3, 24: Gratis iustificati. Si displicet exclusiva SOLA, tollant etiam ex Paulo illas exclusivas: gratis, non ex operibus, donum est etc. Nam hae quoque sunt exclusivae. Excludimus autem opinionem meriti. Non excludimus Verbum aut sacramenta, ut calumniantur adversarii. Diximus enim supra fidem ex Verbo concipi, ac multo magis [74] xime ornamus ministerium Verbi. Dilectio etiam et opera sequi fidem debent. Quare non sic excluduntur, ne sequantur, sed fiducia meriti dilectionis aut operum in iustificatione excluditur. Idque perspicue ostendemus.

daß darum das Wort und [die] Sacramente sollten vergeblich sein, so es der Glaube alles allein tut, wie die Widersacher uns alles gefährlich deuten; sondern unser Verdienst daran schließen wir aus.

Nun wollen wir anzeigen, daß derselbe Glaube, und sonst nichts, uns vor Gott gerecht macht. Und erstlich will ich dieses hier den Leser warnen, gleichwie dieser Spruch muß und soll stehenbleiben, und kann ihn niemand umstoßen: Christus ist unser einziger Mittler, also kann auch diesen Spruch niemand umstoßen: Durch den Glauben werden wir rechtfertigt, ohne Werke. Denn wie will Christus der Mittler sein und bleiben, wenn wir nicht durch den Glauben uns an ihn halten als an den Mittler und also Gott versöhnt werden, wenn wir nicht gewiß im Herzen halten, daß wir um seinetwillen vor Gott gerecht geschätzt werden? Das heißt nun glauben: also vertrauen, also sich getrösten des Verdienstes Christi, daß um seinetwillen Gott gewiß uns wolle gnädig sein. Item, wie dieses klar in der Schrift ist, daß über das Geseß zur Seligkeit not ist die Verheißung Christi, also ist auch klar, daß der Glaube gerecht macht; denn das Geseß predigt nicht Vergebung der Sünden aus Gnaden. Item, Aber etliche, wenn man sagt, der Glaube macht rechtfertigt vor Gott, verstehen solches vielleicht vom Anfang, nämlich daß der Glaube sei nur der Anfang oder eine Vorbereitung zu der Rechtfertigung, also daß nicht der Glaube selbst dafürgehalten werden soll, daß wir dadurch Gott gefallen und angenehm sind, sondern daß wir Gott angenehm sind von wegen der Liebe und Werke, so folgen, nicht von wegen des Glaubens. Und solche meinen, der Glaube werde allein derhalben gelobt in der Schrift, daß er ein Anfang sei guter Werke, wie denn allezeit viel am Anfang gelegen ist. Dies aber ist nicht unsere Meinung, sondern wir lehren also vom Glauben, daß wir durch den Glauben selbst vor Gott angenehm sind. Und nachdem das Wort iustificari auf zweierlei Weise gebraucht wird, nämlich, für bekehrt werden oder neugeboren, item, für gerecht geschätzt werden, wollen wir das erst anzeigen, daß wir allein durch den Glauben aus dem gottlosen Wesen bekehrt, neugeboren und gerecht werden.

Etliche sehten groß an das Wort SOLA, so doch Paulus klar sagt zu den Römern am 3, 28: „So halten wir nun, daß der Mensch gerecht werde ohne des Geseßes Werke“; item, zu den Ephesern am 2, 8, 9: „Gottes Gabe ist es, nicht aus euch noch aus den Werken, auf daß sich nicht jemand rühme“; item, zu den Römern am 3, 24 dergleichen. So nun dieses Wort und diese exclusiva SOLA etlichen so hart entgegen ist und so übel fällt, die mögen an so vielen Orten in den Episteln Pauli auch diese Worte austragen: „aus Gnaden“; item: „nicht aus Werken“; item: „Gottes Gabe“ usw.; item: „daß sich niemand rühme“ und dergleichen; denn es sind ganz starke exclusivae. Das Wort „aus Gnaden“ schließt Verdienst und alle Werke aus, wie die Namen haben. Und durch das Wort SOLA, so wir sagen: „Allein der Glaube macht fromm“, schließen wir nicht aus das Evangelium und die Sacramente,

Now we will show that faith [and nothing else] justifies. Here, in the first place, readers must be admonished of this, that just as it is necessary to maintain this sentence: Christ is Mediator, so is it necessary to defend that faith justifies, [without works]. For how will Christ be Mediator if in justification we do not use Him as Mediator; if we do not hold that for His sake we are accounted righteous? But to believe is to trust in the merits of Christ, that for His sake God certainly wishes to be reconciled with us. Likewise, just as we ought to maintain that, apart from the Law, the promise of Christ is necessary, so also is it needful to maintain that faith justifies. [For the Law does not preach the forgiveness of sin by grace.] For the Law cannot be performed unless the Holy Ghost be first received. It is, therefore, needful to maintain that the promise of Christ is necessary. But this cannot be received except by faith. Therefore, those who deny that faith justifies, teach nothing but the Law, both Christ and the Gospel being set aside.

But when it is said that faith justifies, some perhaps understand it of the beginning, namely, that faith is the beginning of justification or preparation for justification, so that not faith itself is that through which we are accepted by God, but the works which follow; and they dream, accordingly, that faith is highly praised, because it is the beginning. For great is the importance of the beginning, as they commonly say, Ἀρχὴ ἡμῶν παντός, The beginning is half of everything; just as if one would say that grammar makes the teachers of all arts, because it prepares for other arts, although in fact it is his own art that renders every one an artist. We do not believe thus concerning faith, but we maintain this, that properly and truly, by faith itself, we are for Christ's sake accounted righteous, or are acceptable to God. And because "to be justified" means that out of unjust men just men are made, or born again, it means also that they are pronounced or accounted just. For Scripture speaks in both ways. [The term "to be justified" is used in two ways: to denote, being converted or regenerated; again, being accounted righteous.] Accordingly we wish first to show this, that faith alone makes of an unjust, a just man, i. e., receives remission of sins.

The particle alone offends some, although even Paul says, Rom. 3, 28: We conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the Law. Again, Eph. 2, 8: It is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. Again, Rom. 3, 24: Being justified freely. If the exclusive alone displeases, let them remove from Paul also the exclusives freely, not of works, it is the gift, etc. For these also are [very strong] exclusives. It is, however, the opinion of merit that we exclude. We do not exclude the Word or Sacraments, as the adversaries falsely charge us. For we have said above that faith is conceived from the Word, and we honor the ministry

Denn wir haben oben genug gesagt, daß der Glaube durchs Wort kommt; so preisen wir das Predigtamt und Wort höher und mehr denn die Widersacher; so sagen wir auch, die Liebe und Werke sollen dem Glauben folgen. Darum schließen wir die Werke durchs Wort SOLA nicht also aus, daß sie nicht folgen sollten, sondern das Vertrauen auf Verdienst, auf Werke, das schließen wir aus und sagen, sie verdienen nicht Vergebung der Sünden. Und das wollen wir noch richtiger, heller und klarer zeigen.

Quod Remissionem Peccatorum Sola Fide in Christum Consequamur.

75] Fateri etiam adversarios existimamus, quod in iustificatione primum necessaria sit remissio peccatorum. Omnes enim sub peccato sumus. Quare sic argumentamur:

76] Consequi remissionem peccatorum est iustificari iuxta illud, Ps. 32, 1: Beati, [R. 74 77] quorum remissae sunt iniquitates. Sola fide in Christum, non per dilectionem, non propter dilectionem aut opera consequimur remissionem peccatorum, etsi dilectio sequi- 78] tur fidem. Igitur sola fide iustificamur, intelligendo iustificationem, ex iniusto iustum effici seu regenerari.

79] Minor ita facile poterit declarari, si sciamus, quomodo fiat remissio peccatorum. Adversarii frigidissime disputant, utrum sint una mutatio, remissio peccatorum et infusio gratiae. Otiosi homines, quid dicerent, non habebant. In remissione peccatorum oportet in cordibus vinci terrores peccati et mortis aeternae, sicut Paulus testatur 1 Cor. 15, 56 sq.: Aculeus mortis peccatum est, potentia vero peccati lex. Gratia autem Deo, qui dat nobis victoriam per Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum. Id est, peccatum perterrefacit conscientias; id fit per legem, quae ostendit iram Dei adversus peccatum, sed vincimus per Christum. Quomodo? Fide, quum erigimus nos fiducia promissae misericordiae propter 80] Christum. Daß wir Vergebung der Sünden (allein) durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen.

Wir halten, die Widersacher müssen bekennen, daß vor allen Dingen zu der Rechtfertigung vonnöten sei Vergebung der Sünden. Denn wir sind alle unter der Sünde geboren. Darum so schließen wir nun also:

Vergabung der Sünden erlangen und haben, daselbe heißt vor Gott gerecht und fromm werden, wie der 32. Psalm sagt: „Wohl dem, dem die Übertretung vergeben ist.“ Alein aber durch den Glauben an Christum, nicht durch die Liebe, nicht um der Liebe oder Werke willen, erlangen wir Vergebung der Sünden, inwiewohl die Liebe folgt, wo der Glaube ist. Deshalb muß folgen, daß wir allein durch den Glauben gerecht werden. Denn gerecht werden heißt ja, aus einem Sünder fromm werden und durch den Heiligen Geist neugeboren werden.

Daß wir aber allein durch den Glauben, wie die minor meldet, nicht durch die Liebe Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, wollen wir jetzt klarmachen. Die Widersacher reden kindisch von diesen hohen Dingen; sie fragen, ob es einerlei Veränderung sei, Vergebung der Sünden und Eingiehung der Gnade, oder ob es zwei seien. Die müßigen, unerfahrenen Leute können doch gar nicht von diesen Sachen reden. Denn Sünde recht fühlen und Gottes Zorn, ist nicht so ein schlecht, schläfrig Ding. Wiederum, Vergebung der Sünden ergreifen ist nicht so ein schwacher Trost. Denn also sagt Paulus 1 Cor. 15, 56 f.: „Der Stachel des Todes ist die Sünde, die Kraft aber der Sünde ist das Gesetz. Gott aber sei Lob, der uns gibt Überwindung durch Jesum Christum, unsern Herrn.“ Das ist, die Sünde erschreckt das Gewissen, das geschieht durchs Gesetz, welches uns Gottes Ernst und Zorn zeigt wider die Sünde; aber wir liegen ob durch Christum. Wie geschieht das? Wenn wir glauben, wenn unsere Herzen wieder ausgerichtet werden und sich halten an die Verheißung der Gnade durch Christum. So beweisen wir nun dieses also, daß wir durch den Glauben an Christum und nicht durch Werke Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Nämlich Gottes Zorn kann nicht versöhnt noch gestillt werden durch unsere Werke, sondern allein Christus ist der Mittler und Versöhner, und um seinetwillen allein wird uns der Vater gnädig. Nun kann Christum niemand als einen Mittler fassen durch Werke, sondern allein, daß wir dem Wort glauben, welches ihn als einen Mittler predigt. Darum erlangen wir allein durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden, wenn unser Herz getröstet und ausgerichtet wird durch die göttliche Zusage, welche uns um Christus' willen angeboten wird. Item, Paulus zu den Römern am 5, 2: „Durch ihn haben wir einen Zugang zum Vater“; und sagt klar dazu: „durch den Glauben“. Also werden wir nun, und nicht anders, dem Vater versöhnt, also erlangen wir Vergebung der Sünden, wenn wir ausgerichtet wer-

of the Word in the highest degree. Love also and works must follow faith. Wherefore, they are not excluded so as not to follow, but confidence in the merit of love or of works is excluded in justification. And this we will clearly show.

That We Obtain Remission of Sins by Faith Alone in Christ.

We think that even the adversaries acknowledge that, in justification, the remission of sins is necessary first. For we all are under sin. Wherefore we reason thus:—

To attain the remission of sins is to be justified, according to Ps. 32, 1: Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven. By faith alone in Christ, not through love, not because of love or works, do we acquire the remission of sins, although love follows faith. Therefore by faith alone we are justified, understanding justification as the making of a righteous man out of an unrighteous, or that he be regenerated.

It will thus become easy to declare the minor premise [that we obtain forgiveness of sin by faith, not by love] if we know how the remission of sins occurs. The adversaries with great indifference dispute whether the remission of sins and the infusion of grace are the same change [whether they are one change or two]. Being idle men, they did not know what to answer [cannot speak at all on this subject]. In the remission of sins, the terrors of sin and of eternal death, in the heart, must be overcome, as Paul testifies, 1 Cor. 15, 56 sq.: The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the Law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. That is, sin terrifies consciences; this occurs through the Law, which shows the wrath of God against sin; but we gain the victory through Christ. How? By faith, when we comfort ourselves by confidence in the mercy promised for Christ's sake. Thus, therefore, we prove the minor proposition. The wrath of God cannot be appeased if we set against it our own works, because Christ has been set forth as a Propitiator, so that, for His sake, the Father may become reconciled to us. But Christ is not apprehended as a Mediator except by faith. Therefore, by faith alone we obtain remission of sins, when we comfort our hearts with confidence in the mercy promised for Christ's sake. Likewise Paul, Rom. 5, 2, says: By whom also we have access, and adds, by faith. Thus, therefore, we are reconciled to the Father, and receive remission of sins, when we are comforted with confidence in the mercy promised for Christ's sake. The adversaries regard Christ as Mediator and Propitiator for this reason, namely, that He has merited the habit of love; they do not urge us to use Him now as Mediator, but, as though Christ were altogether buried, they imagine that we have access through our own works, and, through these, merit this habit, and afterwards, by this love, come to God. Is not this to bury Christ altogether, and to take away the entire doctrine of faith? Paul, on the contrary, teaches that we have access, i. e., reconciliation, through Christ. And to show how this occurs, he adds that we have access by faith. By faith, therefore, for Christ's sake, we receive remission of sins. We cannot set our own love and our own works over against God's wrath.

Secondly. It is certain that sins are forgiven for the sake of Christ, as Propitiator, Rom. 3, 25: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation. Moreover, Paul adds: through faith. Therefore this Propitiator thus benefits us, when by faith we apprehend the mercy promised in Him, and set it against the wrath and judgment of God. And to the same effect it is written, Heb. 4, 14, 16: Seeing, then, that we have a great High Priest, etc., let us therefore come with confidence. For the Apostle bids us come to God, not with confidence in our own merits, but with confidence in Christ, as a High Priest; therefore he requires faith.

Thirdly. Peter, in Acts 10, 43, says: To Him give all the prophets witness that through His name, whosoever believeth on Him, shall receive remission of sins. How could this be said more clearly? We receive remission of sins, he says, through His name, i. e., for His sake; therefore, not for the sake of our merits, not for the sake of our contrition, attrition, love, worship, works. And he adds: When we believe in Him. Therefore he requires faith. For we cannot apprehend the name of Christ except by faith. Besides, he cites the agreement of all the prophets. This is truly to cite the authority of the Church. [For when all the holy prophets bear witness, that is certainly a glorious, great, excellent, powerful decretal and testimony.] But of this topic we will speak again after a while, when treating of "Repentance."

Fourthly. Remission of sins is something promised for Christ's sake. Therefore it cannot be received except by faith alone. For a promise cannot be received except by faith alone. Rom. 4, 16: Therefore it is of faith that it might be by grace, to the end that the promise might be sure; as though he were to say: "If the matter were to depend upon our merits, the promise would be uncertain and useless, because we never could determine when we would have sufficient merit." And this, experienced consciences can easily understand [and would not, for a thousand worlds, have our salvation depend upon ourselves]. Accordingly, Paul says, Gal. 3, 22: But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. He takes merit away from us, because he says that all are guilty and concluded under sin; then he adds that the promise, namely, of the remission of sins and of justification, is given, and adds how the promise can be received, namely, by faith. And this reasoning, derived from the nature of a promise, is the chief reasoning [a veritable rock] in Paul, and is often repeated. Nor can anything be devised or imagined whereby this argument of Paul can excogitari neque fingi quidquam potest, quo hoc Pauli argumentum everti queat. Proinde 85] non patiantur se bonae mentes depelli ab hac sententia, quod tantum fide accipiamus remissionem propter Christum. In hac habent certam et firmam consolationem adversus peccati terrores et adversus aeternam mortem et adversus omnes portas inferorum.

wiß sein und feststehen soll, wie sie nicht fehlen kann, so muß Vergebung der Sünden nicht aus unserm Verdienst sein, sonst wäre sie ungewiß, und [wir] müßten nicht, wann wir genug verdient hätten: ja, dies Argument, sage ich, und der Grund ist ein rechter Fels und fast das Stärkste im ganzen Paulus und wird gar oft erholt [wiederholt] und angezogen in allen Episteln. Es wird auch nimmermehr auf Erden ein Mensch etwas trachten und dichten oder erdenken, dadurch der einige Grund allein, wenn sonst nichts wäre, möge umgestoßen werden. Es werden auch fromme Herzen und christliche Gewissen sich in keinem Weg lassen hievon abführen, nämlich, daß wir allein durch den Glauben, um Christus' Verdienstes willen Vergebung der Sünden haben. Denn da haben sie einen gewissen, starken, ewigen Trost wider die Sünde, Teufel, Tod, Hölle. Das andere alles ist ein Sandgrund und besteht nicht in Ansehtungen.

86] Quum autem sola fide accipiamus remissionem peccatorum et Spiritum Sanctum, sola fides iustificat, quia reconciliati reputantur iusti et filii Dei, non propter suam munditiam, sed per misericordiam propter Christum, si tamen hanc misericordiam fide apprehendant. Ideoque Scriptura testatur, quod fide iusti reputemur, Rom. 3, 26. Adiciemus igitur testimonia, quae clare pronuntiant, quod fides sit ipsa iustitia, qua coram Deo iusti reputamur, videlicet, non quia sit opus per sese dignum, sed quia accipit promissionem, qua Deus pollicitus est, quod propter Christum velit propitius esse credentibus in eum, seu quia sentit, quod Christus sit nobis factus a Deo sapientia, iustitia, sanctificatio et redemptio, 1 Cor. 1, 30.

87] Paulus in Epistola ad Romanos praecipue de hoc loco disputat et proponit, [R. 77] quod gratis iustificemur fide, credentes nobis Deum placatum propter Christum. Et hanc propositionem capite tertio, quae statum universae disputationis continet, tradit: Arbitramur hominem fide iustificari, non ex operibus legis, 3, 28. Hic adversarii interpretantur ceremonias Leviticarum. At Paulus non tantum de ceremoniis loquitur, sed de tota lege. Allegat enim infra, 7, 7, ex Decalogo: Non concupisces. Et si opera moralia mereantur remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, etiam nihil opus esset Christo et promissione, et ruerent omnia illa, quae Paulus de promissione loquitur. Male etiam scriberet ad Ephesios, 2, 8, gratis nos salvatos esse, et donum Dei esse, non ex operibus. Item Paulus allegat Rom. 4, 1. 6 Abraham, allegat Davidem. At hi de circumcissione habuerunt mandatum Dei. Itaque si ulla opera iustificabant, necesse erat illa opera tunc, quum mandatum haberent, etiam iustificasse. Sed recte docet Augustinus Paulum de tota lege loqui, sicut prolixè disputat De Spiritu et Litera, ubi postremo ait: His igitur consideratis pertractatisque pro viribus, quas Dominus donare dignatur, colligimus non iustificari hominem praeceptis bonae vitae, nisi per fidem Iesu Christi [hoc est, non lege operum, sed fidei, non littera, sed spiritu, non factorum meritis, sed gratuita gratia].

unser Verdienst danieder; denn er sagt, wir sind alle schuldig des Todes und unter der Sünde beschloffen; und gedenkt der göttlichen Zusage, dadurch wir allein Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, und setzt noch weiter dazu, wie wir der Verheißung theilhaftig werden, nämlich durch den Glauben. Und dieser Grund, dieses Argument, da Paulus aus Art und Natur der göttlichen Verheißung schließt, nämlich also: So Gottes Verheißung ge-

So wir nun allein durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und den Heiligen Geist, so macht allein der Glaube vor Gott fromm. Denn diejenigen, so mit Gott versöhnt sind, die sind vor Gott fromm und Gottes Kinder, nicht um ihrer Reinigkeit willen, sondern um Gottes Barmherzigkeit willen, so sie dieselbe fassen und ergreifen durch den Glauben. Darum zeugt die Schrift, daß wir durch den Glauben vor Gott fromm werden. So wollen wir nun Sprüche erzählen, welche klar melden, daß der Glaube fromm und gerecht mache, nicht derralben, daß unser Glauben ein solch köstlich, rein Wert sei, sondern allein derralben, daß wir durch [den] Glauben und sonst mit keinem Dinge die angebotene Barmherzigkeit empfangen.

Paulus in der Epistel zu den Römern handelt vornehmlich dieses Stüd, wie ein Mensch vor Gott fromm werde, und beschließt, daß alle, die da glauben, daß sie durch Christum einen gnädigen Gott haben, ohne Verdienst durch den Glauben vor Gott fromm werden. Und diesen gewaltigen Beschluß, diese Proposition, in welcher gesagt ist die Hauptsache der ganzen Episteln, ja der ganzen Schrift, setzt er im dritten Kapitel mit dürren, klaren Worten also: „So halten wir es nun, daß der Mensch gerecht werde ohne des Gesetzes Werke, allein durch den Glauben“, Röm. 3, 28. Da wollen die Widersacher sagen, Paulus habe ausgeschlossen allein die jüdischen Ceremonien, nicht andere tugendliche Werke. Aber Paulus redet nicht allein von Ceremonien, sondern eigentlich gewiß redet er auch von allen andern Werken und von dem ganzen Gesetze oder zehn Geboten. Denn im 7. Kapitel hernach zieht er an den Spruch aus den zehn Geboten: „Laß dich nicht gelüsten!“ Und so wir durch andere Werke, welche nicht jüdische Ceremonien wären, könnten Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und dadurch Gerechtigkeit verdienen, was wäre denn Christus und seine Verheißung vonnöten? Da läge schon danieder alles, was Paulus von der Verheißung an so viel Orten redet. So schriebe auch Paulus unrecht zu den Ephesern, da er sagt Eph. 2, 8: „Ohne Verdienst, umsonst seid ihr selig worden; denn Gottes Gabe ist's, nicht aus Werken.“ Item, Paulus zieht an in der Epistel zu den Römern Abraham und David. Dieselben hatten einen Befehl und Gottes Gebot von der Beschneidung. So nun irgendbe overthrown. Wherefore let not good minds suffer themselves to be forced from the conviction that we receive remission of sins for Christ's sake, only through faith. In this they have sure and firm consolation against the terrors of sin, and against eternal death, and against all the gates of hell. [Everything else is a foundation of sand that sinks in trials.]

But since we receive remission of sins and the Holy Ghost by faith alone, faith alone justifies, because those reconciled are accounted righteous and children of God, not on account of their own purity, but through mercy for Christ's sake, provided only they by faith apprehend this mercy. Accordingly, Scripture testifies that by faith we are accounted righteous, Rom. 3, 26. We, therefore, will add testimonies which clearly declare that faith is that very righteousness by which we are accounted righteous before God, namely, not because it is a work that is in itself worthy, but because it receives the promise by which God has promised that for Christ's sake He wishes to be propitious to those believing in Him, or because He knows that Christ of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. 1, 30.

In the Epistle to the Romans, Paul discusses this topic especially, and declares that, when we believe that God, for Christ's sake, is reconciled to us, we are justified freely by faith. And this proposition, which contains the statement of the entire discussion [the principal matter of all Epistles, yea, of the entire Scriptures], he maintains in the third chapter: We conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the Law, Rom. 3, 28. Here the adversaries interpret that this refers to Levitical ceremonies [not to other virtuous works]. But Paul speaks not only of the ceremonies, but of the whole Law. For he quotes afterward (7, 7) from the Decalog: Thou shalt not covet. And if moral works [that are not Jewish ceremonies] would merit the remission of sins and justification, there would also be no need of Christ and the promise, and all that Paul speaks of the promise would be overthrown. He would also have been wrong in writing to the Ephesians, 2, 8: By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works. Paul likewise refers to Abraham and David, Rom. 4, 1. 6. But they had the command of God concerning circumcision. Therefore, if any works justified, these works must also have justified at the time that they had a command. But Augustine teaches correctly that Paul speaks of the entire Law, as he discusses at length in his book, Of the Spirit and Letter, where he says finally: These matters, therefore, having been considered and treated, according to the ability that the Lord has thought worthy to give us, we infer that man is not justified by the precepts of a good life, but by faith in Jesus Christ.

ein Werk vor Gott fromm machte, so müßten je die Werke, die dazumal Gottes Befehl hatten, auch gerecht und fromm gemacht haben. Aber Augustinus, der lehrt klar, daß Paulus von dem ganzen Geseß rede, wie er denn nach der Länge solches disputiert De Spiritu et Litera, „Von dem Geist und Buchstaben“, da er zuletzt sagt: „So wir nun dieses Stück nach [dem] Vermögen, das Gott verliehen hat, bewogen [ermögen] und gehandelt haben, so schließen wir, daß kein Mensch fromm wird durch Gebote eines guten Lebens, sondern durch den Glauben Jesu Christi.“

88] Et ne putemus temere excidisse Paulo sententiam, quod fides iustificet, longa disputatione munit et confirmat eam in quarto capite ad Romanos, et deinde in omnibus epistolis repetit. Sic ait capite quarto ad Romanos 4, 5: Operanti merces non imputatur secundum gratiam, sed secundum debitum; ei autem, qui non operatur, creditur autem in eum, qui iustificat impium, reputatur fides eius ad iustitiam. Hic clare dicit fidem ipsam imputari ad iustitiam. Fides igitur est illa res, quam Deus pronuntiat esse iustitiam, et addit gratis imputari, et negat posse gratis imputari, si propter opera deberetur. Quare excludit etiam meritum operum moralium. Nam si his deberetur iustificatio coram Deo, non imputaretur fides ad iustitiam 90] sine operibus. Et postea, Rom. 4, 9: Dicimus enim, quod Abrahae imputata est [R. 78 91] fides ad iustitiam. Capite 5, 1 ait: Iustificati ex fide, pacem habemus erga Deum, id est, habemus conscientias tranquillas et laetas 92] coram Deo. Rom. 10, 10: Corde creditur ad iustitiam. Hic pronuntiat fidem esse 93] iustitiam cordis. Ad Gal. 2, 16: Nos in Christo Iesu credimus, ut iustificemur ex fide Christi et non ex operibus legis. Ad Eph. 2, 8: Gratia enim salvati estis per fidem, et hoc non ex vobis, Dei enim donum est; non ex operibus, ne quis gloriatur.

die Gerechtigkeit des Herzens. Zu den Galatern am 2, 16: „So glauben wir auch an Christum Jesum, auf daß wir gerecht werden durch den Glauben an Christum und nicht durch's Geseßes Werke.“ Eph. 2, 8: „Denn aus Gnaden seid ihr selig worden Gottes Gabe ist es; nicht aus den Werken, auf daß sich

Und daß niemand denken darf, als sei Paulus dieses Wort („der Mensch wird gerecht allein durch den Glauben“) entfahren, so führt er das nach der Länge aus im 4. Kapitel zu den Römern und erholt solches in allen seinen Episteln. Denn also sagt er am 4. Kapitel: „Dem, der mit Werken umgethet, wird der Lohn nicht aus Gnaden zugerechnet, sondern aus Pflicht; dem aber, der nicht mit Werken umgethet, glaubet aber an den, der die Gottlosen gerecht macht, dem wird sein Glaube gerechnet zur Gerechtigkeit.“ So ist's nun aus den Worten klar, daß der Glaube das Ding und das Wesen ist, welches er Gottes Gerechtigkeit nennt, und setzt dazu, sie werde aus Gnaden zugerechnet, und sagt, sie könnte uns aus Gnaden nicht zugerechnet werden, so Werke oder Verdienst da wären. Darum schließt er gewißlich aus alles Verdienst und alle Werke nicht allein jüdischer Ceremonien, sondern auch alle andern guten Werke. Denn so wir durch dieselben Werke fromm würden vor Gott, so würde uns der Glaube nicht gerechnet zur Gerechtigkeit ohne alle Werke, wie doch Paulus klar sagt. Und hernach spricht er: „Und wir sagen, daß Abraham sein Glaube ist gerechnet zur Gerechtigkeit.“ Item, Kap. 5, 1: „Nun wir denn sind gerecht worden durch den Glauben, so haben wir Frieden mit Gott durch unsern Herrn Jesum Christ“, das ist, wir haben fröhliche, stille Gewissen vor Gott. Röm. 10, 10: „So man von Herzen glaubt, so wird man gerecht.“ Da nennt er den Glauben 2, 16: „So glauben wir auch an Christum Jesum, auf daß wir gerecht werden durch den Glauben an Christum und nicht durch's Geseßes Werke.“ Eph. 2, 8: „Denn aus Gnaden seid ihr selig worden durch den Glauben, und dasselbige nicht aus euch, Gottes Gabe ist es; nicht aus den Werken, auf daß sich niemand rühme.“

Er sagt, das Geseß habe nicht können jemand gerecht machen, und sagt, darum sei Christus gegeben, daß wir glauben, daß wir durch ihn gerecht werden. Mit klaren Worten sagt er: Das Geseß kann niemand gerecht machen. Darum wird uns durch Christum Gerechtigkeit zugerechnet, wenn wir glauben, daß uns Gott durch ihn gnädig ist. Act. 4, 11. 12: „Das ist der Stein, von euch Bauleuten verwor-

And lest we may think that the sentence that faith justifies, fell from Paul inconsiderately, he fortifies and confirms this by a long discussion in the fourth chapter to the Romans, and afterwards repeats it in all his epistles. Thus he says, Rom. 4, 4, 5: To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Here he clearly says that faith itself is imputed for righteousness. Faith, therefore, is that thing which God declares to be righteousness, and he adds that it is imputed freely, and says that it could not be imputed freely, if it were due on account of works. Wherefore he excludes also the merit of moral works [not only Jewish ceremonies, but all other good works]. For if justification before God were due to these, faith would not be imputed for righteousness without works. And afterwards, Rom. 4, 9: For we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. Chapter 5, 1 says: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, i. e., we have consciences that are tranquil and joyful before God. Rom. 10, 10: With the heart man believeth unto righteousness. Here he declares that faith is the righteousness of the heart. Gal. 2, 16: We have believed in Christ Jesus that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the Law. Eph. 2, 8: For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast.

John 1, 12: To them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. John 3, 14, 15: As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish. Likewise, v. 17: For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved. He that believeth on Him is not condemned.

Acts 13, 38, 39: Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by Him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the Law of Moses. How could the office of Christ and justification be declared more clearly? The Law, he says, did not justify. Therefore Christ was given, that we may believe that for His sake we are justified. He plainly denies justification to the Law. Hence, for Christ's sake we are accounted righteous when we believe that God, for His sake, has been reconciled to us. Acts 4, 11, 12: This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. But the name of Christ is apprehended only by faith. [I cannot be-

Ambrosius enim inquit in Epistola ad Irenaeum quendam: Subditus autem mundus eo [Deo] per legem factus est, quia ex praescripto legis omnes conveniuntur et ex operibus legis nemo iustificatur, id est, quia per legem peccatum cognoscitur, sed culpa non relaxatur. Videbatur lex novuisse, quae omnes fecerat peccatores, sed veniens Dominus Iesus peccatum omnibus, quod nemo poterat evitare, donavit et chirographum nostrum sui sanguinis effusione delevit. Hoc est, quod ait Rom. 5, 20: Abundavit peccatum per legem; superabundavit autem gratia per Iesum. Quia postquam totus mundus subditus factus est, totius mundi peccatum abstulit, sicut testificatus est [R. 80] Iohannes, Ioh. 1, 29, dicens: Ecce agnus Dei, ecce, qui tollit peccatum mundi. Et ideo nemo gloriatur in operibus, quia nemo factis suis iustificatur. Sed qui iustus est, donatum habet, quia post lavacrum iustificatus est. Fides ergo est, quae liberat per sanguinem Christi, quia beatus ille, cui peccatum remittitur et venia donatur, Ps. 32, 1. Haec sunt Ambrosii verba, quae aperte patrocinantur nostrae sententiae; detrahit operibus iustificationem et tribuit fidei, quod liberet fen, der zum Geklein worden ist; und ist in keinem andern Heil, und ist auch kein anderer Name den Menschen gegeben, darinnen wir sollen selig werden.“ An den Namen aber Christi kann ich nicht anders glauben, denn daß ich höre predigen das Verdienst Christi und solches fasse. Zerhalben durch Glauben an den Namen Christi und nicht durch Vertrauen auf unsere Werke werden wir selig. Denn das Wort „Name“ an dem Ort bedeutet Ursache, dadurch und darum das Heil kommt. Darum den Namen Christi rühmen oder bekennen ist als viel, als vertrauen auf den, der Christus allein ist und heißt, daß der causa meines Heils und Schicksals sei, dadurch ich erlöst bin.

Darum ist der Glaube, da die Apostel von reden, nicht eine schlechte Erkenntnis der Historie, sondern ein stark, kräftig Werk des Heiligen Geistes, daß die Herzen verändert.

Hab. 2, 4: „Der Gerechte lebt seines Glaubens.“ Da sagt er erstlich, daß der Gerechte durch den Glauben gerecht wird, so er glaubt, daß Gott durch Christum gnädig sei. Zum andern sagt er, daß der Glaube lebendig macht. Denn der Glaube bringt allein den Herzen und Gewissen Frieden und Freude und das ewige Leben, welches hier in diesem Leben anfängt.

Jes. 53, 11: „Seine Erkenntnis wird viele gerecht machen.“ Was ist aber die Erkenntnis Christi, denn seine Wohlthaten kennen und seine Verheißungen, die er in die Welt hat gepredigt und predigen lassen? Und die Wohlthaten kennen, das heißt an Christum wahrlich glauben, nämlich glauben das, was Gott durch Christum verheißt hat, daß er das gewiß geben wolle.

Aber die Schrift ist voll solcher Sprüche und Zeugnisse. Denn diese zwei Stünde handelt die Schrift: Gesetz Gottes und Verheißung Gottes. Nun reden die Verheißungen von Vergebung der Sünden und Gottes Veröhnung durch Christum.

Und bei den Vätern findet man auch viel der Sprüche. Denn auch Ambrosius zu Irenäus schreibt: „Die ganze Welt aber wird darum Gott untertan, unterworfen durchs Gesetz; denn durch das Gebot des Gesetzes werden wir alle angeklagt, aber durch die Werke des Gesetzes wird niemand gerecht. Denn durch das Gesetz wird die Sünde erkannt, aber die Schuld wird aufgelöst durch den Glauben; und es scheint wohl, als hätte das Gesetz Schaden getan, denn es alle zu Sündern gemacht hat; aber der Herr Christus ist gekommen und hat uns die Sünde, welche niemand konnte meiden, geschenkt und hat die Handschrift durch Vergießen seines Bluts ausgelöscht. Und das ist, das Paulus sagt zu den Römern am 5, 20: „Die Sünde ist mächtig worden durchs Gesetz, aber die Gnade ist noch mächtiger worden durch Christus.“ Denn dieweil die ganze Welt ist schuldig worden, so hat er der ganzen Welt Sünde weggenommen, wie Johannes zeugt: „Siehe, das ist das Lamm Gottes, welches der Welt Sünde wegnimmt.“ Und darum soll niemand seiner Werke sich rühmen; denn durch sein eigen Tun wird niemand gerecht; wer aber gerecht ist, dem ist's geschenkt in der Taufe in Christo, da er ist gerecht worden. Denn der Glaube ist's, der uns lösmacht durch das Blut Christi, und wohl dem, welchem die Sünde vergeben wird und Gnade widerfähret.“ Diese sind Ambrosii klare Worte, die doch ganz öffentlich mit unserer Lehre auch stimmen. Er sagt, daß die Werke nicht gerecht machen, und lieve in the name of Christ in any other way than when I hear His merit preached, and lay hold of that.] Therefore, by confidence in the name of Christ, and not by confidence in our works, we are saved. For "the name" here signifies the cause which is mentioned, because of which salvation is attained. And to call upon the name of Christ is to trust in the name of Christ, as the cause or price because of which we are saved. Acts 15, 9: Purifying their hearts by faith. Wherefore that faith of which the Apostles speak is not idle knowledge, but a reality, receiving the Holy Ghost and justifying us [not a mere knowledge of history, but a strong powerful work of the Holy Ghost, which changes hearts].

Hab. 2, 4: The just shall live by his faith. Here he says, first, that men are just by faith, by which they believe that God is propitious, and he adds that the same faith quickens, because this faith produces in the heart peace and joy and eternal life [which begins in the present life].

Is. 53, 11: By His knowledge shall He justify many. But what is the knowledge of Christ unless to know the benefits of Christ, the promises which by the Gospel He has scattered broadcast in the world? And to know these benefits is properly and truly to believe in Christ, to believe that that which God has promised for Christ's sake He will certainly fulfil.

But Scripture is full of such testimonies, since, in some places, it presents the Law, and in others the promises concerning Christ, and the remission of sins, and the free acceptance of the sinner for Christ's sake.

Here and there among the Fathers similar testimonies are extant. For Ambrose says in his letter to a certain Irenaeus: Moreover, the world was subject to Him by the Law for the reason that, according to the command of the Law, all are indicted, and yet, by the works of the Law, no one is justified, i. e., because, by the Law, sin is perceived, but guilt is not discharged. The Law, which made all sinners, seemed to have done injury, but when the Lord Jesus Christ came, He forgave to all sin which no one could avoid, and, by the shedding of His own blood, blotted out the handwriting which was against us. This is what he says in Rom. 5, 20: "The Law entered that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Because after the whole world became subject, He took away the sin of the whole world, as he [John] testified, saying, John 1, 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." And on this account let no one boast of works, because no one is justified by his deeds. But he who is righteous has it given him because he was justified after the laver [of Baptism]. Faith, therefore, is that which frees through the blood of Christ, because he is blessed "whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered," Ps. 32, 1. These are the words of Ambrose, which clearly favor our doctrine; he denies justification to works, and ascribes to lehren auf [die] Liebe Gottes [zu Gott], die wir vermögen, und eigene Werke vertrauen, stoßen sie das Evangelium, welches Vergebung der Sünden predigt, gar zu Boden, so doch die Liebe niemand recht haben noch verstehen kann, er glaube denn, daß wir aus Gnaden, umsonst Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch Christum.

Die Kommentatoren des Petrus Lombardus hießen Sententiarii.]

106] In eandem sententiam multa contra Pelagianos scribit Augustinus. De Spiritu et Litera sic ait: Ideo quippe proponitur iustitia legis, quod qui fecerit eam, vivet in illa, ut quum quisque infirmitatem suam cognoverit, non per suas vires neque per literam ipsius legis, quod fieri non potest, sed per fidem concilians iustificatorem perveniat et faciat et vivat in ea. Opus rectum, quod qui fecerit, vivet in eo, non fit nisi in iustificato. Iustificatio autem eo fide impetratur. Hic clare dicit iustificatorem fide conciliari et iustificationem fide impetrari. Et paulo post: Ex lege timemus Deum, ex fide speramus in Deum. Sed timentibus poenam absconditur gratia, sub quo timore anima laborans etc. per fidem confugiat ad misericordiam Dei, ut det, quod iubet. Hic docet lege terreri corda, fide autem consolationem capere, et docet prius fide apprehendere misericordiam, quam legem facere conemur. Recitabimus paulo post et alia quaedam.

107] Profecto mirum est, adversarios tot locis Scripturae nihil moveri, quae aperte tribuunt iustificationem fidei, et quidem [R. 81 108] detrahunt operibus. Num frustra existimant toties idem repeti? Num arbitrantur excidisse Spiritui Sancto non animadvertenti 109] has voces? Sed excogitaverunt etiam cavillum, quo eludunt. Dicunt de fide formata accipi debere, hoc est, non tribuunt fidei iustificationem nisi propter dilectionem. Imo prorsus non tribuunt fidei iustificationem, sed tantum dilectioni, quia somniant fidem posse 110] stare cum peccato mortali. Quorsum hoc pertinet, nisi ut promissionem iterum aboleant et redeant ad legem? Si fides accipit remissionem peccatorum propter dilectionem, semper erit incerta remissio peccatorum, quia nunquam diligimus tantum, quantum debemus; imo non diligimus, nisi certo statuam corda, quod donata sit nobis remissio peccatorum. Ita adversarii, dum requirunt fiduciam propriae dilectionis in remissione peccatorum et iustificatione, evangelium de gratuita remissione peccatorum prorsus abolent; quum tamen dilectionem illam neque praestent neque intelligant, nisi credant gratis accipi remissionem peccatorum.

sagt, daß der Glaube uns erlöse durch das Blut Christi. Wenn man alle Sententiaros über einen Haufen zusammenschmelzte, die doch große Titel führen, denn etliche nennen sie engelisch, angelicos, etliche subtiles, etliche irrefragabiles, das Auf die Meinung hat auch Augustinus viel wider die Pelagianer geschrieben, und De Spiritu et Litera sagt er also: „Darum wird uns das Gesetz und seine Gerechtigkeit vorgehalten, daß, wer sie tut, dadurch lebe, und daß ein jeder, so er seine Schwachheit erkennt, zu Gott, welcher allein gerecht macht, komme, nicht durch seine eigenen Kräfte noch durch den Buchstaben des Gesetzes, welchen wir nicht erfüllen können, sondern durch den Glauben. Ein recht gut Werk kann niemand tun, denn der zuvor selbst gerecht, fromm und gut sei; Gerechtigkeit aber erlangen wir allein durch den Glauben.“ Da sagt er klar, daß Gott, welcher allein seligt und heiligt, durch den Glauben versöhnt wird, und daß der Glaube uns vor Gott fromm und gerecht macht. Und bald hernach: „Aus dem Gesetz fürchten wir Gott, durch den Glauben hoffen und vertrauen wir in Gott. Die aber die Strafe fürchten, denen wird die Gnade verborgen, unter welcher Furcht, wenn ein Mensch in Angst ist usw., soll er durch den Glauben fliehen zu der Barmherzigkeit Gottes, daß er dasjenige gebe, dazu Gnade verleihe, daß er im Gesetz gebietet.“ Da lehrt er, daß durch das Gesetz die Herzen geschreckt werden und durch den Glauben wieder Trost empfangen.

Es ist wahrlich Wunder, daß die Widersacher können so blind sein und so viel klare Sprüche nicht ansehen, die da klar melden, daß wir durch den Glauben gerecht werden und nicht aus den Werken. Wo denken doch die armen Leute hin? Meinen sie, daß die Schrift ohne Ursache einerlei so oft mit klaren Worten erholt [wiederholt]? Meinen sie, daß der Heilige Geist sein Wort nicht gewiß und bedächtig setze oder nicht wisse, was er rede? Darüber haben die gottlosen Leute eine sophistische Glosse erdichtet und sagen, die Sprüche der Schrift, so sie vom Glauben reden, sind von fide formata zu verstehen. Das ist, sie sagen: Der Glaube macht niemand fromm oder gerecht denn um der Liebe oder Werke willen. Und in Summa, nach ihrer Meinung, so macht der Glaube niemand gerecht, sondern die Liebe allein. Denn sie sagen, der Glaube könne neben einer Todsünde sein. Was ist das anders, denn alle Zusage Gottes und Verheißung der Gnade umgestoßen und das Gesetz und Werke gepredigt? So der Glaube Vergebung der Sünden und Gnade erlangt um der Liebe willen, so wird die Vergebung der Sünden allezeit ungewiß sein. Denn wir lieben Gott nimmer so vollkommen, als wir sollten. Ja, wir können Gott nicht lieben, denn das Herz sei erst gewiß, daß ihm die Sünden vergeben seien. Also, so die Widersacher faith that it sets us free through the blood of Christ. Let all the Sententiarists, who are adorned with magnificent titles, be collected into one heap. For some are called angelic; others, subtle; and others, irrefragable [that is, doctors who cannot err]. When all these have been read and reread, they will not be of as much aid for understanding Paul as is this one passage of Ambrose.

To the same effect, Augustine writes many things against the Pelagians. In Of the Spirit and Letter he says: The righteousness of the Law, namely, that he who has fulfilled it shall live in it, is set forth for this reason that when any one has recognized his infirmity, he may attain and work the same and live in it, conciliating the Justifier not by his own strength nor by the letter of the Law itself (which cannot be done), but by faith. Except in a justified man, there is no right work wherein he who does it may live. But justification is obtained by faith. Here he clearly says that the Justifier is conciliated by faith, and that justification is obtained by faith. And a little after: By the Law we fear God; by faith we hope in God. But to those fearing punishment grace is hidden; and the soul laboring, etc., under this fear betakes itself by faith to God's mercy, in order that He may give what He commands. Here he teaches that by the Law hearts are terrified, but by faith they receive consolation. He also teaches us to apprehend, by faith, mercy, before we attempt to fulfil the Law. We will shortly cite certain other passages.

Truly, it is amazing that the adversaries are in no way moved by so many passages of Scripture, which clearly ascribe justification to faith, and, indeed, deny it to works. Do they think that the same is repeated so often for no purpose? Do they think that these words fell inconsiderately from the Holy Ghost? But they have also devised sophistry whereby they elude them. They say that these passages of Scripture, (which speak of faith,) ought to be received as referring to a fides formata, i. e., they do not ascribe justification to faith except on account of love. Yea, they do not, in any way, ascribe justification to faith, but only to love, because they dream that faith can coexist with mortal sin. Whither does this tend, unless that they again abolish the promise and return to the Law? If faith receive the remission of sins on account of love, the remission of sins will always be uncertain, because we never love as much as we ought; yea, we do not love unless our hearts are firmly convinced that the remission of sins has been granted us. Thus the adversaries, while they require in the remission of sins and justification confidence in one's own love, altogether abolish the Gospel concerning the free remission of sins; although, at the same time, they neither render this love nor understand it, unless they believe that the remission of sins is freely received.

We also say that love ought to follow faith, as Paul also says, Gal. 5, 6: For in Jesus

5, 6: In Christo Iesu neque circumcisio aliquid valet neque praeputium, sed fides per dilectionem efficitur. Neque tamen ideo sentiendum est, quod fiducia huius dilectionis aut propter hanc dilectionem accipiamus remissionem peccatorum et reconciliationem, sicut neque accipimus remissionem peccatorum propter alia opera sequentia, sed sola fide, et quidem fide proprie dicta, accipitur remissio peccatorum, quia promissio non potest accipi nisi fide. Est autem fides proprie dicta, quae assentitur promissioni; de hac fide loquitur Scriptura. Et quia accipit remissionem peccatorum et reconciliat nos Deo, prius hac fide iusti reputamur [R. 82] propter Christum, quam diligimus ac legem facimus, etsi necessario sequitur dilectio. Neque vero haec fides est otiosa notitia, nec potest stare cum peccato mortali, sed est opus Spiritus Sancti, quo liberamur a morte, quo eriguntur et vivificantur perterrefactae mentes. Et quia sola haec fides accipit remissionem peccatorum et reddit nos acceptos Deo et affert Spiritum Sanctum, rectius vocari gratia gratum faciens poterat, quam effectus sequens, videlicet dilectio.

gebung der Sünden erlangt und uns Gott angenehm macht, bringt er mit sich den Heiligen Geist und sollte billiger genannt werden gratia gratum faciens, das ist, die Gnade, die da angenehm macht, denn die Liebe, welche folgt.

117] Hactenus satis copiose ostendimus et testimoniis Scripturae et argumentis ex Scriptura sumptis, ut res magis fieret perspicua, quod sola fide consequimur remissionem peccatorum propter Christum, et quod sola fide iustificemur, hoc est, ex iniustus iusti efficiamur [118] seu regneremur. Facile autem iudicari potest, quam necessaria sit huius fidei cognitio, quia in hac una conspicitur Christi officium, hac una accipimus Christi beneficia, haec una affert certam et firmam consolationem piis mentibus. Et oportet in ecclesia exstare doctrinam, ex qua concipiant pii certam spem salutis. Nam adversarii infeliciter consulunt hominibus, dum iubent dubitare, utrum consequamur remissionem peccatorum. Quomodo in morte sustentabunt se isti, qui de hac fide nihil audierunt, qui putant dubitandum esse, utrum consequantur remissionem peccatorum? Praeterea [120] necesse est tetimari in ecclesia Christi evangelium, hoc est, promissionem, quod gratis propter Christum remittuntur peccata. Id evangelium penitus abolent, qui de hac fide, [121] de qua loquimur, nihil docent. At scholastici ne verbum quidem de hac fide tradunt. Hos sequuntur adversarii nostri et improbant hanc fidem. Nec vident se totam promissionem gratuita remissionis peccatorum et iustitiae Christi abolere improbata hac fide.

Christi bleiben, nämlich diese göttliche Verheißung, daß uns ohne Verdienst Sünden vergeben werden um Christus' willen. Dasselbe heilige Evangelium drücken diejenigen gar unter, die von dem Glauben, davon wir reden, gar nichts lehren. Nun lehren noch schreiben die Scholastici nicht ein Wort, nicht einen Tittel vom Glauben, welches schrecklich ist zu hören. Denen folgen unsere Widersacher und verworfen diese höchste Lehre vom Glauben und sind so verstockt und blind, daß sie nicht sehen, daß sie damit das ganze Evangelium, die göttliche Verheißung von der Vergebung der Sünden und den ganzen Christum unter die Füße treten.

ist weder Beschneidung noch Vorhaut etwas, sondern der Glaube, welcher durch die Liebe wirkt. Man soll aber darum auf die Liebe nicht vertrauen noch bauen, als erlangten wir um der Liebe willen oder durch die Liebe Vergebung der Sünden und Veröhnung Gottes, gleichwie wir nicht Vergebung der Sünden erlangen um anderer Werke willen, die da folgen, sondern allein durch den Glauben. Denn die Verheißung Gottes kann niemand durch Werke fassen, sondern allein mit dem Glauben. Und der Glaube eigentlich oder fides proprie dicta ist, wenn mir mein Herz und der Heilige Geist im Herzen sagt, die Verheißung Gottes ist wahr und ja; von demselben Glauben redet die Schrift. Und diemeil der Glaube, ehe wir etwas tun oder wirken, nur ihm identen und geben läßt und empfängt, so wird uns der Glaube zur Gerechtigkeit gerechnet wie Abraham, ehe wir lieben, ehe wir das Gesetz tun oder einig Werk. Wiewohl es wahr ist, daß Früchte und Werke nicht außen bleiben, und der Glaube ist nicht eine bloße, schlechte Erkenntnis der Historie, sondern ein neu Licht im Herzen und kräftig Werk des Heiligen Geistes, dadurch wir neugeboren werden, dadurch die erschrockenen Gewissen wieder ausgerichtet [werden] und Leben erlangen. Und diemeil der Glaube allein Ver-

Bissher haben wir reichlich angezeigt aus Sprüchen der Väter und der Schrift, damit doch diese Sache gar klar würde, daß wir allein durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen um Christus' willen, und daß wir allein durch den Glauben gerecht werden, das ist, aus Ungerechten fromm, heilig und neugeboren werden. Fromme Herzen aber sehen nie und merken, wie ganz überaus hochnützig diese Lehre vom Glauben ist; denn durch sie allein lernt man Christum erkennen und seine Wohlthaten, und durch die [diese] Lehre finden die Herzen und Gewissen allein rechte, gewisse Ruhe und Trost. Denn soll eine christliche Kirche sein, soll ein Christenglaube sein, so muß je eine Predigt und Lehre darin sein, dadurch die Gewissen auf keinen Wahn noch Sandgrund gebaut werden, sondern darauf sie sich gewiß verlassen und vertrauen mögen. Darum sind wahrlich die Widersacher unreue Bischöfe, unreue Prediger und Doctores, haben bissher den Gewissen übel geraten und raten ihnen noch übel, daß sie solche Lehre führen, da sie die Leute lassen im Zweifel stehen, ungewiß schwaben und hangen, ob sie Vergebung der Sünden erlangen oder nicht. Denn wie ist's möglich, daß diejenigen in Todesnöten und letzten Zügen und Ängsten bestehen sollten, die diese nötige Lehre von Christo nicht gehört haben oder nicht wissen, die da noch wanken und im Zweifel stehen, ob sie Vergebung der Sünden haben oder nicht? Item, soll eine christliche Kirche sein, so muß je in der Kirche das Evangelium

Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love. And yet we must not think on that account that by confidence in this love or on account of this love we receive the remission of sins and reconciliation, just as we do not receive the remission of sins because of other works that follow. But the remission of sins is received by faith alone, and, indeed, by faith properly so called, because the promise cannot be received except by faith. But faith, properly so called, is that which assents to the promise [is when my heart, and the Holy Ghost in the heart, says: The promise of God is true and certain]. Of this faith Scripture speaks. And because it receives the remission of sins, and reconciles us to God, by this faith we are [like Abraham] accounted righteous for Christ's sake before we love and do the works of the Law, although love necessarily follows. Nor, indeed, is this faith an idle knowledge, neither can it coexist with mortal sin, but it is a work of the Holy Ghost, whereby we are freed from death, and terrified minds are encouraged and quickened. And because this faith alone receives the remission of sins, and renders us acceptable to God, and brings the Holy Ghost, it could be more correctly called gratia gratum faciens, grace rendering one pleasing to God, than an effect following, namely, love.

Thus far, in order that the subject might be made quite clear, we have shown with sufficient fulness, both from testimonies of Scripture, and arguments derived from Scripture, that by faith alone we obtain the remission of sins for Christ's sake, and that by faith alone we are justified, i. e., of unrighteous men made righteous, or regenerated. But how necessary the knowledge of this faith is, can be easily judged, because in this alone the office of Christ is recognized, by this alone we receive the benefits of Christ; this alone brings sure and firm consolation to pious minds. And in the Church [if there is to be a church, if there is to be a Christian Creed], it is necessary that there should be the [preaching and] doctrine [by which consciences are not made to rely on a dream or to build on a foundation of sand, but] from which the pious may receive the sure hope of salvation. For the adversaries give men bad advice [therefore the adversaries are truly unfaithful bishops, unfaithful preachers, and doctors; they have hitherto given evil counsel to consciences, and still do so by introducing such doctrine] when they bid them doubt whether they obtain remission of sins. For how will such persons sustain themselves in death who have heard nothing of this faith, and think that they ought to doubt whether they obtain the remission of sins? Besides, it is necessary that in the Church of Christ the Gospel be retained, i. e., the promise that for Christ's sake sins are freely remitted. Those who teach nothing of this faith, concerning which we speak, altogether abolish the Gospel. But the scholastics mention not even a word concerning this faith. Our adversaries follow them, and reject this faith.

Nor do they see that, by rejecting this faith, they abolish the entire promise concerning the free remission of sins and the righteousness of Christ.

De Dilectione et Impletione Legis.

1) Hic obiciunt adversarii: Si vis in vitam ingredi, serva mandata, Matth. 19, 17; item: Factores legis iustificabuntur, Rom. 2, 13; et alia multa similia de lege et operibus, ad quae priusquam respondemus, dicendum est, quid nos de dilectione et impletione legis sentiamus.

2) Scriptum est apud prophetam, Ier. 31, 33: Dabo legem meam in corda eorum. Et Rom. 3, 31 ait Paulus, legem stabiliri, non aboleri per fidem. Et Christus ait Matth. 19, 17: Si vis ingredi in vitam, serva mandata. Item 1 Cor. 13, 3: Si dilectionem non habeam, nihil sum. Hae sententiae et similes testantur, quod oporteat legem in nobis inchoari et magis magisque fieri. Loquimur autem non de ceremoniis, sed de illa lege, quae praecipit de motibus cordis, videlicet de Decalogo.

4) Quia vero fides affert Spiritum Sanctum et parit novam vitam in cordibus, necesse est, quod pariat spirituales motus in cordibus. Et qui illi motus, ostendit propheta, Ier. 31, 33, quum ait: Dabo legem meam in corda eorum. Postquam igitur fide iustificati et renati sumus, incipimus Deum timere, diligere, petere et expectare ab eo auxilium, gratias agere et praedicare et obedire ei in afflictionibus. Incipimus et diligere proximos, quia corda habent spirituales et sanctos motus.

Wir an, Gott zu fürchten, zu lieben, ihm zu danken, [zu] gewarten, ihm auch nach seinem Willen in Trübsalen gehorsam zu sein. Wir heben alsdann auch an, den Nächsten zu lieben; da ist nun inwendig durch den Geist Christi ein neu Herz, Sinn und Mut.

5) Haec non possunt fieri, nisi postquam fide iustificati sumus et renati accipimus Spiritum Sanctum. Primum quia lex non potest fieri sine Christo. Item lex non potest 6) fieri sine Spiritu Sancto. At Spiritus Sanctus accipitur fide, iuxta illud Pauli, Gal. 3, 14: Ut promissionem Spiritus accipiamus per fidem. Item quomodo potest humanum cor diligere Deum, dum sentit eum horribiliter irasci et opprimere nos temporalibus et perpetuis calamitatibus? Lex autem semper accusat nos, semper ostendit irasci 8) Deum. Non igitur diligitur Deus, [R. 84 nisi postquam apprehendimus fide misericordiam. Ita demum fit obiectum amabile.

der Liebe Gottes reden, ist ein Traum, und ist unmöglich, Gott zu lieben, ehe wir durch den Glauben die Barmherzigkeit erkennen und ergreifen. Denn alsdann erst wird Gott obiectum amabile, ein lieblicher, seliger Anblick.

9) Quamquam igitur civilia opera, hoc est, externa opera legis, sine Christo et sine Spiritu Sancto aliqua ex parte fieri possint, tamen apparet ex his, quae diximus: illa, quae sunt proprie legis divinae, hoc est, affectus cordis erga Deum, qui praecipuntur in prima tabula, non posse fieri sine Spiritu 10) Sancto. Sed adversarii nostri sunt suaves theologi; intuentur secundam tabulam et politica opera, primam nihil curant, quasi nihil pertineat ad rem, aut certe tantum externos

(Art. III.)

Von der Liebe und Erfüllung des Gesetzes.

Hier werfen uns die Widersacher diesen Spruch vor: „Willst du ewig leben, so halte die Gebote Gottes.“ Item zu den Römern am 2, 13: „Nicht die das Gesetz hören, werden gerecht sein, sondern die das Gesetz tun“; und dergleichen viel vom Gesetz und von Werken. Nun, ehe wir darauf antworten, müssen wir sagen von der Liebe, und was wir von [der] Erfüllung des Gesetzes halten.

Es steht geschrieben im Propheten: „Ich will mein Gesetz in ihr Herz geben.“ Und Röm. 3, 31 sagt Paulus: „Wir heben das Gesetz nicht auf durch den Glauben, sondern richten das Gesetz auf.“ Item, Christus sagt: „Willst du ewig leben, so halte die Gebote.“ Item, zu den Korinthern sagt Paulus: „So ich nicht die Liebe habe, bin ich nichts.“ Diese und dergleichen Sprüche zeigen an, daß wir das Gesetz halten sollen, wenn wir durch den Glauben gerecht worden sind, und also je länger je mehr im Geist zunehmen. Wir reden aber hier nicht von Ceremonien Moses, sondern von den zehn Geboten, welche von uns fordern, daß wir von Herzensgrund Gott recht fürchten und lieben sollen. Dieweil nun der Glaube mit sich bringt den Heiligen Geist und ein neu Licht und Leben im Herzen wirkt, so ist es gewiß und folgt von Not, daß der Glaube das Herz erneut und ändert. Und was das für eine Erneuerung der Herzen sei, zeigt der Prophet an, da er sagt: „Ich will mein Gesetz in ihre Herzen geben.“ Wenn wir nun durch den Glauben neugeboren sind und erkannt haben, daß uns Gott will gnädig sein, will unser Vater und Helfer sein, so heben ihn zu preisen, von ihm alle Hilfe zu bitten und Dieses alles kann nicht geschehen, ehe wir durch den Glauben gerecht werden, ehe wir neugeboren werden durch den Heiligen Geist. Denn erstlich kann niemand das Gesetz halten ohne Christus' Erkenntnis; so kann auch niemand das Gesetz erfüllen ohne den Heiligen Geist. Den Heiligen Geist aber können wir nicht empfangen denn durch den Glauben, wie zu den Galatern am 3, 14 Paulus sagt, daß wir „die Verheißung des Geistes durch den Glauben empfangen“. Item, es ist unmöglich, daß ein Menschenherz allein durch das Gesetz oder sein Wert Gott liebe. Denn das Gesetz zeigt allein an Gottes Zorn und Ernst; das Gesetz klagt uns an und zeigt an, wie er so schrecklich die Sünde strafen wolle beide mit zeitlichen und ewigen Strafen. Darum was die Scholastici von

Wiemohl nun ein ehrbar Leben zu führen und äußerliche Werke des Gesetzes zu tun, die Verunft eitschermachen ohne Christum, ohne den Heiligen Geist aus angeborenem Licht vermag, so ist es doch gewiß, wie oben angezeigt, daß die höchsten Stühle des göttlichen Gesetzes, als, das ganze Herz zu Gott zu lehren, von ganzem Herzen ihn groß zu achten (welches in der ersten Tafel und im ersten, höchsten Gebot gefordert wird), niemand vermag ohne den Heiligen Geist. Aber unsere Widersacher sind gute, rohe, saule, uns

Article III:

Of Love and the Fulfilling of the Law.

Here the adversaries urge against us: If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments, Matt. 19, 17; likewise: The doers of the Law shall be justified, Rom. 2, 13, and many other like things concerning the Law and works. Before we reply to this, we must first declare what we believe concerning love and the fulfilling of the Law.

It is written in the prophet, Jer. 31, 33: I will put My Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. And in Rom. 3, 31, Paul says: Do we, then, make void the Law through faith? God forbid! Yea, we establish the Law. And Christ says, Matt. 19, 17: If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. Likewise, 1 Cor. 13, 3: If I have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. These and similar sentences testify that the Law ought to be begun in us, and be kept by us more and more [that we are to keep the Law when we have been justified by faith, and thus increase more and more in the Spirit]. Moreover, we speak not of ceremonies, but of that Law which gives commandment concerning the movements of the heart, namely, the Decalog. Because, indeed, faith brings the Holy Ghost, and produces in hearts a new life, it is necessary that it should produce spiritual movements in hearts. And what these movements are, the prophet, Jer. 31, 33, shows, when he says: I will put My Law into their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. Therefore, when we have been justified by faith and regenerated, we begin to fear and love God, to pray to Him, to expect from Him aid, to give thanks and praise Him, and to obey Him in afflictions. We begin also to love our neighbors, because our hearts have spiritual and holy movements [there is now, through the Spirit of Christ a new heart, mind, and spirit within].

These things cannot occur until we have been justified by faith, and, regenerated, we receive the Holy Ghost: first, because the Law cannot be kept without [the knowledge of] Christ; and likewise the Law cannot be kept without the Holy Ghost. But the Holy Ghost is received by faith, according to the declaration of Paul, Gal. 3, 14: That we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. Then, too, how can the human heart love God while it knows that He is terribly angry, and is oppressing us with temporal and perpetual calamities? But the Law always accuses us, always shows that God is angry. [Therefore, what the scholastics say of the love of God is a dream.] God therefore is not loved until we apprehend mercy by faith. Not until then does He become a lovable object.

Although, therefore, civil works, i. e., the outward works of the Law, can be done, in a measure, without Christ and without the Holy Ghost [from our inborn light], nevertheless it appears from what we have said that those things which belong peculiarly to the divine Law, i. e., the affections of the heart towards God, which are commanded in the first table, cannot be rendered without the Holy Ghost. But our adversaries are fine theologians; they regard the second table and political works; for the first table [in which is contained the highest theology, on which all depends] they care nothing, as though it were of no matter; or certainly they require 11] At Christus ad hoc datus est, ut propter eum donentur nobis remissio peccatorum et Spiritus Sanctus, qui novam et aeternam vitam ac aeternam iustitiam in nobis pariat. Quare non potest lex vere fieri nisi accepto Spiritu Sancto per fidem. Ideo Paulus dicit, legem stabiliri per fidem, non aboleri; quia lex ita demum fieri potest, quum contingit 12] Spiritus Sanctus. Et Paulus docet 2 Cor. 3, 15 sq.: Velamen, quo facies Moysis tecta est, non posse tolli nisi fide in Christum, qua accipitur Spiritus Sanctus. Sic enim ait: Sed usque in hodiernum diem, quum legitur Moses, velamen positum est super cor eorum; quum autem conversi fuerint ad Deum, auferetur velamen. Dominus autem Spiritus est; ubi autem Spiritus Domini, ibi libertas. Vela- 13] men intelligit Paulus humanam opinionem de tota lege, Decalogo et ceremoniis, videlicet quod hypocritae putant externa et civilia opera satisfacere legi Dei, et sacrificia et cultus ex opere operato iustificare coram Deo. 14] Tunc autem detrahitur nobis hoc velamen, hoc est, eximitur hic error, quando Deus ostendit cordibus nostris immunditatem [R. 85] nostram et magnitudinem peccati. Ibi primum videmus nos longe abesse ab impletionem legis. Ibi agnoscimus, quomodo caro secunda atque otiosa non timeat Deum, nec vere statuat respici nos a Deo, sed casu nasci et occidere homines. Ibi experimur nos non credere, quod Deus ignoscat et exaudiat. Quum autem audito evangelio et remissione peccatorum fide erigimur, concipimus Spiritum Sanctum, ut iam recte de Deo sentire possimus, et timere Deum et credere ei etc. Ex his apparet, non posse legem sine Christo et sine Spiritu Sancto fieri.

Da erfahren wir erst, daß eitel Unglaube, Sicherheit, Verachtung Gottes in uns so tief verborgen steht. Da erfahren wir erst, daß wir so schwach oder gar nichts glauben, daß Gott Sünde verzeihe, daß er Gebet erhöhe usw. Wenn wir nun das Wort und Evangelium hören und durch den Glauben Christum erkennen, empfangen wir den Heiligen Geist, daß wir dann recht von Gott halten, ihn fürchten, ihm glauben usw. In diesem ist nun genugsam angedeutet, daß wir Gottes Geheiß ohne den Glauben, ohne Christum, ohne den Heiligen Geist nicht halten können.

Christus ist uns aber dazu dargelegt, daß um seinethwillen uns Sünden vergeben und der Heilige Geist geschenkt wird, der ein neu Licht und ewiges Leben, ewige Gerechtigkeit in uns wirkt, daß er uns Christum im Herzen zeigt, wie Johannis am 16, 15 geschrieben: „Er wird's von dem Meinen nehmen und euch verkündigen.“ Item, er wirkt auch andere Gaben: Liebe, Danksagung, Keuschheit, Geduld usw. Darum vermag das Gesetz niemand ohne den Heiligen Geist zu erfüllen; darum sagt Paulus: „Wir richten das Gesetz auf durch den Glauben und tun's nicht ab“; denn so können wir erst das Gesetz erfüllen und halten, wenn der Heilige Geist uns gegeben wird. Und Paulus 2 Kor. 3, 15 f. sagt, daß die Bede des Angeführts Moses könne nicht weggetan werden denn allein durch den Glauben an den Herrn Christum, durch welchen gegeben wird der Heilige Geist. Denn also sagt er: „Bis auf diesen Tag, wenn Moses gelesen wird, ist die Bede über ihrem Herzen; wenn sie sich aber zum Herrn bekehren, wird die Bede weggetan. Denn der Herr ist ein Geist; wo aber des Herrn Geist ist, da ist Freiheit.“ Die Bede nennt Paulus den menschlichen Gedanken und Wahn von [den] zehn Geboten und Ceremonien, nämlich daß die Heuchler wähnen wollen, daß das Gesetz möge erfüllt und gehalten werden durch äußerliche Werke, und als machten die Opfer, item allerlei Gottesdienste, ex opere operato jemand gerecht vor Gott. Dann wird aber die Bede vom Herzen genommen, daß ist, der Irrtum und Wahn wird weggenommen, wenn Gott im Herzen uns zeigt unsern Jammer und läßt uns Gottes Zorn und unsere Sünde fühlen. Da merken wir erst, wie gar fern und weit wir vom Gesetz seien. Da erkennen wir erst, wie sicher und verblendet alle Menschen dahingehen, wie sie Gott nicht fürchten, in Summa, nicht glauben, daß Gott Himmel, Erde und alle

Darum sagen wir auch, daß man muß das Gesetz halten, und ein jeder Gläubiger fähig es an [fängt an, es] zu halten, und nimmt je länger, je mehr zu in Liebe und Furcht Gottes, welches ist recht Gottes Gebote erfüllt. Und wenn wir vom Gesetze reden oder von guten Werken, begreifen wir beides, das gute Herz innendig und die Werke auswendig. Darum tun uns die Widersacher unrecht, da sie uns schuld geben, wir lehrten nicht von guten Werken; so wir nicht allein sagen, man müsse gute Werke tun, sondern sagen auch eigentlich, wie das Herz müsse dabei sein, damit es nicht lose, taube, only outward observances. They in no way consider the Law that is eternal, and placed far above the sense and intellect of all creatures [which concerns the very Deity, and the honor of the eternal Majesty], Deut. 6, 5: Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thine heart. [This they treat as such a paltry, small matter as if it did not belong to theology.]

But Christ was given for this purpose, namely, that for His sake there might be bestowed on us the remission of sins, and the Holy Ghost to bring forth in us new and eternal life, and eternal righteousness [to manifest Christ in our hearts, as it is written John 16, 15: He shall take of the things of Mine, and show them unto you. Likewise, He works also other gifts, love, thanksgiving, charity, patience, etc.]. Wherefore the Law cannot be truly kept unless the Holy Ghost be received through faith. Accordingly, Paul says that the Law is established by faith, and not made void; because the Law can only then be thus kept when the Holy Ghost is given. And Paul teaches 2 Cor. 3, 15 sq., the veil that covered the face of Moses cannot be removed except by faith in Christ, by which the Holy Ghost is received. For he speaks thus: But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. Paul understands by the veil the human opinion concerning the entire Law, the Decalog and the ceremonies, namely, that hypocrites think that external and civil works satisfy the Law of God, and that sacrifices and observances justify before God ex opere operato. But then this veil is removed from us, i. e., we are freed from this error, when God shows to our hearts our uncleanness and the heinousness of sin. Then, for the first time, we see that we are far from fulfilling the Law. Then we learn to know how flesh, in security and indifference, does not fear God, and is not fully certain that we are regarded by God, but imagines that men are born and die by chance. Then we experience that we do not believe that God forgives and hears us. But when, on hearing the Gospel and the remission of sins, we are consoled by faith, we receive the Holy Ghost, so that now we are able to think aright concerning God, and to fear and believe God, etc. From these facts it is apparent that the Law cannot be kept without Christ and the Holy Ghost.

We, therefore, profess that it is necessary that the Law be begun in us, and that it be observed continually more and more. And at the same time we comprehend both spiritual movements and external good works [the good heart within and works without]. Therefore the adversaries falsely charge against us that our theologians do not teach good works, while they not only require these, but also show how they can be done [that the heart must enter into these works, lest they be mere, lifeless, cold works of hypocrites]. The result

omnes, qui non sunt liberati per fidem. 18] Potentia Christi opus est adversus diabolum, videlicet, ut, quia scimus nos propter Christum exaudiri et habere promissionem, petamus, ut gubernet et propugnet nos Spiritus Sanctus, ne decepti erremus, ne impulsus contra voluntatem Dei aliquid suscipiamus. Sicut Psalmus, 68, 19, docet: Captivam duxit captivitatem, dedit dona hominibus. Christus enim vicit diabolum et dedit nobis promissionem et Spiritum Sanctum, ut auxilio divino vincamus et ipsi. Et 1 Ioh. 3, 8: Ad hoc apparuit Filius Dei, ut solvat opera diaboli. Deinde non hoc tantum docemus, quomodo fieri lex possit, sed etiam quomodo Deo placeat, si quid sit, videlicet non quia legi satisfaciamus, sed quia sumus [R. 86 in Christo, sicut paulo post dicemus. Constat igitur nostros requirere bona opera. 20] Imo addimus et hoc, quod impossibile sit, dilectionem Dei, etsi exigua est, divellere a fide, quia per Christum acceditur ad Patrem, et accepta remissione peccatorum vere iam statuimus nos habere Deum, hoc est, nos Deo curae esse, invocamus, agimus gratias, timeamus, diligimus, sicut Iohannes docet in prima epistola. Nos diligimus eum, inquit 1 Ioh. 4, 19, quia prior dilexit nos, videlicet, quia dedit pro nobis Filium et remisit nobis peccata. Ita significat praecedere fidem, sequi 21] dilectionem. Item fides illa, de qua loquimur, existit in poenitentia, hoc est, concipitur in terroribus conscientiae, quae sentit iram Dei adversus nostra peccata, et quaerit remissionem peccatorum et liberari a peccato. Et in talibus terroribus et aliis afflictionibus debet haec fides crescere et confirmari. Quare 22] non potest existere in his, qui secundum carnem vivunt, qui delectantur cupiditatibus suis et obtemperant eis. Ideo Paulus ait Rom. 8, 1: Nulla nunc damnatio est his, qui sunt in Christo Iesu, qui non secundum carnem ambulant, sed secundum Spiritum. Item v. 12. 13: Debitores sumus, non carni, ut secundum carnem vivamus. Si enim secundum carnem vixeritis, moriemini; sin autem Spiritu actiones corporis mortificabitis, vivetis. 23] Quare fides illa, quae accipit remissionem peccatorum in corde perterrefacto et fugiente peccato, non manet in his, qui obtemperant cupiditatibus, nec existit cum mortali peccato.

der Glaube also vorgehe und die Liebe alsdann folge. Item, dieser Glaube ist in denen, da rechte Buße ist, das ist, da ein erschrocken Gewissen Gottes Zorn und seine Sünde fühlt, Vergebung der Sünden und Gnade sucht. Und in solchen Schrecken, in solchen Ängsten und Nöten beweist sich erst der Glaube und muß auch also bewährt werden und zunehmen. Darum kann der Glaube nicht sein in fleischlichen, sicheren Leuten, welche nach des Fleisches Lust und Willen dahinleben. Denn also sagt Paulus Röm. 8, 1: „So ist nun nichts Verdammliches an denen, die in Christo Jesu sind, die nicht nach dem Fleisch wandeln, sondern nach dem Geist.“ Item, R. 12. 13: „So sind wir nun Schuldner, nicht dem Fleisch, daß wir nach dem Fleisch leben; denn wo ihr nach dem Fleisch lebet, so werdet ihr sterben müssen; wo ihr aber durch den Geist des Fleisches Geschäfte tötet, so werdet ihr leben.“ Deshalb kann der Glaube, welcher allein in den Herzen und Gewissen ist, denen ihre Sünden herzlich leid sind, nicht zugleich neben einer Todsünde sein, wie die Widersacher lehren. So kann er auch nicht in denjenigen sein, die nach der Welt fleischlich, nach des Satans und des Fleisches Willen leben.

kalte Heuchlerwerte seien. Es lehrt die Erfahrung, daß die Heuchler, wiewohl sie sich unterstehen, aus ihren Kräften das Gesetz zu halten, daß sie es nicht vermögen, noch mit der Tat beweisen. Denn wie fein sind sie ohne Haß, Reid, Zank, Grimm, Zorn, ohne Geiz, Ehebruch usw.? Also, daß nirgend die Laster größer sind denn in Klöstern und Stiften. Es sind alle menschlichen Kräfte viel zu schwach dem Teufel, daß sie seiner List und Stärke aus eigenem Vermögen widerstehen sollten, welcher alle diejenigen gefänglich hält, die nicht durch Christum erlöst werden. Es muß göttliche Stärke sein und Christus' Auferstehung, die den Teufel überwinde. Und so wir wissen, daß wir Christi Stärke, seines Sieges durch den Glauben teilhaftig werden, können wir auf die Verheißung, die wir haben, Gott bitten, daß er uns durch seines Geistes Stärke beschirme und regiere, daß uns der Teufel nicht fälle oder stürze; sonst fielen wir alle Stunden in Irrtum und greuliche Laster. Darum sagt Paulus nicht von uns, sondern von Christo Eph. 4, 8: „Er hat das Gefängnis gefangen geführt.“ Denn Christus hat den Teufel überwunden und durchs Evangelium verheißt den Heiligen Geist, daß wir durch Hilfe desselben auch alles übel überwinden. Und 1 Joh. 3, 8 ist geschrieben: „Dazu ist erschienen der Sohn Gottes, daß er auflöse die Werke des Teufels.“ Darum so lehren wir nicht allein, wie man das Gesetz halte, sondern auch, wie es Gott gefalle alles, was wir tun, nämlich, nicht daß wir in diesem Leben das Gesetz so vollkommenlich und rein halten können, sondern daß wir in Christo sind, wie wir hernach wollen sagen. So ist es nun gewiß, daß die Unsen auch von guten Werken recht lehren. Und wir setzen noch dazu, daß es unmöglich sei, daß rechter Glaube, der das Herz tröstet und Vergebung der Sünden empfängt, ohne die Liebe Gottes sei. Denn durch Christum kommt man zum Vater, und wenn wir durch Christum Gott versöhnt sind, so glauben und schließen wir dann erst recht gewiß im Herzen, daß ein wahrer Gott lebe und sei, daß wir einen Vater im Himmel haben, der auf uns allzeit sieht, der zu fürchten sei, der um so unsägliche Wohlthat zu lieben sei, dem wir sollen allezeit herzlich danken, ihm Lob und Preis sagen, welcher unser Gebet, auch unser Sehnen und Seufzen erhört, wie denn Johannes in seiner ersten Epistel sagt, 1 Joh. 4, 19: „Wir lieben ihn, denn er hat uns zuvor geliebet.“ Uns nämlich; denn er hat seinen Sohn für uns gegeben und uns Sünde vergeben. Da zeigt Johannes genug an, daß

Aus diesen Früchten und Werken des Glaubens klauen die Widersacher nur ein Stück, nämlich die Liebe, und lehren, daß die Liebe vor Gott gerecht mache; also sind sie nichts anderes denn

convicts hypocrites, who by their own powers endeavor to fulfil the Law, that they cannot accomplish what they attempt. [For are they free from hatred, envy, strife, anger, wrath, avarice, adultery, etc.? Why, these vices were nowhere greater than in the cloisters and sacred institutes.] For human nature is far too weak to be able by its own powers to resist the devil, who holds as captives all who have not been freed through faith. There is need of the power of Christ against the devil, namely, that, inasmuch as we know that for Christ's sake we are heard, and have the promise, we may pray for the governance and defense of the Holy Ghost, that we may neither be deceived and err, nor be impelled to undertake anything contrary to God's will. [Otherwise we should, every hour, fall into error and abominable vices.] Just as Ps. 68, 18 teaches: Thou hast led captivity captive; Thou hast received gifts for man. For Christ has overcome the devil, and has given to us the promise and the Holy Ghost, in order that, by divine aid, we ourselves also may overcome. And 1 John 3, 8: For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil. Again, we teach not only how the Law can be observed, but also how God is pleased if anything be done, namely, not because we render satisfaction to the Law, but because we are in Christ, as we shall say after a little. It is, therefore, manifest that we require good works. Yea, we add also this, that it is impossible for love to God, even though it be small, to be sundered from faith, because through Christ we come to the Father, and, the remission of sins having been received, we now are truly certain that we have a God, i. e., that God cares for us; we call upon Him, we give Him thanks, we fear Him, we love Him, as John teaches in his first Epistle, 4, 19: We love Him, he says, because He first loved us, namely, because He gave His Son for us, and forgave us our sins. Thus he indicates that faith precedes and love follows. Likewise the faith of which we speak exists in repentance, i. e., it is conceived in the terrors of conscience, which feels the wrath of God against our sins, and seeks the remission of sins, and to be freed from sin. And in such terrors and other afflictions this faith ought to grow and be strengthened. Wherefore it cannot exist in those who live according to the flesh, who are delighted by their own lusts and obey them. Accordingly, Paul says, Rom. 8, 1: There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. So, too, vv. 12, 13: We are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. Wherefore, the faith which receives remission of sins in a heart terrified and fleeing from sin does not remain in those who obey their desires, neither does it co-exist with mortal sin.

From these effects of faith the adversaries select one, namely, love, and teach that love docent accipere remissionem peccatorum per fidem. Non docent de mediatore Christo, quod propter Christum habeamus Deum propitium, sed propter nostram dilectionem. Et tamen qualis sit illa dilectio, non dicunt, neque [R. 87 25] dicere possunt. Praedicant se legem implere, quum haec gloria proprie debeatur Christo; et fiduciam propriorum operum opponunt iudicio Dei, dicunt enim se de condigno mereri gratiam et vitam aeternam. Haec est simpliciter impia et vana fiducia. Nam in hac vita non possumus legi satisfacere, quia natura carnalis non desinit malos affectus parere, etsi his resistit Spiritus in nobis.

26] Sed quaerat aliquis: Quum et nos fateamur dilectionem esse opus Spiritus Sancti, quumque sit iustitia, quia est impletio legis, cur non doceamus, quod iustificet? Ad hoc respondendum est: Primum hoc certum est, quod non accipimus remissionem peccatorum neque per dilectionem, neque propter dilectionem nostram, sed propter Christum sola fide. 27] Sola fides, quae intuetur in promissionem et sentit ideo certo statuendum esse, quod Deus ignoscat, quia Christus non sit frustra mortuus etc., vincit terrores peccati et mortis. 28] Si quis dubitat, utrum remittantur sibi peccata, contumelia afficit Christum, quum peccatum suum iudicat maius aut efficacius esse quam mortem et promissionem Christi; quum Paulus dicat Rom. 5, 20, gratiam exuberare supra peccatum, hoc est, misericordiam 29] ampliorem esse quam peccatum. Si quis sentit se ideo consequi remissionem peccatorum, quia diligit, afficit contumelia Christum et comperiet in iudicio Dei, hanc fiduciam propriae iustitiae impiam et inanem esse. Ergo necesse est, quod fides reconciliet et 30] iustificet. Et sicut non accipimus remissionem peccatorum per alias virtutes legis seu propter eas, videlicet propter patientiam, castitatem, obedientiam erga magistratus etc., et tamen has virtutes sequi oportet: ita neque propter dilectionem Dei accipimus remissionem peccatorum, etsi sequi eam necesse est. 31] Ceterum nota est consuetudo sermonis, quod interdum eodem verbo causam et effectum complectimur κατὰ συνεκδοχὴν. Ita Lucae 7, 47 ait Christus: Remittuntur ei peccata multa, quia dilexit multum. Interpretatur enim se ipsum Christus, quum addit v. 50: Fides tua salvam te fecit. Non igitur [R. 88] voluit Christus, quod mulier illo opere dilectionis merita esset remissionem peccatorum. Ideo enim clare dicit: Fides tua salvam te fecit. At fides est, quae apprehendit misericordiam propter verbum Dei gratis. Si quis hoc negat fidem esse, prorsus non in- 33] telligit, quid sit fides. Et ipsa historia hoc loco ostendit, quid vocet dilectionem. Mulier venit hanc afferens de Christo opinionem, quod apud ipsum quaerenda esset remissio peccatorum. Hic cultus est summus cultus Christi. Nihil potuit maius tribuere Christo. Hoc erat vere Messiam agnoscere, quaerere apud eum remissionem peccatorum.

Wertprediger und Gesehlehrer. Sie lehren nicht erst, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch den Glauben. Sie lehren nichts von dem Mittler Christo, daß wir durch denselben einen gnädigen Gott erlangen, sondern reden von unserer Liebe und unsern Werken und sagen doch nicht, was es für eine Liebe sei, und können es auch nicht sagen. Sie rühmen, sie könnten das Gesez erfüllen oder halten, so doch die Ehre niemand gehört denn Christo, und halten also ihr eigen Werk gegen Gottes Urtheil, sagen, sie verdienen de condigno Gnade und ewiges Leben. Das ist doch ein ganz vergeblich und gottlos Vertrauen auf eigene Werke. Denn in diesem Leben können auch Christen und die Heiligen selbst Gottes Gesez nicht vollkommenlich halten; denn es bleiben immer böse Reigungen und Lüfte in uns, wie wohl der Heilige Geist denselben widersteht.

Es möchte aber jemand unter ihnen fragen: So wir selbst bekennen, daß die Liebe eine Frucht des Geistes sei, und so die Liebe dennoch ein heilig Werk und Erfüllung des Gesezes genannt wird, warum wir denn auch nicht lehren, daß sie vor Gott gerecht mache? Antwort: Erstlich ist das gewiß, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden nicht empfangen weder durch die Liebe noch um der Liebe willen, sondern allein durch den Glauben um Christus' willen. Denn allein der Glaube im Herzen sieht auf Gottes Verheißung; und allein der Glaube ist die Gewißheit, da das Herz gewiß drauf steht, daß Gott gnädig ist, daß Christus nicht umsonst gestorben sei usw. Und derselbe Glaube überwindet allein das Schrecken des Todes und der Sünde. Denn wer noch wankt oder zweifelt, ob ihm die Sünden vergeben seien, der vertraut Gott nicht und verzagt an Christo; denn er hält seine Sünde für größer und stärker denn den Tod und Blut Christi, so doch Paulus sagt zu den Römern am 5, 20, „die Gnade sei mächtiger denn die Sünde“, das ist, kräftiger, reicher und stärker. So nun jemand meint, daß er darum Vergebung der Sünden will erlangen, daß er die Liebe hat, der schwächt und schändet Christum und wird am letzten Ende, wenn er vor Gottes Gericht stehen soll, finden, daß solch Vertrauen vergeblich ist. Darum ist es gewiß, daß allein der Glaube gerecht macht. Und gleichwie wir nicht erlangen Vergebung der Sünden durch andere gute Werke und Tugenden, als, um Geduld willen, um Keuschheit, um Gehorsams willen gegen die Obrigkeit, und folgen doch die Tugenden, wo Glaube ist: also empfangen wir auch nicht um der Liebe Gottes willen Vergebung der Sünden, wiewohl sie nicht außenbleibt, wo dieser Glaube ist. Daß aber Christus Lucä am 7, 47 spricht: „Ihr werdet viel Sünden vergeben werden, denn sie hat viel geliebet“, da legt Christus sein Wort selbst aus, da er sagt B. 50: „Dein Glaube hat dir geholfen.“ Und Christus will nicht, daß die Frau durch das Werk der Liebe verdient habe Vergebung der Sünden: darum sagt er klar: „Dein Glaube hat dir geholfen.“ Nun ist das der Glaube, welcher sich verläßt auf Gottes Barmherzigkeit und Wort, nicht auf eigene Werke. Und meint jemand, daß der Glaube sich zugleich auf Gott und eigene Werke verlassen könne, der versteht gewißlich nicht, was Glaube sei. Denn das erschrodene Gewissen wird nicht zufrieden durch eigene Werke, sondern muß nach Barmherzigkeit schreien und läßt sich allein durch Got-justifies. Thus it is clearly apparent that they teach only the Law. They do not teach that remission of sins through faith is first received. They do not teach of Christ as Mediator, that for Christ's sake we have a gracious God; but because of our love. And yet, what the nature of this love is they do not say, neither can they say. They proclaim that they fulfil the Law, although this glory belongs properly to Christ; and they set against the judgment of God confidence in their own works; for they say that they merit de condigno (according to righteousness) grace and eternal life. This confidence is absolutely impious and vain. For in this life we cannot satisfy the Law, because carnal nature does not cease to bring forth wicked dispositions [evil inclination and desire], even though the Spirit in us resists them.

But some one may ask: Since we also confess that love is a work of the Holy Ghost, and since it is righteousness, because it is the fulfilling of the Law, why do we not teach that it justifies? To this we must reply: In the first place, it is certain that we receive remission of sins, neither through our love, nor for the sake of our love, but for Christ's sake, by faith alone. Faith alone, which looks upon the promise, and knows that for this reason it must be regarded as certain that God forgives, because Christ has not died in vain, etc., overcomes the terrors of sin and death. If any one doubts whether sins are remitted him, he dishonors Christ, since he judges that his sin is greater or more efficacious than the death and promise of Christ; although Paul says, Rom. 5, 20: Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound, i. e., that mercy is more comprehensive [more powerful, richer, and stronger] than sin. If any one thinks that he obtains the remission of sins because he loves, he dishonors Christ, and will discover in God's judgment that this confidence in his own righteousness is wicked and vain. Therefore it is necessary that faith [alone] reconciles and justifies. And as we do not receive remission of sins through other virtues of the Law, or on account of these, namely, on account of patience, chastity, obedience towards magistrates, etc., and nevertheless these virtues ought to follow, so, too, we do not receive remission of sins because of love to God, although it is necessary that this should follow. Besides, the custom of speech is well known that by the same word we sometimes comprehend by synecdoche the cause and effects. Thus in Luke 7, 47 Christ says: Her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much. For Christ interprets Himself [this very passage] when He adds: Thy faith hath saved thee. Christ, therefore, did not mean that the woman, by that work of love, had merited the remission of sins. For that is the reason He says: Thy faith hath saved thee. But faith is that which freely apprehends God's mercy on account of God's Word [which relies upon God's mercy and Word, and not upon one's own work]. If any one denies that this is faith [if any one imagines that he can rely at the same time upon God and his own works], he does not understand at all what faith is. [For the terrified conscience is not satisfied with its own works, but must cry after mercy, and is comforted and encouraged alone by God's Word.] And the narrative itself shows in this passage what that is which He calls love. The woman came with the opinion concerning Christ that with Him the remission of sins should be sought. This worship is the highest worship of Christ. Nothing greater could she ascribe to Christ. To seek from Him the remission of sins was truly to acknowledge the Messiah. Now, thus to think of Christ, thus to worship Him, thus to embrace Him, is truly to believe. Christ, moreover, employed the word "love" not towards the woman, but against the Pharisee, because He contrasted the entire worship of the Pharisee with the entire

Porro sic de Christo sentire, sic colere, sic complecti Christum est vere credere. Christus autem usus est verbo dilectionis non apud mulierem, sed adversus Pharisaicum, quia totum cultum Pharisaei cum toto cultu mulieris comparabat. Obiurgat Pharisaicum, quod non agnosceret ipsum esse Messiam, etsi haec externa officia ipsi praestaret, ut hospitali, viro magno et sancto. Ostendit mulierculam et praedicat huius cultum, unguenta, lacrimas etc., quae omnia erant signa fidei et confessionis quaedam, quod videlicet apud Christum quaereret remissionem peccatorum. Magnum profecto exemplum est, quod non sine causa commovit Christum, ut obiurgaret Pharisaeum, virum sapientem et honestum, sed non credentem. Hanc ei impietatem improbat et admonet eum exemplo mulierculae, significans turpe ei esse, quod, quum indocta muliercula credat Deo, ipse legis doctor non credat, non agnoscat Messiam, non quaerat apud eum remissionem peccatorum et salutem. Sic igitur totum cultum laudat, ut saepe fit in Scripturis, ut uno verbo multa complectamur; ut infra latius dicemus in similibus locis, ut Luc. 11, 41: Date eleemosynam, et omnia erunt munda. Non tantum eleemosynas requirit, sed etiam iustitiam fidei. Ita hic ait: Remittuntur ei peccata multa, quia dilexit multum, id est, quia me [R. 89] vere coluit fide et exercitiis et signis fidei. Totum cultum comprehendit. Interim tamen hoc docet, quod proprie accipiatur fide remissio peccatorum, etsi dilectio, confessio et alii boni fructus sequi debeant. Quare non hoc vult, quod fructus illi sint pretium, sint propitiatio, propter quam detur remissio peccatorum, quae reconciliet nos Deo. De magna re disputamus, de honore Christi, et unde petant bonae mentes certam et firmam consolationem, utrum fiducia collocanda sit [36] in Christum, an in opera nostra. Quodsi in opera nostra collocanda erit, detrahitur Christo honos mediatoris et propitiatoris. Et tamen compariemus in iudicio Dei, hanc fiduciam vanam esse et conscientias inde ruere in desperationem. Quodsi remissio peccatorum et reconciliatio non contingit gratis propter Christum, sed propter nostram dilectionem, nemo habiturus est remissionem peccatorum, nisi ubi totam legem fecerit, quia lex non iustificat, donec nos accusare potest. [37] Patet igitur, quum iustificatio sit reconciliatio propter Christum, quod fide iustificemur, quia certissimum est sola fide accipi remissionem peccatorum.

tes Wort trösten und aufrichten. Und die Historie selbst zeigt an dem Ort wohl an, was Christus Liebe nennt. Die Frau kommt in der Zuversicht zu Christo, daß sie wolle Vergebung der Sünden bei ihm erlangen; das heißt recht Christum erkennen und ehren; denn größere Ehre kann man Christo nicht tun. Denn das heißt Messiam oder Christum wahrlich erkennen, bei ihm suchen Vergebung der Sünden. Dasselbe von Christo halten, also Christum erkennen und annehmen, das heißt recht an Christum glauben. Christus aber hat dieses Wort, da er sagt: „Sie hat viel geliebet“, nicht gebraucht, als er mit der Frau redete, sondern als er mit dem Pharisäer redete. Denn der Herr Christus hält gegeneinander die ganze Ehre, die ihm der Pharisäer getan hat, mit dem Erbieten und Werken, so die Frau ihm erzeigt hat. Er straft den Pharisäer, daß er ihn nicht hat erkannt für Christum, wiewohl er ihn äußerlich geehrt als einen Gast und frommen, heiligen Mann. Aber den Gottesdienst der Frau, daß sie ihre Sünde erkennt und bei Christo Vergebung der Sünden sucht, diesen Dienst lobt Christus. Und es ist ein großes Exempel, welches Christum billig bewogen hat, daß er den Pharisäer als einen weisen, ehrlichen Mann, der doch nicht an ihn glaubt, straft. Den Unglauben wirft er ihm vor und vermahnt ihn durch das Exempel, als sollte er sagen: Billig solltest du dich schämen, du Pharisäer, daß du so blind bist, mich für Christum und Messiam nicht erkennst, so du ein Lehrer des Gesetzes bist, und das Weib, das ein ungelehrt, arm Weib ist, mich erkennst. Darum lobt er da nicht allein die Liebe, sondern den ganzen cultum oder Gottesdienst, den Glauben mit den Früchten, und nennt doch vor dem Pharisäer die Frucht. Denn man kann den Glauben im Herzen andern nicht weisen und anzeigen denn durch die Früchte, die beweisen vor den Menschen den Glauben im Herzen. Darum will Christus nicht, daß die Liebe und die Werke sollen der Schatz sein, dadurch die Sünden bezahlt werden, welches Christus' Blut ist. Verhalben ist dieser Streit über einer hohen, wichtigen Sache, da den frommen Herzen und Gewissen ihr höchster, gewisester, ewiger Trost an gelegen ist, nämlich von Christo, ob wir sollen vertrauen auf das Verdienst Christi oder auf unsere Werke. Denn so wir auf unsere Werke vertrauen, so wird Christo seine Ehre genommen, so ist Christus nicht der Verlöbter noch Mittler, und werden doch endlich erfahren, daß solch Vertrauen vergeblich sei, und daß die Gewissen dadurch nur in Verzweiflung fallen. Denn so wir Vergebung der Sünden und Versöhnung Gottes nicht ohne Verdienst erlangen durch Christum, so wird niemand Vergebung der Sünden haben, er habe denn das ganze Gesetz gehalten. Denn das Gesetz macht niemand gerecht vor Gott, solange es uns anlagt. Nun kann sich ja niemand rühmen, daß er dem Gesetz genuggetan habe. Darum müssen wir sonst Trost suchen, nämlich an Christo.

Nun wollen wir antworten auf die Frage, welche wir oben angezeigt: warum die Liebe oder dilectio niemand vor Gott gerecht mache. Die Widersacher denken also, die Liebe sei die Erfüllung des Gesetzes, darum wäre es wohl wahr, daß die Liebe uns gerecht macht, wenn wir das Gesetz hielten. Wer darf aber mit Wahrheit sagen oder rühmen, daß er das Gesetz halte und worship of the woman. He reproveth the Pharisee because he did not acknowledge that He was the Messiah, although he rendered Him the outward offices due to a guest and a great and holy man. He points to the woman and praises her worship, ointment, tears, etc., all of which were signs of faith and a confession, namely, that with Christ she sought the remission of sins. It is indeed a great example, which, not without reason, moved Christ to reprove the Pharisee, who was a wise and honorable man, but not a believer. He charges him with impiety, and admonishes him by the example of the woman, showing thereby that it is disgraceful to him, that, while an unlearned woman believes God, he, a doctor of the Law, does not believe, does not acknowledge the Messiah, and does not seek from Him remission of sins and salvation. Thus, therefore, He praises the entire worship [faith with its fruits, but towards the Pharisee He names only the fruits which prove to men that there is faith in the heart], as it often occurs in the Scriptures that by one word we embrace many things; as below we shall speak at greater length in regard to similar passages, such as Luke 11, 41: Give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you. He requires not only alms, but also the righteousness of faith. Thus He here says: Her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much, i. e., because she has truly worshiped Me with faith and the exercises and signs of faith. He comprehends the entire worship. Meanwhile He teaches this, that the remission of sins is properly received by faith, although love, confession, and other good fruits ought to follow. Wherefore He does not mean this, that these fruits are the price, or are the propitiation, because of which the remission of sins, which reconciles us to God, is given. We are disputing concerning a great subject, concerning the honor of Christ, and whence good minds may seek for sure and firm consolation, whether confidence is to be placed in Christ or in our works. Now, if it is to be placed in our works, the honor of Mediator and Propitiator will be withdrawn from Christ. And yet we shall find, in God's judgment, that this confidence is vain, and that consciences rush thence into despair. But if the remission of sins and reconciliation do not occur freely for Christ's sake, but for the sake of our love, no one will have remission of sins, unless when he has fulfilled the entire Law, because the Law does not justify as long as it can accuse us. Therefore it is manifest that, since justification is reconciliation for Christ's sake, we are justified by faith, because it is very certain that by faith alone the remission of sins is received.

Now, therefore, let us reply to the objection which we have above stated: [Why does love not justify anybody before God?] The adversaries are right in thinking that love is the fulfilling of the Law, and obedience to the Law is certainly righteousness. [Therefore it would be true that love justifies us, if we would keep the Law. But who in truth

Christum, non propter dilectionem aut legis impletionem, sequitur necessario, quod fide in Christum iustificemur.

Paulus, daß wir durch das Gesetz nicht können vor Gott gerecht werden. Die Widersacher müssen hie wohl weit fehlen und der Hauptfrage irregehen, denn sie sehen hie in diesem Handel allein das Gesetz an. Denn alle menschliche Vernunft und Weisheit kann nicht anders urteilen, denn daß man durch Gesetze müsse fromm werden, und wer äußerlich das Gesetz halte, der sei heilig und fromm. Aber das Evangelium rückt uns herum und weist uns von dem Gesetz zu den göttlichen Verheißungen und lehrt, daß wir nicht gerecht werden durchs Gesetz (denn niemand kann es halten), sondern dadurch, daß uns um Christus' willen Versöhnung geschenkt ist, und die empfangen wir allein durch den Glauben. Denn ehe wir einen Lüthel am Gesetz erfüllen, muß erst da sein der Glaube an Christum, durch welchen wir Gott versöhnt werden und erst Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Lieber Herrgott, wie dürfen doch die Leute sich Christen nennen oder sagen, daß sie auch die Bücher des Evangelii einmal je angesehen oder gelesen haben, die noch dieses anfechten, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen? Ist es doch einem Christenmenschen schrecklich allein zu hören.

39) Deinde illa legis impletio seu obedientia erga legem est quidem iustitia, quum est integra, sed in nobis est exigua et immunda. Ideo non placet propter seipsam, non est accepta propter seipsam. Quamquam [R. 90 autem ex his, quae supra dicta sunt, constat iustificationem non solum initium renovationis significare, sed reconciliationem, qua etiam postea accepti sumus: tamen nunc multo clarius perspicui poterit, quod illa inchoata legis impletio non iustificet, quia tantum est accepta propter fidem. Nec est confidendum, quod propria perfectione et impletione legis coram Deo iusti reputemur, ac non potius propter Christum:

und macht, daß die Gewissen verzweifeln. Derhalben soll dieser Grund feststehen bleiben, daß wir um Christus' willen Gott angenehm und gerecht sind durch Glauben, nicht von wegen unserer Liebe und Werke. Daß wollen wir also klar und gewiß machen, daß man's greifen möge. Solange das Herz nicht Frieden vor Gott hat, kann es nicht gerecht sein; denn es flieht vor Gottes Zorn und verzweifelt und wollte, daß Gott nicht richtete. Darum kann das Herz nicht gerecht und Gott angenehm sein, diem Weil es nicht Frieden mit Gott hat. Nun macht der Glaube allein, daß das Herz zufrieden wird, und erlangt Ruhe und Leben, Röm. 5, 1, so es sich getrost und frei verläßt auf Gottes Zusage um Christus' willen. Aber unsere Werke bringen das Herz nicht zufrieden, denn wir finden allezeit, daß sie nicht rein sind. Darum muß folgen, daß wir allein durch Glauben Gott angenehm und gerecht sind, so wir im Herzen schließen, Gott wolle uns gnädig sein, nicht von wegen unserer Werke und Erfüllung des Gesetzes, sondern aus lauter Gnade um Christus' willen. Was können die Widersacher wider diesen Grund aufbringen? Was können sie wider die öffentliche Wahrheit erdenken oder erdenken? Denn dies ist je gewiß, und die Erfahrung lehrt stark genug, daß, wenn wir Gottes Urteil und Zorn recht fühlen oder in Ansehung kommen, unsere Werke oder Gottesdienste das Gewissen nicht können zur Ruhe bringen. Und das zeigt die Schrift oft genug an, als im Psalm, 143, 2: „Du wollest mit deinem Knechte nicht in das Gericht gehen: denn vor dir wird keiner, der da lebt, gerecht sein.“ Da zeigt er klar an, daß alle Heiligen, alle frommen Kinder Gottes, welche den Heiligen Geist haben, wenn Gott nicht aus Gnaden ihnen will ihre Sünden vergeben, noch übrige Sünde im Fleisch an sich haben. Denn daß David an einem andern Ort, Ps. 7, 9, sagt: „Herr, richte mich nach meiner Gerechtigkeit!“ da redet er von seiner Sache und nicht von eigener Gerechtigkeit, sondern bittet, daß Gott seine Sache und Wort schüen wolle; wie er denn sagt: „Richte meine Sache!“ Wiederum Ps. 130, 3 sagt er klar, daß keiner, auch nicht die höchsten Heiligen, können Gottes Urteil ertragen, wenn er will auf Missethat achten, wie er sagt: „So du willst achthaben auf Missethat, Herr, wer wird bestehen?“ Und also sagt Hiob am 9. [28. 30. 31]: „Ich entsetze mich vor allen meinen Werken: item: „Wenn ich gleich schneeweiß gewaschen wäre, und meine Hände gleich glänzeten vor Reinigkeit, noch würdest du Unreines an mir finden.“ Und in [den] Sprüchen Salomonis, 20, 9: „Wer kann sagen: Mein Herz ist rein?“ Und 1 Joh. 1, 8: „So wir werden sagen, daß wir keine Sünde haben, verführen wir uns selbst und ist die Wahrheit nicht in uns.“ Item, im Vaterunser bitten auch die Heiligen: „Vergib uns unsere Schuld!“ Darum haben auch die Heiligen Schuld und Sünde. Item, im 4. Buch Mosis, 14, 18: „Auch der Unschuldige wird nicht unschuldig sein.“ Und Zacharias der Prophet sagt im 2. Kap., V. 13: „Alles Fleisch sei stille vor dem Herrn!“ Und Jesaias sagt 40, 6: „Alles Fleisch ist Gras“, das ist, das Fleisch und alle Gerechtigkeit, so wir vermögen, die können Gottes Urteil nicht ertragen. Und Jonas sagt am 2. Kap., V. 9: „Welche sich verlassen auf Eitelkeit vergeblich, die lassen Barmherzigkeit fahren.“ Derhalben erhält uns eitel Barmherzigkeit: unsere eigenen Werke, Verdienst und Vermögen können uns nicht helfen. Diese Sprüche und dergleichen in der Schrift zeigen an, daß unsere Werke unrein sind, und daß wir Gnade und Barmherzigkeit bedürfen. Darum stellen die Werke die Gewissen nicht zufrieden, sondern allein die Barmherzigkeit, welche wir durch den Glauben ergreifen.

Gott liebe, wie das Gesetz gebietet? Wir haben oben angezeigt, daß darum Gott die Verheißung der Gnade getan hat, daß wir das Gesetz nicht halten können. Darum sagt auch allenthalben Gott gerecht werden. Die Widersacher müssen hie wohl weit fehlen und der Hauptfrage irregehen, denn sie sehen hie in diesem Handel allein das Gesetz an. Denn alle menschliche Vernunft und Weisheit kann nicht anders urteilen, denn daß man durch Gesetze müsse fromm werden, und wer äußerlich das Gesetz halte, der sei heilig und fromm. Aber das Evangelium rückt uns herum und weist uns von dem Gesetz zu den göttlichen Verheißungen und lehrt, daß wir nicht gerecht werden durchs Gesetz (denn niemand kann es halten), sondern dadurch, daß uns um Christus' willen Versöhnung geschenkt ist, und die empfangen wir allein durch den Glauben. Denn ehe wir einen Lüthel am Gesetz erfüllen, muß erst da sein der Glaube an Christum, durch welchen wir Gott versöhnt werden und erst Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Lieber Herrgott, wie dürfen doch die Leute sich Christen nennen oder sagen, daß sie auch die Bücher des Evangelii einmal je angesehen oder gelesen haben, die noch dieses anfechten, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen? Ist es doch einem Christenmenschen schrecklich allein zu hören.

Zum andern ist's gewiß, daß auch diejenigen, so durch den Glauben und Heiligen Geist neugeboren sind, doch gleichwohl noch, solange dies Leben währt, nicht gar rein sind, auch das Gesetz nicht vollständig halten. Denn wiewohl sie die Erstlinge des Geistes empfangen, und wiewohl sich in ihnen das neue, ja das ewige Leben angefangen, so bleibt doch noch etwas da von der Sünde und böser Luft und findet das Gesetz noch viel, des es uns anzuklagen hat. Darum, obgleich Liebe Gottes und gute Werke in Christen sollen und müssen sein, sind sie dennoch vor Gott nicht gerecht um solcher ihrer Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen durch den Glauben. Und Vertrauen auf eigene Erfüllung des Gesetzes ist eitel Abgötterei und Lästerung Christi und fällt doch zuletzt weg can say or boast that he keeps the Law, and loves God as the Law has commanded? We have shown above that God has made the promise of grace, because we cannot observe the Law. Therefore Paul says everywhere that we cannot be justified before God by the Law.] But they make a mistake in this, that they think that we are justified by the Law. [The adversaries have to fail at this point, and miss the main issue, for in this business they only behold the Law. For all men's reason and wisdom cannot but hold that we must become pious by the Law, and that a person externally observing the Law is holy and pious. But the Gospel faces us about, directs us away from the Law to the divine promises, and teaches that we are not justified, etc.] Since, however, we are not justified by the Law [because no person can keep it], but receive remission of sins and reconciliation by faith for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of love or the fulfilling of the Law, it follows necessarily that we are justified by faith in Christ. [For before we fulfil one tittle of the Law, there must be faith in Christ by which we are reconciled to God and first obtain the remission of sin. Good God, how dare people call themselves Christians or say that they once at least looked into or read the books of the Gospel when they still deny that we obtain remission of sins by faith in Christ? Why, to a Christian it is shocking merely to hear such a statement.]

Again, [in the second place,] this fulfilling of the Law, or obedience towards the Law, is indeed righteousness, when it is complete; but in us it is small and impure. [For, although they have received the first-fruits of the Spirit, and the new, yea, the eternal life has begun in them, there still remains a remnant of sin and evil lust, and the Law still finds much of which it must accuse us.] Accordingly, it is not pleasing for its own sake, and is not accepted for its own sake. But although from those things which have been said above it is evident that justification signifies not the beginning of the renewal, but the reconciliation by which also we afterwards are accepted, nevertheless it can now be seen much more clearly that the inchoate fulfilling of the Law does not justify, because it is accepted only on account of faith. [Trusting in our own fulfilment of the Law is sheer idolatry and blaspheming Christ, and in the end it collapses and causes our consciences to despair. Therefore, this foundation shall stand forever, namely, that for Christ's sake we are accepted with God, and justified by faith, not on account of our love and works. This we shall make so plain and certain that anybody may grasp it. As long as the heart is not at peace with God, it cannot be righteous; for it flees from the wrath of God, despairs, and would have God not to judge it. Therefore the heart cannot be righteous and accepted with God while it is not at peace with God. Now, faith alone makes the heart to be content, and obtains peace and life, Rom. 5, 1, because it confidently and frankly relies on the promise of God for Christ's sake. But our works do not make the heart content, for we always find that they are not pure. Therefore it must follow that we are accepted with God, and justified by faith alone, when in our hearts we conclude that God desires to be gracious to us, not on account of our works and fulfilment of the Law, but from pure grace, for Christ's sake. What can our opponents bring forward against this argument? What can they invent and devise against the plain truth? For this is quite certain, and experience teaches forcibly enough, that when we truly feel the judgment and wrath of God, or become afflicted, our works and worship cannot set the heart at rest. Scripture indicates this often enough, as in Ps. 143, 2: Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. Here he clearly shows that all the saints, all the pious children of God, who have the Holy Ghost, if God would not by grace forgive them their sin, still have remnants of sin in the flesh. For when David in another place, Ps. 7, 8, says: Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness, he refers to his cause, and not to his righteousness, and asks God to protect his cause and word, for he says: Judge, O Lord, my cause. Again, in Ps. 130, 3 he clearly states that no person, not even the greatest saints, can bear God's judgment, if He were to observe our iniquity, as he says: If Thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? And thus says Job, 9, 28: I was afraid of all my works (Engl. vers., sorrows). Likewise chap. 9, 30: If I wash myself with snow-water, and make my hands never so clean, yet shalt Thou plunge me in the ditch. And Prov. 20, 9: Who can say, I have made my heart clean? And 1 John 1, 8: If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us. And in the Lord's Prayer the saints ask for the forgiveness of sins. Therefore even the saints have guilt and sins. Again, in Num. 14, 18: The innocent will not be innocent. And Zechariah, 2, 13, says: Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord. And Isaiah, 40, 6 sqq.: All flesh is grass, i. e., flesh and righteousness of the flesh cannot endure the judgment of God. And Jonah says, 2, 9: They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy. Therefore, pure mercy preserves us; our own works, merits, endeavors, cannot preserve us. These and similar declarations in the Scriptures testify that our works are unclean, and that we need mercy. Wherefore works do not render consciences pacified, but only mercy apprehended by faith does.] Nor must we trust that we are accounted righteous before God by our own perfection and fulfilling of the Law, but rather for Christ's sake.

41] Primum, quia Christus non desinit esse mediator, postquam renovati sumus. Errant, qui fingunt eum tantum primam gratiam meritum esse, nos postea placere nostra legis impletionem et mereri vitam aeternam. Manet 42] mediator Christus, et semper statuere debemus, quod propter ipsum habeamus placatum Deum, etiamsi nos indigni simus. Sicut Paulus 1 Cor. 4, 4 aperte docet, quum ait: Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed in hoc non iustificatus sum; sed sentit se fide reputari iustum propter Christum, iuxta illud: Beati, quorum remissae sunt iniquitates, Ps. 32, 1; Rom. 4, 7. Illa autem remissio semper accipitur fide. Item imputatio iustitiae evangelii est ex promissione; igitur semper accipitur fide, semper statuendum est, quod fide 43] propter Christum iusti reputemur. Si renati postea sentire deberent, se acceptos fore propter impletionem legis, quando esset conscientia certa, se placere Deo, quum nun- 44] quam legi satisfaciamus? Ideo semper ad promissionem recurrendum est, hac sustentanda est infirmitas nostra, et statuendum nos propter Christum iustos reputari, qui sedet ad dextram Patris et perpetuo interpellat pro nobis, Rom. 8, 34. Hunc pontificem contumelia afficit, si quis sentit se iam iustum et acceptum esse propter propriam impletionem legis, non propter illius promissionem. Nec intelligi potest, quomodo fingi queat homo iustus esse coram Deo, excluso propitiatore et mediatore Christo.

45] Item, quid opus est longa disputatione? Totā Scriptura, tota ecclesia clamat legi [R. 91 non satisfieri. Non igitur placet illa inchoata legis impletio propter seipsum, sed propter 46] fidem in Christum. Alioqui lex semper accusat nos. Quis enim satis diligit, aut satis timet Deum? Quis satis patienter sustinet afflictiones a Deo impositas? Quis non saepe dubitat, utrum Dei consilio an casu regantur res humanae? Quis non saepe dubitat, utrum a Deo exaudiatur? Quis non saepe stomachatur, quod impii fortuna meliore utuntur quam pii, quod pii ab impiis opprimuntur? Quis satisfacit vocationi suae? Quis diligit proximum sicut seipsum? Quis non irritatur 47] a concupiscentia? Ideo Paulus inquit Rom. 7, 19: Non quod volo, bonum, hoc facio, sed quod nolo, malum. Item v. 25: Mente servio legi Dei, carne autem servio legi peccati. Hic aperte praedicat se legi peccati servire. Et David ait Ps. 143, 2: Non intres in iudicium cum servo tuo, quia non iustificabitur in conspectu tuo omnis vivens. Hic etiam servus Dei deprecatur iudicium. Item Ps. 32, 2: Beatus vir, cui non imputat Dominus peccatum. Semper igitur in hac infirmitate nostra adest peccatum, quod imputari poterat, de quo paulo post inquit, v. 6: Pro hoc orabit ad te omnis sanctus. Hic ostendit sanctos etiam oportere petere remissionem 48] peccatorum. Plus quam caeci sunt, qui malos affectus in carne non sentiunt esse peccata, de quibus Paulus Gal. 5, 17 dicit: Caro concupiscit adversus Spiritum, Spiritus ad-

Zum dritten, Christus bleibt nichtsdestoweniger vor als nach der einige Mittler und Verfühner, wenn wir in ihm also neugeboren sind. Darum irren diejenigen, die da erdichten, daß Christus uns allein primam gratiam oder die erste Gnade verdiene, und daß wir hernach durch unsere eigenen Werke und Verdienst müssen das ewige Leben verdienen. Denn er bleibt der einige Mittler, und wir sollen des gewiß sein, daß wir um feinetwillen allein einen gnädigen Gott haben; ob wir es auch gleich unwürdig sind, wie Paulus sagt Röm. 5, 2: „Durch ihn haben wir einen Zugang zu Gott.“ Denn unsere besten Werke, auch nach empfangener Gnade des Evangelii (wie ich gesagt), sind noch schwach und nicht gar rein; denn es ist je nicht so ein schlecht Ding um die Sünde und Adams Fall, wie die Vernunft meint oder gebent, und ist über allen menschlichen Verstand und Gedanken, daß durch den Ungehorsam für ein schredlicher Gotteszorn auf uns geerbt ist. Und ist gar eine greuliche Verderbung an der ganzen menschlichen Natur geschehen, welche kein Menschenwert, sondern allein Gott selbst kann herwiederbringen. Darum sagt der Psalm: „Wohlbenedenen, welchen ihre Sünden vergeben sind.“ Darum dürfen [bedürfen] wir Gnade und Gottes gnädiger Güte und Vergebung der Sünden, wenn wir gleich viele gute Werke getan haben. Dieselbe Gnade aber läßt sich allein durch den Glauben fassen. Also bleibt Christus allein der Hohepriester und Mittler, und was wir nun Gutes tun, oder was wir des Befehles halten, gefällt Gott nicht für sich selbst, sondern daß wir uns an Christum halten und wissen, daß wir einen gnädigen Gott haben nicht um des Befehles willen, sondern um Christus' willen.

Zum vierten, so wir hielten, daß [wir], wenn wir nun zu dem Evangelium kommen und neugeboren sind, hernach durch unsere Werke verdienen sollen, daß uns Gott gnädig forthin wäre, nicht durch Glauben, so käme das Gewissen nimmer zur Ruhe, sondern müßte verzweifeln; denn das Gesetz klagt uns ohne Unterlaß an, biemeil wir es nicht vollständig halten können usw. Wie denn die ganze heilige christliche Kirche, alle Heiligen allzeit bekant haben und noch bekennen. Denn also sagt Paulus zu den Römern am 7, 19: „Das Gute, das ich will, das tue ich nicht, sondern das Böse, das ich nicht will, das tue ich“ usw. Item: „Mit dem Fleische diene ich dem Gesetz der Sünde“ usw. Denn es ist keiner, der Gott den Herrn so von ganzem Herzen fürchtet und liebt, als er schuldig ist; keiner, der Kreuz und Trübsal in ganzem Gehorsam gegen Gott trägt; keiner, der nicht durch Schwachheit oft zweifelt, ob auch Gott sich unser annehme, ob er uns achte, ob er unser Gebet erhöhe. Darüber murren wir oft aus Ungebuld wider Gott, daß es den Gottlosen wohl geht, den Frommen übel. Item, wer ist, der seinem Beruf recht genug tut, der nicht wider Gott zürnt in Anschuldungen, wenn Gott sich verbirgt? Wer liebt seinen Nächsten als sich selbst? Wer ist ohne allerlei böse Lüste? Von den Sünden allen sagt der Psalm: „Dafür werden bitten alle Heiligen zu rechter Zeit.“ Da sagt er, daß alle Heiligen müssen um Vergebung der Sünden bitten. Deshalb sind diejenigen gar stockblind, welche die bösen Lüste im Fleisch nicht für Sünde halten, von welchen Paulus sagt: „Das Fleisch strebet wider den Geist, und der Geist strebet wider das

First [in the third place], because Christ does not cease to be Mediator after we have been renewed. They err who imagine that He has merited only a first grace, and that afterwards we please God and merit eternal life by our fulfilling of the Law. Christ remains Mediator, and we ought always to be confident that for His sake we have a reconciled God, even although we are unworthy. As Paul clearly teaches when he says [By whom also we have access to God, Rom. 5, 2. For our best works, even after the grace of the Gospel has been received, as I stated, are still weak and not at all pure. For sin and Adam's fall are not such a trifling thing as reason holds or imagines; it exceeds the reason and thought of all men to understand what a horrible wrath of God has been handed on to us by that disobedience. There occurred a shocking corruption of the entire human nature, which no work of man, but only God Himself, can restore], 1 Cor. 4, 4: I know nothing by myself, yet am I not hereby justified, but he knows that by faith he is accounted righteous for Christ's sake, according to the passage: Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, Ps. 32, 1; Rom. 4, 7. [Therefore we need grace, and the gracious goodness of God, and the forgiveness of sin, although we have done many good works.] But this remission is always received by faith. Likewise, the imputation of the righteousness of the Gospel is from the promise; therefore it is always received by faith, and it always must be regarded certain that by faith we are, for Christ's sake, accounted righteous. If the regenerate ought afterwards to think that they will be accepted on account of the fulfilling of the Law, when would conscience be certain that it pleased God, since we never satisfy the Law? Accordingly, we must always recur to the promise; by this our infirmity must be sustained, and we must regard it as certain that we are accounted righteous for the sake of Christ, who is ever at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us, Rom. 8, 34. If any one think that he is righteous and accepted on account of his own fulfilment of the Law, and not on account of Christ's promise, he dishonors this High Priest. Neither can it be understood how one could imagine that man is righteous before God when Christ is excluded as Propitiator and Mediator.

Again [in the fourth place], what need is there of a long discussion? [If we were to think that, after we have come to the Gospel and are born again, we were to merit by our works that God be gracious to us, not by faith, conscience would never find rest, but would be driven to despair. For the Law unceasingly accuses us, since we never can satisfy the Law.] All Scripture, all the Church cries out that the Law cannot be satisfied. Therefore this inchoate fulfilment of the Law does not please on its own account, but on account of faith in Christ. Otherwise the Law always accuses us. For who loves or fears God sufficiently? Who with sufficient patience bears the afflictions imposed by God? Who does not frequently doubt whether human affairs are ruled by God's counsel or by chance? Who does not frequently doubt whether he be heard by God? Who is not frequently enraged because the wicked enjoy a better lot than the pious, because the pious are oppressed by the wicked? Who does satisfaction to his own calling? Who loves his neighbor as himself? Who is not tempted by lust? Accordingly, Paul says, Rom. 7, 19: The good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Likewise v. 25: With the mind I myself serve the Law of God, but with the flesh, the law of sin. Here he openly declares that he serves the law of sin. And David says, Ps. 143, 2: Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. Here even a servant of God prays for the averting of judgment. Likewise Ps. 32, 2: Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. Therefore, in this our infirmity there is always present sin, which could be imputed, and of which he says a little while after, v. 6: For this shall every one that is godly pray unto Thee. Here he shows that even saints ought to seek remission of sins. More than blind are those who do not perceive that wicked desires in the flesh are sins, of which Paul, Gal. 5, 17, says: The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh. The flesh distrusts God, trusts in present things, seeks human aid in calamities, even contrary

Sed de hoc loco infra plura testimonia colligemus, quamquam ubique obvia sunt, non solum in Scripturis, sed etiam in sanctis patribus.

51] Praeclare inquit Augustinus: Omnia mandata Dei implentur, quando, quidquid non fit, ignoratur. Requirit igitur fidem, [R. 92 etiam in bonis operibus, ut credamus nos placere Deo propter Christum nec opera ipsa per 52] se digna esse, quae placeant. Et Hieronymus contra Pelagianos: Tunc ergo iusti sumus, quando nos peccatores fatemur, et iustitia nostra non ex proprio merito, sed ex 53] Dei consistit misericordia. Oportet igitur adesse fidem in illa inchoata legis impletione, quae statuatur, nos propter Christum habere Deum placatum. Nam misericordia non potest apprehendi nisi fide, sicut supra 54] aliquoties dictum est. Quare quum ait Paulus Rom. 3, 31, legem stabiliri per fidem, non solum hoc intelligi oportet, quod fide renati concipiant Spiritum Sanctum, et habeant motus consentientes legi Dei, sed multo maxime refert et hoc addere, quod sentire nos oportet, quod procul a perfectione legis ab- 55] simus. Quare non possumus statuere, quod coram Deo iusti reputemur propter nostram impletionem legis, sed quaerenda est alibi iustificatio, ut conscientia fiat tranquilla. Non enim sumus iusti coram Deo, donec fugientes iudicium Dei irascimur Deo. Sen- 56] tiendum est igitur, quod reconciliati fide propter Christum iusti reputemur, non propter legem aut propter opera nostra, sed quod haec inchoata impletio legis placeat propter fidem, et quod propter fidem non imputetur hoc, quod deest impletioni legis, etiamsi conspectus impunitatis nostrae perterrefacit nos. Iam si est alibi quaerenda iustificatio, ergo nostra dilectio 57] et opera non iustificunt. Longe supra nostram munditiam, imo longe supra ipsam legem collocari debent mors et satisfactio Christi, nobis donata, ut statuamus nos propter illam [R. 93 satisfactionem habere propitium Deum, non propter nostram impletionem legis.

58] Hoc docet Paulus ad Gal. 3, 13, quum ait: Christus redemit nos a maledictione legis, factus pro nobis maledictum, hoc est, lex damnat omnes homines, sed Christus, quia sine peccato subiit poenam peccati et victima pro nobis factus est, sustulit illud ius legis, ne accuset, ne damnet hos, qui credunt in ipsum, quia ipse est propitiatio pro eis, propter quam nunc iusti reputantur. Quum autem iusti reputentur, lex non potest eos accusare aut damnare, etiamsi re ipsa legi non satisfecerint. In eandem sententiam scribit ad Colossenses, 2, 10: In Christo consummati estis; quasi dicat: etsi adhuc procul abestis a perfectione legis, tamen non damnant vos reliquiae peccati, quia propter Christum habemus reconciliationem certam et firmam, si creditis, etiamsi haeret peccatum in carne vestra.

59] Semper debet in conspectu esse promissio, quod Deus propter suam promissionem, propter Christum, velit esse propitius, velit iustificare, non propter legem aut opera nostra. In hac promissione debent pavidae conscientiae quaerere reconciliationem et iustificationem, hac promissione debent se sustentare ac certo statuere, quod habeant Deum propitium propter Christum, propter suam promissionem. Ita nunquam possunt opera conscientiam reddere pacatam, 60] sed tantum promissio. Si igitur praeter dilectionem et opera alibi quaerenda est iustificatio et pax conscientiae, ergo dilectio et opera non iustificunt, etsi sunt virtutes et iustitiae legis, quatenus sunt impletio legis. Et eatenus haec obedientia legis iustificat iustitia legis. Sed haec imperfecta iustitia legis non est accepta Deo nisi propter fidem. Ideo non iustificat, id est, neque reconciliat, neque regenerat, neque per se facit acceptos coram Deo.

61] Ex his constat sola fide nos iustificari coram Deo, quia sola fide accipimus [R. 94 remissionem peccatorum et reconciliationem propter Christum, quia reconciliatio seu iustificatio est res promissa propter Christum, non Fleisch.“ Denn das Fleisch vertraut Gott nicht, verläßt sich auf diese Welt und zeitliche Güter, sucht in Trübsalen menschlichen Trost und Hilfe, auch wider Gottes Willen, zweifelt an Gottes Gnade und Hilfe, murret wider Gott in Kreuz und Anfechtungen, welches alles wider Gottes Gebot ist. Wider die Adamsünde streitet und strebt der Heilige Geist in den Herzen der Heiligen, daß er das- selbe Gift des alten Adams, die böse verzweifelte Art, auslege und töte und in das Herz einen andern Sinn und Mut bringe.

Und Augustinus sagt auch: „Alle Gebote Gottes halten wir dann, wenn uns alles, was wir nicht halten, vergeben wird.“ Darum will Augustinus, daß auch die guten Werke, welche der Heilige Geist wirkt in uns, Gott nicht anders gefallen denn also, daß wir glauben, daß wir Gott angenehm seien um Christus' willen, nicht daß sie an ihnen selbst Gott sollten gefallen. Und Hieronymus sagt wider Pelagius: „Dann sind wir gerecht, wenn wir uns für Sünder erkennen; und unsere Gerechtigkeit steht nicht in unserm Verdienst, sondern in Gottes Barmherzigkeit.“ Darum, wenn wir gleich ganz reich von [an] rechten guten Werken sind und also angefangen haben, Gottes Gesetz zu halten, wie Paulus, da er treulich gepredigt hat usw., so muß dennoch der Glaube da sein, dadurch wir vertrauen, daß Gott uns gnädig und verhöhet sei um Christus' willen und nicht um unserer Werke willen. Denn die Barmherzigkeit läßt sich nicht fassen denn allein durch den Glauben. Darum diejenigen, so lehren, daß wir um Werke willen, nicht um Christus' willen Gott angenehm werden, die führen die Ge- wissen in Verzweiflung.

Aus dem allem ist's klar genug, daß allein der Glaube uns vor Gott gerecht macht, daß ist, er erlangt Vergebung der Sünden und Gnade um Christus' willen und bringt uns zu einer neuen Geburt. Item, so ist's klar genug, daß wir to God's will, flees from afflictions, which it ought to bear because of God's commands, doubts concerning God's mercy, etc. The Holy Ghost in our hearts contends with such dispositions [with Adam's sin] in order to suppress and mortify them [this poison of the old Adam, this desperately wicked disposition], and to produce new spiritual movements. But concerning this topic we will collect more testimonies below, although they are everywhere obvious not only in the Scriptures, but also in the holy Fathers.

Well does Augustine say: All the commandments of God are fulfilled when whatever is not done, is forgiven. Therefore he requires faith even in good works [which the Holy Spirit produces in us], in order that we may believe that for Christ's sake we please God, and that even the works are not of themselves worthy and pleasing. And Jerome, against the Pelagians, says: Then, therefore, we are righteous when we confess that we are sinners, and that our righteousness consists not in our own merit, but in God's mercy. Therefore, in this inchoate fulfilment of the Law, faith ought to be present, which is certain that for Christ's sake we have a reconciled God. For mercy cannot be apprehended unless by faith, as has been repeatedly said above. [Therefore those who teach that we are not accepted by faith for Christ's sake, but for the sake of our own works, lead consciences into despair.] Wherefore, when Paul says, Rom. 3, 31: We establish the Law through faith, by this we ought to understand, not only that those regenerated by faith receive the Holy Ghost, and have movements agreeing with God's Law, but it is by far of the greatest importance that we add also this, that we ought to perceive that we are far distant from the perfection of the Law. Wherefore we cannot conclude that we are accounted righteous before God because of our fulfilling of the Law, but in order that the conscience may become tranquil, justification must be sought elsewhere. For we are not righteous before God as long as we flee from God's judgment, and are angry with God. Therefore we must conclude that, being reconciled by faith, we are accounted righteous for Christ's sake, not for the sake of the Law or our works, but that this inchoate fulfilling of the Law pleases on account of faith, and that, on account of faith, there is no imputation of the imperfection of the fulfilling of the Law, even though the sight of our impurity terrifies us. Now, if justification is to be sought elsewhere, our love and works do not therefore justify. Far above our purity, yea, far above the Law itself, ought to be placed the death and satisfaction of Christ, presented to us that we might be sure that because of this satisfaction, and not because of our fulfilling of the Law, we have a gracious God.

Paul teaches this in Gal. 3, 13, when he says: Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us, i. e., the Law condemns all men, but Christ, because without sin He has borne the punish- ment of sin, and been made a victim for us, has removed that right of the Law to accuse and condemn those who believe in Him, because He Himself is the propitiation for them, for whose sake we are now accounted righteous. But since they are accounted righteous, the Law cannot accuse or condemn them, even though they have not actually satisfied the Law. To the same purport he writes to the Colossians, 2, 10: Ye are complete in Him, as though he were to say: Although ye are still far from the perfection of the Law, yet the remnants of sin do not condemn you, because for Christ's sake we have a sure and firm reconciliation, if you believe, even though sin inhere in your flesh.

The promise ought always to be in sight that God, because of His promise, wishes for Christ's sake, and not because of the Law or our works, to be gracious and to justify. In this promise timid consciences ought to seek reconciliation and justification; by this promise they ought to sustain themselves, and be confident that for Christ's sake, because of His promise, they have a gracious God. Thus works can never render a conscience pacified, but only the promise can. If, therefore, justification and peace of conscience must be sought elsewhere than in love and works, love and works do not justify, although they are virtues and pertain to the righteousness of the Law, in so far as they are a fulfilling of the Law. So far also this obedience of the Law justifies by the righteousness of the Law. But this imperfect righteousness of the Law is not accepted by God, unless on account of faith. Accordingly, it does not justify, i. e., it neither reconciles, nor regenerates, nor by itself renders us accepted before God.

From this it is evident that we are justified before God by faith alone [i. e., it obtains the remission of sins and grace for Christ's sake, and regenerates us. Likewise, it is quite clear that by faith alone the Holy Ghost is received; again, that our works and this inchoate fulfilling of the Law do not by themselves please God. Now, even if I abound in good works like Paul or Peter, I must seek my righteousness elsewhere, namely, in the promise of the grace of Christ; again, if only faith calms the conscience, it must, indeed, be certain that only faith justifies before God. For, if we wish to teach correctly, we must adhere to this, that we are accepted with God, not on account of the Law, not on account of works, but for Christ's sake. For the honor,

nicht gefallen. So ich nun, wenn ich gleich voll guter Werke bin, wie Paulus war und Petrus, dennoch anderswo muß meine Gerechtigkeit suchen, nämlich in der Verheißung der Gnade Christi, item, so allein der Glaube das Gewissen stillt, so muß je das gewiß sein, daß allein der Glaube vor Gott gerecht macht. Denn wir müssen allezeit dabei bleiben, wollen wir recht lehren, daß wir nicht um des Gesetzes willen, nicht um Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen Gott angenehm sind. Denn die Ehre, so Christo gebührt, soll man nicht dem Gesetze oder unsern elenden Werken geben.

Responsio ad Argumenta Adversariorum.

62] Cognitis autem huius causae fundamentis, videlicet discrimine legis et promissionum seu evangelii, facile erit diluere ea, quae adversarii obiciunt. Citant enim dicta de lege et operibus et omittunt dicta de promissionibus. 63] Semel autem responderi ad omnes sententias de lege potest, quod lex non possit fieri sine Christo, et si qua fiunt civilia opera sine Christo, non placent Deo. Quare quum praedicantur opera, necesse est addere, quod fides requiratur, quod propter fidem praedicentur, quod sint fructus et testimonia fidei. 64] Ambiguae et periculosae causae multas et varias solutiones gignunt. Verum est enim illud veteris poetae:

νόσων ἐν αὐτῷ φαρμάκων δέεται σοφῶν.

Sed in bonis et firmis causis una atque altera solutio, sumpta ex fontibus, corrigit omnia, quae videntur offendere. Id fit et in hac nostra causa. Nam illa regula, quam modo recitavi, interpretatur omnia dicta, quae de lege 65] et operibus citantur. Fatemur enim Scripturam alibi legem, alibi evangelium seu gratuitam promissionem peccatorum propter Christum tradere. Verum adversarii nostri simpliciter abolent gratuitam promissionem, quum negant, quod fides iustificet, quum docent, quod propter dilectionem et opera nostra accipiamus remissionem peccatorum et R. 95 66] reconciliationem. Si pendet ex conditione operum nostrorum remissio peccatorum, prorsus erit incerta. Erit igitur abolita promissio. 67] Proinde nos revocamus pias mentes ad considerandas promissiones, et de gratuita remissione peccatorum et reconciliatione, quae sit per fidem in Christum, docemus. Postea addimus et doctrinam legis. Et haec oportet ὁρδομεῖν, ut ait Paulus 2 Tim. 2, 15. Videndum est, quid legi, quid promissionibus Scriptura tribuat. Sic enim laudat opera, ut non tollat gratuitam promissionem.

unserer Liebe und Werke müssen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und nicht durch den Glauben. Denn so Gottes Gnade und Hilfe gegen uns gebaut ist auf unsere Werke, so ist sie gar ungewiß. Denn wir können nimmermehr gewiß sein, wann wir Werke genug tun, oder ob die Werke heilig oder rein genug seien. So wird auch also die Vergebung der Sünden ungewiß, und geht Gottes Zusage unter, wie Paulus sagt Röm. 4, 14: „Die göttliche Zusage ist dann umgestoßen, und ist alles ungewiß.“ Darum lehren wir die Herzen und Gewissen, daß sie sich trösten durch dieselbe Verheißung Gottes, welche fest steht und bietet Gnade an und Vergebung der Sünden um Christus' willen, nicht um unserer Werke willen. Danach lehren wir auch von guten Werken und von dem Gesetz, nicht daß wir durch das Gesetz verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, oder daß wir um des Gesetzes willen Gott angenehm seien, sondern daß Gott gute Werke haben will. Denn man muß, wie Paulus sagt, recht schneiden und teilen Gottes Wort, das Gesetz auf einen Ort, die Zusage Gottes auf den andern. Man muß sehen, wie die Schrift von der Verheißung, wie sie von dem Gesetz redet. Denn die Schrift gebietet und lobt also gute Werke, daß sie doch gleichwohl Gottes Verheißung und den rechten Schatz, Christum, noch viel tausendmal höher setzt.

allein durch den Glauben den Heiligen Geist empfangen; item, daß unsere Werke, und da wir anfangen, das Gesetz zu halten, an ihm selbst Gott Werke bin, wie Paulus war und Petrus, dennoch allein der Glaube das Gewissen stillt, so muß je das gewiß sein, daß allein der Glaube vor Gott gerecht macht. Denn wir müssen allezeit dabei bleiben, wollen wir recht lehren, daß wir nicht um des Gesetzes willen, nicht um Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen Gott angenehm sind. Denn die Ehre, so Christo gebührt, soll man nicht dem Gesetze oder unsern elenden Werken geben.

Antwort auf die Argumente der Widersacher.

So wir nun die rechten Gründe dieser Sache haben angezeigt, nämlich den Unterschied unter göttlicher Verheißung und des Gesetzes, so kann man leichtlich verlegen [widerlegen] dasjenige, so die Widersacher dagegen vorbringen. Denn sie führen Sprüche ein vom Gesetz und guten Werken. Die Sprüche aber, so von göttlicher Verheißung reden, lassen sie außen. Man kann aber kurz antworten auf alle Sprüche, so sie einführen von dem Gesetze, nämlich, daß das Gesetz ohne Christum niemand halten kann, und wenn gleich äußerlich gute Werke geschehen ohne Christum, so hat doch Gott darum an der Person nicht Gefallen. Darum wenn man will von guten Werken lehren oder predigen, soll man allezeit dazusetzen, daß zuvörderst Glaube da sein müsse, und daß sie allein um des Glaubens willen an Christum Gott angenehm seien, und daß sie Früchte und Zeugnisse des Glaubens sind. Diese unsere Lehre ist je klar, sie läßt sich auch wohl am Licht sehen und gegen die heilige Schrift halten, und ist auch hier klar und richtig vorgetragen, wer ihm will sagen lassen und die Wahrheit nicht wissenschaftlich verleugnen. Denn Christi Wohlthat und den großen Schatz des Evangelii (welchen Paulus so hoch hebt) recht zu erkennen, müssen wir je auf einem Teil Gottes Verheißung und angebotene Gnade, auf dem andern Teil das Gesetz so weit voneinander scheiden als Himmel und Erde. In baufälligen Sachen bedarf man viele Slossen; aber in guten Sachen ist allezeit eine solutio oder zwei, die durchaus gehen und lösen alles auf, so man dagegen vermeint aufzubringen. Also hier in dieser Sache: diese einige solutio löst alle Sprüche auf, die wider uns angezogen werden, nämlich daß man das Gesetz ohne Christum nicht recht tun kann, und obsonst äußerliche Werke geschehen, daß doch Gott die Person nicht gefällt außer Christo. Denn wir bekennen, daß die Schrift diese zwei Lehren führt: Gesetz und Verheißung der Gnade. Die Widersacher aber, die treten schlecht das ganze Evangelium mit Füßen und alle Verheißungen der Gnade in Christo; so lehren sie, daß wir um due Christ, must not be given to the Law or our miserable works.] because by faith alone we receive remission of sins and reconciliation, because reconciliation or justification is a matter promised for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of the Law. Therefore it is received by faith alone, although, when the Holy Ghost is given, the fulfilling of the Law follows.

Reply to the Arguments of the Adversaries.

Now, when the grounds of this case have been understood, namely, the distinction between the Law and the promises, or the Gospel, it will be easy to resolve the objections of the adversaries. For they cite passages concerning the Law and works, and omit passages concerning the promises. But a reply can once for all be made to all opinions concerning the Law, namely, that the Law cannot be observed without Christ, and that if civil works are wrought without Christ, they do not please God. [God is not pleased with the person.] Wherefore, when works are commended, it is necessary to add that faith is required, that they are commended on account of faith, that they are the fruits and testimonies of faith. [This our doctrine is, indeed, plain; it need not fear the light, and may be held against the Holy Scriptures. We have also clearly and correctly presented it here, if any will receive instruction and not knowingly deny the truth. For rightly to understand the benefit of Christ and the great treasure of the Gospel (which Paul extols so greatly), we must separate, on the one hand, the promise of God and the grace that is offered, and, on the other hand, the Law, as far as the heavens are from the earth. In shaky matters many explanations are needed, but in a good matter one or two thoroughgoing explanations dissolve all objections which men think they can raise.] Ambiguous and dangerous cases produce many and various solutions. For the judgment of the ancient poet is true:

"An unjust cause, being in itself sick, requires skillfully applied remedies."

But in just and sure cases one or two explanations derived from the sources correct all things that seem to offend. This occurs also in this case of ours. For the rule which I have just recited, explains all the passages that are cited concerning the Law and works [namely, that without Christ the Law cannot be truly observed, and although external works may be performed, still the person doing them does not please God outside of Christ]. For we acknowledge that Scripture teaches in some places the Law, and in other places the Gospel, or the gratuitous promise of the remission of sins for Christ's sake. But our adversaries absolutely abolish the free promise when they deny that faith justifies, and teach that for the sake of love and of our works we receive remission of sins and reconciliation. If the remission of sins depends upon the condition of our works, it is altogether uncertain. [For we can never be certain whether we do enough works, or whether our works are sufficiently holy and pure. Thus, too, the forgiveness of sins is made uncertain, and the promise of God perishes, as Paul says, Rom. 4, 14: The promise is made of none effect, and everything is rendered uncertain.] Therefore the promise will be abolished. Hence we refer godly minds to the consideration of the promises, and we teach concerning the free remission of sins and concerning reconciliation, which occurs through faith in Christ. Afterwards we add also the doctrine of the Law. [Not that by the Law we merit the remission of sins, or that for the sake of the Law we are accepted with God, but because God requires good works.] And it is necessary to divide these things aright, as Paul says, 2 Tim. 2, 15. We must see what Scripture ascribes to the Law, and what to the promises. For it praises works in such a way as not to remove the free promise [as to place the promise of God and the true treasure, Christ, a thousand leagues above it].

In his enim sanctificat corda et reprimat diabolum, et ut retineat evangelium inter homines, foris opponit regno diaboli confessionem sanctorum et in nostra imbecillitate declarat potentiam suam. Pauli apostoli, Athanasii, Augustini et similium, qui docuerunt ecclesias, pericula, labores, conciones sunt sancta opera, sunt vera sacrificia Deo accepta, sunt certa tamina Christi, per quae repressit diabolum et depulit ab his, qui crediderunt. Labores Davidis in gerendis bellis et in administratione domestica sunt opera sancta, sunt vera sacrificia, sunt certamina Dei, defendentis illum populum, qui habebat Verbum Dei, adversus diabolum, ne penitus exstingueretur notitia Dei in terris. Sic sentimus etiam de singulis bonis operibus in infimis vocationibus et in privatis. Per haec opera triumphat Christus adversus diabolum, ut quod Corinthii, 1 Cor. 16, 1, conferebant eleemosynam, sanctum [R. 96 opus erat et sacrificium et certamen Christi adversus diabolum, qui laborat, ne quid fiat] ad laudem Dei. Talia opera vituperare, confessionem doctrinae, afflictiones, officia caritatis, mortificationes carnis, profecto esset vituperare externam regni Christi inter homines] politiam. Atque hic addimus etiam de praemiis et de merito. Docemus operibus fidelium proposita et promissa esse praemia. Docemus bona opera meritoria esse, non remissionis peccatorum, gratiae aut iustificationis (haec enim tantum fide consequimur), sed aliorum praemiorum corporalium et spiritualium in hac vita et post hanc vitam, quia Paulus 74] inquit 1 Cor. 3, 8: Unusquisque recipiet mercedem iuxta suum laborem. Erunt igitur dissimilia praemia propter dissimiles labores. At remissio peccatorum similis et aequalis est omnium, sicut unus est Christus, et offertur gratis omnibus, qui credunt sibi propter Christum remitti peccata. Accipitur igitur tantum fide remissio peccatorum et iustificatio, non propter ulla opera, sicut constat in terroribus conscientiae, quod non possunt irae Dei opponi ulla nostra opera, sicut Paulus clare dicit Rom. 5, 1: Fide iustificati, pacem habemus erga Deum per Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum, per quem et accessum habemus fide etc. 75] Fides autem, quia filios Dei facit, facit et coheredes Christi. Itaque quia iustificationem non meremur operibus nostris, qua effimur filii Dei et coheredes Christi, non meremur vitam aeternam operibus nostris. Fides enim consequitur, quia fides iustificat nos, et habet placatum Deum. Debetur autem iustificatio iuxta illud Rom. 8, 30: Quos iustificavit, eosdem et glorificavit. Paulus Eph. 6, 2 sq. commendat nobis praeceptum de honorandis parentibus mentione praemii, quod addit illi praecepto, ubi non vult, quod obedientia erga parentes iustificet 77] nos coram Deo; sed postquam fit in iustificatis, meremur alia magna praemia. Deus [R. 97] tamen varie exercet sanctos et saepe differt praemia iustitiae operum, ut discant non confidere sua iustitia, ut discant quaerere voluntatem Dei magis quam praemia, sicut apparet in Iobo, in Christo et aliis sanctis. Et de hac re docent nos multi psalmi, qui consolantur nos adversus felicitatem impiorum, ut Ps. 37, 1: Noli aemulari. Et Christus ait Matth. 5, 10: Beati, qui persecutionem patiuntur propter iustitiam, quoniam ipsorum est regnum coelorum. His 79] praeconiis bonorum operum moventur haud dubie fideles ad bene operandum. Interim etiam praedicatur doctrina poenitentiae adversus impios, qui male operantur, ostenditur ira 80] Dei, quam minatus est omnibus, qui non agunt poenitentiam. Laudamus igitur et requirimus bona opera et multas ostendimus causas, quae fieri debeant.

Sic de operibus docet et Paulus, quum inquit Rom. 4, 9 sq., Abraham accepisse circumcisionem, non ut per illud opus iustificaretur. Iam enim fide consecutus erat, ut iustus reputaretur. Sed accessit circumcisio, ut haberet in corpore scriptum signum, quo commonefactus exerceret fidem, quo etiam confiteretur fidem coram aliis et alios ad credendum suo 81] testimonio invitaret. Abel fide gratiorem hostiam obtulit, Hebr. 11, 4. Quia igitur fide iustus erat, ideo placuit sacrificium, quod faciebat, non ut per id opus mereretur remissionem peccatorum et gratiam, sed ut fidem suam exerceret et ostenderet aliis ad invitandos eos ad credendum.

82] Quum hoc modo bona opera sequi fidem debeant, longe aliter utuntur operibus homines, qui non possunt credere ac statuere in corde, sibi gratis ignosci propter Christum, Denn gute Werke soll und muß man tun, denn Gott will sie haben; so sind es Früchte des Glaubens, wie Paulus zu den Ephesern am 2, 10 jagt: „Denn wir sind geschaffen in Christo Jesu zu guten Werken.“ Darum sollen gute Werke dem Glauben folgen als Dankagungen gegen Gott, item, daß der Glaube dadurch geübt werde, wachse und zunehme, und daß durch unser Bekenntnis und guten Wandel andere auch erinnert werden.

Also sagt Paulus, daß Abraham habe die Beschneidung empfangen, nicht daß er um des Werkes willen wäre gerecht geworden, sondern daß er an seinem Leibe ein Zeichen hätte, dadurch er erinnert würde und immer im Glauben zunähme; item, daß er seinen Glauben bekennete vor andern und durch sein Zeugnis die andern auch zu glauben reizte. Also hat Abel durch den Glauben Gott ein angenehmes Opfer getan. Denn das Opfer hat Gott nicht gefallen ex opere operato, sondern Abel hielt's gewiß dafür, daß er einen gnädigen Gott hätte: das Werk aber tat er, daß er seinen Glauben übte und die andern durch sein Exempel und Bekenntnis zu glauben reizte.

So nun also und nicht anders die guten Werke sollten dem Glauben folgen, so tun die viel anderer Meinung ihre Werke, die nicht glauben, daß ihnen ohne Verdienst [die] Sünden vergeben wer-

For good works are to be done on account of God's command, likewise for the exercise of faith [as Paul says, Eph. 2, 10: We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works], and on account of confession and giving of thanks. For these reasons good works ought necessarily to be done, which, although they are done in the flesh not as yet entirely renewed, that retards the movements of the Holy Ghost, and imparts some of its uncleanness, yet, on account of Christ, are holy, divine works, sacrifices, and acts pertaining to the government of Christ, who thus displays His kingdom before this world. For in these He sanctifies hearts, and represses the devil, and, in order to retain the Gospel among men, openly opposes to the kingdom of the devil the confession of saints, and, in our weakness, declares His power. The dangers, labors, and sermons of the Apostle Paul, of Athanasius, Augustine, and the like, who taught the churches, are holy works, are true sacrifices acceptable to God, are contests of Christ through which He repressed the devil, and drove him from those who believed. David's labors, in waging wars and in his home government, are holy works, are true sacrifices, are contests of God, defending the people who had the Word of God against the devil, in order that the knowledge of God might not be entirely extinguished on earth. We think thus also concerning every good work in the humblest callings and in private affairs. Through these works Christ celebrates His victory over the devil, just as the distribution of alms by the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 16, 1, was a holy work, and a sacrifice and contest of Christ against the devil, who labors that nothing may be done for the praise of God. To disparage such works, the confession of doctrine, affliction, works of love, mortifications of the flesh, would be indeed to disparage the outward government of Christ's kingdom among men. Here also we add something concerning rewards and merits. We teach that rewards have been offered and promised to the works of believers. We teach that good works are meritorious, not for the remission of sins, for grace or justification (for these we obtain only by faith), but for other rewards, bodily and spiritual, in this life and after this life, because Paul says, 1 Cor. 3, 8: Every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor. There will, therefore, be different rewards according to different labors. But the remission of sins is alike and equal to all, just as Christ is one, and is offered freely to all who believe that for Christ's sake their sins are remitted. Therefore the remission of sins and justification are received only by faith, and not on account of any works, as is evident in the terrors of conscience, because none of our works can be opposed to God's wrath, as Paul clearly says, Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith, etc. But because faith makes sons of God, it also makes co-heirs with Christ. Therefore, because by our works we do not merit justification, through which we are made sons of God, and co-heirs with Christ, we do not by our works merit eternal life; for faith obtains this, because faith justifies us and has a reconciled God. But eternal life is due the justified, according to the passage Rom. 8, 30: Whom He justified, them He also glorified. Paul, Eph. 6, 2, commends to us the commandment concerning honoring parents, by mention of the reward which is added to that commandment, where he does not mean that obedience to parents justifies us before God, but that, when it occurs in those who have been justified, it merits other great rewards. Yet God exercises His saints variously, and often defers the rewards of the righteousness of works in order that they may learn not to trust in their own righteousness, and may learn to seek the will of God rather than the rewards; as appears in Job, in Christ, and other saints. And of this, many psalms teach us, which console us against the happiness of the wicked, as Ps. 37, 1: Neither be thou envious. And Christ says, Matt. 5, 10: Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. By these praises of good works, believers are undoubtedly moved to do good works. Meanwhile, the doctrine of repentance is also proclaimed against the godless, whose works are wicked; and the wrath of God is displayed, which He has threatened all who do not repent. We therefore praise and require good works, and show many reasons why they ought to be done.

Thus of works Paul also teaches when he says, Rom. 4, 9 sq., that Abraham received circumcision, not in order that by this work he might be justified; for by faith he had already attained it that he was accounted righteous. But circumcision was added in order that he might have in his body a written sign, admonished by which he might exercise faith, and by which also he might confess his faith before others, and, by his testimony, might invite others to believe. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice, Heb. 11, 4. Because, therefore, he was just by faith, the sacrifice which he made was pleasing to God; not that by this work he merited the remission of sins and grace, but that he exercised his faith and showed it to others, in order to invite them to believe.

Although in this way good works ought to follow faith, men who cannot believe and be sure that for Christ's sake they are freely forgiven, and that freely for Christ's sake they have a reconciled God, employ works far se habere Deum propitium gratis propter Christum. Hi, quum vident opera sanctorum, humano more iudicant, sanctos promeruisse remissionem peccatorum et gratiam per haec opera. Ideo imitantur ea et sentiunt [R. 88] se per opera similia mereri remissionem peccatorum et gratiam, sentiunt se per illa opera placare iram Dei et consequi, ut pro-⁸³] pter illa opera iusti reputentur. Hanc impiam opinionem in operibus damnamus. Primum, quia obscurat gloriam Christi, quum homines proponunt Deo haec opera tamquam pretium et propitiationem. Hic honos, debitus uni Christo, tribuitur nostris operibus. Secundo, neque tamen inveniunt conscientiae pacem in his operibus, sed alia super alia in veris terroribus cumulantes tandem desperant, quia nullum opus satis mundum inveniunt. Semper accusat lex et parit iram. Tertio, tales nunquam assequuntur notitiam Dei; quia enim irati fugiunt Deum iudicantem et affligentem, nunquam sentiunt se exaudiri.⁸⁴] At fides ostendit praesentiam Dei, postquam constituit, quod Deus gratis ignoscat et exaudiat.

kennen noch seinen Willen. Denn ein Gewissen, daß an Gottes Gnade zweifelt, das kann nicht glauben, daß es erhört werde. Und diemeil es Gott nicht anrufen kann, wird es auch göttlicher Hilfe nicht inne, kann also Gott nicht kennen lernen. Wenn aber der Glaube da ist, nämlich daß wir durch Christum einen gnädigen Gott haben, der darf fröhlich Gott anrufen, lernt Gott und seinen Willen kennen.

⁸⁵] Semper autem in mundo haesit impia opinio de operibus. Gentes habebant sacrificia, sumpta a patribus. Horum opera imitabantur, fidem non tenebant, sed sentiebant opera illa propitiationem et pretium esse, propter quod Deus reconciliaretur ipsis. Po-⁸⁶] pulus in lege imitabatur sacrificia hac opinione, quod propter illa opera haberent placatum Deum, ut ita loquamur, ex opere operato. Hic videmus, quam vehementer oburgent populum prophetae. Psalmo 50, 8: Non in sacrificiis arguam te. Et Ieremia 7, 22: Non praecepi de holocaustomatibus. Tales loci damnant non opera, quae certe Deus praeceperat ut externa exercitia in hac politia, sed damnant impiam persuasionem, quod sentiebant se per illa opera placare iram Dei, et ⁸⁷] fidem abiciebant. Et quia nulla opera reddunt pacatam conscientiam, ideo subinde nova opera excogitantur praeter mandata Dei. Populus Israel viderat prophetas in excelsis sacrificasse. Porro sanctorum exempla maxime movent animos, sperantes se similibus operibus perinde gratiam consecuturos esse, ut illi consecuti sunt. Quare hoc opus [R. 99] mirabili studio coepit imitari populus, ut per id opus mereretur remissionem peccatorum, gratiam et iustitiam. At prophetae sacrificaverant in excelsis, non ut per illa opera mererentur remissionem peccatorum et gratiam, sed quia in illis locis docebant, ideo ibi testimonium fidei suae proponebant. Popu-⁸⁸] lus audierat Abraham immolasse filium suum. Quare et ipsi, ut asperrimo ac difficillimo opere placarent iram Dei, mactaverunt filios. At Abraham non hac opinione immolabat filium, ut id opus esset pretium et propitiatio, propter quam iustus reputaretur.⁸⁹] Sic in ecclesia instituta est coena Domini, den um Christus' willen. Denn wenn dieselben sehen gute Werke an den Heiligen, richten sie menschlicherweise von den Heiligen, wollen wählen, die Heiligen haben mit ihren Werken Vergebung der Sünden erlangt oder seien durch Werke vor Gott gerecht geworden. Darum tun sie dergleichen ihnen nach und meinen, sie wollen auch also Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und Gottes Zorn verjöhnen. Solchen öffentlichen Irrtum und falsche Lehre von den Werken verdammten wir. Erstlich, daß dadurch Christo, dem rechten Mittler, die Ehre genommen wird und wird den elenden Werken gegeben, wenn wir an Christus' Statt unsere Werke wollen darstellen für einen Schatz und Verjöhnung des göttlichen Zorns und der Sünde. Denn die Ehre gehört allein Christo, nicht unsern elenden Werken. Zum andern, so finden doch die Gewissen auch nicht Frieden in solchen Werken. Denn wenn sie schon der Werke viel tun und zu tun sich beflühigen, so findet sich doch kein Werk, das rein genug sei, das wichtig, löstlich genug sei, einen gnädigen Gott zu machen, das ewige Leben gewiß zu erlangen, in Summa, das Gewissen ruhig und friedlich zu machen. Für das dritte, die auf Werke bauen, die lernen nimmermehr Gott recht

Aber der Irrtum von den Werken klebt der Welt gar hart an. Die Heiden haben auch Opfer, welche von [den] Patriarchen erstlich herkommen; dieselben Opfer und Werke der Väter haben sie nachgetan. Vom Glauben wußten sie nicht, hielten dafür, daß dieselben Werke ihnen einen gnädigen Gott machten. Die Israeliten erbideten ihnen auch Werke und Opfer der Meinung, daß sie dadurch wollten einen gnädigen Gott machen durch ihr opus operatum, das ist, durch das bloße Werk, welches ohne Glauben geschah. Da sehen wir, wie heftig die Propheten dawider schreien und rufen, als im 50. Psalm: „Deines Opfers halben strafe ich dich nicht“ usw. Item, Jeremias sagt: „Ich habe nicht mit euren Vätern von Brandopfern geredet.“ Da verdammten die Propheten nicht die Opfer an ihnen selbst, denn die hat Gott geboten als äußerliche Übungen in demselben seinem Volk, sondern sie treffen vornehmlich ihr gottlos Herz, da sie die Opfer der Meinung taten, daß sie meinten, dadurch würde Gott ex opere operato verjöhnt; dadurch ward der Glaube unterdrückt. Und so nun kein Werk das Gewissen recht zufriedensstellt, so pflegen die Heuchler auf ein blindes Geratemwohl und Wagen dahin gleichwohl ein Werk über das andere, ein Opfer über das andere zu erfinden, und alles ohne Gottes Wort und Befehl mit bösem Gewissen, wie wir im Papsttum gesehen. Und vornehmlich lassen sie sich bewegen durch die Exempel der Heiligen. Denn wenn sie denen also nachfolgen, meinen [sie], sie wollen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, wie die Heiligen erlangt haben usw. Aber die Heiligen glaubten. Das Volk Israel hatte gesehen, daß die Propheten opferten auf den Höhen und Hainen; das Werk taten sie nach, daß sie durch das Werk Gottes Zorn verjöhnten. Die Propheten aber hatten da Opfer getan, nicht daß sie durch die Werke Vergebung der Sünden ver-

otherwise. When they see the works of saints, they judge in a human manner that saints have merited the remission of sins and grace through these works. Accordingly, they imitate them, and think that through similar works they merit the remission of sins and grace; they think that through these works they appease the wrath of God, and attain that for the sake of these works they are accounted righteous. This godless opinion concerning works we condemn. In the first place, because it obscures the glory of Christ when men offer to God these works as a price and propitiation. This honor, due to Christ alone, is ascribed to our works. Secondly, they nevertheless do not find, in these works, peace of conscience, but in true terrors, heaping up works upon works, they at length despair because they find no work sufficiently pure [sufficiently important and precious to propitiate God, to obtain with certainty eternal life, in a word, to tranquilize and pacify the conscience]. The Law always accuses, and produces wrath. Thirdly, such persons never attain the knowledge of God [nor of His will]; for, as in anger they flee from God, who judges and afflicts them, they never believe that they are heard. But faith manifests the presence of God, since it is certain that God freely forgives and hears us.

Moreover, this godless opinion concerning works always has existed in the world [sticks to the world quite tightly]. The heathen had sacrifices, derived from the fathers. They imitated their works. Their faith they did not retain, but thought that the works were a propitiation and price on account of which God would be reconciled to them. The people in the Law [the Israelites] imitated sacrifices with the opinion that by means of these works they would appease God, so to say, ex opere operato. We see here how earnestly the prophets rebuke the people: Ps. 50, 8: I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices, and Jer. 7, 22: I spake not unto your fathers concerning burnt offerings. Such passages condemn not works, which God certainly had commanded as outward exercises in this government, but they condemn the godless opinion according to which they thought that by these works they appeased the wrath of God, and thus cast away faith. And because no works pacify the conscience, new works, in addition to God's commands, were from time to time devised [the hypocrites nevertheless used to invent one work after another, one sacrifice after another, by a blind guess and in reckless wantonness, and all this without the word and command of God, with wicked conscience, as we have seen in the Papacy]. The people of Israel had seen the prophets sacrificing on high places [and in groves]. Besides, the examples of the saints very greatly move the minds of those, hoping by similar works to obtain grace just as these saints obtained it. [But the saints believed.] Wherefore the people began, with remarkable zeal, to imitate this work, in order that by such a work [they might appease the wrath of God] they might merit remission of sins, grace, and righteousness. But the prophets had been sacrificing on high places, not that by these works they might merit the remission of sins and grace, but because on these places they taught, and, accordingly, presented there a testimony of their faith. The people had heard that Abraham had sacrificed his son. Wherefore they also, in order to appease God by a most cruel and difficult work, put to ut recordatione promissionum Christi, quorum in hoc signo admonemur, confirmetur in nobis fides et foris confiteamur fidem nostram et praedicemus beneficia Christi, sicut Paulus ait 1 Cor. 11, 26: Quoties feceritis, mortem Domini annuntiabitis etc. Verum adversarii nostri contendunt missam esse opus, quod ex opere operato iustificat et tollit reatum culpae et poenae in his, pro quibus fit. Sic enim scribit Gabriel.

Zufage Vergebung der Sünden wird angeboten, daß wir erinnert werden, daß durch das äußerliche Zeichen unser Glaube gestärkt werde, daß wir dadurch auch vor den Leuten unsern Glauben bekennen und die Wohthat Christi preisen und predigen, wie Paulus sagt: „Sooft ihr das thut, sollt ihr den Tod des Herrn verkündigen“ usw. Die Widersacher aber geben vor, daß die Messe sei ein solch Werk, das ex opere operato vor Gott uns gerecht mache und erlöse diejenigen von Pein und Schuld, für welche es geschieht.

90] Antonius, Bernhardus, Dominicus, Franciscus et alii sancti patres elegerunt certum vitae genus vel propter studium, vel propter alia utilia exercitia. Interim sentiebant se fide propter Christum iustos reputari et habere propitium Deum, non propter illa propria exercitia. Sed multitudo deinceps imitata est non fidem patrum, sed exempla sine fide, ut per illa opera mererentur remissionem peccatorum, gratiam et iustitiam; non senserunt se haec gratis accipere propter propitiorem Christum. At haec tribuere operibus nostris, quod sint propitiatio, quod mereantur remissionem peccatorum et gratiam, quod propter ea iusti coram Deo reputemur, non fide propter Christum propitiorem, quid hoc aliud est, quam Christo detrahere honorem mediatoris et 93] propitiatoris? Nos igitur, etsi sentimus ac docemus, bona opera necessario facienda esse (debet enim sequi fidem inchoata legis impletio), tamen Christo suum honorem reddimus. Sentimus ac docemus, quod fide propter Christum coram Deo iusti reputemur, quod non reputemur iusti propter opera sine mediatore Christo, quod non mereamur remissionem peccatorum, gratiam et iustitiam per opera, quod opera nostra non possumus opponere irae et iudicio Dei, quod opera non possint terrores peccati vincere, sed quod sola fide vincantur terrores peccati, 94] quod tantum mediator Christus per fidem opponendus sit irae et iudicio Dei. Si quis secus sentit, non reddit Christo debitum honorem, qui propositus est, ut sit propitiator, ut per ipsum 95] habeamus accessum ad Patrem. Loquimur autem nunc de iustitia, per quam agimus cum 96] Deo, non cum hominibus, sed qua apprehendimus gratiam et pacem conscientiae. Non potest autem conscientia pacata reddi coram Deo, nisi sola fide, quae statuit nobis Deum placatum esse propter Christum, iuxta illud, Rom. 5, 1: Iustificati ex fide, pacem habemus; quia iustificatio tantum est res gratis promissa propter Christum, quare sola fide semper coram Deo accipitur.

97] Nunc igitur respondebimus ad illos locos, quos citant adversarii, ut probent nos dilectione et operibus iustificari. Ex [R. 101] Corinthiis, 1 Cor. 13, 2, citant: Si omnem fidem habeam etc., caritatem autem non habeam, nihil sum. Et hic magnifice triumphant. St. Antonius, Bernhardus, Dominicus und andere Heilige haben durch ein eigen Leben von Leuten sich getan, damit sie desto leichter die Heilige Schrift könnten lesen, oder um anderer Übung willen. Nichtsdestoweniger haben sie bei sich gehalten, daß sie durch den Glauben an Christum vor Gott gerecht wären, daß sie allein durch Christum einen gnädigen Gott erlangten. Aber der große Haufe ist hernach zugefahren, haben den Glauben an Christum fahren lassen, haben allein gesehen auf die Tugenden ohne Glauben und sich unterstanden, durch dieselben Klosterwerke Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen. Also setzt allezeit die Vernunft die guten Werke zu hoch und an einen unrichtigen Ort. Den Irrtum sieht nun an das Evangelium und lehrt, daß wir vor Gott gerecht werden nicht um des Geseges oder unserer Werke willen, sondern allein um Christus' willen. Christum aber kann man nicht fassen denn allein durch den Glauben. Darum so werden wir auch allein durch den Glauben vor Gott gerecht.

Dagegen ziehen die Widersacher an den Spruch Pauli zu den Corinthern am 13: „Wenn ich hätte allen Glauben usw. und hätte aber die Liebe nicht, so wäre ich nichts.“ Da rufen die Widersacher mit einem großen Triumph und rühmen, sie seien durch diesen Spruch gewiß, daß nicht allein der Glaube vor Gott uns gerecht mache, sondern auch die Liebe. Es ist aber ganz leicht zu antworten, nachdem wir oben haben angezeigt, was wir von der Liebe und Werken halten. Paulus will in dem Spruche, daß in den Christen solle Liebe sein death their sons. But Abraham did not sacrifice his son with the opinion that this work was a price and propitiatory work for the sake of which he was accounted righteous. Thus in the Church the Lord's Supper was instituted that by remembrance of the promises of Christ, of which we are admonished in this sign, faith might be strengthened in us, and we might publicly confess our faith, and proclaim the benefits of Christ, as Paul says, 1 Cor. 11, 26: As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death, etc. But our adversaries contend that the mass is a work that justifies us ex opere operato, and removes the guilt and liability to punishment in those for whom it is celebrated; for thus writes Gabriel.

Anthony, Bernard, Dominicus, Franciscus, and other holy Fathers selected a certain kind of life either for the sake of study [of more readily reading the Holy Scriptures] or other useful exercises. In the mean time they believed that by faith they were accounted righteous for Christ's sake, and that God was gracious to them, not on account of those exercises of their own. But the multitude since then has imitated not the faith of the Fathers, but their example without faith, in order that by such works they might merit the remission of sins, grace, and righteousness: they did not believe that they received these freely on account of Christ as Propitiator. [Thus the human mind always exalts works too highly, and puts them in the wrong place. And this error the Gospel reproves, which teaches that men are accounted righteous not for the sake of the Law, but for the sake of Christ alone. Christ, however, is apprehended by faith alone; wherefore we are accounted righteous by faith alone for Christ's sake.] Thus the world judges of all works that they are a propitiation by which God is appeased; that they are a price because of which we are accounted righteous. It does not believe that Christ is Propitiator; it does not believe that by faith we freely attain that we are accounted righteous for Christ's sake. And, nevertheless, since works cannot pacify the conscience, others are continually chosen, new rites are performed, new vows made, and new orders of monks formed beyond the command of God, in order that some great work may be sought which may be set against the wrath and judgment of God. Contrary to Scripture, the adversaries uphold these godless opinions concerning works. But to ascribe to our works these things, namely, that they are a propitiation, that they merit the remission of sins and grace, that for the sake of these and not by faith, for the sake of Christ as Propitiator, we are accounted righteous before God, what else is this than to deny Christ the honor of Mediator and Propitiator? Although, therefore, we believe and teach that good works must necessarily be done (for the inchoate fulfilling of the Law ought to follow faith), nevertheless we give to Christ His own honor. We believe and teach that by faith, for Christ's sake, we are accounted righteous before God, that we are not accounted righteous because of works without Christ as Mediator, that by works we do not merit the remission of sins, grace, and righteousness, that we cannot set our works against the wrath and justice of God, that works cannot overcome the terrors of sin, but that the terrors of sin are overcome by faith alone, that only Christ the Mediator is to be presented by faith against the wrath and judgment of God. If any one think differently, he does not give Christ due honor, who has been set forth that He might be a Propitiator, that through Him we might have access to the Father. We are speaking now of the righteousness through which we treat with God, not with men, but by which we apprehend grace and peace of conscience. Conscience, however, cannot be pacified before God, unless by faith alone, which is certain that God for Christ's sake is reconciled to us, according to Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace, because justification is only a matter freely promised for Christ's sake, and therefore is always received before God by faith alone.

Now, then, we will reply to those passages which the adversaries cite, in order to prove that we are justified by love and works. From 1 Cor. 13, 2 they cite: Though I have all faith, etc., and have not charity, I am nothing. And here they triumph greatly. Paul testifies to the entire Church, they say, that faith alone does not justify. But a reply is easy after we have shown above what we hold concerning love and works. This passage of Paul requires love. We also require this. For we

nem. Hanc requirimus et nos. Diximus enim supra, oportere existere in nobis renovationem et inchoatam legis impletionem, iuxta illud, Ier. 31, 33: Dabo legem meam in corda eorum. Si quis dilectionem abiecerit, etiamsi habet magnam fidem, tamen non retinet eam. Non 99] enim retinet Spiritum Sanctum. Neque vero hoc loco tradit Paulus modum iustificationis, sed scribit his, qui, quum fuissent iustificati, cohortandi erant, ut bonos fructus ferrent, ne amitterent Spiritum Sanctum. Ac 100] postepostere faciunt adversarii: hunc unum locum citant, in quo Paulus docet de fructibus, alios locos plurimos omittunt, in quibus ordine disputat de modo iustificationis. Ad hoc in aliis locis, qui de fide loquuntur, semper ascribunt correctionem, quod debeant intelligi de fide formata. Hic nullam ascribunt correctionem, quod fide etiam opus sit sentiente, quod reputemur iusti propter Christum propitiatorem. Ita adversarii excludunt Christum a iustificatione et tantum docent iustitiam legis. Sed redeamus ad Paulum. 101] Nihil quisquam ex hoc textu amplius ratiocinari potest, quam quod dilectio sit necessaria. Id fatemur. Sicut necessarium est non furari. Neque vero recte ratiocinabitur, si quis inde velit hoc efficere: non furari necessarium est, igitur non furari iustificat; quia iustificatio non est certi operis approbatio, sed totius personae. Nihil igitur laedit nos hic Pauli locus; tantum ne affingant adversarii, quidquid ipsis libet. Non enim dicit, quod iustificet dilectio, sed quod nihil sim, id est, quod fides extinguatur, quamlibet magna contigerit. Non dicit, quod dilectio vincat terrores peccati et mortis, quod [R. 102] dilectionem nostram opponere possimus irae ac iudicio Dei, quod dilectio nostra satisfaciat legi Dei, quod sine propitiatore Christo habeamus accessum ad Deum nostra dilectione, quod dilectione nostra accipiamus promissam remissionem peccatorum. Nihil horum dicit Paulus. Non igitur sentit, quod dilectio iustificet, quia tantum ita iustificamur, quum apprehendimus propitiatorem Christum et credimus nobis Deum propter Christum placatum esse. Nec est iustificatio somniantia omissio propitiatore Christo. Tol- 102] lant adversarii promissionem de Christo, aboleant evangelium, si nihil opus est Christo, si nostra dilectione possumus vincere mortem, si nostra dilectione sine propitiatore Christo 103] accessum habemus ad Deum. Adversarii corrumpunt pleraque loca, quia suas opiniones ad ea afferunt, non sumunt ex ipsis locis sententiam. Quid enim habet hic locus incommodi, si detraxerimus interpretationem, quam adversarii de suo assuunt, non intelligentes, quid sit iustificatio aut quomodo fiat? Corinthii antea iustificati multa acceperant excellentia dona. Fervebant initia, ut sit. Deinde coeperunt inter eos existere simultates, ut significat Paulus, coeperunt fastidire bonos doctores. Ideo obiurgat eos Paulus, revocans ad officia dilectionis; quae, etiamsi sunt necessaria, tamen stultum fuerit somnari, quod opera secundae tabulae coram Deo iustificent, per quam agimus cum hominibus, non agimus proprie cum Deo. At in iustificatione agendum est cum Deo, placanda est ira eius, conscientia erga Deum pacificanda est. Nihil horum fit per opera secundae tabulae.

gegen den Nächsten; das sagen wir auch. Denn wir haben je hier oben gesagt: Wenn wir neu- geboren sind, so fangen wir an, das Gesetz zu halten und Gottes Gesetz gehorsam zu sein. Darum wenn jemand die christliche Liebe nachläßt, so ist er, wenn er gleich großen, starken Glauben gehabt, kalt geworden und ist nun wieder fleischlich, ohne Geist und Glauben. Denn da ist nicht der Heilige Geist, wo nicht christliche Liebe ist und andere gute Früchte. Es folgt aber daraus nicht, daß uns die Liebe vor Gott gerecht macht, daß ist, daß wir darum durch die Liebe Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, daß die Liebe die Schrecken der Sünde und des Todes überwinde, daß die Liebe an Christus? Statt gegen Gottes Zorn und Gericht solle gehalten werden, daß die Liebe das Gesetz erfülle, daß wir durch die Liebe Gott versöhnt und angenehm werden und nicht um Christus' willen. Von dem allem sagt Paulus nichts, und die Widersacher erdichten es doch aus ihrem Hirn. Denn so wir durch unsere Liebe Gottes Zorn überwinden, so wir durch unser Gesetz erfüllen Gott angenehm sind, mögen die Widersacher auch sagen, daß die göttliche Verheißung, das ganze Evangelium, nichts sei. Denn daselbe lehrt, daß wir einen Zugang haben zu Gott allein durch Christum, daß wir nicht durch unser Gesetzwerth, sondern um Christus' willen Gott angenehm sind, als durch den einzigen Mittler und Versöhner. Die Widersacher deuten viele Sprüche auf ihre Meinung, die doch nicht also lauten; aber sie machen Zusatz daran, wie hier. Denn dieser Spruch ist klar genug, wenn allein die Widersacher ihre eigenen Träume außerhalb der Schrift nicht daran fügen; so sie doch nicht verstehen, was Glaube sei, was Christus ist, oder wie es zugeht, wenn ein Mensch vor Gott gerecht wird. Die Korinther und etliche aus ihnen hatten das Evangelium gehört und viele treffliche Gaben empfangen, und wie es denn in solchen Sachen zugeht, im Anfang waren sie hitzig und wader zu allen Sachen, danach erwuchsen Kotten und Sekten unter ihnen, wie Paulus anzeigt, hoben an, die rechten Apostel zu verachten. Darum straft sie Paulus, vermahnt sie wieder zur Einigkeit und zu christlicher Liebe. Und Paulus redet an dem Ort nicht von Vergebung der Sünden, oder wie man vor Gott fromm und gerecht wird, oder wie es zugeht, wenn ein Sünder zu Christo bekehrt wird, sondern redet von den Früchten des Glaubens, redet auch nicht von der Liebe gegen Gott, sondern von der Liebe gegen den Nächsten. Nun ist es fast nützlich, daß die Liebe gegen den Nächsten, dadurch wir hier auf Erden mit den Leuten handeln, uns vor Gott soll gerecht machen, so doch zu der Gerechtigkeit, welche vor Gott gilt, dieses gehört, daß wir etwas erlangen, dadurch Gottes Zorn gestillt und das Gewissen gegen Gott im Himmel zum Frieden komme. Der keines geschieht durch die Liebe, sondern allein durch den Glauben, durch welchen man sieht Christum und Gottes Zusage. Das ist aber wahr: wer die Liebe verliert, der verliert auch Geist und Glauben. Und also sagt Paulus: „Wenn ich die Liebe nicht habe, so bin ich nichts.“ Er setzt aber nicht die affirmativam dazu, daß die Liebe vor Gott gerecht mache.

have said above that renewal and the inchoate fulfilling of the Law must exist in us, according to Jer. 31, 33: I will put My Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. If any one should cast away love, even though he have great faith, yet he does not retain it, for he does not retain the Holy Ghost [he becomes cold and is now again fleshly, without Spirit and faith; for the Holy Ghost is not where Christian love and other fruits of the Spirit are not]. Nor indeed does Paul in this passage treat of the mode of justification, but he writes to those who, after they had been justified, should be urged to bring forth good fruits lest they might lose the Holy Ghost. The adversaries, furthermore, treat the matter preposterously: they cite this one passage, in which Paul teaches concerning fruits; they omit very many other passages, in which in a regular order he discusses the mode of justification. Besides, they always add a correction to the other passages, which treat of faith, namely, that they ought to be understood as applying to fides formata. Here they add no correction that there is also need of the faith that holds that we are accounted righteous for the sake of Christ as Propitiator. Thus the adversaries exclude Christ from justification, and teach only a righteousness of the Law. But let us return to Paul. No one can infer anything more from this text than that love is necessary. This we confess. So also not to commit theft is necessary. But the reasoning will not be correct if some one would desire to frame thence an argument such as this: "Not to commit theft is necessary. Therefore, not to commit theft justifies." Because justification is not the approval of a certain work, but of the entire person. Hence this passage from Paul does not harm us; only the adversaries must not in imagination add to it whatever they please. For he does not say that love justifies, but: ["And if I have not love"] "I am nothing," namely, that faith, however great it may have been, is extinguished. He does not say that love overcomes the terrors of sin and of death, that we can set our love against the wrath and judgment of God, that our love satisfies God's Law, that without Christ as Propitiator we have access, by our love, to God, that by our love we receive the promised remission of sins. Paul says nothing of this. He does not, therefore, think that love justifies, because we are justified only when we apprehend Christ as Propitiator, and believe that for Christ's sake God is reconciled to us. Neither is justification even to be dreamed of with the omission of Christ as Propitiator. If there be no need of Christ, if by our love we can overcome death, if by our love, without Christ as Propitiator, we have access to God, then let our adversaries remove the promise concerning Christ, then let them abolish the Gospel [which teaches that we have access to God through Christ as Propitiator, and that we are accepted not for the sake of our fulfilling of the Law, but for Christ's sake]. The adversaries corrupt very many passages, because they bring to them their own opinions, and do not derive the meaning from the passages themselves. For what difficulty is there in this passage if we remove the interpretation which the adversaries, who do not understand what justification is or how it occurs [what faith is, what Christ is, or how a man is justified before God], out of their own mind attach to it? The Corinthians, being justified before, had received many excellent gifts. In the beginning they glowed with zeal, just as is generally the case. Then dissensions [factions and sects] began to arise among them, as Paul indicates; they began to dislike good teachers. Accordingly, Paul reproves them, recalling them [to unity and] to offices of love. Although these are necessary, yet it would be foolish to imagine that works of the Second Table, through which we have to do with man and not properly with God, justify us. But in justification we have to treat with God; His wrath must be appeased, and conscience must be pacified with respect to God. None of these occur through the works of the Second Table [by love, but only by faith, which apprehends Christ and the promise of God. However, it is true that losing love involves losing the Spirit and faith. And thus Paul says: If I have not love, I am nothing. But he does not add the affirmative statement, that love justifies in the sight of God].

104] Sed obiciunt praeferri dilectionem fidei et spei. Paulus enim ait 1 Cor. 13, 13: Maior horum caritas. Porro consentaneum est maximam et praecipuam virtutem iusti-

At dilectio foris erga homines infinita habet officia, tamen largiamur sane adversariis, dilectionem Dei et proximi maximam virtutem esse, quia hoc summum praeceptum est: Diliges Dominum Deum, Matth. 22, 37. Verum quomodo inde ratiocinabuntur, quod dilectio iustificet? Ma-nicht um unser's Tuns willen, sondern allein deshalb, daß er Barmherzigkeit sucht und empfängt und will sich auf sein eigen Tun verlassen, daß ist, daß wir lehren, Gesetz macht nicht gerecht, sondern das Evangelium, daß glauben heißt, daß wir um Christus' willen, nicht um unser's Tuns willen einen gnädigen Gott haben.
106] xima virtus, inquit, iustificat. Imo, sicut lex etiam maxima seu prima non iustificat, ita nec maxima virtus legis. Sed illa virtus iustificat, quae apprehendit Christum, quae communicat nobis Christi merita, quae accipimus gratiam et pacem a Deo. Haec autem virtus fides est. Nam, ut saepe dictum est, fides non tantum notitia est, sed multo magis velle accipere seu apprehendere ea, quae in promissione de Christo offeruntur.
107] Est autem et haec obedientia erga Deum, velle accipere oblatam promissionem, non minus largia, quam dilectio. Vult sibi credi Deus, vult nos ab ipso bona accipere, et id pronuntiat esse verum cultum.

108] Ceterum adversarii tribuunt dilectioni iustificationem, quia ubique legis iustitiam docent et requirunt. Non enim possumus negare, quin dilectio sit summum opus legis. Et humana sapientia legem intuetur et quaerit in ea iustitiam. Ideo et scholastici doctores, magni et ingeniosi homines, summum opus legis praedicant, huic operi tribuunt iustificationem. Sed decepti humana sapientia non viderunt faciem Mosis relectam, sed velatam, sicut Pharisei, philosophi, Mahome-
109] tistae. Verum nos stultitiam evangelii praedicamus, in quo alia iustitia revelata est, videlicet, quod propter Christum propitiatorem iusti reputemur, quom credimus nobis Deum propter Christum placatum esse. Nec ignoramus, quantum haec doctrina abhorreat a iudicio rationis ac legis. Nec ignoramus multo speciosorem esse doctrinam legis de dilectione. [R. 104 Est enim sapientia. Sed non pudet nos stultitiae evangelii. Id propter gloriam Christi defendimus et rogamus Christum, ut Spiritu Sancto suo adiuvet nos, ut id illustrare ac patefacere possimus.

110] Adversarii in confutione et hunc locum contra nos citaverunt ex Col. 3, 14: Caritas est vinculum perfectionis. Hinc ratiocinantur, quod dilectio iustificet, quia perfectos efficit. Quamquam hic multis modis de perfectione responderi posset, tamen nos simpliciter sententiam Pauli recitabimus. Certum est Paulum de dilectione proximi loqui. Neque vero existimandum est, quod Paulus aut iustificationem aut perfectionem coram Deo tribuerit operibus secundae tabulae potius, quam primae. Et si dilectio efficit perfectos, nihil igitur opus erit propitiatore Christo. Nam fides tantum apprehendit propitiatorem Christum. Hoc autem longissime abest a sententia Pauli, qui nunquam patitur

Aber hier sagen sie auch, die Liebe werde dem Glauben und der Hoffnung vorgezogen. Denn Paulus sagt 1 Cor. 13, 13: „Die Liebe ist die größte unter den dreien.“ Nun sei es zu achten, daß die Tugend, so Paulus die größte nennt, vor Gott uns gerecht und heilig mache. Wiewohl nun Paulus da eigentlich redet von der Liebe gegen den Nächsten, und so er spricht: „Die Liebe ist die größte“, sagt er darum, denn die Liebe geht weit und trägt viel Früchte auf Erden. Denn Glaube und Hoffnung handeln allein mit Gott. Aber die Liebe geht auf Erden unter den Leuten um und tut viel Gutes mit Trösten, Lehren, Unterrichten, Helfen, Raten, heimlich und öffentlich. Doch lassen wir zu, daß Gott und den Nächsten lieben die höchste Tugend sei. Denn dies ist das höchste Gebot: „Du sollst Gott lieben von ganzem Herzen.“ Daraus folgt nun nicht, daß die Liebe uns gerecht macht. Ja, sprechen sie, die höchste Tugend soll billig gerecht machen. Antwort: Es wäre wahr, wenn wir um unserer Tugend willen einen gnädigen Gott hätten. Nun ist droben bewiesen, daß wir um Christus' willen, nicht um unserer Tugend willen angenehm und gerecht sind; denn unsere Tugenden sind unrein. Ja, wie dieses Gesetz das höchste ist: „Du sollst Gott lieben“, also kann diese Tugend, Gott lieben, am allerwenigsten gerecht machen. Denn so das Gesetz und Tugend höher ist, so wir es weniger tun können, darum sind wir nicht um der Liebe willen gerecht. Der Glaube aber macht gerecht, daß er Barmherzigkeit sucht und empfängt und will sich auf sein eigen Tun verlassen, daß ist, daß wir lehren, Gesetz macht nicht gerecht, sondern das Evangelium, daß glauben heißt, daß wir um Christus' willen, nicht um unser's Tuns willen einen gnädigen Gott haben.

Die Widersacher lehren aber darum also von der Liebe, daß sie uns Gott versöhne; denn sie wissen nichts vom Evangelio, sondern sehen allein das Gesetz an, wollen damit um eigener Heiligkeit willen einen gnädigen Gott haben, nicht aus Barmherzigkeit um Christus' willen. Also sind sie allein Gesetzlehrer und nicht Lehrer des Evangelii.

Auch ziehen die Widersacher wider uns an den Spruch zu den Aposteln: „Die Liebe ist ein Band der Vollkommenheit.“ Daher schließen sie, daß die Liebe vor Gott gerecht mache, denn sie macht uns vollkommen. Wiewohl wir hier allerlei antworten könnten von der Vollkommenheit, doch wollen wir hier den Spruch Pauli einsältig handeln. Es ist gewiß, daß Paulus von der Liebe des Nächsten redet; so darf man auch nicht denken, daß Paulus' Meinung sei, daß wir sollten vor Gott eher gerecht werden durch die Werke der andern Tafel denn durch die Werke der ersten Tafel. Item, so die Liebe eine Vollkommenheit ist oder vollkommliche Erfüllung des Gesetzes, so ist des Mittlers Christi nicht vonnöten. Paulus aber, der lehrt an allen Orten, daß wir darum Gott angenehm seien um Christus' willen, nicht

But they object that love is preferred to faith and hope. For Paul says, 1 Cor. 13, 13: The greatest of these is charity. Now, it is reasonable that the greatest and chief virtue should justify, although Paul, in this passage, properly speaks of love towards one's neighbor, and indicates that love is the greatest, because it has most fruits. Faith and hope have to do only with God; but love has infinite offices externally towards men. [Love goes forth upon earth among the people, and does much good, by consoling, teaching, instructing, helping, counseling privately and publicly.] Nevertheless, let us, indeed, grant to the adversaries that love towards God and our neighbor is the greatest virtue, because the chief commandment is this: Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, Matt. 22, 37. But how will they infer thence that love justifies? The greatest virtue, they say, justifies. By no means. [It would be true if we had a gracious God because of our virtue. Now, it was proven above that we are accepted and justified for Christ's sake, not because of our virtue; for our virtue is impure.] For just as even the greatest or first Law does not justify, so also the greatest virtue of the Law does not justify. [For, as the Law and virtue is higher, and our ability to do the same proportionately lower, we are not righteous because of love.] But that virtue justifies which apprehends Christ, which communicates to us Christ's merits, by which we receive grace and peace from God. But this virtue is faith. For as it has been often said, faith is not only knowledge, but much rather willing to receive or apprehend those things which are offered in the promise concerning Christ. Moreover, this obedience towards God, namely, to wish to receive the offered promise, is no less a divine service, λατρεία, than is love. God wishes us to believe Him, and to receive from Him blessings, and this He declares to be true divine service.

But the adversaries ascribe justification to love because they everywhere teach and require the righteousness of the Law. For we cannot deny that love is the highest work of the Law. And human wisdom gazes at the Law, and seeks in it justification. Accordingly, also the scholastic doctors, great and talented men, proclaim this as the highest work of the Law, and ascribe to this work justification. But deceived by human wisdom, they did not look upon the uncovered, but upon the veiled face of Moses, just as the Pharisees, philosophers, Mahometans. But we preach the foolishness of the Gospel, in which another righteousness is revealed, namely, that for the sake of Christ, as Propitiator, we are accounted righteous, when we believe that for Christ's sake God has been reconciled to us. Neither are we ignorant how far distant this doctrine is from the judgment of reason and of the Law. Nor are we ignorant that the doctrine of the Law concerning love makes a much greater show; for it is wisdom. But we are not ashamed of the foolishness of the Gospel. For the sake of Christ's glory we defend this, and beseech Christ, by His Holy Ghost, to aid us that we may be able to make this clear and manifest.

The adversaries, in the Confutation, have also cited against us Col. 3, 14: Charity, which is the bond of perfectness. From this they infer that love justifies because it renders men perfect. Although a reply concerning perfection could here be made in many ways, yet we will simply recite the meaning of Paul. It is certain that Paul spoke of love towards one's neighbor. Neither must we indeed think that Paul would ascribe either justification or perfection to the works of the Second Table, rather than to those of the First. And if love render men perfect, there will then be no need of Christ as Propitiator, [However, Paul teaches in all places that we are accepted on account of Christ, and not on account of our love, or our works, or of the Law; for no saint (as was stated before) perfectly fulfils the Law. Therefore, since he in all places writes and teaches that in this life there is no perfection in our works, it is not to be thought that he speaks here of personal perfection.] for faith apprehends Christ only as Propitiator. This, however, is far distant from the meaning of Paul, who

tur igitur non de personali perfectione, sed de integritate communi ecclesiae. Ideo enim ait, dilectionem esse vinculum seu colligationem, ut significet se loqui de colligandis et copulandis pluribus membris ecclesiae inter se. Sicut enim in omnibus familiis, in omnibus rebus publicis concordia mutuis officiis alenda est, nec retineri tranquillitas potest, nisi quaedam errata inter se dissimulent homines et condonent: ita iubet Paulus in ecclesia dilectionem existere, quae retineat concordiam, quae toleret, sicubi opus est, asperiores mores fratrum, quae dissimulet quaedam levia errata, ne dissiliat ecclesia in varia schismata et ex schismatis oriantur odia, factiones et haereses.

ben, wo nicht einer dem andern viel verzeiht, wo wir nicht einander tragen), also will Paulus da vermahnen zu der christlichen Liebe, daß einer des andern Fehler, Gebrechen dulden und tragen soll, daß sie einander vergeben sollen, damit Einigkeit erhalten werde in der Kirche, damit der Christenhaufe nicht zertriften, zertrümmert werde und sich in allerlei Rotten und Sekten theile, daraus dann großer Unrat, Haß und Reid, allerlei Bitterkeit und böses Gift, endlich öffentliche Aergerei erfolgen möchte.

112) Necessae est enim dissilire concordiam, quando aut episcopi imponunt populo duriora onera, nec habent rationem imbecillitatis in populo. Et oriuntur dissidia, quando populus nimis acerbè iudicat de moribus doctorum aut fastidit doctores propter quaedam levia incommoda; quaeruntur enim deinde [R. 105 et aliud doctrinae genus et alii doctores. 113] E contra perfectio, id est, integritas ecclesiae, conservatur, quando firmi tolerant infirmos, quando populus boni consulit quaedam incommoda in moribus doctorum, quando episcopi quaedam condonant imbecillitati populi. 114) De his praeceptis aequitatis pleni sunt libri omnium sapientum, ut in hac vitae consuetudine multa condonemus inter nos propter communem tranquillitatem. Et de ea quum hic, tum alias saepe praecipit Paulus. Quare adversarii imprudenter ratiocinantur ex nomine perfectionis, quod dilectio iustificet, quum Paulus de integritate et tranquillitate communi loquatur. Et sic interpretatur hunc locum Ambrosius: Sicut aedificium dicitur perfectum seu integrum, quum omnes partes 115) apte inter se coagmentatae sunt. Turpe est autem adversariis, tantopere praedicare dilectionem, quum nusquam praestent eam. Quid nunc agunt? Dissipant ecclesias, scribunt leges sanguine et has proponunt Caesari, clementissimo Principi, promulgandas, trucidant sacerdotes et alios bonos viros, si quis leviter significavit se aliquem manifestum abusum non omnino probare. Haec non conveniunt ad ista praeconia dilectionis, quae, si sequerentur adversarii, ecclesiae tranquillae essent et res publica pacata. Nam hi tumultus consulescerent, si adversarii non nimis acerbè exigerent quasdam traditiones inutiles ad pietatem, quarum plerasque ne ipsi quidem observant, qui vehementissime defendunt eas. Sed sibi facile ignoscunt, aliis non item, ut ille apud poetam: Ego met mi ignosco, Mae- 116) vius [Maenius] inquit. Id autem alienissimum est ab his encomiis dilectionis, quae hic ex Paulo recitant, nec magis intelligunt, quam parietes intelligunt vocem, quam reddunt.

um unserer Liebe oder unserer Werke oder Gesetzes willen. Denn auch kein Heiliger (wie oben gesagt) erfüllt das Gesetz vollkommen. Darum so er an allen andern Orten schreibt und lehrt, daß in diesem Leben an unsern Werken keine Vollkommenheit ist, so ist nicht zu gedenken, daß er zu den Klostern von Vollkommenheit der Person rede, sondern er redet von Einigkeit der Kirche, und das Wort, so sie Vollkommenheit deuten, heißt nichts anderes, denn unzerrissen sein, das ist, einig sein. Daß er nun sagt: „Die Liebe ist ein Band der Vollkommenheit“, das ist, sie bindet, fügt und hält zusammen die vielen Gliedmaßen der Kirche unter sich selbst (denn gleichwie in einer Stadt oder in einem Hause die Einigkeit dadurch erhalten wird, daß einer dem andern zugute halte, und kann nicht Friede noch Ruhe bleiben, wenn nicht alle einander tragen), also will Paulus da vermahnen zu der christlichen Liebe, daß einer des andern Fehler, Gebrechen dulden und tragen soll, daß sie einander vergeben sollen, damit Einigkeit erhalten werde in der Kirche, damit der Christenhaufe nicht zertriften, zertrümmert werde und sich in allerlei Rotten und Sekten theile, daraus dann großer Unrat, Haß und Reid, allerlei Bitterkeit und böses Gift, endlich öffentliche Aergerei erfolgen möchte.

Denn die Einigkeit kann nicht bleiben, wenn die Bischöfe ohne alle Ursache zu schwere Bürden auflegen dem Volk. Auch werden daraus leichtlich Rotten, wenn das Volk auf geschwindeste [heftigste] alles will meistern und ausreden an der Bischöfe oder Prediger Wandel und Leben, oder wenn sie alsbald der Prediger müde werden, etwa um eines kleinen Gebrechens willen; da folgt viel großer Unrat. Alsdann bald sucht man aus derselben Verbitterung andere Lehrer und andere Prediger. Wiederum wird erhalten Vollkommenheit und Einigkeit, das ist, die Kirche bleibt unzerrissen und ganz, wenn die Starken die Schwachen dulden und tragen, wenn das Volk mit seinen Predigern auch Geduld hat, wenn die Bischöfe und Prediger wiederum allerlei Schwachheit, Gebrechen dem Volk nach Gelegenheit wissen zugut zu halten. Von dem Wege und der Weise, Einigkeit zu halten, ist auch viel allenthalben geschrieben in den Büchern der Philosophen und Weltweisen. Denn wir müssen einander viel vergeben und für gut haben um Einigkeit willen. Und davon redet Paulus mehr denn an einem Ort. Darum schließen die Widersacher nicht recht, daß die Liebe solle vor Gott gerecht machen. Denn Paulus redet da nicht von der Vollkommenheit oder Heiligkeit der Personen, wie sie wähnen, sondern sagt: „Die Liebe macht ein stilles Wesen in der Kirche.“ Und also legt den Spruch auch Ambrosius aus: „Gleichwie ein Gebäu ganz ist, wenn alle Stüde zusammenhängen“ usw. Es sollten sich aber die Widersacher auch wohl schämen, daß sie so trefflich hoch von der Liebe schreiben und predigen und Liebe, Liebe in allen ihren Büchern schreiben und schreiben und gar keine Liebe erzeigen. Denn wie eine schöne Christenliebe ist das, daß sie durch ihre unerhörte Tyrannei zertrümmern und zerreiben die Einigkeit der Kirche, so sie nichts denn Blutbrüder und tyrannische Gebote ausgeben zu lassen, dem allerhöchsten Kaiser gern das Erbkönigthum einbilden. Sie erwürgen die Priester und viele andere fromme, ehrliche Leute keiner andern Ursache halben, denn daß sie allein öffentliche, schändliche Mißbräuche ansahen. Sie wollten gerne, daß alle die tot wären, die wider ihre gottlose Lehre mit einem Wort mucken. Das alles reimt sich gar übel zu dem großen Rühmen von Liebe, von never suffers Christ to be excluded as Pro-pitiator. Therefore he speaks not of personal perfection, but of the integrity common to the Church [concerning the unity of the Church, and the word which they interpret as perfection means nothing else than to be not rent]. For on this account he says that love is a bond or connection, to signify that he speaks of the binding and joining together, with each other, of the many members of the Church. For just as in all families and in all states concord should be nourished by mutual offices, and tranquillity cannot be retained unless men overlook and forgive certain mistakes among themselves; so Paul commands that there should be love in the Church in order that it may preserve concord, bear with the harsher manners of brethren as there is need, overlook certain less serious mistakes, lest the Church fly apart into various schisms, and enmities and factions and heresies arise from the schisms.

For concord must necessarily be rent asunder whenever either the bishops impose [without cause] upon the people heavier burdens, or have no respect to weakness in the people. And dissensions arise when the people judge too severely [quickly censure and criticize] concerning the conduct [walk and life] of teachers [bishops or preachers], or despise the teachers because of certain less serious faults; for then both another kind of doctrine and other teachers are sought after. On the other hand, perfection, i. e., the integrity of the Church, is preserved, when the strong bear with the weak, when the people take in good part some faults in the conduct of their teachers [have patience also with their preachers], when the bishops make some allowances for the weakness of the people [know how to exercise forbearance to the people, according to circumstances, with respect to all kinds of weaknesses and faults]. Of these precepts of equity the books of all the wise are full, namely, that in every-day life we should make many allowances mutually for the sake of common tranquillity. And of this Paul frequently teaches both here and elsewhere. Wherefore the adversaries argue indiscreetly from the term "perfection" that love justifies, while Paul speaks of common integrity and tranquillity. And thus Ambrose interprets this passage: Just as a building is said to be perfect or entire when all its parts are fitly joined together with one another. Moreover, it is disgraceful for the adversaries to preach so much concerning love while they nowhere exhibit it. What are they now doing? They are rending asunder churches, they are writing laws in blood, and are proposing to the most clement prince, the Emperor, that these should be promulgated; they are slaughtering priests and other good men, if any one have [even] slightly intimated that he does not entirely approve some manifest abuse. [They wish all dead who say a single word against their godless doctrine.] These things are not consistent with those declamations of love, which if the adversaries would follow, the churches would be tranquil and the state have peace. For these tumults would be quieted if the adversaries would not insist with too much bitterness [from sheer vengeful spite and pharisaical envy, against the truth which they have perceived] upon certain traditions, useless for godliness, most of which not even those very persons observe who most earnestly defend them. But they easily forgive themselves, and yet do not likewise forgive others, according to the passage in the poet: I forgive myself, Macvius said. But this is very far distant from those encomiums of love caritas usw. Denn wenn bei den Widersachern ein Tröpflein Liebe wäre, so könnte man wohl Frieden und Einigkeit in der Kirche machen, wenn sie ihre Menschenangaben, welche doch nichts zu christlicher Lehre oder Leben nütze sind, nicht also aus lauter rachgieriger Bitterkeit und pharisäischem Reid wider die erkannte Wahrheit verfolgten, sondern sie ihre Aussagen selbst nicht recht halten.

117] Ex Petro citant et hanc sententiam, 1 Petr. 4, 8: Universa delicta operit caritas. Constat et Petrum loqui de dilectione erga proximum, quia hunc locum accommodat ad praeceptum, quo iubet, ut diligant se [R. 106 mutuo. Neque vero ulli apostolo in mentem venire potuit, quod dilectio nostra vincat peccatum et mortem, quod dilectio sit propitiatio, propter quam Deus reconcilietur omisso mediatore Christo, quod dilectio sit iustitia sine mediatore Christo. Haec enim dilectio, si qua esset, esset iustitia legis, non evangelii, quod promittit nobis reconciliationem et iustitiam, si credamus, quod propter Christum propitiatorem Pater placatus sit, quod donentur 118] nobis merita Christi. Ideo Petrus paulo ante iubet, ut accedamus ad Christum, ut aedificemur super Christum. Et addit: Qui crediderit in eum, non confundetur, 1 Petr. 2, 4—6. Dilectio nostra non liberat nos a confusione, quum Deus iudicat et arguit nos. Sed fides in Christum liberat in his pavoribus, quia scimus propter Christum nobis ignosci.

119] Ceterum haec sententia de dilectione sumpta est ex Proverbiis, 10, 12, ubi antithesis clare ostendit, quomodo intelligi debeat: Odium suscitatur rixas, et universa delicta tegit dilectio. Idem prorsus docet, quod illa Pauli sententia ex Colossensibus sumpta, ut, si quae dissensiones inciderint, mitigentur et componantur aequitate et commoditate nostra. Dissensiones, inquit, crescunt odiis, ut saepe videmus ex levissimis offensionibus maximas fieri tragodias. Inciderant quaedam inter C. Caesarem et Pompeium leves offensiones, in quibus, si alter alteri paululum cessisset, non extitisset bellum civile. Sed dum uterque morem gerit odio suo, ex re nihili maximi motus orti sunt. 121] Et multae in ecclesia haereses ortae sunt tantum odio doctorum. Itaque non de propriis delictis, sed de alienis loquitur, quum ait: Dilectio tegit delicta, videlicet aliena, [R. 107 et quidem inter homines, id est, etiamsi quae offensiones incidunt, tamen dilectio dissimulat, ignoscit, cedit, non agit omnia summo iure. Petrus igitur non hoc vult, quod dilectio coram Deo mereatur remissionem peccatorum, quod sit propitiatio excluso mediatore Christo, quod regeneret ac iustificet, sed quod erga homines non sit morosa, non aspera, non intractabilis, quod quaedam errata amicorum dissimulet, quod mores aliorum etiam asperiores boni consulat, sicut vulgaris quaedam sententia praecipit: Mores amici noveris, non oderis. Neque temere de hoc officio dilectionis toties praecipiunt apostoli, quod philosophi vocant φιλία. Necessaria est enim haec virtus ad publicam concordiam retinen-

Aus dem Apostel Petro ziehen sie auch an den Spruch, da er sagt: „Die Liebe deckt zu die Menge der Sünden.“ Nun ist es gewiß, daß Petrus da auch redet von der Liebe gegen den Nächsten. Denn er redet daselbst von dem Gebot der Liebe, da geboten ist, daß wir uns untereinander lieben sollen. So ist es auch keinem Apostel nie in seine Gedanken kommen, daß die Liebe sollte den Tod überwinden oder die Sünde, daß die Liebe sollte eine Verführung sein ohne den Mittler Christum, daß die Liebe sollte unsere Gerechtigkeit sein ohne den Verfühner Christum. Denn die Liebe, wenn wir sie schon gleich haben, so ist es nichts mehr denn eine Gerechtigkeit des Gesetzes; sie ist je nicht Christus, durch welchen wir allein gerecht werden, wenn wir glauben, daß um des Mittlers willen uns der Vater gnädig ist, daß uns sein Verdienst geschenkt wird. Darum kurz zuvor vermahnt Petrus, daß wir uns sollen zu Christo halten, daß wir auf ihn als den Eckstein erbaut werden. Denn er sagt: „Wer an ihn glaubet, der wird nicht zuschanden werden.“ Mit unsern Werken und Leben werden wir wahrlich vor Gottes Urtheil und Angesicht mit Schanden bestehen. Aber der Glaube, durch welchen Christus unser wird, der erlöst uns von solchen Schreden des Todes. Denn durch die Verheißung sind wir recht gewiß, daß uns durch Christum die Sünde vergeben ist.

Und das Wort 1 Petr. 4: „Die Liebe deckt der Sünden Menge“ usw. ist genommen aus den Sprüchen Salomonis, da er sagt: „Haß richtet Haber an, aber die Liebe deckt der Sünden Menge zu.“ Da gibt der Text klar an ihm selbst genug, daß er von der Liebe redet gegen den Nächsten und nicht von der Liebe gegen Gott. Und er will gleich daselbe, daß der nächste Spruch Pauli zu den Kolossern sagt, nämlich, daß wir uns sollen fleißigen, brüderlich, freundlich zu leben, also daß einer dem andern viel zugute halte, daß Unlust und Zwiespalt vermieden werden, als sollte er sagen: Zwiespalt erwächst aus Haß; wie wir denn sehen, daß aus geringen Fünkeln oft großes Feuer angeht. Es waren nicht so große Sachen, darüber erst C. Cäsar und Pompejus uneins geworden, und wo einer dem andern gewichen hätte, so wäre der folgende große Krieg, so viel Blutvergießen, so manch groß Unglück und Unrat nicht daraus gekommen. Aber da ein jeder mit dem Kopf hindurch wollte, ist der große, unsägliche Schade, Zerrüttung des ganzen römischen Regiments der Zeit erfolgt. Und es sind viele Ketzerien daher erwachsen, daß Prediger aufeinander sind verbittert worden. So ist nun Petri Spruch also zu verstehen: „Die Liebe deckt der Sünden Menge zu“, das ist, die Liebe deckt des Nächsten Sünde. Das ist, ob sich gleichwohl Unwille unter Christen begibt, so trägt doch die Liebe alles, übersieht gern, weicht dem Nächsten, duldet und trägt brüderlich seine Gebrechen und sucht nicht alles aufs schärfste. So will nun Petrus das gar nicht, daß die Liebe vor Gott verdiente Vergebung der Sünden, daß die Liebe uns Gott verfühne ohne den Mittler Christum, daß wir durch die Liebe sollten Gott angenehm sein ohne den Mittler which they here recite from Paul, nor do they understand the word any more than the walls which give it back. From Peter they cite also this sentence, 1 Pet. 4, 8: Charity shall cover the multitude of sins. It is evident that also Peter speaks of love towards one's neighbor, because he joins this passage to the precept by which he commands that they should love one another. Neither could it have come into the mind of any apostle that our love overcomes sin and death; that love is the propitiation on account of which, to the exclusion of Christ as Mediator, God is reconciled; that love is righteousness without Christ as Mediator. For this love, if there would be any, would be a righteousness of the Law, and not of the Gospel, which promises to us reconciliation and righteousness if we believe that, for the sake of Christ as Propitiator, the Father has been reconciled, and that the merits of Christ are bestowed upon us. Peter, accordingly, urges us, a little before, to come to Christ that we may be built upon Christ. And he adds, 1 Pet. 2, 4—6: He that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. When God judges and convicts us, our love does not free us from confusion [from our works and lives, we truly suffer shame]. But faith in Christ liberates us in these fears, because we know that for Christ's sake we are forgiven.

Besides, this sentence concerning love is derived from Prov. 10, 12, where the antithesis clearly shows how it ought to be understood: Hatred stirreth up strifes; but love covereth all sins. It teaches precisely the same thing as that passage of Paul taken from Colossians, that if any dissensions would occur, they should be moderated and settled by our equitable and lenient conduct. Dissensions, it says, increase by means of hatred, as we often see that from the most trifling offenses tragedies arise [from the smallest sparks a great conflagration arises]. Certain trifling offenses occurred between Caius Caesar and Pompey, in which, if the one had yielded a very little to the other, civil war would not have arisen. But while each indulged his own hatred, from a matter of no account the greatest commotions arose. And many heresies have arisen in the Church only from the hatred of the teachers. Therefore it does not refer to a person's own faults, but to the faults of others, when it says: Charity covereth sins, namely, those of others, and that, too, among men, i. e., even though these offenses occur, yet love overlooks them, forgives, yields, and does not carry all things to the extremity of justice. Peter, therefore, does not mean that love merits in God's sight the remission of sins, that it is a propitiation to the exclusion of Christ as Mediator, that it regenerates and justifies, but that it is not morose, harsh, intractable towards men, that it overlooks some mistakes of its friends, that it takes in good part even the harsher manners of others, just as the well-known maxim enjoins: Know, but do not hate, the manners of a friend. Nor was gute, vergibt brüderlich dem Nächsten, stillt, weist sich selbst und weicht um Friedens willen, wie auch lehrt der Spruch: Amici vitia noris, non oderis, das ist, ich soll meines Freundes Weise lernen, aber ihn (ob es nicht alles schnurgleich ist) darum nicht hassen. Und die Apostel vermahnen nicht ohne Ursache zu solcher Liebe, welches die Philosophi ἐπιεικείαν genannt haben. Denn sollen Leute in Einigkeit beieinander sein oder bleiben, es sei in der Kirche oder auch weltlichem Regiment, so müssen sie nicht alle Gebrechen gegeneinander auf der Goldwaage abrechnen, sie müssen lassen einander fast viel mit dem Wasser vorübergehen und immer zugute halten, soviel auch immer möglich, brüderlich miteinander Gebuld haben.

123] Ex Iacobo citant 2, 24: Videtur igitur, quod ex operibus iustificatur homo et non ex fide sola. Neque alius locus ullus magis putatur officere nostrae sententiae, sed est facillime et plana responsio. Si non assuant adversarii suas opiniones de meritis operum, Iacobi verba nihil habent incommodi. Sed ubicunque sit mentio operum, adversarii affingunt suas impias opiniones, quod per bona opera mereamur remissionem peccatorum, quod bona opera sint propitiatio ac pretium, propter quod Deus nobis reconcilietur, quod bona opera vincant terrores peccati et mortis, quod bona opera coram Deo propter suam bonitatem sint accepta, nec egeant misericordia et propitiatore Christo. Horum nihil venit in mentem Iacobo, quae tamen omnia nunc defendunt adversarii praetextu sententiae Iacobi.

124] Primum igitur hoc expendendum est, quod hic locus magis contra adversarios facit, quam contra nos. Adversarii enim docent hominem iustificari dilectione et operibus. De fide, qua apprehendimus propitiatorem Christum, nihil dicunt. Imo hanc fidem improbant; neque improbant tantum sententiis aut scriptis, sed etiam ferro et suppliciis conantur in ecclesia delere. Quanto melius docet Iacobus, qui fidem non omittit, non subicit pro fide dilectionem, sed retinet (R. 108) fidem, ne propitiator Christus excludatur in iustificatione. Sicut et Paulus, quum summam tradit vitae Christianae, complectitur fidem et dilectionem, 1 Tim. 1, 5: Finis mandati caritas est de corde puro et conscientia bona et fide non ficta.

125] Secundo res ipsa loquitur, hic de operibus dici, quae fidem sequuntur, et ostendunt fidem non esse mortuam, sed vivam et efficacem in corde. Non igitur sensit Iacobus, nos per bona opera mereri remissionem peccatorum et gratiam. Loquitur enim de operibus iustificationum, qui iam sunt reconciliati, accepti et consecuti remissionem peccatorum. Quare errant adversarii, quum hinc ratiocinantur, quod Iacobus doceat, nos per bona opera mereri remissionem peccatorum et gratiam, quod per opera nostra habeamus accessum ad Deum, sine propitiatore Christo.

Auch ziehen sie den Spruch aus dem Apostel Iacobo an und sagen: „Sehet ihr nun, daß wir nicht allein durch den Glauben, sondern durch Werke vor Gott gerecht werden?“ Und sie wollen wäghen, der Spruch sei fest, stark wider unsere Lehre. Aber wenn die Widersacher allein ihre Träume außen lassen und nicht hinanfliden, was sie wollen, so ist die Antwort leicht. Denn des Apostels Iacobi Spruch hat wohl seinen einfältigen Verstand, aber die Widersacher erdichten das dazu, daß wir durch unsere Werke verdienen Vergeltung der Sünden; item, daß die guten Werke eine Versöhnung seien, dadurch uns Gott gnädig wird; item, daß wir durch die guten Werke überwinden können die große Macht des Teufels, des Todes und der Sünde; item, daß unsere guten Werke an ihnen selbst vor Gott so angenehm und groß geachtet seien, daß wir des Mittlers Christi nicht bedürfen. Der keines ist dem Apostel Iacobo in sein Herz gekommen, welches doch alles die Widersacher sich zu erhalten unterstehen durch den Spruch Iacobi.

So müssen wir nun erst dieses merken, daß dieser Spruch mehr ist wider die Widersacher denn für sie. Denn die Widersacher lehren, der Mensch werde vor Gott fromm und gerecht durch die Liebe und Werke. Von dem Glauben, dadurch wir uns halten an den Mittler Christum, reden sie nichts. Und das mehr ist, von dem Glauben wollen sie nichts hören noch sehen, unterstehen sich, diese Lehre vom Glauben mit dem Schwert und Feuer zu tilgen. Iacobus aber tut anders; er läßt den Glauben nicht außen, sondern redet vom Glauben, damit läßt er Christum den Schatz und den Mittler bleiben, dadurch wir vor Gott gerecht werden, wie auch Paulus, da er die Summa setzt christlichen Glaubens, setzt er Glauben und Liebe zusammen, 1 Tim. 1, 5: „Die Summa des Gesetzes ist die Liebe aus ungefärbtem Glauben.“

Zum andern zeigt die Sache an ihr selbst an, daß er von Werken redet, welche dem Glauben folgen; denn er zeigt an, daß der Glaube nicht müsse tot, sondern lebendig, kräftig, geschäftig und tätig im Herzen sein. Darum ist Iacobi Meinung nicht gewesen, daß wir durch Werke Gnade oder Vergeltung der Sünden verdienen. Denn er redet von Werken derjenigen, welche schon Gott durch Christum gerecht geworden sind, welche schon Gott versöhnt sind und Vergeltung der Sünden durch Christum erlangt haben. Darum irren die Widersacher weit, wenn sie aus dem Spruche schließen wollen, daß wir durch gute Werke Gnade und Vergeltung der Sünden verdienen, oder daß Iacobus dies wolle, daß wir durch unsere Werke einen Zugang zu Gott haben ohne den Mittler und Versöhner Christum.

it without design that the apostle taught so frequently concerning this office what the philosophers call ἐπιείκεια, leniency. For this virtue is necessary for retaining public harmony [in the Church and the civil government], which cannot last unless pastors and Churches mutually overlook and pardon many things [if they want to be extremely particular about every defect, and do not allow many things to flow by without noticing them].

From James they cite 2, 24: Ye see, then, how by works a man is justified, and not by faith alone. Nor is any other passage supposed to be more contrary to our belief. But the reply is easy and plain. If the adversaries do not attach their own opinions concerning the merits of works, the words of James have in them nothing that is of disadvantage. But wherever there is mention of works, the adversaries add falsely their own godless opinions, that by means of good works we merit the remission of sins; that good works are a propitiation and price on account of which God is reconciled to us; that good works overcome the terrors of sin and of death; that good works are accepted in God's sight on account of their goodness; and that they do not need mercy and Christ as Propitiator. None of all these things came into the mind of James, which the adversaries, nevertheless, defend under the pretext of this passage of James.

In the first place, then, we must ponder, this, namely, that the passage is more against the adversaries than against us. For the adversaries teach that man is justified by love and works. Of faith, by which we apprehend Christ as Propitiator, they say nothing. Yea, they condemn this faith; nor do they condemn it only in sentences and writings, but also by the sword and capital punishments they endeavor to exterminate it in the Church. How much better does James teach, who does not omit faith, or present love in preference to faith, but retains faith, so that in justification Christ may not be excluded as Propitiator! Just as Paul also, when he treats of the sum of the Christian life, includes faith and love, 1 Tim. 1, 5: The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned.

Secondly, the subject itself declares that here such works are spoken of as follow faith, and show that faith is not dead, but living and efficacious in the heart. James, therefore, did not believe that by good works we merit the remission of sins and grace. For he speaks of the works of those who have been justified, who have already been reconciled and accepted, and have obtained remission of sins. Wherefore the adversaries err when they infer that James teaches that we merit remission of sins and grace by good works, and that by our works we have access to God, without Christ as Propitiator.

127] Ex his liquet non adversari nobis Iacobum, qui, quum otiosas et securas mentes, quae somniant se habere fidem, quum non haberent, vituperaret, distinxit inter mortuam fidem ac vivam fidem. Mortuam ait esse, quae non parit bona opera; vivam ait esse, quae parit bona opera. Porro nos saepe iam ostendimus, quid appellemus fidem. Non enim loquimur de otiosa notitia, qualis est etiam in diabolis, sed de fide, quae resistit terroribus conscientiae, quae erigit et consolatur latur perterrefacta corda. Talis fides neque facilis res est, ut somniant adversarii, neque humana potentia, sed divina [R. 109] potentia, qua vivificamur, qua diabolus et mortem vincimus. Sicut Paulus ad Colossenses, 2, 12, ait, quod fides sit efficax per potentiam Dei et vincat mortem: In quo et resuscitati estis per fidem potentiae Dei. Haec fides, quum sit nova vita, necessario parit novos motus et opera. Ideo Iacobus recte negat nos tali fide iustificari, quae est [130] sine operibus. Quod autem dicit nos iustificari fide et operibus, certe non dicit nos per opera renasci. Neque hoc dicit, quod partim Christus sit propitiator, partim opera nostra sint propitiatio. Nec describit hic modum iustificationis, sed describit, quales sint iusti, postquam iam sunt iustificati et [131] renati. Et iustificari significat hic non ex impio iustum effici, sed usu forensi iustum pronuntiar. Sicut hic, Rom. 2, 13: Factores legis iustificabuntur. Sicut igitur haec verba nihil habent incommodi: Factores legis iustificabuntur, ita de Iacobi verbis sentimus: Iustificatur homo non solum ex fide, sed etiam ex operibus, quia certe iusti pronuntiantur homines habentes fidem et bona opera. Nam bona opera in sanctis, ut diximus, sunt iustitiae et placent propter fidem. Nam haec tantum opera praedicat Iacobus, quae fides efficit, sicut testatur, quum de Abrahamo dicit 2, 21: Fides adiuvat opera eius. In hanc sententiam dicitur: Factores legis iustificatur, hoc est, iusti pronuntiantur, qui corde credunt Deo, et deinde habent bonos fructus, qui placent propter fidem, ideoque sunt impletio legis. Haec simpliciter ita dicta nihil habent vitii, sed depravantur ab adversariis, qui de suo affingunt impias opiniones. Non enim sequitur hinc opera mereri remissionem peccatorum, opera regenerare corda, opera esse propitiationem, opera placere sine propitiatore Christo, opera non indigere pro-

Zum dritten, so hatte St. Iakobus zuvor gesagt von der geistlichen Wiedergeburt, daß sie durch das Evangelium geschieht. Denn also sagt er im 1. Kapitel: „Er hat uns gezeugt nach seinem Willen durch das Wort der Wahrheit, auf daß wir wären Erstlinge seiner Creaturen.“ So er nun sagt, daß wir durch das Evangelium neugeboren seien, so will er, daß wir durch den Glauben gerecht seien vor Gott geworden. Denn die Verheißung von Christo faßt man allein durch den Glauben, wenn wir durch dieselbe getröstet werden wider die Schreden des Todes, der Sünde usw. Darum ist seine Meinung nicht, daß wir durch unsere Werke sollten neugeboren werden.

Aus diesem allem ist klar genug, daß der Spruch Iacobi nicht wider uns ist. Denn er schilt da etliche faule Christen, welche allzu sicher waren geworden, machten ihnen Gedanken, sie hätten den Glauben, so sie doch ohne Glauben waren. Darum macht er Unterschied zwischen lebendigem und totem Glauben. Den toten Glauben nennt er, wo nicht allerlei gute Werke und Früchte des Geistes folgen: Gehorsam, Geduld, Keuschheit, Liebe usw. Lebendigen Glauben nennt er, da gute Früchte folgen. Nun haben wir gar oft gesagt, was wir Glauben nennen. Denn wir nennen das nicht Glauben, daß man die schlechte Historie wisse von Christo, welches auch in Teufeln ist, sondern das neue Licht und die Kraft, welche der Heilige Geist in den Herzen wirkt, durch welche wir die Schreden des Todes, der Sünde usw. überwinden. Das heißen wir Glauben. Ein solch recht christlicher Glaube ist nicht so ein leicht, schlecht Ding, als die Widerfacher wännen wollen. Wie sie denn sagen: Glaube, Glaube, wie bald kann ich glauben! usw. Es ist auch nicht ein Menschengebante, den ich mir selbst machen könne, sondern ist eine göttliche Kraft im Herzen, dadurch wir neugeboren werden, dadurch wir die große Gewalt des Teufels und des Todes überwinden, wie Paulus sagt zu den Kolossern: „In welchem ihr auch seid aufgestanden durch den Glauben, den Gott wirkt“ usw. Derselbe Glaube, diemeil es ein neu göttlich Licht und Leben im Herzen ist, dadurch wir andern Sinn und Mut kriegen, ist lebendig, geschäftig und reich von [an] guten Werken. Darum ist das recht geredet, daß der Glaube nicht recht ist, der ohne Werke ist. Und ob er sagte, daß wir durch den Glauben und Werke gerecht werden, so sagt er doch nicht, daß wir durch die Werke neugeboren werden; so sagt er auch nicht, daß Christus halb der Versöhner sei, halb unsere Werke, sondern er redet von Christen, wie sie sein sollen, nachdem sie nun neugeboren sind durch das Evangelium. Denn er redet von Werken, die nach dem Glauben folgen sollen; da ist's recht geredet: Wer Glauben und gute Werke hat, der ist gerecht. Ja, nicht um der Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen, durch den Glauben. Und wie ein guter Baum gute Früchte tragen soll, und doch die Früchte machen den Baum nicht gut, also müssen gute Werke folgen nach der neuen Geburt, wiewohl sie den Menschen nicht vor Gott angenehm machen, sondern wie der Baum zuvor gut sein muß, also müsse der Mensch zuvor Gott angenehm sein durch den Glauben, um Christus' willen. Die

Thirdly, James has spoken shortly before concerning regeneration, namely, that it occurs through the Gospel. For thus he says, 1, 18: Of His own will begat He us with the Word of Truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of His creatures. When he says that we have been born again by the Gospel, he teaches that we have been born again and justified by faith. For the promise concerning Christ is apprehended only by faith, when we set it against the terrors of sin and of death. James does not, therefore, think that we are born again by our works.

From these things it is clear that James does not contradict us, who, when censuring idle and secure minds, that imagine that they have faith, although they do not have it, made a distinction between dead and living faith. He says that that is dead which does not bring forth good works [and fruits of the Spirit, obedience, patience, chastity, love]; he says that that is living which brings forth good works. Furthermore, we have frequently already shown what we term faith. For we do not speak of idle knowledge [that merely the history concerning Christ should be known], such as devils have, but of faith which resists the terrors of conscience, and cheers and consoles terrified hearts [the new light and power which the Holy Ghost works in the heart, through which we overcome the terrors of death, of sin, etc.]. Such faith is neither an easy matter, as the adversaries dream [as they say: Believe, believe, how easy it is to believe! etc.], nor a human power [thought which I can form for myself], but a divine power, by which we are quickened, and by which we overcome the devil and death. Just as Paul says to the Colossians, 2, 12, that faith is efficacious through the power of God, and overcomes death: Wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God. Since this faith is a new life, it necessarily produces new movements and works. [Because it is a new light and life in the heart, whereby we obtain another mind and spirit, it is living, productive, and rich in good works.] Accordingly, James is right in denying that we are justified by such a faith as is without works. But when he says that we are justified by faith and works, he certainly does not say that we are born again by works. Neither does he say this, that partly Christ is our Propitiator, and partly our works are our propitiation. Nor does he describe the mode of justification, but only of what nature the just are, after they have been already justified and regenerated. [For he is speaking of works which should follow faith. There it is well said: He who has faith and good works is righteous; not, indeed, on account of the works, but for Christ's sake, through faith. And as a good tree should bring forth good fruit, and yet the fruit does not make the tree good, so good works must follow the new birth, although they do not make man accepted before God; but as the tree must first be good, so also must man be first accepted before God by faith for Christ's sake. The works are too insignificant to render God gracious to us for their sake, if He were not gracious to us for Christ's sake. Therefore James does not contradict St. Paul, and does not say that by our works we merit, etc.] And here to be justified does not mean that a righteous man is made from a wicked man, but to be pronounced righteous in a forensic sense, as also in the passage Rom. 2, 13: The doers of the Law shall be justified. As, therefore, these words: The doers of the Law shall be justified, contain nothing contrary to our doctrine, so, too, we believe concerning the words of James: By works a man is justified, and not by faith alone, because men having faith and good works are certainly pronounced righteous. For, as we have said, the good works of saints are righteous, and please on account of faith. For James commends only such works as faith produces, as he testifies when he says of Abraham, 2, 21: Faith wrought with his works. In this sense it is said: The doers of the Law are justified, i. e., they are pronounced righteous who from the heart believe God, and afterwards have good fruits, which please Him on account of faith, and, accordingly, are the fulfilment of the Law. These things, simply spoken, contain nothing erroneous, but they are distorted by the ad-

nicht, daß wir durch die Werke verdienen Vergebung der Sünden; sagt nicht, daß unsere Werke des Teufels Macht, den Tod, die Sünde, der Hölle Schreden überwinden und dem Tode Christi gleich seien; er sagt nicht, daß wir durch Werke Gott angenehm werden; er sagt nicht, daß unsere Werke die Herzen zur Ruhe bringen und Gottes Zorn überwinden, oder daß wir Barmherzigkeit nicht bedürfen, wenn wir Werke haben: der keines sagt Iacobus, welchen Zusatz doch die Widersacher hinzusetzen an die Worte Iacobi.

133] Citantur adversus nos et aliae quaedam sententiae de operibus. Luc. 6, 37: Remittite et remittetur vobis. Esa. 58, 7: [R. 110] Frangite esurienti panem tuum; tunc invocabis, et Dominus exaudiet. Dan. 4, 24: Peccata tua elemosynis redime. Matth. 5, 3: Beati pauperes spiritu, quia talium est regnum coelorum. Item v. 7: Beati misericordes, quia misericordiam consequentur. Hae sententiae etiam nihil habent incommodi, si nihil affingerent adversarii. Duo enim continent: Alterum est praedicatio seu legis seu poenitentiae, quae et arguit malefacientes et iubet benefacere; alterum est promissio, quae additur. Neque vero ascriptum est peccata remitti sine fide, aut ipsa opera propitiatio-
135] nem esse. Semper autem in praedicatione legis haec duo oportet intelligi, et quod lex non possit fieri, nisi fide in Christum renati simus, sicut ait Christus Ioh. 15, 5: Sine me nihil potestis facere. Et ut maxime fieri possint quaedam externa opera, retinenda est haec universalis sententia, quae totam legem interpretatur: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo; retinendum est evangelium, quod per Christum habeamus accessum ad Patrem, 136] Hebr. 11, 6; Rom. 5, 2. Constat enim, quod non iustificamur ex lege. Alioqui quorum opus esset Christo aut evangelio, si sola praedicatio legis sufficeret? Sic in praedicatione poenitentiae non sufficit praedicatio legis seu verbum arguens peccata, quia lex iram operatur, tantum accusat, tantum terret conscientias, quia conscientiae nunquam acquiescunt, nisi audiant vocem Dei, in qua clare promittitur remissio peccatorum. Ideo necesse est addi evangelium, quod propter Christum peccata remittantur, et quod fide in Christum consequamur remissionem peccatorum. Si excludunt adversarii a praedicatione poenitentiae evangelium de Christo, merito sunt iudicandi blasphemii adversus Christum.

137] Itaque quum Esaias primo capite, v. 16–18, praedicat poenitentiam: Quiescite agere perverse, discite benefacere, quaerite iudicium, subvenite oppresso, iudicate pupillo, defendite viduam, et venite et expostulate mecum: si fuerint peccata vestra ut coccinum, quasi [R. 111] nix dealbabitur. Sic et hortatur ad poenitentiam propheta et addit promissionem. Et stultum fuerit in tali sententia tantum haec opera considerare: subvenire oppresso, iudicare pupillo. Initio enim ait: Desinite agere perverse, ubi taxat impietatem cordis et requirit fidem. Nec dicit propheta, quod per opera illa: subvenire oppresso, iudicare pupillo, mereri possint remissionem peccatorum ex opere operato, sed praecipit haec opera ut necessaria in nova vita. Interim tamen remissionem peccatorum fide accipi vult ideoque additur promissio.
138] Sic sentiendum est de omnibus similibus locis. Christus praedicat poenitentiam, quum ait: Remittite, et addit promissionem: Remittetur vobis, Luc. 6, 38. Neque vero hoc dicit, quod illo nostro opere, quum remittimus, mereamur remissionem peccatorum ex opere operato, ut vocant, sed requirit novam vitam, quae certe necessaria est. Interim tamen vult fide accipi remissionem peccatorum. Sic quum ait Esaias 58, 7: Frangite esurienti panem, novam vitam requirit. Nec propheta de illo uno opere loquitur, sed de tota poenitentia, ut indicat
139] textus; interim tamen vult remissionem peccatorum fide accipi. Certa est enim sententia, quam nullae portae inferorum evertere poterunt, quod in praedicatione poenitentiae

Werke sind viel zu gering dazu, daß uns Gott um ihretwillen gnädig sein sollte, wo er uns nicht um Christus' willen gnädig wäre. Also ist Iacobus St. Paulus nicht entgegen, sagt auch Auch führen sie noch mehr Sprüche wider uns, als diesen: Danielis am 4. sagt der Text: „Deine Sünden löse mit Gerechtigkeit und deine Übertretungen mit Almosen gegen die Armen.“ Und Jesaias am 58.: „Brich den Hungrigen dein Brot.“ Item, Luk. 6: „Bergehet, so wird euch vergeben werden.“ Und Matthäi am 5.: „Selig sind die Barmherzigen, denn sie werden die Barmherzigkeit erlangen.“ Auf diese Sprüche und dergleichen von den Werken antworten wir erstlich dieses, nämlich daß (wie wir oben gesagt) das Gesetz niemand halten kann ohne Glauben, so kann niemand Gott gefallen ohne Glauben an Christum, wie er sagt: „Ohne mich könnt ihr nichts tun“; item: „Ohne den Glauben ist es unmöglich, Gott gefallen“; item, wie Paulus sagt: „Durch Christum haben wir einen Zugang zu Gott durch den Glauben.“ Darum, sooft die Schrift der Werke gedenkt, so will sie allenthalben das Evangelium von Christo und den Glauben mit gemeint haben. Zum andern, so sind die Sprüche aus Daniel und andern (so jezum erzählt) fast alle Predigten von der Buße. Erstlich predigen sie das Gesetz, zeigen die Sünde an und barmhagen zur Besserung und guten Werken. Zum andern ist daneben eine Verheißung, daß Gott wolle gnädig sein. Nun ist es gewiß, daß zu einer rechten Buße nicht genug ist, allein das Gesetz zu predigen, denn es schreckt allein die Gewissen; sondern es muß dazukommen auch das Evangelium, nämlich daß die Sünden ohne Verdienst vergeben werden um Christus' willen, daß wir durch den Glauben erlangen Vergebung der Sünden. Das ist so gewiß und also klar, daß, wo die Widersacher das werden ansetzen und Christum und den Glauben von der Buße scheiden, [sic] billig für Lasterer des Evangelii und Christi geachtet werden.

versaries, who attach to them godless opinions out of their mind. For it does not follow hence that works merit the remission of sins; that works regenerate hearts; that works are a propitiation; that works please without Christ as Propitiator; that works do not need Christ as Propitiator. James says nothing of these things, which, nevertheless, the adversaries shamelessly infer from the words of James.

Certain other passages concerning works are also cited against us. Luke 6, 37: Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven. Is. 58, 7 [9]: Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry? . . . Then shalt thou call, and the Lord will answer. Dan. 4, 24 [27]: Break off thy sins, by showing mercy to the poor. Matt. 5, 3: Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; and v. 7: Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy. Even these passages would contain nothing contrary to us if the adversaries would not falsely attach something to them. For they contain two things: The one is a preaching either of the Law or of repentance, which not only convicts those doing wrong, but also enjoins them to do what is right: the other is a promise which is added. But it is not added that sins are remitted without faith, or that works themselves are a propitiation. Moreover, in the preaching of the Law these two things ought always to be understood, namely: First, that the Law cannot be observed unless we have been regenerated by faith in Christ, just as Christ says, John 15, 5: Without Me ye can do nothing. Secondly, and though some external works can certainly be done, this general judgment: Without faith it is impossible to please God, which interprets the whole Law, must be retained: and the Gospel must be retained, that through Christ we have access to the Father, Heb. 10, 19; Rom. 5, 2. For it is evident that we are not justified by the Law. Otherwise, why would there be need of Christ or the Gospel, if the preaching of the Law alone would be sufficient? Thus in the preaching of repentance, the preaching of the Law, or the Word convicting of sin, is not sufficient, because the Law works wrath, and only accuses, only terrifies consciences, because consciences never are at rest, unless they hear the voice of God in which the remission of sins is clearly promised. Accordingly, the Gospel must be added, that for Christ's sake sins are remitted, and that we obtain remission of sins by faith in Christ. If the adversaries exclude the Gospel of Christ from the preaching of repentance, they are judged aright to be blasphemers against Christ.

Therefore, when Isaiah, 1, 16—18, preaches repentance: Cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow, the prophet thus both exhorts to repentance, and adds the promise. But it would be foolish to consider in such a sentence only the words: Relieve the oppressed; judge the fatherless. For he says in the beginning: Cease to do evil, where he censures impiety of heart and requires faith. Neither does the prophet say that through the works: Relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, they can merit the remission of sins ex opere operato, but he commands such works as are necessary in the new life. Yet, in the mean time, he means that remission of sins is received by faith, and accordingly the promise is added. Thus we must understand all similar passages. Christ preaches repentance when He says: Forgive, and He adds the promise: And ye shall be forgiven, Luke 6, 37. Nor, indeed, does He say this, namely, that, when we forgive, by this work of ours we merit the remission of sins ex opere operato, as they term it, but He requires a new life, which certainly is necessary. Yet, in the mean time, He means that remission of sins is received by faith. Thus, when Isaiah says, 58, 7: Deal thy bread to the hungry, he requires a new life. Nor does the prophet speak of this work alone, but, as the text indicates, of the entire repentance; yet, in the mean time, he intends that remission of sins is received by faith. For the position is sure, and none of the gates of hell can overthrow it, that in the preaching of repentance the preaching of the Law is not sufficient, because the Law works wrath and always accuses. But the preaching of the Gospel should be added, namely, that in this way remission of sins is granted us, if we believe that sins are remitted us for Christ's sake. Otherwise, why would there be need of the Gospel, why would there be need of Christ? This belief ought non sufficiat praedicatio legis, quia lex iram operatur et semper accusat. Sed oportet addi praedicationem evangelii, quod ita donetur nobis remissio peccatorum, si credamus nobis remitti peccata propter Christum. Alioqui quorsum opus erat evangelio, quorsum opus erat Christo? Haec sententia semper in conspectu esse debet, ut opponi possit his, qui abiecto Christo, deleto evangelio male detorquent Scripturas ad humanas opiniones, quod remissionem peccatorum emamus nostris operibus.

140] Sic et in concione Danielis, 4, 24, fides requirenda est. Non enim volebat Daniel regem tantum elemosynam largiri, [R. 112] sed totam poenitentiam complectitur, quum ait: Redime peccata tua elemosynis, id est, redime peccata tua mutatione cordis et operum. Hic autem et fides requiritur. Et Daniel de cultu unius Dei Israelis multa ei concionatur, et regem convertit non solum ad elemosynas largiendas, sed multo magis ad fidem. Exstat enim egregia confessio regis de Deo Israelis: Non est alius Deus, qui possit ita salvare, Dan. 3, 29. Itaque duae sunt partes in concione Danielis. Altera pars est, quae praecipit de nova vita et operibus novae vitae. Altera pars est, quod Daniel promittit regi remissionem peccatorum. Et haec promissio remissionis peccatorum non est praedicatio legis, sed vere prophetica et evangelica vox, quam certe voluit Daniel fide 141] accipi. Norat enim Daniel promissam esse remissionem peccatorum in Christo non solum Israelitis, sed etiam omnibus gentibus. Alioqui non potuisset regi polliceri remissionem peccatorum. Non est enim hominis, praesertim in terroribus peccati, sine certo Verbo Dei statuere de voluntate Dei, quod irasci desinat. Ac verba Danielis in sua lingua clarius de tota poenitentia loquuntur et clarius promissionem efferunt: Peccata tua per iustitiam redime et iniquitates tuas beneficiis erga pauperes. Haec verba praecipunt de tota poenitentia. Iubent enim, ut fiat iustus, deinde ut bene operetur, ut, quod regis officium erat, miseros adversus iniuriam 142] defendat. Iustitia autem est fides in corde. Redimuntur autem peccata per poenitentiam, id est, obligatio seu reatus tollitur, quia Deus ignoscit agentibus poenitentiam, sicut Ezech. 18, 21. 22 scriptum est. Neque hinc ratiocinandum est, quod ignoscat [R. 113] propter opera sequentia, propter elemosynas, sed ignoscit propter suam promissionem his, qui apprehendunt promissionem. Nec apprehendunt, nisi qui vere credunt et fide peccatum vincunt et mortem. Hi renati dignos fructus poenitentiae parere debent, sicut Iohannes ait Matth. 3, 8. Est igitur addita promissio: Ecce (Dan. 4, 24) erit sanatio dilectorum tuorum. Hieronymus hic praeter rem addidit dubitativam particulam et multo imprudentius in commentariis contendit remissionem peccatorum incertam esse. Sed nos meminerimus evangelium certo promittere remissionem peccatorum. Et hoc plane fuerit evangelium tollere, negare, quod certo debeat promitti remissio peccatorum. Dimittamus igitur hoc in loco Hieronymum. Quamquam et in verbo redimendi promissio ostenditur. Significatur enim, quod remissio peccatorum possibilis sit, quod possint redimi peccata, id est, tolli obligatio seu reatus, seu placari ira Dei. Sed adversarii nostri ubique omissis

Darum soll man die Worte des großen, hohen Propheten Daniel nicht allein auf das bloße Werk, auf die Almosen, deuten und ziehen, sondern auch den Glauben ansehen. Man muß der Propheten Worte, welche voll Glaubens und Geistes gewesen, nicht so heidnisch ansehen als Aristoteles oder eines andern Heiden. Aristoteles hat auch Alexandrum vermahnt, daß er seine Macht nicht zu eigenem Mutwillen, sondern zur Besserung [von] Landen und Leuten brauchen sollte. Das ist recht und wohl geschrieben; man kann auch vom königlichen Amt nicht Besseres predigen oder schreiben. Aber Daniel sagt seinem König nicht allein von seinem königlichen Amt, sondern von der Buße, von Vergebung der Sünden, von Versöhnung gegen [mit] Gott und von den hohen, großen, geistlichen Sachen, welche gar hoch und weit über alle menschlichen Gedanken und Werke gehen. Darum sind seine Worte nicht allein von Werken und Almosen zu verstehen, welche auch ein Heuchler tun kann, sondern vornehmlich vom Glauben. Daß man aber muß Glauben hier verstehen, da wir von reden, das ist, glauben, daß Gott Sünde durch Barmherzigkeit, nicht um unser Verdienstes willen verberge, das beweist der Text selbst. Erstlich damit, denn es sind zwei Stücke in Daniels Predigt. Das eine ist Gehehpredigt und Strafe. Das andere ist die Verheißung oder Absolution. Wo nun Verheißung ist, muß Glaube sein. Denn Verheißung kann nicht anders empfangen werden, denn daß sich das Herz verläßt auf solch Gotteswort und sieht nicht an eigene Würdigkeit oder Unwürdigkeit. Darum fordert Daniel auch Glauben; denn also lautet die Verheißung: „Deine Sünden werden geheilet.“ Dieses Wort ist eine recht prophetische und evangelische Predigt. Denn Daniel weiß, daß durch den künftigen Samen, Christum, nicht allein den Juden, sondern auch den Heiden Vergebung der Sünden, Gnade und ewiges Leben zugesagt war, sonst hätte er den König nicht also können trösten. Denn es ist nicht Menschenwerk, einem erschrockenen Gewissen gewißlich Vergebung der Sünden zusage und trösten, daß Gott nicht mehr zürnen wolle; da muß man von Gottes Willen Zeugnis aus Gottes Wort haben, wie denn Daniel die hohen Verheißungen vom künftigen Samen gewußt und verstanden hat. Diemeil er nun eine Promissio setzt, ist klar und offenbar, daß er Glauben fordert, da wir von reden. Daß er aber spricht: „Deine Sünden löse mit Gerechtigkeit und deine Übertretungen mit Wohlthaten gegen die Armen“, ist eine Summa einer ganzen Predigt und ist so viel: Bessere dich! Und ist wahr, so wir uns bessern, werden wir los von Sünden. Darum sagt er recht: „Löse deine Sünden.“ Daraus folgt aber nicht, daß wir von Sünden los werden um unserer Werke willen, oder daß unsere Werke die Bezahlung sind für die Sünde. Auch setzt Daniel nicht allein die Werke, sondern spricht: „Löse deine Sünden mit Gerechtigkeit.“ Nun weiß männiglich, daß Gerechtigkeit in der Schrift nicht allein äußerliche Werke heißt, sondern sagt den always to be in view, in order that it may be opposed to those who, Christ being cast aside and the Gospel being blotted out, wickedly distort the Scriptures to the human opinions, that by our works we purchase remission of sins.

Thus also in the sermon of Daniel, 4, 24, faith is required. [The words of the prophet, which were full of faith and spirit, we must not regard as heathenish as those of Aristotle, or any other heathen. Aristotle also admonished Alexander that he should not use his power for his own wantonness, but for the improvement of countries and men. This was written correctly and well; concerning the office of king nothing better can be preached or written. But Daniel is speaking to his king, not only concerning his office as king, but concerning repentance, the forgiveness of sins, reconciliation to God, and concerning sublime, great, spiritual subjects, which far transcend human thoughts and works.] For Daniel did not mean that the king should only bestow alms [which even a hypocrite can do], but embraces repentance when he says: Break off [Redeem, Vulg.] thy iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, i. e., break off thy sins by a change of heart and works. But here also faith is required. And Daniel proclaims to him many things concerning the worship of the only God, the God of Israel, and converts the king not only to bestow alms, but much more to faith. For we have the excellent confession of the king concerning the God of Israel: There is no other God that can deliver after this sort, Dan. 3, 29. Therefore, in the sermon of Daniel there are two parts. The one part is that which gives commandment concerning the new life and the works of the new life. The other part is, that Daniel promises to the king the remission of sins. [Now, where there is a promise, faith is required. For the promise cannot be received in any other way than by the heart's relying on such word of God, and not regarding its own worthiness or unworthiness. Accordingly, Daniel also demands faith; for thus the promise reads: There will be healing for thy offenses.] And this promise of the remission of sins is not a preaching of the Law, but a truly prophetic and evangelical voice, of which Daniel certainly meant that it should be received in faith. For Daniel knew that the remission of sins in Christ was promised not only to the Israelites, but also to all nations. Otherwise he could not have promised to the king the remission of sins. For it is not in the power of man, especially amid the terrors of sin, to assert, without a sure word of God concerning God's will, that He ceases to be angry. And the words of Daniel speak in his own language still more clearly of repentance, and still more clearly bring out the promise: Redeem thy sins by righteousness and thy iniquities by favors toward the poor. These words teach concerning the whole of repentance. [It is as much as to say: Amend your life! And it is true, when we amend our lives, we become rid of sin.] For they direct him to become righteous, then to do good works, to defend the miserable against injustice, as was the duty of a king. But righteousness is faith in the heart. Moreover, sins are redeemed by repentance, i. e., the obligation or guilt is removed, because God forgives those who repent, as it is written in Ezek. 18, 21, 22. Nor are we to infer from this that He forgives on account of works that follow, on account of alms; but on account of His promise He forgives those who apprehend His promise. Neither do any apprehend His promise, except those who truly believe, and by faith overcome sin and death. These, being regenerated, ought to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, just as John says, Matt. 3, 8. The promise, therefore, was added: So, there will be healing for thy offenses, Dan. 4, 24. [Daniel does not only demand works, but says: Redeem thy sins by righteousness. Now, everybody knows that in Scripture righteousness does not mean only external works, but embraces faith, as Paul says: Iustus ex fide vivet, The just shall live by his faith, Heb. 10, 38. Hence, Daniel first demands faith when he mentions righteousness and says: Redeem thy sins by righteousness, that is, by faith toward God, by which thou art made righteous. In addition to this, do good works, administer your office, do not be a tyrant, but see that your government be profitable to your country and people, preserve peace, and protect the poor against unjust force. These are princely alms.] Jerome here added a particle expressing doubt, that is beside the matter, and in his commentaries contends much more unwisely that the remission of sins is uncertain. But let us remember that the Gospel gives a sure promise of the remission of sins. And to deny that there must be a sure promise of the remission of sins would completely abolish the Gospel. Let us therefore dismiss Jerome concerning this passage. Although the promise is displayed even in the word redeem. For it signifies that the remission of sins is possible, that sins can be redeemed, i. e., that their obligation or guilt can be removed, or the wrath of God appeased. But our adversaries, overlooking the promises, everywhere, consider only the precepts, and attach falsely the human opinion that remission occurs on account of works, although the text does not say

daß dein Regiment Landen und Leuten nützlich sei, halte Frieden und schütze die Armen wider unrechte Gewalt. Das sind fürstliche elemosynae. Also ist klar, daß dieser Spruch der Lehre vom Glauben nicht entgegen ist. Aber unsere Widersacher, die groben Esel, fügen ihre Zusätze an alle solche Sprüche, nämlich daß uns die Sünden um unserer Werke willen vergeben werden, und lehren vertrauen auf Werke, so doch die Sprüche nicht also reden, sondern fordern gute Werke, wie denn wahr ist, daß muß ein ander und besser Leben in uns werden. Aber dennoch sollen dieselben Werke Christo seine Ehre nicht nehmen.

Also ist auch auf den Spruch aus dem Evangelio zu antworten: „Vergebet, so wird euch vergeben.“ Denn es ist gleich eine solche Lehre von der Buße. Das erste Stück an diesem Spruch fordert Besserung und gute Werke, das andere Stück setzt dazu die Verheißung, und man soll daraus nicht schließen, daß unser Vergeben uns ex opere operato Vergebung der Sünden verdiene. Denn das sagt Christus nicht, sondern wie in andern Sakramenten Christus die Verheißung bestet an das äußerliche Zeichen, also bestet er auch hier die Verheißung von Vergebung der Sünden an die äußerlichen guten Werke. Und wie wir im Abendmahl nicht erlangen Vergebung der Sünden ohne den Glauben, ex opere operato, also auch nicht in diesem Werke und unserm Vergeben; denn unser Vergeben ist auch kein gut Werk, es geschehe denn von denjenigen, welchen von Gott in Christo die Sünden schon zuvor vergeben sind. Darum unser Vergeben, soll es Gott gefallen, so muß es nach der Vergebung, da uns Gott vergibt, folgen. Denn Christus pflegt die zwei also zusammenzusetzen, das Gesetz und Evangelium, beide den Glauben und auch die guten Werke, daß er anzeige, daß kein Glaube da sei, wenn nicht gute Werke folgen; item, daß wir äußerliche Zeichen haben, welche uns erinnern des Evangelii und Vergebung der Sünden, dadurch wir getröstet werden, daß also mannigfaltig unser Glaube geübt werde. Also sollen solche Sprüche verstanden werden, denn sonst wäre es stracks wider das ganze Evangelium, und würde unser bettelisch Wert an Christus? Statt gesetzt, welcher allein soll die Verjöhnung sein, welcher je nicht zu verachten ist. Item, wo sie sollten von Werken verstanden werden, so würde die Vergebung der Sünden ganz ungewiß; denn sie stünde auf einem losen Grunde, auf unsern elenden Werken.

144] Verum opera incurrunt hominibus in oculos. Haec naturaliter miratur humana ratio, et quia tantum opera cernit, fidem non intelligit neque considerat, ideo somniat haec opera mereri remissionem peccatorum et iustificare. Haec opinio legis haeret naturaliter in animis 145] hominum, neque excuti potest, nisi quum divinitus docemur. Sed revocanda mens est ab huiusmodi carnalibus opinionibus ad Verbum Dei. Videmus nobis evangelium et promissionem de Christo propositam esse. Quum igitur lex praedicatur, quum praedicantur opera, non est repudianda promissio de Christo. Sed haec prius apprehendenda est, ut bene operari possimus, et ut opera nostra Deo placere queant, sicut inquit Christus Ioh. 15, 5: Sine me nihil potestis facere. Itaque si Daniel his verbis usus esset: Peccata tua redime per poenitentiam, praeterirent hunc locum adversarii. Nunc quum vere hanc ipsam sententiam verbis aliis, [R. 114 ut videtur, extulit, detorqueant verba adversarii contra doctrinam gratiae et fidei, quum Daniel 146] maxime voluerit completi fidem. Sic igitur ad verba Danielis respondemus, quod, quia poenitentiam praedicat, non doceat tantum de operibus, sed de fide quoque, ut ipsa historia in textu testatur. Secundo, quia Daniel clare ponit promissionem, necessario requirit fidem, quae credat gratis remitti peccata a Deo. Quamquam igitur in poenitentia commemorat opera, tamen hoc Daniel non dicit, quod per opera illa mereamur remissionem peccatorum. Loquitur enim Daniel non solum de remissione culpae [poenae], quia remissio poenae frustra quaeritur, nisi cor 147] apprehenderit prius remissionem culpae. Ceterum si adversarii tantum intelligunt Daniellem de remissione poenae, nihil contra nos faciet hic locus, quia ita necesse erit ipsos fateri, quod remissio peccati et iustificatio gratuita praecedat. Postea nos quoque concedimus poenas, quibus castigamur, mitigari nostris orationibus et bonis operibus, denique tota poenitentia, iuxta illud 1 Cor. 11, 31: Si nos iudicavimus, non iudicavimus a Domino. Et Ier. 15, 19: Si converteris, convertam te. Et Zach. 1, 3: Convertimini ad me, et ego convertar ad vos. Et Ps. 50, 15: Invoca me in die tribulationis.

148] Tenemus igitur has regulas in omnibus encomiis operum, in praedicatione legis, quod lex non fiat sine Christo, sicut ipse inquit: Sine me nihil potestis facere; item, quod sine fide impossibile sit placere Deo, Hebr. 11, 6. Certissimum est enim, quod doctrina legis non vult tollere evangelium, non vult tollere propitiatorem Christum. Et maledicti sint Pharisaei, adversarii nostri, qui legem ita interpretantur, ut operibus tribuant gloriam Christi, videlicet, quod sint propitiatio, quod mereantur remissionem peccatorum. Sequitur igitur semper ita laudari opera, quod placeant propter fidem, quia opera non placent sine propitiatore [R. 115 Christo. Per hunc habemus accessum ad Deum, Rom. 5, 2, non per opera sine mediatore Christo. 149] Ergo quum dicitur: Si vis in vitam ingredi, serva mandata, Matth. 19, 7, sentiendum est mandata sine Christo non servari, nec placere sine Christo. Sic in ipso Decalogo, in primo praecepto, Exod. 20, 6: Faciens misericordiam in millia his, qui diligunt me et custodiunt praecepta mea, amplissima promissio legis additur. Sed haec lex non fit sine Christo. Semper this, but much rather requires faith. For wherever a promise is, there faith is required. For a promise cannot be received unless by faith. [The same answer must also be given in reference to the passage from the Gospel: Forgive, and you will be forgiven. For this is just such a doctrine of repentance. The first part in this passage demands amendment of life and good works, the other part adds the promise. Nor are we to infer from this that our forgiving merits for us ex opere operato remission of sin. For that is not what Christ says, but as in other sacraments Christ has attached the promise to an external sign, so He attaches the promise of the forgiveness of sin in this place to external good works. And as in the Lord's Supper we do not obtain forgiveness of sin without faith, ex opere operato, so neither in this action, when we forgive. For, our forgiving is not a good work, except it is performed by a person whose sins have been previously forgiven by God in Christ. If, therefore, our forgiving is to please God, it must follow after the forgiveness which God extends to us. For, as a rule, Christ combines these two, the Law and the Gospel, both faith and good works, in order to indicate that, where good works do not follow, there is no faith either, that we may have external marks, which remind us of the Gospel and the forgiveness of sin, for our comfort, and that thus our faith may be exercised in many ways. In this manner we are to understand such passages, otherwise they would directly contradict the entire Gospel, and our beggarly works would be put in the place of Christ, who alone is to be the propitiation, which no man is by any means to despise. Again, if these passages were to be understood as relating to works, the remission of sins would be quite uncertain; for it would rest on a poor foundation, on our miserable works.]

But works become conspicuous among men. Human reason naturally admires these, and because it sees only works, and does not understand or consider faith, it dreams accordingly that these works merit remission of sins and justify. This opinion of the Law inheres by nature in men's minds; neither can it be expelled, unless when we are divinely taught. But the mind must be recalled from such carnal opinions to the Word of God. We see that the Gospel and the promise concerning Christ have been laid before us. When, therefore, the Law is preached, when works are enjoined, we should not spurn the promise concerning Christ. But the latter must first be apprehended, in order that we may be able to produce good works, and our works may please God, as Christ says, John 15, 5: Without Me ye can do nothing. Therefore, if Daniel would have used such words as these: "Redeem your sins by repentance," the adversaries would take no notice of this passage. Now, since he has actually expressed this thought in apparently other words, the adversaries distort his words to the injury of the doctrine of grace and faith, although Daniel meant most especially to include faith.

Thus, therefore, we reply to the words of Daniel, that, inasmuch as he is preaching repentance, he is teaching not only of works, but also of faith, as the narrative itself in the context testifies. Secondly, because Daniel clearly presents the promise, he necessarily requires faith which believes that sins are freely remitted by God. Although, therefore, in repentance he mentions works, yet Daniel does not say that by these works we merit remission of sins. For Daniel speaks not only of the remission of the punishment; because remission of the punishment is sought for in vain, unless the heart first receive the remission of guilt. Besides, if the adversaries understand Daniel as speaking only of the remission of punishment, this passage will prove nothing against us, because it will thus be necessary for even them to confess that the remission of sin and free justification precede. Afterwards even we concede that the punishments by which we are chastised, are mitigated by our prayers and good works, and finally by our entire repentance, according to 1 Cor. 11, 31: For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. And Jer. 15, 19: If thou return, then will I bring thee again. And Zech. 1, 3: Turn ye unto Me, and I will turn unto you. And Ps. 50, 15: Call upon Me in the day of trouble.

Let us, therefore, in all our encomiums upon works and in the preaching of the Law retain this rule: that the Law is not observed without Christ. As He Himself has said: Without Me ye can do nothing. Likewise that: Without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11, 6. For it is very certain that the doctrine of the Law is not intended to remove the Gospel, and to remove Christ as Propitiator. And let the Pharisees, our adversaries, be cursed, who so interpret the Law as to ascribe the glory of Christ to works, namely, that they are a propitiation, that they merit the remission of sins. It follows, therefore, that works are always thus praised, namely, that they are pleasing on account of faith, as works do not please without Christ as Propitiator. By Him we have access to God, Rom. 5, 2, not by works, without Christ as Mediator. Therefore, when it is said, Matt. 19, 17: If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments, we must believe that without Christ the commandments are not kept, and without Him cannot please. Thus in the Decalog itself, in the First Commandment, Ex. 20, 6: Showing mercy unto thousands of them that love Me and keep My commandments, the most liberal promise of the Law is added. But this Law is not observed without Christ. For it always accuses the conscience, which does not satisfy the Law, and therefore, in terror, flies from the judgment and punishment of the Law. Because the Law worketh wrath, Rom. 4, 15. Man observes the Law, however, when he hears that for Christ's sake God is reconciled to us, even though we cannot satisfy the Law. When, by this faith, Christ is apprehended as Mediator, the heart finds rest, and begins to love God and observe the Law, and knows that now, because of enim accusat conscientiam, quae legi non satisfacit, quare territa fugit iudicium et poenam legis. Lex enim operatur iram, Rom. 4, 15. Tunc autem facit legem, quando audit nobis propter Christum reconciliari Deum, etiamsi legi non possumus satisfacere. Quum hac fide apprehenditur mediator Christus, cor acquiescit et incipit diligere Deum et facere legem, et scit iam se placere Deo propter mediatorem Christum, etiamsi illa inchoata legis impletio procul absit [150] a perfectione et valde sit immunda. Sic iudicandum est et de praedicatione poenitentiae. Quamquam enim scholastici nihil omnino de fide in doctrina poenitentiae dixerunt, tamen arbitramur neminem adversariorum tam esse furiosum, ut neget absolutionem evangelii vocem esse. Porro absolutio fide accipi debet, ut erigat perterrefactam conscientiam.

[151] Itaque doctrina poenitentiae, quia non solum nova opera praecipit, sed etiam promittit remissionem peccatorum, necessario requirit fidem. Non enim accipitur remissio peccatorum nisi fide. Semper igitur in his locis de poenitentia intelligere oportet, quod non solum opera, sed etiam fides requiratur, ut hic Matth. 6, 14: Si dimiseritis hominibus peccata eorum, dimittet et vobis Pater vester coelestis delicta vestra. Hic requiritur opus et additur promissio remissionis peccatorum, quae non contingit propter opus, sed propter Christum per fidem. [152] Sicut alibi multis locis testatur Scriptura. Act. 10, 43: Huic omnes prophetae testimonium perhibent, remissionem peccatorum accipere per nomen eius omnes, qui credunt [R. 116 in eum]. Et 1 Ioh. 2, 12: Remittuntur vobis peccata propter nomen eius. Eph. 1, 7: In quo [153] habemus redemptionem per sanguinem eius in remissionem peccatorum. Quamquam quid opus est recitare testimonia? Haec est ipsa vox evangelii propria, quod propter Christum, non propter nostra opera, fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum. Hanc evangelii vocem adversarii nostri obruere conantur male detortis locis, qui continent doctrinam legis aut operum. Verum est enim, quod in doctrina poenitentiae requiruntur opera, quia certe nova vita requiritur. Sed hic male assuunt adversarii, quod talibus operibus mereamur remissionem [154] nem peccatorum aut iustificationem. Et tamen Christus saepe annectit promissionem remissionis peccatorum bonis operibus, non quod velit bona opera propitiationem esse, sequuntur enim reconciliationem, sed propter duas causas. Altera est, quia necessario sequi debent boni fructus. Monet igitur hypocrisis et fictam poenitentiam esse, si non sequantur boni fructus. Altera causa est, quia nobis opus est habere externa signa tantae promissionis, quia [155] conscientia pavida multiplici consolatione opus habet. Ut igitur baptismus, ut coena Domini sunt signa, quae subinde admonent, erigunt et confirmant pavidas mentes, ut credant firmiter remitti peccata, ita scripta et picta est eadem promissio in bonis operibus, ut haec opera admoncant nos, ut firmiter credamus. Et qui non benefaciunt, non excitant se ad credendum, sed contemnunt promissiones illas. Sed pii amplectuntur eas et gaudent habere signa et testimonia tantae promissionis. Ideo exercent se in illis signis et testimoniis. Sicut igitur coena Domini non iustificat ex opere operato sine fide, ita elemosynae non iustificat sine fide ex opere operato.

[156] Sic et Tobiae concio, cap. 4, 11, accipi debet: Eleemosyna ab omni peccato et [R. 117 a morte liberat. Non dicemus hyperbolen esse, quamquam ita accipi debet, ne detrahat de laudibus Christi, cuius propria sunt officia liberare a peccato et a morte. Sed recurrendum est ad regulam, quod doctrina legis sine [157] Christo non prodest. Placent igitur elemosynae Deo, quae sequuntur reconciliationem seu iustificationem, non quae praecedunt. Itaque liberant a peccato et morte non ex opere operato, sed ut de poenitentia supra diximus, quod fidem et fructus complecti debeamus, ita hic de elemosyna dicendum est, quod tota illa novitas vitae salvet. Et elemosynae sunt exercitia fidei, quae accipit remissionem peccatorum, quae vincit mortem, dum se magis magisque exercet et in illis exercitiis vires accipit. Concedimus et hoc, quod elemosynae mereantur multa beneficia Dei, mitigent poenas, quod mereantur, ut defendamur in periculis peccatorum et mortis, sicut paulo ante de tota poenitentia diximus. [158] Ac tota concio Tobiae, 4, 6, inspecta ostendit ante elemosynas requiri fidem: Omnibus diebus vitae tuae in mente habeto Deum. Et postea, v. 20: Omni tempore benedic Deum et pete ab eo, ut vias tuas dirigat. Hoc autem proprie fidei est illius, de qua nos loquimur, quae sentit se habere Deum placatum propter ipsius misericordiam, et vult a Deo iustificari, sanctificari et gubernari.

Auch ziehen sie an einen Spruch aus Tobias: „Die Almosen erlösen von der Sünde und von dem Tode.“ Wir wollen nicht sagen, daß da eine Hyperbole sei, wiewohl wir es sagen möchten, damit Christi Ehre erhalten werde; denn dies ist Christus' Amt allein, von der Sünde, vom Tode erlösen usw. Wir wollen aber uns zu unserer alten Regel halten, nämlich daß das Gesetz oder die Werke außer Christo niemand gerecht machen vor Gott. So gefallen nun die Almosen (welche dem Glauben folgen) dann erst Gott, wenn ich durch Christum versöhnt bin, nicht die vorhergehen. Darum erlösen sie vom Tode nicht ex opere operato, sondern wie ich kurz zuvor von der Buße gesagt habe, daß man den Glauben mit den Früchten zugleich muß zusammenfassen, also ist auch von den Almosen zu sagen, daß sie Gott gefallen, diemeil sie geschehen in den Gläubigen. Denn Tobias redet nicht allein von Almosen, sondern auch vom Glauben. Denn er sagt: „Lobe Gott und bitte ihn, daß er dich wolle auf deinen Wegen leiten“ usw. Da redet er eigentlich von dem Glauben, da wir von reden, der da glaubt, daß er einen gnädigen Gott habe, den er zu loben schuldig ist für eitel große Güte und Gnade, von dem er auch täglich erwartete Hilfe, und bittet ihn, daß er ihn im Leben und Sterben leiten und regieren wolle. Auf die Weise mögen wir nachgeben, daß die Almosen nicht unbedienstlich seien gegen Gott, nicht aber, daß sie können den Tod, die Hölle, den Teufel, die Sünde überwinden, die Gewissen zur Ruhe stellen (denn das muß durch

Christ as Mediator, it is pleasing to God, even though the inchoate fulfilling of the Law be far from perfection and be very impure. Thus we must judge also concerning the preaching of repentance. For although in the doctrine of repentance the scholastics have said nothing at all concerning faith, yet we think that none of our adversaries is so mad as to deny that absolution is a voice of the Gospel. And absolution ought to be received by faith, in order that it may cheer the terrified conscience.

Therefore the doctrine of repentance, because it not only commands new works, but also promises the remission of sins, necessarily requires faith. For the remission of sins is not received unless by faith. Therefore, in those passages that refer to repentance, we should always understand that not only works, but also faith is required, as in Matt. 6, 14: For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. Here a work is required, and the promise of the remission of sins is added, which does not occur on account of the work, but through faith, on account of Christ. Just as Scripture testifies in many passages: Acts 10, 43: To Him give all the prophets witness that through His name, whosoever believeth in Him, shall receive remission of sins; and 1 John 2, 12: Your sins are forgiven you for His name's sake; Eph. 1, 7: In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins. Although what need is there to recite testimonies? This is the very voice peculiar to the Gospel, namely, that for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our works, we obtain by faith remission of sins. Our adversaries endeavor to suppress this voice of the Gospel by means of distorted passages which contain the doctrine of the Law, or of works. For it is true that in the doctrine of repentance works are required, because certainly a new life is required. But here the adversaries wrongly add that by such works we merit the remission of sins, or justification. And yet Christ often connects the promise of the remission of sins to good works, not because He means that good works are a propitiation, for they follow reconciliation; but for two reasons. One is, because good fruits must necessarily follow. Therefore He reminds us that, if good fruits do not follow, the repentance is hypocritical and feigned. The other reason is, because we have need of external signs of so great a promise, because a conscience full of fear has need of manifold consolation. As, therefore, Baptism and the Lord's Supper are signs that continually admonish, cheer, and encourage desponding minds to believe the more firmly that their sins are forgiven, so the same promise is written and portrayed in good works, in order that these works may admonish us to believe the more firmly. And those who produce no good works do not excite themselves to believe, but despise these promises. The godly, on the other hand, embrace them, and rejoice that they have the signs and testimonies of so great a promise. Accordingly, they exercise themselves in these signs and testimonies. Just as, therefore, the Lord's Supper does not justify us ex opere operato, without faith, so alms do not justify us without faith, ex opere operato.

So also the address of Tobias, 4, 11, ought to be received: Alms free from every sin and from death. We will not say that this is hyperbole, although it ought thus to be received, so as not to detract from the praise of Christ, whose prerogative it is to free from sin and death. But we must come back to the rule that without Christ the doctrine of the Law is of no profit. Therefore those alms please God which follow reconciliation or justification, and not those which precede. Therefore they free from sin and death, not ex opere operato, but, as we have said above concerning repentance, that we ought to embrace faith and its fruits, so here we must say concerning alms that this entire newness of life saves [that they please God because they occur in believers]. Alms also are the exercises of faith, which receives the remission of sins and overcomes death, while it exercises itself more and more, and in these exercises receives strength. We grant also this, that alms merit many favors from God [but they cannot overcome death, hell, the devil, sins, and give the conscience peace (for this must occur alone through faith in Christ)], mitigate punishments, and that they merit our defense in the dangers of sins and of death, as we have said a little before concerning the entire repentance. [This is the simple meaning, which agrees also with other passages of Scripture. For wherever in the Scriptures good works are praised, we must always understand them according to the rule of Paul, that the Law and works must not be elevated above Christ, but that Christ and faith are as far above all works as the heavens are above the earth.] And the address of Tobias, regarded as a whole, shows that faith is required before alms, 4, 5: Be mindful of the Lord, thy God, all thy days. And afterwards, v. 19: Bless the Lord, thy God, always, and desire of Him that thy ways be directed. This, however, belongs properly to that faith of which we speak, which believes that God is reconciled to it because of His mercy, and which wishes to be justified, sanctified, and governed by God. But our ad-

Sicut papa, nescio quis, de aqua sale conspersa inquit, quod populum sanctificet ac mundet; et glossa ait, quod mundet a venialibus. Tales erant et Pharisaeorum opiniones, quas reprehendit Christus, et opponit huic fictae purgationi duplicem munditiam, alteram internam, alteram externam. Iubet, ut intus mundentur, et addit de munditie externa: Date eleemosynam de eo, quod superest, et sic omnia erunt vobis munda. 162] Adversarii non recte accommodant particulam universalem omnia; Christus enim addit hanc conclusionem utrique membro: Tunc omnia erunt munda, si intus eritis mundi, et foris dederitis eleemosynam. Significat enim, quod externa mundities collocanda sit in operibus a Deo praeceptis, non in traditionibus humanis, ut tunc erant illae ablutiones, et nunc est quotidiana illa aspersio aquae, vestitus monachorum, discrimina ciborum et similes pompae. Sed adversarii corrumpunt sententiam, sophisticè translata particulam universali ad unam partem: Omnia 163] erunt munda datis eleemosynis. Atqui Petrus dixit Act. 15, 9, fide purificari corda. Sed totus locus inspectus sententiam offert consentientem cum reliqua Scriptura, quod si corda sint mundata, et deinde foris accedant eleemosynae, hoc est, omnia opera caritatis: ita totos esse mundos, hoc est, non intus solum, sed foris etiam. Deinde cur non tota illa concio coniungitur? Multae sunt partes obiurgationis, quarum aliae de fide, aliae de operibus praecipunt. Nec est candidi lectoris excerpere praecepta operum, omissis locis de fide.

Wort „alles“, sophisticè allein auf einen Teil und sagen: Alles wird euch rein sein, wenn ihr Almosen gebt usw. Als wenn einer sagt: Andreas ist da, darum sind alle Apostel da. Darum im antecedente oder vor[au]fgehenden Stück dieses Spruchs soll beides beieinander bleiben: Glaubt und: Gebt Almosen. Denn darauf geht die ganze Sendung, das ganze Amt Christi, darum ist er da, daß sie glauben sollen. Wenn nun beide Stücke zusammengefaßt werden: glauben und Eleemosynen geben, so folgt recht, daß alles rein sei, daß Herz durch Glauben, der äußerliche Wandel durch gute Werke. Also soll man die Predigt ganz fassen und nicht das eine Stück umkehren und deuten, daß das Herz von Sünden rein wird durch unsere Eleemosynen. Es sind auch wohl etliche, die da meinen, daß es wider die Pharisäer von Christo ironice oder spöttlich geredet sei, als sollte er sagen: Ja, liebe Junker, raubt und stehst und geht danach hin, gebt Almosen, so werdet ihr bald rein sein! Daß also Christus den Glauben an Christum allein geschehen), sondern verdienen, daß uns Gott schützt vor künftigen Übel und Fahr [Gefahr] Leibes und der Seele. Das ist der einfältige Verstand, welcher auch mit andern Sprüchen der Schrift übereinstimmt. Denn wo gute Werke gelobt werden in der Schrift, so [da] soll man es allezeit nach der Regel Pauli verstehen, daß man das Gesetz und die Werke nicht über Christum hebe, daß Christus und der Glaube so hoch über alle Werke gehen, als der Himmel über der Erde ist.

Auch ziehen sie an den Spruch Christi: „Gebt Almosen, so wird euch alles rein sein.“ Die Widersacher sind taub und haben dicke Ohren, darum müssen wir ihnen die Regel oft erholen [wiederholen], daß das Gesetz ohne Christum niemand vor Gott fromm mache, und daß alle Werke allein um Christus wissen angenehm sind. Aber die Widersacher schließen Christum allenthalben aus, tun gleich, als sei Christus nichts, und lehren unverschämte, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch gute Werke usw. Wenn wir aber den Spruch unzerissen, ganz ansehen, so werden wir sehen, daß er auch vom Glauben mit redet. Christus schilt die Pharisäer, daß sie wollten wähnen, sie würden vor Gott heilig und rein durch allerlei baptismata carnis, das ist, durch allerlei leibliches Baden, Waschen und Reinigung am Leibe, an Gefäßen, an Kleidern, wie auch ein Papst in seine Canones gesetzt hat ein nötig päpstlich Stüd vom Weihwasser, daß, wenn es mit geweihtem Salz besprengt wird, so heiligt's und reinigt's das Volk von Sünden. Und die Glosse sagt, es reinige von täglichen Sünden. Also hatten die Pharisäer auch Irrtümer unter sich, welche Christus straft und setzt gegen die erdichteten Reinigungen zweierlei Reinigkeit, eine innerlich, die andere äußerlich, und vermahnt, daß sie inwendig sollen rein sein; das geschieht, wie Petrus sagt in Geschichten der Apostel am 15., „durch den Glauben“. Und setzt dazu von äußerlicher Reinigkeit: „Gebt Almosen von dem, das ihr übrig habt, so wird euch alles rein sein.“ Die Widersacher führen nicht recht ein das Wort „alles“. Denn Christus setzt den Beschluß auf beide Stücke, auf die innerliche und äußerliche Reinigkeit, und sagt: „Alles wird euch rein sein.“ Das ist, wenn ihr euch nicht allein leiblich badet, sondern Gott glaubt und also inwendig rein seid und auswendig Almosen gebt, so wird euch alles rein sein. Und zeigt an, daß auch die rechte äußerliche Reinigkeit siehe in den Werken, welche Gott geboten habe, und nicht in menschlichen Satzungen, als da waren dieselben traditiones Pharisaeorum usw., und wie bei unserer Zeit ist das Besprengen und Sprengen des Weihwassers, die schneeweissen Mönchskleider, die Unterschiede der Speisen und dergleichen. Die Widersacher aber ziehen dies signum universale, nämlich das versaries, charming men, pick out mutilated sentences, in order to deceive those who are unskilled. Afterwards they attach something from their own opinions. Therefore, entire passages are to be required, because, according to the common precept, it is unbecoming, before the entire Law is thoroughly examined, to judge or reply when any single clause of it is presented. And passages, when produced in their entirety, very frequently bring the interpretation with them.

Luke 11, 41 is also cited in a mutilated form, namely: Give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you. The adversaries are very stupid [are deaf, and have callous ears; therefore, we must so often etc.]. For time and again we have said that to the preaching of the Law there should be added the Gospel concerning Christ, because of whom good works are pleasing, but they everywhere teach [without shame] that, Christ being excluded, justification is merited by the works of the Law. When this passage is produced un mutilated, it will show that faith is required. Christ rebukes the Pharisees who think that they are cleansed before God, i. e., that they are justified by frequent ablutions [by all sorts of baptismata carnis, that is, by all sorts of baths, washings, and cleansings of the body, of vessels, of garments]. Just as some Pope or other says of the water sprinkled with salt that it sanctifies and cleanses the people; and the gloss says that it cleanses from venial sins. Such also were the opinions of the Pharisees which Christ reprov ed, and to this feigned cleansing He opposes a double cleanness, the one internal, the other external. He bids them be cleansed inwardly [(which occurs only through faith)], and adds concerning the outward cleanness: Give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you. The adversaries do not apply aright the universal particle all things; for Christ adds this conclusion to both members: "All things will be clean unto you, if you will be clean within, and will outwardly give alms." For He indicates that outward cleanness is to be referred to works commanded by God, and not to human traditions, such as the ablutions were at that time, and the daily sprinkling of water, the vesture of monks, the distinctions of food, and similar acts of ostentation are now. But the adversaries distort the meaning by sophistically transferring the universal particle to only one part: "All things will be clean to those having given alms." [As if any one would infer: Andrew is present; therefore all the apostles are present. Wherefore in the antecedent both members ought to be joined: Believe and give alms. For to this the entire mission, the entire office of Christ points; to this end He is come that we should believe in Him. Now, if both parts are combined, believing and giving alms, it follows rightly that all things are clean: the heart by faith, the external conversation by good works. Thus we must combine the entire sermon, and not invert the parts, and interpret the text to mean that the heart is cleansed from sin by alms. Moreover, there are some who think that these words were spoken by Christ against the Pharisees ironically, as if He meant to say: Aye, my dear lords, rob and steal, and then go and give alms, and you will be promptly cleansed, so that Christ would in a somewhat sarcastic and mocking way puncture their pharisaical hypocrisy. For, although they abounded in unbelief, avarice, and every evil work, they still observed their purifications, gave alms, and believed that they were quite pure, lovely saints. This interpretation is not contrary to the text.] Yet Peter says, Acts 15, 9, that hearts are purified by faith. And when this entire passage is examined, it presents a meaning harmonizing with the rest of Scripture, that, if the hearts are cleansed, and then outwardly alms are added, i. e., all the works of love, they are thus entirely clean, i. e., not only within, but also without. And why is not the entire discourse added to it? There are many parts of the reproof, some of which give commandment concerning faith, and others concerning works. Nor is it the part of a candid reader to pick out the commands concerning works, while the passages concerning faith are omitted.

Lastly, readers are to be admonished of this, namely, that the adversaries give the worst advice to godly consciences when they teach that by works the remission of sins is merited, because conscience, in acquiring remission through works, cannot be confident that the work will satisfy God. Accordingly, it is always tormented, and continually devises other works and other acts of worship, until it altogether despairs. This course is described by Paul, Rom. 4, 5, where he proves that the promise of righteousness is not obtained because of our works, because we could never affirm that we had a reconciled God. For the Law always accuses. Thus the promise would be in vain and uncertain. He accordingly concludes that this promise of the remission of sins and of righteousness is received by faith, not on account of works. This is the true, simple, and genuine meaning of Paul, in which the greatest consolation is offered godly consciences, and the glory of Christ is shown forth, who certainly was given to us for this purpose, namely, that through Him we might have grace, righteousness, and peace.

Thus far we have reviewed the principal passages which the adversaries cite against us, in order to show that faith does not justify, and that we merit, by our works, remission of sins and grace. But we hope that we have shown clearly enough to godly consciences that these passages are not opposed to our doctrine; that the adversaries wickedly distort the Scriptures to their opinions; that the most of the passages which they cite have been garbled; that, while omitting the clearest passages concerning faith, they only select from the Scriptures passages concerning works, and even these they distort; that everywhere they add certain human opinions to that which the words etwas herbe und höhnisch antsche ihre pharisäische Heuchelei. Denn wiewohl sie voll Unglaubens, voll Geizes und alles Argen waren, so hielten sie doch ihre Reinigung, gaben Almosen und meinten, sie wären gar reine, zarte Heilige. Die Auslegung ist dem Text daselbst nicht entgegen.

164) Postremo hoc monendi sunt lectores, quod adversarii pessime consulunt piis conscientiiis, quum docent per opera mereri remissionem peccatorum, quia conscientia colligens per [R. 119] opera remissionem non potest statuere, quod opus satisfaciatur Deo. Ideo semper angitur et subinde alia opera, alios cultus excogitat, donec prorsus desperat. Haec ratio exstat apud Paulum, Rom. 4, 5, ubi probat, quod promissio iustitiae non contingat propter opera nostra, quia nunquam possemus statuere, quod haberemus placatum Deum. Lex enim semper accusat. Ita promissio irrita esset et incerta. Ideo concludit, quod promissio illa remissionis peccatorum et iustitiae fide accipitur, non propter opera. Haec est vera et simplex et germana sententia Pauli, in qua maxima consolatio piis conscientiiis proposita est et illustratur gloria Christi, qui certe ad hoc donatus est nobis, ut per ipsum habeamus gratiam, iustitiam et pacem.

165) Hactenus recensuimus praecipuos locos, quos adversarii contra nos citant, ut ostendant, quod fides non iustificet et quod mereamur remissionem peccatorum et gratiam per opera nostra. Sed speramus nos piis conscientiiis satis ostendisse, quod hi loci non adversentur nostrae sententiae, quod adversarii male detorqueant Scripturas ad suas opiniones, quod plebsque locos citent truncatos, quod omissis locis clarissimis de fide tantum excerptant ex Scripturis locos de operibus eosque depravent, quod ubique affingant humanas quasdam opiniones praeter id, quod verba Scripturae dicunt, quod legem ita doceant, ut evangelium de Christo 166) obruant. Tota enim doctrina adversariorum partim est a ratione humana sumpta, partim est doctrina legis, non evangelii. Duos enim modos iustificationis tradunt, quorum alter est sumptus a ratione, alter ex lege, non ex evangelio seu promissione de Christo.

167) Prior modus iustificationis est apud ipsos, quod docent homines per bona opera [R. 120] mereri gratiam tum de congruo, tum de condigno. Hic modus est doctrina rationis, quia ratio non videns immunditiam cordis sentit se ita placare Deum, si bene operetur, et propterea subinde alia opera, alii cultus ab hominibus in magnis periculis excogitati sunt adversus terrores conscientiae. Gentes et Israelitae mactaverunt humanas hostias et alia multa durissima opera susceperunt, ut placarent iram Dei. Postea excogitati sunt monachatus, et hi certaverunt inter se acerbitate observationum contra terrores conscientiae, contra iram Dei. Et hic modus iustificationis, quia est rationalis et totus versatur in externis operibus, intelligi potest et utcumque praestari. Et ad hunc canonistae detorserunt ordinationes ecclesiasticas male intellectas, quae a patribus longe alio consilio factae sunt, nempe non ut per opera illa quaereremus iustitiam, sed ut ordo quidam propter tranquillitatem hominum inter se in ecclesia esset. Ad hunc modum detorserunt et sacramenta maximeque missam; per hanc quaerunt iustitiam, gratiam, salutem ex opere operato.

168) Alter modus iustificationis traditur a theologis scholasticis, quum docent, quod iusti simus per quendam habitum a Deo infusum, qui est dilectio, et quod hoc habitu adiuti intus et foris faciamus legem Dei, et quod illa impletio legis sit digna gratia et vita aeterna. Haec doctrina plane est doctrina legis. Verum est enim, quod lex inquit: Diligas Dominum Deum tuum etc., Deut. 6, 5. Diligas proximum tuum, Lev. 19, 18. Dilectio igitur est impletio legis.

169) Facile est autem iudicium homini Christiano de utroque modo, quia uterque modus excludit Christum, ideo reprehendendi sunt. In priore manifesta est impietas, qui docet, [R. 121] quod opera nostra sint propitiatio pro peccatis. Posterior modus multa habet incommoda. Non docet uti Christo, quum renascimur. Non docet iustificationem esse remissionem peccatorum. Non docet prius remissionem peccatorum contingere, quam diligimus, sed fingit, quod eliciamus actum dilectionis, per quem mereamur remissionem peccatorum. Nec docet fide in Christum vincere [vinci] terrores peccati et mortis. Fingit homines propria impletionem legis accedere ad Deum sine propitiatore Christo; fingit postea ipsam impletionem legis sine propitiatore Christo iustitiam esse dignam gratia et vita aeterna, quum tamen vix imbecillis et exigua legis impletio contingat etiam sanctis.

170) Verum si quis cogitabit evangelium non esse frustra datum mundo, Christum non esse frustra promissum, exhibitum, natum, passum, resuscitatum, facillime intelliget nos non ex ratione aut lege iustificari. Nos igitur cogimur de iustificatione dissentire ab adversariis. Evangelium enim alium modum ostendit; evangelium cogit uti Christo in iustificatione, docet, quod per ipsum habeamus accessum ad Deum per fidem, docet, quod ipsum mediatorem et propitiatorem debeamus opponere irae Dei; docet fide in Christum accipi remissionem peccatorum 171) et reconciliationem et vinci terrores peccati et mortis. Ita et Paulus ait, iustitiam esse non ex lege, sed ex promissione, in qua promisit Pater, quod velit ignoscere, quod velit reconciliari propter Christum. Haec autem promissio sola fide accipitur, ut testatur Paulus ad Rom., cap. 4, 13. Haec fides sola accipit remissionem peccatorum, iustificat et regenerat. Deinde sequitur dilectio et ceteri boni fructus. Sic igitur docemus hominem iustificari, ut supra diximus, quum conscientia, territa praedicatione poenitentiae, erigitur et credit se habere Deum placatum propter Christum. Haec fides imputatur pro iustitia coram Deo, Rom. 4, 3. 5. 172) Et quum hoc modo cor erigitur et vivificatur fide, concipit Spiritum Sanctum, qui [R. 122] renovat nos, ut legem facere possimus, ut possimus diligere Deum, Verbum Dei, obidere Deo in afflictionibus, ut possimus esse casti, diligere proximum etc. Haec opera, etsi adhuc a perfectione legis procul absint, tamen placent propter fidem, qua iusti reputamur, quia credimus of Scripture say; that they teach the Law in such a manner as to suppress the Gospel concerning Christ. For the entire doctrine of the adversaries is, in part, derived from human reason, and is, in part, a doctrine of the Law, not of the Gospel. For they teach two modes of justification, of which the one has been derived from reason and the other from the Law, not from the Gospel, or the promise concerning Christ.

The former mode of justification with them is, that they teach that by good works men merit grace both de congruo and de condigno. This mode is a doctrine of reason, because reason, not seeing the uncleanness of the heart, thinks that it pleases God if it perform good works, and for this reason other works and other acts of worship are constantly devised, by men in great peril, against the terrors of conscience. The heathen and the Israelites slew human victims, and undertook many other most painful works in order to appease God's wrath. Afterwards, orders of monks were devised, and these vied with each other in the severity of their observances against the terrors of conscience and God's wrath. And this mode of justification, because it is according to reason, and is altogether occupied with outward works, can be understood, and to a certain extent be rendered. And to this the canonists have distorted the misunderstood Church ordinances, which were enacted by the Fathers for a far different purpose, namely, not that by these works we should seek after righteousness, but that, for the sake of mutual tranquillity among men, there might be a certain order in the Church. In this manner they also distorted the Sacraments, and most especially the Mass, through which they seek ex opere operato righteousness, grace, and salvation.

Another mode of justification is handed down by the scholastic theologians when they teach that we are righteous through a habit infused by God, which is love, and that, aided by this habit, we observe the Law of God outwardly and inwardly, and that this fulfilling of the Law is worthy of grace and of eternal life. This doctrine is plainly the doctrine of the Law. For that is true which the Law says: Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, etc., Deut. 6, 5. Thou shalt love thy neighbor, Lev. 19, 18. Love is, therefore, the fulfilling of the Law.

But it is easy for a Christian to judge concerning both modes, because both modes exclude Christ, and are therefore to be rejected. In the former, which teaches that our works are a propitiation for sin, the impiety is manifest. The latter mode contains much that is injurious. It does not teach that, when we are born again, we avail ourselves of Christ. It does not teach that justification is the remission of sins. It does not teach that we attain the remission of sins before we love, but falsely represents that we rouse in ourselves the act of love, through which we merit remission of sins. Nor does it teach that by faith in Christ we overcome the terrors of sin and death. It falsely represents that, by their own fulfilling of the Law, without Christ as Propitiator, men come to God. Finally, it represents that this very fulfilling of the Law, without Christ as Propitiator, is righteousness worthy of grace and eternal life, while nevertheless scarcely a weak and feeble fulfilling of the Law occurs even in saints.

But if any one will only reflect upon it that the Gospel has not been given in vain to the world, and that Christ has not been promised, set forth, has not been born, has not suffered, has not risen again in vain, he will most readily understand that we are justified not from reason or from the Law. In regard to justification, we therefore are compelled to dissent from the adversaries. For the Gospel shows another mode; the Gospel compels us to avail ourselves of Christ in justification; it teaches that through Him we have access to God by faith; it teaches that we ought to set Him as Mediator and Propitiator against God's wrath; it teaches that by faith in Christ the remission of sins and reconciliation are received, and the terrors of sin and of death overcome. Thus Paul also says that righteousness is not of the Law, but of the promise, in which the Father has promised that He wishes to forgive, that for Christ's sake He wishes to be reconciled. This promise, however, is received by faith alone, as Paul testifies, Rom. 4, 13. This faith alone receives remission of sins, justifies, and regenerates. Then love and other good fruits follow. Thus, therefore, we teach that man is justified, as we have above said, when conscience, terrified by the preaching of repentance, is cheered and believes that for Christ's sake it has a reconciled God. This faith is counted for righteousness before God, Rom. 4, 3, 5. And when in this manner the heart is cheered and quickened by faith, it receives the Holy Ghost, who renews us, so that we are able to observe the Law; so that we are able to love God and the Word of God, and to be submissive to God in afflictions; so that we are able to be chaste, to love our neighbor, etc. Even though these works are as yet far distant from the perfection of the Law, yet they please on account of faith, by which we are accounted righteous, because we believe that for Christ's sake we have a reconciled God. These things are plain and in harmony with the Gospel, and can be understood by persons of sound mind. And from this foundation it can easily be decided why we ascribe justification to faith, and not to love; although love follows faith, because love is the fulfilling of the Law. But Paul teaches that we are justified not from the Law, but from the promise which is received only by faith. For we neither come to God without Christ as Mediator, nor receive remission of sins for the sake of our love, but for the sake of Christ. Likewise we are not able to love God while He is angry, and the Law always accuses us, always manifests to us an angry God. Therefore, by faith we must first apprehend the promise that for Christ's sake the Father is reconciled and forgives. Afterwards we begin to observe the nos propter Christum habere placatum Deum. Haec plana sunt et evangelio consentanea et 173] a sanis intelligi possunt. Et ex hoc fundamento facile iudicari potest, quare fidei tribuamus iustificationem, non dilectioni, etsi dilectio fidem sequitur, quia dilectio est impletio legis. At Paulus docet nos non ex lege, sed ex promissione iustificari, quae tantum fide accipitur. Neque enim accedimus ad Deum sine mediatore Christo, neque accipimus remissionem peccata 174] torum propter nostram dilectionem, sed propter Christum. Ac ne diligere quidem possumus iratum Deum, et lex semper accusat nos, semper ostendit iratum Deum. Necesse est igitur nos prius fide apprehendere promissionem, quod propter Christum Pater sit placatus et igno- 175] scat. Postea incipimus legem facere. Procul a ratione humana, procul a Mose reiiciendi sunt oculi in Christum et sentiendum, quod Christus sit nobis donatus, ut propter eum iusti repute- mur. Legi nunquam in carne satisfacimus. Ita igitur iusti reputamur non propter 176] legem, sed propter Christum, quia huius merita nobis donantur, si in eum credimus. Si quis igitur haec fundamenta consideraverit, quod non iustificemur ex lege, quia legem Dei humana natura non potest facere, non potest Deum diligere, sed quod iustificemur ex promissione, in qua propter Christum promissa est reconciliatio, iustitia et vita aeterna: is facile intelliget necessario tribuendam esse iustificationem fidei, si modo cogitabit Christum non esse frustra promissum, exhibitum, natum, passum, resuscitatum, si cogitabit promissionem gratiae in Christo non esse frustra, praeter legem et extra legem factam esse statim [R. 123 a principio mundi, si cogitabit promissionem fide accipiendam esse, sicut Iohannes inquit 1. ep. 5, 10 sq.: Qui non credit Deo, mendacem facit eum, quia non credit in testimonium, quod testificatus est Deus de Filio suo, et hoc est testimonium, quod vitam aeternam dedit nobis Deus, et haec vita in Filio eius est. Qui habet Filium, habet vitam; qui non habet Filium Dei, vitam non habet. Et Christus ait Ioh. 8, 36: Si vos Filius liberaverit, vere liberi eritis. Et Paulus Rom. 5, 2: Per hunc habemus accessum ad Deum, et addit: per fidem. Fide igitur in Christum accipitur promissio remissionis peccatorum et iustitiae. Nec iustificamur coram Deo ex ratione aut lege.

177] Haec tam perspicua, tam manifesta sunt, ut miremur tantum esse furorem adversario- rum, ut haec vocent in dubium. Manifesta ἀπόδειξις est, quum non iustificemur coram Deo ex lege, sed ex promissione, quod necesse sit fidei tribuere iustificationem. Quid potest contra 178] hanc ἀπόδειξιν opponi, nisi totum evangelium, totum Christum abolere quis velit? Gloria Christi fit illustrior, quum docemus eo uti mediatore ac propitiatore. Piae conscientiae vident in hac doctrina uberrimam consolationem sibi proponi, quod videlicet credere ac certo statuere debent, quod propter Christum habeant placatum Patrem, non propter nostras iustitias, et 179] quod Christus adiuvet tamen, ut facere etiam legem possimus. Haec tanta bona eripiunt ecclesiae adversarii nostri, quum damnant, quum delere conantur doctrinam de iustitia fidei. Viderint igitur omnes bonae mentes, ne consentiant impiis consiliis adversariorum. In doctrina adversariorum de iustificatione non fit mentio Christi, quomodo ipsum Debeamus opponere irae Dei, quasi vero nos possumus iram Dei dilectione vincere, aut diligere Deum iratum possumus. 180] Adhaec conscientiae relinquuntur incertae. Si enim ideo sentire debent se habere [R. 124 Deum placatum, quia diligunt, quia legem faciunt, semper dubitare necesse est, utrum habeamus Deum placatum, quia dilectionem illam aut non sentiunt, ut fatentur adversarii, aut certe sentiunt valde exiguum esse, et multo saepius sentiunt se irasci iudicio Dei, qui humanam naturam multis terribilibus malis opprimit, aerumnis huius vitae, terroribus aeternae irae etc. Quando igitur acquiescet, quando erit pacata conscientia? Quando diliget Deum in hac dubitatione, in his terroribus? Quid est aliud haec doctrina legis nisi doctrina desperationis? 181] Ac prodeat aliquis ex adversariis, qui doceat nos de hac dilectione, quomodo ipse diligit Deum. Prorsus, quid dicant, non intelligunt; tantum vocabulum dilectionis non intellectum reddunt, sicut parietes. Adeo confusa et obscura est eorum doctrina et gloriam Christi transfert in humana opera et conscientias vel ad praesumptionem vel ad desperationem adducit. 182] Nostra vero speramus a piis mentibus facile intelligi, et speramus afferre perterrefactis conscientiis piam et salubrem consolationem. Nam quod adversarii cavillantur multos impios ac diabolos etiam credere, saepe iam diximus nos de fide in Christum, hoc est, de fide remissionis peccatorum, de fide, quae vere et ex corde assentitur promissioni gratiae, loqui. Haec non fit sine magno agone in cordibus humanis. Et homines sani facile iudicare possunt, illam fidem, quae credit nos a Deo respici, nobis ignosci, nos exaudiri, rem esse supra naturam; nam humanus animus per sese nihil tale de Deo statuit. Itaque neque in impiis, neque in diabolis haec fides est, de qua loquimur.

183] Praeterea si quis sophista cavillatur iustitiam in voluntate esse, quare non possit tribui fidei, quae in intellectu est, facilis est responsio, quia isti in scholis etiam fatentur voluntatem imperare intellectui, ut assentiantur Verbo Dei. Ac nos clarius dicimus: Sicut terrores [R. 125 peccati et mortis non sunt tantum cogitationes intellectus, sed etiam horribiles motus voluntatis fugientis iudicium Dei, ita fides est non tantum notitia in intellectu, sed etiam fiducia in voluntate, hoc est, est velle et accipere hoc, quod in promissione offertur, videlicet reconcilia- 184] tionem et remissionem peccatorum. Sic utitur nomine fidei Scriptura, ut testatur haec sententia Pauli, Rom. 5, 1: Iustificati ex fide, pacem habemus erga Deum. Iustificare vero hoc loco forensi consuetudine significat reum absolvere et pronuntiare iustum, sed propter alienam 185] iustitiam, videlicet Christi, quae aliena iustitia communicatur nobis per fidem. Itaque quum hoc loco iustitia nostra sit imputatio alienae iustitiae, aliter hic de iustitia loquendum est, quam quum in philosophia aut in foro quaerimus iustitiam proprii operis, quae certe est

Law. Our eyes are to be cast far away from human reason, far away from Moses upon Christ, and we are to believe that Christ is given us, in order that for His sake we may be accounted righteous. In the flesh we never satisfy the Law. Thus, therefore, we are accounted righteous, not on account of the Law, but on account of Christ, because His merits are granted us, if we believe on Him. If any one, therefore, has considered these foundations, that we are not justified by the Law, because human nature cannot observe the Law of God and cannot love God, but that we are justified from the promise, in which, for Christ's sake, reconciliation, righteousness, and eternal life have been promised, he will easily understand that justification must necessarily be ascribed to faith, if he only will reflect upon the fact that it is not in vain that Christ has been promised and set forth, that He has been born and has suffered and been raised again; if he will reflect upon the fact that the promise of grace in Christ is not in vain, that it was made immediately from the beginning of the world, apart from and beyond the Law; if he will reflect upon the fact that the promise should be received by faith, as John says, 1 Ep. 5, 10 sq.: He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son. And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. And Christ says, John 8, 36: If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. And Paul, Rom. 5, 2: By whom also we have access to God; and he adds: by faith. By faith in Christ, therefore, the promise of remission of sins and of righteousness is received. Neither are we justified before God by reason or by the Law.

These things are so plain and so manifest that we wonder that the madness of the adversaries is so great as to call them into doubt. The proof is manifest that, since we are justified before God not from the Law, but from the promise, it is necessary to ascribe justification to faith. What can be opposed to this proof, unless some one wish to abolish the entire Gospel and the entire Christ? The glory of Christ becomes more brilliant when we teach that we avail ourselves of Him as Mediator and Propitiator. Godly consciences see that in this doctrine the most abundant consolation is offered to them, namely, that they ought to believe and most firmly assert that they have a reconciled Father for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our righteousness, and that, nevertheless, Christ aids us, so that we are able to observe also the Law. Of such great blessings as these the adversaries deprive the Church when they condemn, and endeavor to efface, the doctrine concerning the righteousness of faith. Therefore let all well-disposed minds beware of consenting to the godless counsels of the adversaries. In the doctrine of the adversaries concerning justification no mention is made of Christ, and how we ought to set Him against the wrath of God, as though, indeed, we were able to overcome the wrath of God by love, or to love an angry God. In regard to these things, consciences are left in uncertainty. For if they are to think that they have a reconciled God for the reason that they love, and that they observe the Law, they must needs always doubt whether they have a reconciled God, because they either do not feel this love, as the adversaries acknowledge, or they certainly feel that it is very small; and much more frequently do they feel that they are angry at the judgment of God, who oppresses human nature with many terrible evils, with troubles of this life, the terrors of eternal wrath, etc. When, therefore, will conscience be at rest, when will it be pacified? When, in this doubt and in these terrors, will it love God? What else is the doctrine of the Law than a doctrine of despair? And let any one of our adversaries come forward who can teach us concerning this love, how he himself loves God. They do not at all understand what they say; they only echo, just like the walls of a house, the little word "love," without understanding it. So confused and obscure is their doctrine: it not only transfers the glory of Christ to human works, but also leads consciences either to presumption or to despair. But ours, we hope, is readily understood by pious minds, and brings godly and salutary consolation to terrified consciences. For as the adversaries quibble that also many wicked men and devils believe, we have frequently already said that we speak of faith in Christ, i. e., of faith in the remission of sins, of faith which truly and heartily assents to the promise of grace. This is not brought about without a great struggle in human hearts. And men of sound mind can easily judge that the faith which believes that we are cared for by God, and that we are forgiven and heard by Him, is a matter above nature. For of its own accord the human mind makes no such decision concerning God. Therefore this faith of which we speak is neither in the wicked nor in devils.

Furthermore, if any sophist cavils that righteousness is in the will, and therefore it cannot be ascribed to faith, which is in the intellect, the reply is easy, because in the schools even such persons acknowledge that the will commands the intellect to assent to the Word of God. We say also quite clearly: Just as the terrors of sin and death are not only thoughts of the intellect, but also horrible movements of the will fleeing God's judgment, so faith is not only knowledge in the intellect, but also confidence in the will, i. e., it is to wish and to receive that which is offered in the promise, namely, reconciliation and remission of sins. Scripture thus uses the term "faith," as the following sentence of Paul testifies, Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God. Moreover, in this passage, to justify signifies, according to forensic usage, to acquit a guilty one and declare him righteous, but on account of the righteousness of another, namely, of

in voluntate. Ideo Paulus inquit 1 Cor. 1, 30: Ex ipso vos estis in Christo Iesu, qui factus est nobis sapientia a Deo, iustitia et sanctificatio et redemptio. Et 2 Cor. 5, 21: Eum, qui non 186] novit peccatum, pro nobis fecit peccatum, ut nos efficeremur iustitia Dei in ipso. Sed quia iustitia Christi donatur nobis per fidem, ideo fides est iustitia in nobis imputative, id est, est id, quo efficitur accepti Deo propter imputationem et ordinationem Dei, sicut Paulus ait 187] Rom. 4, 3, 5: Fides imputatur ad iustitiam. Etsi propter morosos quosdam τεχνολογικῶ loquendum est: Fides recte est iustitia, quia est obedientia erga evangelium. Constat enim obedientiam erga edictum superioris vere esse speciem distributivae iustitiae. Et haec obedientia erga evangelium imputatur pro iustitia adeo, ut tantum propter hanc, quia hac apprehendimus propitiorem Christum, placeant bona opera seu obedientia erga legem. Neque enim legi satisfacimus, sed id propter Christum condonatur nobis, ut Paulus ait Rom. 8, 1: Nulla nunc damnatio est his, qui in Christo Iesu etc. Haec fides reddit Deo honorem, reddit Deo, 188] quod suum est, per hoc, quod obedit accipiens promissiones. Sicut et Paulus inquit [R. 128 Rom. 4, 20: De promissione Dei non dubitavit per diffidentiam, sed firmus fuit fide dans gloriam 189] Deo. Ita cultus et λατρία evangelii est accipere bona a Deo; e contra cultus legis est bona nostra Deo offerre et exhibere. Nihil autem possumus Deo offerre, nisi antea reconciliati et renati. Plurimum autem consolationis affert hic locus, quod cultus in evangelio praecipuus est a Deo velle accipere remissionem peccatorum, gratiam et iustitiam. De hoc cultu ait Christus Ioh. 6, 40: Haec est voluntas Patris mei, qui misit me, ut omnis, qui videt Filium et credit in eum, habeat vitam aeternam. Et Pater inquit Matth. 17, 5: Hic est Filius meus 190] dilectus, in quo mihi complacitum est; hunc audite. Adversarii de obedientia erga legem dicunt, non dicunt de obedientia erga evangelium, quum tamen legi non possimus obedire, nisi renati per evangelium, quum non possimus diligere Deum, nisi accepta remissione peccatorum. 191] Donec enim sentimus eum nobis irasci, natura humana fugit iram et iudicium eius. Si quis hoc etiam cavilletur: Si fides est, quae vult illa, quae in promissione offeruntur, videntur confundi habitus, fides et spes, quia spes est, quae expectat res promissas: ad hoc respondemus hos affectus non ita divelli posse re ipsa, ut in scholis distrahant otiosis cogitationibus. Nam et ad Hebraeos definitur fides esse expectatio rerum sperandarum, Hebr. 11, 1. Si quis tamen volet discerni, dicimus spei obiectum proprie esse eventum futurum, fidem autem de rebus futuris et praesentibus esse et accipere in praesentia remissionem peccatorum exhibitam in promissione.

Was nun auf andere dergleichen mehr Sprüche zu antworten sei, ist leichtlich abzunehmen aus diesem, so wir erklärt haben. Denn die Regel legt aus alle Sprüche von guten Werken, daß sie außer Christo vor Gott nichts gelten, sondern das Herz muß zuvor Christum haben und glauben, daß es Gott gefalle um Christus' willen, nicht von wegen eigener Werke. Die Widerfacher führen auch etliche Schulargumente, darauf leichtlich zu antworten ist, wenn man weiß, was Glaube ist. Erfahrene Christen reden viel anders vom Glauben denn die Sophisten, wie wir droben angezeigt, daß glauben heißt vertrauen auf Gottes Barmherzigkeit, daß er gnädig sein wolle um Christus' willen, ohne unser Verdienst, und das heißt glauben den Artifel: Vergebung der Sünde. Dieser Glaube ist nicht allein die Historia wissen, die auch die Teufel wissen. Darum ist das Schulargument leichtlich aufzulösen, daß sie sprechen, die Teufel glauben auch, darum mache der Glaube nicht gerecht. Ja, die Teufel wissen die Historia, glauben aber nicht Vergebung der Sünden. Item, daß sie sprechen, gerecht sein heißt Gehorjam; nun ist ja Werke tun ein Gehorjam, darum müssen die Werke gerecht machen. Darum soll man also antworten: Gerecht sein heißt ein solcher Gehorjam, den Gott dafür annimmt. Nun will Gott unsern Gehorjam in Werken nicht annehmen für Gerechtigkeit; denn es ist nicht ein herzlicher Gehorjam, die weil niemand das Gesetz recht hält. Darum hat er einen andern Gehorjam geordnet, den er will für Gerechtigkeit annehmen, nämlich daß wir unsern Ungehorjam erkennen und vertrauen, wir gefallen Gott um Christus' willen, nicht von wegen unsers Gehorjams. Derhalben heißt nun hier gerecht sein, Gott angenehm sein, nicht von wegen eigenen Gehorjams, sondern aus Barmherzigkeit, um Christus' willen. Item, Sünde ist Gott hassen, darum muß Gerechtigkeit sein, Gott lieben. Wahr ist's, Gott lieben ist Gerechtigkeit des Gesetzes; aber dieses Gesetz erfüllt niemand. Darum lehrt das Evangelium eine neue Gerechtigkeit, daß wir um Christus' willen Gott gefallen, ob wir schon das Gesetz nicht erfüllen, und sollen doch anheben, das Gesetz zu tun. Item, was ist der Unterschied zwischen Glauben und Hoffen? Antwort: Hoffnung wartet künftiger Güter und Rettung aus der Trübsal; Glaube empfängt gegenwärtige Veröhnung und schließt im Herzen, daß Gott die Sünden vergeben habe, und daß er jetzt

Christ, which righteousness of another is communicated to us by faith. Therefore, since in this passage our righteousness is the imputation of the righteousness of another, we must here speak concerning righteousness otherwise than when in philosophy or in a civil court we seek after the righteousness of one's own work, which certainly is in the will. Paul accordingly says, 1 Cor. 1, 30: Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption. And 2 Cor. 5, 21: He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. But because the righteousness of Christ is given us by faith, faith is for this reason righteousness in us imputatively, i. e., it is that by which we are made acceptable to God on account of the imputation and ordinance of God, as Paul says, Rom. 4, 3, 5: Faith is reckoned for righteousness. Although on account of certain capacious persons we must say technically: Faith is truly righteousness, because it is obedience to the Gospel. For it is evident that obedience to the command of a superior is truly a species of distributive justice. And this obedience to the Gospel is reckoned for righteousness, so that, only on account of this, because by this we apprehend Christ as Propitiator, good works, or obedience to the Law, are pleasing. For we do not satisfy the Law, but for Christ's sake this is forgiven us, as Paul says, Rom. 8, 1: There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus. This faith gives God the honor, gives God that which is His own, in this, that, by receiving the promises, it obeys Him. Just as Paul also says, Rom. 4, 20: He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God. Thus the worship and divine service of the Gospel is to receive from God gifts; on the contrary, the worship of the Law is to offer and present our gifts to God. We can, however, offer nothing to God unless we have first been reconciled and born again. This passage, too, brings the greatest consolation, as the chief worship of the Gospel is to wish to receive remission of sins, grace, and righteousness. Of this worship Christ says, John 6, 40: This is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life. And the Father says, Matt. 17, 5: This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him. The adversaries speak of obedience to the Law; they do not speak of obedience to the Gospel; and yet we cannot obey the Law, unless, through the Gospel, we have been born again, since we cannot love God, unless the remission of sins has been received. For as long as we feel that He is angry with us, human nature flees from His wrath and judgment. If any one should make a cavil such as this: If that be faith which wishes those things that are offered in the promise, the habits of faith and hope seem to be confounded, because hope is that which expects promised things, — to this we reply that these dispositions cannot in reality be severed, in the manner that they are divided by idle speculations in the schools. For also in the Epistle to the Hebrews faith is defined as the substance (expectatio) of things hoped for, Heb. 11, 1. Yet if any one wish a distinction to be made, we say that the object of hope is properly a future event, but that faith is concerned with future and present things, and receives in the present the remission of sins offered in the promise.

From these statements we hope that it can be sufficiently understood, both what faith is, and that we are compelled to hold that by faith we are justified, reconciled, and regenerated, if, indeed, we wish to teach the righteousness of the Gospel, and not the righteousness of the Law. For those who teach that we are justified by love teach the righteousness of the Law, and do not teach us in justification to avail ourselves of Christ as Mediator. These things also are manifest, namely, that not by love, but by faith, we overcome the terrors of sin and death, that we cannot oppose our love and fulfilling of the Law to the wrath of God, because Paul says, Rom. 5, 2: By Christ we have access to God by faith. We urge this sentence so frequently for the sake of perspicuity. For it shows most clearly the state of our whole case, and, when carefully considered, can teach abundantly concerning the whole matter, and can console well-disposed minds. Accordingly, it is of advantage to have it at hand and in sight, not only that we may be able to oppose it to the doctrine of our adversaries, who teach that we come to God not by faith, but by love and merits, without Christ as Mediator; and also, at the same time that, when in fear, we may cheer ourselves and exercise faith. This is also manifest, that without the aid of Christ we cannot observe the Law, as He Himself says, John 15, 5: Without Me ye can do nothing. Accordingly, before we observe the Law, our hearts must be born again by faith. [From the explanations which we have made it can easily be inferred what answer must be given to similar quotations. For the rule so interprets all passages that treat of good works that outside of Christ they are to be worthless before God, and that the heart must first have Christ, and believe that it is accepted with God for Christ's sake, not because of its own works. The adversaries also bring forward some arguments of the schools, which are easily answered, if you know what faith is. Tried Christians speak of faith quite differently from the sophists, for we have shown before that to believe means to rely on the mercy of God, that He desires to be gracious for Christ's sake, without our merits. That is what it means to believe the article of the forgiveness of sin. To believe this does not mean to know the history only, which the devils also know. Therefore we can easily meet the argument of the schools when they say that the devils also believe, therefore faith does not justify. Aye, the devils know the history, but they do not believe the for-mir gnädig sei. Und dieses ist ein hoher Gottesdienst, der Gott damit dient, daß er ihm die Ehre tut und die Barmherzigkeit und Verheißung so gewiß hält, daß er ohne Verdienst kann allerlei Güter von ihm empfangen und warten [erwarten]. Und in diesem Gottesdienst soll das Herz gelibt werden und zunehmen; davon wissen die tollen Sophisten nichts.

195] Hinc etiam intelligi potest, quare reprehendamus adversariorum doctrinam de merito condigni. Facillima diiudicatio est, quia non faciunt mentionem fidei, quod fide propter Christum placeamus, sed fingunt bona opera, facta adiuvante illo habitu dilectionis, iustitiam esse dignam, quae per se placeat Deo, et dignam aeterna vita, nec opus habere merito. 196] diatore Christo. Quid est hoc aliud, quam transferre gloriam Christi in opera nostra, quod videlicet propter opera nostra placeamus, non propter Christum? At hoc quoque est detrudere Christo gloriam mediatoris, qui perpetuo est mediator, non tantum in principio iustificationis. Et Paulus ait Gal. 2, 17, si iustificatus in Christo opus habet, ut postea alibi quaerat iustitiam, tribui Christo, quod sit minister peccati, id est, quod 197] non plene iustificet. Et absurdissimum est, quod adversarii docent, quod bona [R. 128] opera de condigno mereantur gratiam, quasi vero post principium iustificationis, si conscientia terreatur, ut sit, gratia per bonum opus quaerenda sit, et non fide in Christum.

Aus diesem allem ist leichtlich zu verstehen, was man halten soll vom merito condigni, da die Widersacher erdichten, daß wir vor Gott gerecht sind durch die Liebe und unsere Werke. Da gedenken sie nicht einmal des Glaubens und anstatt des Mittlers Christi setzen sie unsere Werke, unsere Erfüllung des Gesetzes; daß ist in keinem Weg zu leiden. Denniewohl wir oben gesagt, wo die neue Geburt ist durch Geist und Gnade, da folgt auch gewislich die Liebe, so soll man doch die Ehre Christi nicht unsern Werken geben; sondern daß ist gewis, daß wir vor und nach, wenn wir zu dem Evangelio kommen, gerecht geschätzt werden um Christus' willen, und der Christus bleibt der Mittler und Verjöhner vor als [wie] nach, nach als vor, und durch Christum haben wir einen Zugang zu Gott, nicht darum, daß wir das Gesetz gehalten haben und viel Gutes getan, sondern daß wir so fröhlich, getrost auf Gnade bauen und so gewis uns verlassen, daß wir aus Gnaden um Christus' willen gerecht vor Gott geschätzt werden. Und das lehrt, predigt, bekennet die heilige catholica, christliche Kirche, daß wir selig werden durch Barmherzigkeit, wie wir oben haben angezogen aus Hieronymo. Unsere Gerechtigkeit steht nicht auf eigenem Verdienst, sondern auf Gottes Barmherzigkeit, und dieselbe Barmherzigkeit faßt man durch den Glauben.

198] Secundo. Doctrina adversariorum relinquit conscientias ambiguas, ut nunquam pacatae esse queant, quia lex semper accusat nos etiam in bonis operibus. Semper enim caro concupiscit adversus Spiritum, Gal. 5, 17. Quomodo igitur hic habebit conscientia pacem sine fide, si sentiet, quod non propter Christum, sed propter opus proprium iam placere debeat? Quod opus inveniet, quod statuet dignum esse vita aeterna? Siquidem spes ex meritis tantum debet 199] existere. Adversus has dubitationes Paulus inquit Rom. 5, 1: Iustificati ex fide, pacem habemus; certo statuere debemus, quod propter Christum donetur nobis iustitia et vita aeterna. Et de Abraham ait Rom. 4, 18: Contra spem in spem credidit.

201] Quarto. Tota ecclesia constitetur, quod vita aeterna per misericordiam contingat. Sic enim inquit Augustinus de gratia et libero arbitrio, quum quidem loquitur de operibus [R. 129] sanctorum post iustificationem factis: Non meritis nostris Deus nos ad aeternam vitam, sed pro sua miseratione perducit. Et lib. 9 Confess.: Vae hominum vitae quantumcunque laudabili, si remota misericordia iudicetur! Et Cyprianus in enarratione orationis dominicae: Ne quis sibi quasi innocens placeat et se extollendo plus pereat, instruitur et docetur peccare 202] quotidie, dum quotidie pro peccatis iubetur orare. Sed res nota est et habet plurima et clarissima testimonia in Scriptura et ecclesiasticis patribus, qui uno ore omnes praedicant nos, 203] etiamsi habeamus bona opera, tamen in illis bonis operibus misericordia indigere. Hanc misericordiam intuentis fides erigit et consolatur nos. Quare adversarii male docent, quum ita efferunt merita, ut nihil addant de hac fide apprehendente misericordiam. Sicut enim supra diximus promissionem et fidem correlativa esse, nec apprehendi promissionem nisi fide, ita hic dicimus promissam misericordiam correlative requirere fidem, nec posse apprehendi nisi fide. Iure igitur reprehendimus doctrinam de merito condigni, quum nihil de fide iustificante tradat 204] et obscurat gloriam et officium mediatoris Christi. Neque nos quidquam hac in re novi docere existimandi sumus, quum patres in ecclesia hanc sententiam tam clare tradiderint, quod misericordia indigeamus etiam in bonis operibus.

205] Et Scriptura idem saepe inculcat. In Psalmo 143, 2: Non intres in iudicium cum servo tuo, quia non iustificabitur in conspectu tuo omnis vivens. Hic simpliciter detrahit omnibus

givenness of sin. Again, they say: To be righteous is to be obedient. Now, to perform works is certainly obedience; therefore works must justify. We should answer this as follows: To be righteous is a kind of obedience which God accepts as such. Now, God is not willing to accept our obedience in works as righteousness; for it is not an obedience of the heart, because none truly keep the Law. For this reason He has ordained that there should be another kind of obedience which He will accept as righteousness, namely, that we are to acknowledge our disobedience, and trust that we are pleasing to God for Christ's sake, not on account of our obedience. Accordingly, to be righteous in this case means to be pleasing to God, not on account of our own obedience, but from mercy for Christ's sake. Again, to sin is to hate God; therefore, to love God must be righteousness. True, to love God is the righteousness of the Law. But nobody fulfils this Law. Therefore the Gospel teaches a new kind of righteousness, namely, that we are pleasing to God for Christ's sake, although we have not fulfilled the Law; and yet, we are to begin to do the Law. Again, what is the difference between faith and hope? Answer: Hope expects future blessings and deliverance from tribulation; faith receives the present reconciliation, and concludes in the heart, that God has forgiven my sin, and that He is now gracious to me. And this is a noble service of God, which serves God by giving Him the honor, and by esteeming His mercy and promise so sure that without merit we can receive and expect from Him all manner of blessings. And in this service of God the heart should be exercised and increase, of which the foolish sophists know nothing.]

Hence it can also be understood why we find fault with the doctrine of the adversaries concerning meritum condigni. The decision is very easy: because they do not make mention of faith, that we please God by faith for Christ's sake, but imagine that good works, wrought by the aid of the habit of love, constitute a righteousness worthy by itself to please God, and worthy of eternal life, and that they have no need of Christ as Mediator. [This can in no wise be tolerated.] What else is this than to transfer the glory of Christ to our works, namely, that we please God because of our works, and not because of Christ? But this is also to rob Christ of the glory of being the Mediator, who is Mediator perpetually, and not merely in the beginning of justification. Paul also says, Gal. 2, 17, that if one justified in Christ have need afterwards to seek righteousness elsewhere, he affirms of Christ that He is a minister of sin, i. e., that He does not fully justify. [And this is what the holy, catholic, Christian Church teaches, preaches, and confesses, namely, that we are saved by mercy, as we have shown above from Jerome.] And most absurd is that which the adversaries teach, namely, that good works merit grace de condigno, as though indeed after the beginning of justification, if conscience is terrified, as is ordinarily the case, grace must be sought through a good work, and not by faith in Christ.

Secondly, the doctrine of the adversaries leaves consciences in doubt, so that they never can be pacified, because the Law always accuses us, even in good works. For always the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, Gal. 5, 17. How, therefore, will conscience here have peace without faith, if it believe that, not for Christ's sake, but for the sake of one's own work, it ought now to please God? What work will it find, upon what will it firmly rely as worthy of eternal life, if, indeed, hope ought to originate from merits? Against these doubts Paul says, Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God; we ought to be firmly convinced that for Christ's sake righteousness and eternal life are granted us. And of Abraham he says, Rom. 4, 18: Against hope he believed in hope.

Thirdly, how will conscience know when, by the inclination of this habit of love, a work has been done of which it may affirm that it merits grace de condigno? But it is only to elude the Scriptures that this very distinction has been devised, namely, that men merit at one time de congruo and at another time de condigno, because, as we have above said, the intention of the one who works does not distinguish the kinds of merit; but hypocrites, in their security, think simply their works are worthy, and that for this reason they are accounted righteous. On the other hand, terrified consciences doubt concerning all works, and for this reason are continually seeking other works. For this is what it means to merit de congruo, namely, to doubt and, without faith, to work, until despair takes place. In a word, all that the adversaries teach in regard to this matter is full of errors and dangers.

Fourthly, the entire [the holy, catholic, Christian] Church confesses that eternal life is attained through mercy. For thus Augustine speaks On Grace and Free Will, when, indeed, he is speaking of the works of the saints wrought after justification: God leads us to eternal life not by our merits, but according to His mercy. And Confessions, Book IX: Woe to the life of man, however much it may be worthy of praise, if it be judged with mercy removed. And Cyprian in his treatise on the Lord's Prayer: Lest any one should flatter himself that he is innocent, and by exalting himself, should perish the more deeply, he is instructed and taught that he sins daily, in that he is bidden to entreat daily for his sins. But the subject is well known, and has very many and very clear testimonies in Scripture, and in the Church Fathers, who all with one mouth declare that, even though we have good works, yet in these very works we need mercy. Faith looking upon this mercy cheers and consoles us. Wherefore the adversaries teach erroneously when they so extol merits as to add nothing concerning this faith that apprehends mercy. For just as we have above said that the promise and faith stand in etiam sanctis et servis Dei gloriam iustitiae, si non ignoscat Deus, sed iudicet et arguat corda eorum. Nam quod alibi gloriatur David de sua iustitia, loquitur de causa sua adversus persecutores Verbi Dei, non loquitur de personali munditie, et rogat causam et gloriam Dei defendi, ut Psalmo 7, 9: Iudica me, Domine, secundum iustitiam meam et secundum innocentiam meam super me. Rursus Psalmo 130, 3 ait neminem posse sustinere iudicium Dei, si observet [R. 130 206] peccata nostra: Si iniquitates observaveris, Domine, Domine, quis sustinebit? Et Iob. 9, 28: Verebar omnia opera mea. Item v. 30: Si lotus fuero quasi aquis nivis, et fulserint velut mundissimae manus meae, tamen sordibus intinges me. Et Prov. 20, 9: Quis potest dicere, mundum est cor meum, purus sum a peccato? Et 1 Ioh. 1, 8: Si dixerimus, quod peccatum non habemus, ipsi nos seducimus, et veritas in nobis non est etc. Et in oratione [208] dominica sancti petunt remissionem peccatorum. Habent igitur et sancti peccata. In Numeris, cap. 14, 18: Et innocens non erit innocens. Et Deut. 4, 24: Deus tuus ignis consumens est. Et Zacharias ait 2, 13: Sileat a facie Domini omnis caro. Et Esaias 40, 6: Omnis caro foenum et omnis gloria eius quasi flos agri; exsiccatum est foenum, et cecidit flos, quia Spiritus Domini sufflavit in eo, id est, caro et iustitia carnis non potest sustinere iudicium Dei. [209] Et Ionas ait cap. 2, 9: Frustra observant vana, qui misericordia relinquant, id est, omnis fiducia est inanis, praeter fiduciam misericordiae, misericordia servat nos, propria merita, pro- [210] prii conatus non servant nos. Ideo et Daniel orat cap. 9, 18 sq.: Neque enim in iustificationibus nostris prosternimus preces coram te, sed in miserationibus tuis multis. Exaudi, Domine, placare, Domine, attende et fac ne moreris propter te ipsum, Deus meus, quia nomen tuum invocatum est super civitatem et super populum tuum. Sic docet nos Daniel apprehendere misericordiam in orando, hoc est, confidere misericordia Dei, non confidere nostris [211] meritis coram Deo. Et miramur, quid agant in precatione adversarii, si tamen homines profani unquam aliquid a Deo petunt. Si commemorant se dignos esse, quia dilectionem et bona opera habeant, et reposcunt gratiam tamquam debitam, perinde orant ut Phariseae apud Lucam, cap. 18, 11, qui ait: Non sum sicut ceteri homines. Qui sic petit gratiam, nec [R. 131] nititur misericordia Dei, iniuria afficit Christum, qui, quum sit pontifex noster, interpellat pro [212] nobis. Sic igitur nititur oratio misericordia Dei, quando credimus nos propter Christum pontificem exaudiri, sicut ipse ait Ioh. 14, 13: Quidquid petieritis Patrem in nomine meo, dabit vobis. In nomine meo, inquit, quia sine hoc pontifice non possumus accedere ad Patrem.

Hier wollen aber alle Verständigen sehen, was aus der Widersacher Lehre folgen mochte. Denn so wir halten werden, daß Christus allein uns primam gratiam, das ist, die erste Gnade, verdient hätte (wie sie es nennen), und wir hernach durch unsere Werke erst das ewige Leben müßten verdienen, so werden die Herzen oder Gewissen weder an [in] der Todesstunde noch sonst nimmermehr zufrieden werden, werden nimmermehr bauen können auf gewissen Grund, werden nimmer gewiß, ob uns Gott gnädig wäre. Also führt ihre Lehre die Gewissen ohne Unterlaß auf eitel Herzeleid und endlich auf Verzweiflung. Denn Gottes Gesetz ist nicht ein Eherz; das klagt die Gewissen an außer Christo ohne Unterlaß, wie Paulus sagt Röm. 4, 15: „Das Gesetz richtet Zorn an.“ Also dann, wenn die Gewissen Gottes Urteil fühlen und haben keinen gewissen Trost, fallen sie dahin in Verzweiflung.

Paulus sagt Röm. 14, 23: „Alles, was nicht aus dem Glauben ist, das ist Sünde.“ Diejenigen aber können nichts aus Glauben tun, die dann sollen einen gnädigen Gott erst bekommen, wenn sie mit ihren Werken das Gesetz erfüllt haben. Denn sie werden allezeit wanken und zweifeln, ob sie Werke genug getan haben, ob dem Gesetz genug geschehen sei. Ja, sie werden stark fühlen und empfinden, daß sie noch dem Gesetz schuldig seien; darum werden sie nimmermehr bei sich gewiß halten, daß sie einen gnädigen Gott haben, oder daß ihr Gebet erhört werde. Derhalben können sie Gott nimmer recht lieben, auch nichts Gutes sich zu Gott versehen oder Gott recht dienen. Denn was sind doch solche Herzen und Gewissen anders denn die Hölle selbst, so nichts anderes in solchen Herzen ist denn eitel Zweifeln, eitel Verzagen, eitel Murren, Verdrüß und Haß wider Gott. Und in dem Haß rufen sie doch gleichwohl Gott heuchlerisch an, wie der gottlose König Saul tat.

Hier können wir uns berufen auf alle Christlichen Gewissen und alle diejenigen, die Anfechtungen ver suchen haben; die müssen bekennen und sagen, daß solche große Ungewißheit, solche Unruhe, solche Qual und Angst, solch schredlich Zagen und Verzweiflung aus solcher Lehre der Widersacher folgt, da sie lehren oder wähnen, daß wir durch unsere Werke oder Erfüllung des Gesetzes, so wir tun, vor Gott gerecht werden, und weisen uns den Holzweg, zu vertrauen nicht auf die reichen, seligen Zusagungen der Gnade, welche uns durch den Mittler Christum werden angeboten, sondern auf unsere elenden Werke.

Darum bleibt dieser Beschluß wie eine Mauer, ja wie ein Fels feststehen, daß wir, ob wir schon angefangen haben, das Gesetz zu tun, dennoch nicht um solcher Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen durch den Glauben Gott angenehm sind und mit Gott Frieden haben, und ist uns Gott für dieselben Werke nicht schuldig das ewige Leben, sondern gleichwie uns Vergebung der Sünden und Gerechtigkeit um Christus' willen, nicht um unserer Werke oder des Gesetzes willen, wird zugerechnet, also wird uns auch nicht um unserer Werke willen noch um des Gesetzes willen, sondern um Christus' willen samt der Gerechtigkeit ewiges Leben angeboten, wie denn Christus sagt Joh. 6, 40: „Das ist der Wille des Vaters, der mich gesandt hat, daß ein jeglicher, der den Sohn sieht und glaubet an ihn, habe das ewige Leben“; item V. 47: „Der da glaubet in den Sohn, hat das ewige Leben.“

Nun find hier wohl die Widersacher zu fragen, was sie doch den armen Gewissen in der Todesstunde für Rat geben; ob sie die Gewissen verträsten, daß sie sollen wohl fahren, selig werden, einen gnädigen Gott haben um ihres eigenen Verdienstes willen oder aus Gottes Gnade und Barmherzigkeit um a reciprocal relation, and that the promise is not apprehended unless by faith, so we here say that the promised mercy correlatively requires faith, and cannot be apprehended without faith. Therefore we justly find fault with the doctrine concerning meritum condigni, since it teaches nothing of justifying faith, and obscures the glory and office of Christ as Mediator. Nor should we be regarded as teaching anything new in this matter, since the Church Fathers have so clearly handed down the doctrine that even in good works we need mercy.

Scripture also often inculcates the same. In Ps. 143, 2: And enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. This passage denies absolutely, even to all saints and servants of God, the glory of righteousness, if God does not forgive, but judges and convicts their hearts. For when David boasts in other places of his righteousness, he speaks concerning his own cause against the persecutors of God's Word; he does not speak of his personal purity; and he asks that the cause and glory of God be defended, as in Ps. 7, 8: Judge me, O Lord, according to Thy righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me. Likewise in Ps. 130, 3, he says that no one can endure God's judgment, if God were to mark our sins: If Thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Job 9, 28: I am afraid of all my sorrows [VULG., opera, works]; v. 30: If I wash myself with snow-water, and make my hands never so clean, yet Thou shalt plunge me in the ditch. Prov. 20, 9: Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? 1 John 1, 8: If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us, etc. And in the Lord's Prayer the saints ask for the remission of sins. Therefore even the saints have sins. Num. 14, 18: The innocent shall not be innocent [cf. Ex. 34, 7]. Deut. 4, 24: The Lord, thy God, is a consuming fire. Zechariah also says, 2, 13: Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord. Is. 40, 6: All flesh is as grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field; the grass withereth, the flower fadeth, because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it, i. e., flesh and righteousness of the flesh cannot endure the judgment of God. Jonah also says, chap. 2, 8: They that observe flying vanities forsake their own mercy, i. e., all confidence is vain, except confidence in mercy; mercy delivers us; our own merits, our own efforts, do not. Accordingly, Daniel also prays, 9, 18 sq.: For we do not present our supplications before Thee for our righteousnesses, but for Thy great mercies. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do it; defer not for Thine own sake, O my God; for Thy city and Thy people are called by Thy name. Thus Daniel teaches us in praying to lay hold upon mercy, i. e., to trust in God's mercy, and not to trust in our own merits before God. We also wonder what our adversaries do in prayer, if, indeed, the profane men ever ask anything of God. If they declare that they are worthy because they have love and good works, and ask for grace as a debt, they pray precisely like the Pharisee in Luke 18, 11, who says: I am not as other men are. He who thus prays for grace, and does not rely upon God's mercy, treats Christ with dishonor, who, since He is our High Priest, intercedes for us. Thus, therefore, prayer relies upon God's mercy, when we believe that we are heard for the sake of Christ, the High Priest, as He Himself says, John 14, 13: Whosoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you. In My name, He says, because without this High Priest we cannot approach the Father.

[All prudent men will see what follows from the opinion of the adversaries. For if we shall believe that Christ has merited only the prima gratia, as they call it, and that we afterwards merit eternal life by our works, hearts or consciences will be pacified neither at the hour of death, nor at any other time, nor can they ever build upon certain ground; they are never certain that God is gracious. Thus their doctrine unintermittingly leads to nothing but misery of soul and, finally, to despair. For God's Law is not a matter of pleasantry; it ceaselessly accuses consciences outside of Christ, as Paul says, Rom. 4, 15: The Law worketh wrath. Thus it will happen that if consciences feel the judgment of God, they have no certain comfort and will rush into despair.

Paul says: Whosoever is not of faith is sin, Rom. 14, 23. But those persons can do nothing from faith who are first to attain to this that God is gracious to them only when they have at length fulfilled the Law. They will always quake with doubt whether they have done enough good works, whether the Law has been satisfied, yea, they will keenly feel and understand that they are still under obligation to the Law. Accordingly, they will never be sure that they have a gracious God, and that their prayer is heard. Therefore they can never truly love God, nor expect any blessing from Him, nor truly worship God. What else are such hearts and consciences than hell itself, since there is nothing in them but despair, fainting away, grumbling, discontent, and hatred of God, and yet in this hatred they invoke and worship God, just as Saul worshiped Him.

Here we appeal to all Christian minds and to all that are experienced in trials; they will be forced to confess and say that such great uncertainty, such disquietude, such torture and anxiety, such horrible fear and doubt follow from this teaching of the adversaries who imagine that we are accounted righteous before God by our own works or fulfilling of the Law which we perform, and point us to Queer Street by bidding us trust not in the rich, blessed promises of Grace, given us by Christ the Mediator, but in our own miserable works. Therefore, this conclusion stands like a rock, yea, like a wall, namely, that, although we have begun to do the Law, still we are accepted with God and at peace with Him, not on account of such works of ours, Christus' willen. Denn St. Peter, St. Paul und dergleichen Heilige können nicht rühmen, daß ihnen Gott für ihre Marter das ewige Leben schuldig sei, haben auch nicht auf ihre Werke vertraut, sondern auf die Barmherzigkeit, in Christo verheißen.

Und es wäre auch nicht möglich, daß ein Heiliger, wie groß und hoch er ist, wider das Anklagen göttliches Gesetzes, wider die große Macht des Teufels, wider die Schreden des Todes und endlich wider die Verzweiflung und Angst der Hölle sollte bleiben oder bestehen können, wenn er nicht die göttliche Zusage, das Evangelium, wie einen Baum oder Zweig ergriffe in der großen Flut, in dem starken, gewaltigen Strome, unter den Wellen und Vulgen [Wogen] der Todesangst, wenn er nicht durch den Glauben sich an das Wort, welches Gnade verkündigt, hielte, und also ohne alle Werke, ohne Gesetz, lauter aus Gnaden, das ewige Leben erlangte. Denn diese Lehre allein erhält die christlichen Gewissen in Ansehungungen und Todesängsten, von welchen die Widersacher nichts wissen und reden davon wie der Blinde von der Farbe.

Hier werden sie aber sagen: So wir aus lauter Barmherzigkeit sollen selig werden, was ist dann für ein Unterschied unter denen, die da selig werden, und die da nicht selig werden? Gilt kein Verdienst, so ist kein Unterschied unter Bösen und Guten und folgt, daß sie zugleich selig werden. Das Argument hat die Scholastiker bewegt, daß sie haben erfunden das meritum condigni; denn es muß ein Unterschied unter denen sein, die da selig werden, und die verdammt werden.

Für das erste aber sagen wir, daß das ewige Leben gehöre denen, die Gott gerecht schätzt, und wenn sie sind gerecht geschätzt, sind sie damit Gottes Kinder und Christi Miterben geworden, wie Paulus zu den Römern am 8, 30 sagt: „Welche er hat gerecht gemacht, die hat er auch herrlich gemacht.“ Darum wird niemand selig denn allein, die da glauben dem Evangelio. Wie aber unsere Versöhnung gegen Gott ungewiß [wäre], wenn sie sollte auf unsern Werken stehen und nicht auf Gottes gnädiger Verheißung, welche nicht fehlen kann, also auch wäre alles ungewiß, was wir durch die Hoffnung erwarten, wenn sie sollte gebaut sein auf unser Verdienst und Werke. Denn Gottes Gesetz klagt das Gewissen an ohne Unterlaß, und [wir] fühlen im Herzen nichts anderes denn diese Stimme aus der Wolke und Feuerflammen, Deut. am 5, 6 ff.: „Ich bin der Herr, dein Gott; das sollst du tun, das bist du schuldig, das will ich haben“ usw. Und kein Gewissen kann Ruhe haben einen Augenblick, wenn das Gesetz und Moses im Herzen drängt, ehe es Christum ergreift durch den Glauben. Es kann auch nicht recht hoffen das ewige Leben, es sei denn erst zur Ruhe [gekommen]. Denn ein Gewissen, das da zweifelt, das flieht vor Gott und verzweifelt und kann nicht hoffen. Nun muß aber die Hoffnung des ewigen Lebens gewiß sein. Damit sie nun nicht wankte, sondern gewiß sei, so müssen wir glauben, daß wir das ewige Leben haben nicht durch unsere Werke oder Verdienst, sondern aus lauter Gnade, durch den Glauben an Christum.

In Weltthändeln und in den weltlichen Gerichtsstühlen, da ist zweierlei, Gnade und Recht. Recht ist durch die Gesetze und Urteil gewiß, Gnade ist ungewiß. Hier vor Gott ist's ein ander Ding; denn die Gnade und Barmherzigkeit ist durch ein gewiß Wort zugesagt, und das Evangelium ist das Wort, das uns gebietet zu glauben, daß uns Gott gnädig sei und selig machen wolle um Christus' willen, wie der Text lautet, Joh. 3, 17: „Gott hat seinen Sohn nicht in die Welt geschickt, daß er die Welt richte, sondern daß die Welt selig werde durch ihn. Wer in ihn glaubet, der wird nicht gerichtet.“

Sooft als man nun redet von Barmherzigkeit, so ist's also zu verstehen, daß Glaube gefordert wird, und derselbe Glaube, der macht den Unterschied unter denen, die selig, und unter denen, die verdammt werden, unter Würdigen und Unwürdigen. Denn das ewige Leben ist niemand zugesagt denn den Versöhnten in Christo. Der Glaube aber versöhnt und macht uns gerecht vor Gott, wenn und zu welcher Zeit wir die Zusage durch den Glauben ergreifen. Und das ganze Leben durch sollen wir Gott bitten und uns fleißigen, daß wir den Glauben bekommen und in dem Glauben zunehmen. Denn, wie oben gesagt ist, der Glaube ist, wo Buße ist, und ist nicht in denen, die nach dem Fleisch wandeln. Derselbe Glaube soll auch durch allerlei Ansehungungen das ganze Leben durch wachsen und zunehmen. Und welche den Glauben erlangen, die werden neugeboren, daß sie auch ein neu Leben führen und gute Werke tun.

Wie wir nun sagen, daß die rechte Buße soll das ganze Leben durch währen, also sagen wir auch, daß die guten Werke und Früchte des Glaubens das ganze Leben durch geschehen sollen; wiewohl unsere Werke nimmermehr so teuer werden, daß sie sollten dem Schätze Christi gleich sein oder das ewige Leben verdienen. Wie auch Christus sagt Luc. 17, 10: „Wenn ihr alles getan habt, so sprecht: Wir sind unnütze Knechte.“ Und St. Bernhardtus sagt recht: „Es ist not, und du mußt erst glauben, daß du Vergebung der Sünden nicht haben kannst denn allein durch Gottes Gnade, und danach, daß du auch sonst hernach kein gut Werk haben und tun kannst, wenn Gott dir's nicht gibt; endlich, daß du das ewige Leben mit keinen Werken verdienen kannst, wenn dir dasselbe auch nicht ohne Verdienst gegeben wird.“ Und bald hernach: „Niemand wolle sich selbst verführen; denn wenn du würdest recht die Sache bedenken, so würdest du ohne Zweifel finden, daß du mit zehntausend nicht kannst entgegenkommen dem, der dir mit zwanzigtausend begegnet“ usw. Das sind je starke Sprüche St. Bernhards; sie möchten doch denselben glauben, ob sie uns nicht glauben wollten. [Im Original lauten Bernhards Worte, die auch in die Octavausgabe der Apologie von 1531 Aufnahme fanden, also: „Necesse est primo credere, quod remissionem peccatorum habere non possis nisi per indulgentiam Dei. Deinde, quod nihil prorsus habere queas operis boni, nisi et hoc dederit ipse. Postremo, quod aeternam vitam nullis possis operibus promereri, nisi gratis detur et illa. Nemo itaque se seducat, quia, si bene cogitare voluerit, inveniet procul dubio, quod nec cum decem millibus possit occurrere ei, qui cum viginti millibus venit ad se.“] but for Christ's sake by faith; nor does God owe us everlasting life on account of these works. But just as forgiveness of sin and righteousness is imputed to us for Christ's sake, not on account of our works, or the Law, so everlasting life, together with righteousness, is offered us, not on account of our works, or of the Law, but for Christ's sake, as Christ says, John 6, 40: This is the Father's will that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life. Again, v. 47: He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life. Now, the adversaries should be asked at this point what advice they give to poor consciences in the hour of death: whether they comfort consciences by telling them that they will have a blessed departure, that they will be saved, and have a propitiated God, because of their own merits, or because of God's grace and mercy for Christ's sake. For St. Peter, St. Paul, and saints like them cannot boast that God owes them eternal life for their martyrdom, nor have they relied on their works, but on the mercy promised in Christ.

Nor would it be possible that a saint, great and high though he be, could make a firm stand against the accusations of the divine Law, the great might of the devil, the terror of death, and, finally, against despair and the anguish of hell, if he would not grasp the divine promises, the Gospel, as a tree or branch in the great flood, in the strong, violent stream, amidst the waves and billows of the anguish of death; if he does not cling by faith to the Word, which proclaims grace, and thus obtains eternal life without works, without the Law, from pure grace. For this doctrine alone preserves Christian consciences in afflictions and anguish of death. Of these things the adversaries know nothing, and talk of them like a blind man about color.

Here they will say: If we are to be saved by pure mercy, what difference is there between those who are saved, and those who are not saved? If merit is of no account, there is no difference between the evil and the good, and it follows that both are saved alike. This argument has moved the scholastics to invent the meritum condigni; for there must be (they think) a difference between those who are saved, and those who are damned.

We reply, in the first place, that everlasting life is accorded to those whom God esteems just, and when they have been esteemed just, they are become, by that act, the children of God and coheirs of Christ, as Paul says, Rom. 8, 30: Whom He justified, them He also glorified. Hence nobody is saved except only those who believe the Gospel. But as our reconciliation with God is uncertain if it is to rest on our works, and not on the gracious promise of God, which cannot fail, so, too, all that we expect by hope would be uncertain if it must be built on the foundation of our merits and works. For the Law of God ceaselessly accuses the conscience, and men feel in their hearts nothing but this voice from the fiery, flaming cloud: I am the Lord, thy God; this thou shalt do; that thou art obliged to do; this I require of thee. Deut. 5, 6 ff. No conscience can for a moment be at rest when the Law and Moses assails the heart, before it apprehends Christ by faith. Nor can it truly hope for eternal life, unless it be pacified before. For a doubting conscience flees from God, despairs, and cannot hope. However, hope of eternal life must be certain. Now, in order that it may not be fickle, but certain, we must believe that we have eternal life, not by our works or merits, but from pure grace, by faith in Christ.

In secular affairs and in secular courts we meet with both, mercy and justice. Justice is certain by the laws and the verdict rendered; mercy is uncertain. In this matter that relates to God the case is different; for grace and mercy have been promised us by a certain word, and the Gospel is the word which commands us to believe that God is gracious and wishes to save us for Christ's sake, as the text reads, John 3, 17: God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved. He that believeth on Him is not condemned.

Now, whenever we speak of mercy, the meaning is to be this, that faith is required, and it is this faith that makes the difference between those who are saved, and those who are damned, between those who are worthy, and those who are unworthy. For everlasting life has been promised to none but those who have been reconciled by Christ. Faith, however, reconciles and justifies before God the moment we apprehend the promise by faith. And throughout our entire life we are to pray God and be diligent, to receive faith and to grow in faith. For, as stated before, faith is where repentance is, and it is not in those who walk after the flesh. This faith is to grow and increase throughout our life by all manner of afflictions. Those who obtain faith are regenerated, so that they lead a new life and do good works.

Now, just as we say that true repentance is to endure throughout our entire life, we say, too, that good works and the fruits of faith must be done throughout our life, although our works never become so precious as to be equal to the treasure of Christ, or to merit eternal life, as Christ says, Luke 17, 10: When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants. And St. Bernard truly says: There is need that you must first believe that you cannot have forgiveness of sin except by the grace of God; next, that thereafter you cannot have and do any good work, unless God grants it to you; lastly, that you cannot earn eternal life with your works, though it is not given you without merit. A little further on he says: Let no one deceive himself; for when you rightly consider the matter, you will undoubtedly find that you cannot meet with ten thousand him who approaches you with twenty thousand. These are strong sayings of St. Bernard; let them believe these if they will not believe us.

Darum, damit die Herzen einen rechten, gewissen Trost und Hoffnung haben mögen, so weisen wir sie, wie Paulus tut, auf die göttliche Zusage der Gnade in Christo und lehren, daß man müsse glauben, daß Gott nicht um unserer Werke, nicht um Erfüllung des Gesetzes willen, uns das ewige Leben gibt, sondern um Christus' willen; wie Johannes der Apostel in seiner Epistel spricht, 1 Joh. 5, 12: „Wer den Sohn hat, der hat das Leben; wer den Sohn nicht hat, der hat nicht das Leben.“

213] Huc pertinet et sententia Christi Luc. 17, 10: Quum feceritis omnia, quae praecepta sunt vobis, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus. Haec verba clare dicunt, quod Deus salvet per misericordiam et propter suam promissionem, non quod debeat propter dignitatem 214] operum nostrorum. Sed adversarii mirifice ludunt hic in verbis Christi. Primum faciunt ἀνιστορέων et in nos retorquent. Multo magis, inquit, dici posse: Si credideritis omnia, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus. Deinde addunt opera inutilia esse Deo, nobis 215] vero non esse inutilia. Videte, quam delectet adversarios puerile studium sophisticas. Et quamquam hae ineptiae indignae sint, quae refutentur, tamen paucis respondebimus. Ἀνιστορέων est vitiosum. Primum 216] enim decipiuntur adversarii in vocabulo fidei, quodsi significaret nobis notitiam illam historiae, quae etiam in impiis et diabolis est, recte ratiocinarentur adversarii fidem inutilem esse, quum dicunt: Quum credideritis omnia, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus. Sed nos non de notitia historiae, sed de fiducia promissionis et misericordiae Dei loquimur. Et haec fiducia promissionis fatetur nos esse servos inutiles, imo haec confessio, quod opera nostra sint indigna, est ipsa vox fidei, sicut apparet in hoc exemplo Danielis, 9, 18, quod paulo ante citavimus: Non in iustificationibus nostris prosternimus preces etc. Fides 217] enim salvat, quia apprehendit misericordiam seu promissionem gratiae, etiamsi nostra opera sint indigna. Et in hanc sententiam nihil laedit nos ἀνιστορέων: Quum credideritis omnia, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus, videlicet, quod opera nostra [R. 132] sint indigna; hoc enim cum tota ecclesia docemus, quod per misericordiam salvemur. 218] Sed si ex simili ratiocinari volunt: Quum feceris omnia, noli confidere operibus tuis, ita: Quum credideris omnia, noli confidere promissione divina: haec non cohaerent. Sunt enim dissimillima. Dissimiles causae, dissimilia obiecta fiduciae sunt in priore propositione et in posteriore. Fiducia in priore est fiducia nostrorum operum. Fiducia in posteriore est fiducia promissionis divinae. Christus autem damnat fiduciam nostrorum operum, non damnat fiduciam promissionis suae. Non vult nos de gratia et misericordia Dei desperare, arguit opera nostra tamquam indigna, 219] non arguit promissionem, quae gratis offert misericordiam. Et praeclare hic inquit Ambrosius: Agnosceda est gratia, sed non ignoranda natura. [Ambrosius, Tom. V, p. 131, Basilae 1567: „Sequitur, ut nemo in operibus gloriatur, quia iure Domino debemus obsequium. . . Si ergo tu non solum non dicis servo tuo: Recumbe, sed exis ab eo aliud ministerium et gratias ei non agis: ita nec in te patitur Dominus unius usum esse operis aut laboris, quia dum vivimus, debemus semper operari. Ergo agnosce te esse servum plurimis obsequiis defoeneratum. Non te praeferas, quia Filius Dei diceris: agnosceda gratia, sed non ignoranda natura (das natürliche, kreatürliche Verhältniß). Neque te iactes, si bene servisti, quod facere debuisti. Obsequitur sol, obtemperat luna, serviunt angeli. Vas gentium electus a Domino: non sum, inquit, dignus vocari apostolus, quia persecutus sum Ecclesiam Dei. Deinde alibi nullius se ostendens conscium culpae, subiecit; sed non in hoc iustificatus sum. Et nos ergo non a nobis laudem exigamus, nec praecipiamus iudicium Dei, et praeveniamus sententiam Iudicis, sed suo tempori, suo Iudici reservemus.“] Promissioni gratiae confidendum est, non 220] naturae nostrae. Sed adversarii suo more faciunt, contra fidei doctrinam detorquent 221] sententias pro fide traditas. Verum haec spinosa reiiciamus ad scholas. Illa cavillatio Hier haben die Widersacher ihre große Kunst trefflich bewiesen und den Spruch Christi verkehrt: „Wenn ihr alles getan habt, so sprecht: Wir sind unnütze Knechte.“ Ziehen ihn von Werken auf Glauben, sagen vielmehr, wenn wir alles glauben, sind wir unnütze Knechte. Das sind je schändliche Sophisten, die die tröstliche Lehre vom Glauben so gar verkehren. Sagt, ihr Efel, wenn einer da liegt am Tode und fühlt, daß er kein Werk hat, das vor Gottes Gericht genug sei, und kann auf kein Werk vertrauen, was wollt ihr demselben raten? Wollt ihr ihm auch sagen: Wenn du schon glaubst, so bist du doch ein unnützer Knecht, und hilfst dir nichts? Da muß das arme Gewissen in Verzweiflung fallen, wenn es nicht weiß, daß das Evangelium den Glauben eben darum fordert, die weil wir untüchtige Knechte sind und nicht Verdienst haben. Darum soll man sich hüten vor den Sophisten, so die Worte Christi also lästerlich verkehren. Denn es folgt nicht: Die Werke helfen nicht, darum hilfst der Glaube auch nicht. Wir müssen den groben Eseln ein grob Exempel geben. Es folgt nicht: Der Heller hilfst nicht, darum hilfst der Gulden auch nicht. Also, wie der Gulden viel höher und stärker ist denn der Heller, soll man verstehen, daß Glaube viel höher und stärker ist denn Werke. Nicht, daß Glaube helfe um seiner Würdigkeit willen, sondern darum, daß er auf Gottes Verheißung und Barmherzigkeit vertraut. Glaube ist stark, nicht um seiner Würdigkeit willen, sondern von wegen der göttlichen Verheißung. Und darum verbietet Christus hier vertrauen auf eigene Werke; denn sie können nicht helfen. Dagegen verbietet er nicht vertrauen auf Gottes Verheißung. Ja, er fordert dasselbe Vertrauen auf Gottes Verheißung eben darum, die weil wir untüchtige Knechte sind und die Werke nicht helfen können. Deshalb ziehen die Bösewichter die Worte Christi unrecht von Vertrauen eigener Würdigkeit auf Vertrauen göttlicher Zusage. Damit ist ihre Sophisterei klar verlegt [widerlegt] und aufgelöst. Der Herr Christus wolle die Sophisten, so sein heiliges Wort also zerreißen, bald zuschanden machen! Amen.

In order, then, that hearts may have a true, certain comfort and hope, we point them, with Paul, to the divine promise of grace in Christ, and teach that we must believe that God gives us eternal life, not on account of our works, but for Christ's sake, as the Apostle John says in his Epistle, I, 5, 12: He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.]

Here belongs also the declaration of Christ, Luke 17, 10: So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants. These words clearly declare that God saves by mercy and on account of His promise, not that it is due on account of the value of our works. But at this point the adversaries play wonderfully with the words of Christ. In the first place, they make an antistrophe and turn it against us. Much more, they say, can it be said: "If we have believed all things, say, We are unprofitable servants." Then they add that works are of no profit to God, but are not without profit to us. See how the puerile study of sophistry delights the adversaries, and although these absurdities do not deserve a refutation, nevertheless we will reply to them in a few words. The antistrophe is defective. For, in the first place, the adversaries are deceived in regard to the term faith; because, if it would signify that knowledge of the history which is also in the wicked and in devils, the adversaries would be correct in arguing that faith is unprofitable when they say: "When we have believed all things, say, We are unprofitable servants." But we are speaking, not of the knowledge of the history, but of confidence in the promise and mercy of God. And this confidence in the promise confesses that we are unprofitable servants; yea, this confession that our works are unworthy is the very voice of faith, as appears in this example of Daniel, 9, 18, which we cited a little above: We do not present our supplications before Thee for our righteousnesses, etc. For faith saves because it apprehends mercy, or the promise of grace, even though our works are unworthy; and, thus understood, namely, that our works are unworthy, the antistrophe does not injure us: "When ye shall have believed all things, say, We are unprofitable servants"; for that we are saved by mercy, we teach with the entire Church. But if they mean to argue from the similar: When you have done all things, do not trust in your works, so also, when you have believed all things, do not trust in the divine promise, there is no connection. [The inference is wrong: "Works do not help; therefore, faith also does not help." We must give the uncultured men a homely illustration: It does not follow that because a half-farthing does not help, therefore a florin also does not help. Just as the florin is of much higher denomination and value than the half-farthing, so also should it be understood that faith is much higher and more efficacious than works. Not that faith helps because of its worth, but because it trusts in God's promises and mercy.

Faith is strong, not because of its worthiness, but because of the divine promise.] For they are very dissimilar, as the causes and objects of confidence in the former proposition are far dissimilar to those of the latter. In the former, confidence is confidence in our own works. In the latter, confidence is confidence in the divine promise. Christ, however, condemns confidence in our works; He does not condemn confidence in His promise. He does not wish us to despair of God's grace and mercy. He accuses our works as unworthy, but does not accuse the promise which freely offers mercy. And here Ambrose says well: Grace is to be acknowledged; but nature must not be disregarded. We must trust in the promise of grace and not in our own nature. But the adversaries act in accordance with their custom, and distort, against faith, the judgments which have been given on behalf of faith. [Hence, Christ in this place forbids men to trust in their own works; for they cannot help them. On the other hand, He does not forbid to trust in God's promise. Yea, He requires such trust in the promise of God for the very reason that we are unprofitable servants and works can be of no help. Therefore, the knaves have improperly applied to our trust in the divine promise the words of Christ which treat of trust in our own worthiness. This clearly reveals and defeats their sophistry. May the Lord Christ soon put to shame the sophists who thus mutilate His holy Word! Amen.] We leave, however, these thorny points to the schools. The sophistry is plainly puerile when they interpret "unprofitable servant," as meaning that the works are unprofitable to God, but are profitable to us. Yet Christ speaks concerning that profit which makes God a debtor of grace to us, although it is out of place to discuss here concerning that which is profitable or unprofitable. For "unprofitable servants" means "insufficient," because no one fears God as much, and loves God as much, and believes God as much as he ought. But let us dismiss these frigid cavils of the adversaries, concerning which, plane puerilis est, quum interpretantur servos inutiles, quia opera Deo sint inutilia, nobis vero sint utilia. At Christus de ea utilitate loquitur, quae constituit nobis Deum debitorem gratiae. Quamquam alienum est hoc loco disputare de utili aut inutili. Nam servi inutiles significant insufficientes, quia nemo tantum timet, tantum diligit Deum, tantum credit Deo, 222] quantum oportuit. Sed missas faciamus has frigidas cavillationes adversariorum, de quibus quid iudicaturi sint homines, si quando proferentur in lucem, facile possunt existimare viri prudentes. In verbis maxime planis et perspicuis repperunt rimam. At nemo non videt, in illo loco fiduciam nostrorum operum improbari.

223] Teneamus igitur hoc, quod ecclesia confitetur, quod per misericordiam salvemur. [R. 133 Et ne quis hic cogitet: Si per misericordiam salvandi sumus, incerta spes erit, si nihil praecedit in his, quibus contingit salus, quo discernantur ab illis, quibus non contingit: huic satisfaciendum est. Scholastici enim videntur hac ratione moti quaevisse meritum condigni. 224] Nam haec ratio valde potest exercere humanum animum. Breviter igitur respondemus. Ideo ut sit certa spes, ideo ut sit praecedens discrimen inter hos, quibus contingit, et illos, quibus non contingit salus, necesse est constituere, quod per misericordiam salvemur. Hoc, quum ita nude dicitur, absurdum videtur. Nam in foro et iudiciis humanis ius seu debitum certum est, misericordia incerta. Sed alia res est de iudicio Dei. Hic enim misericordia habet claram et certam promissionem et mandatum Dei. Nam evangelium proprie hoc mandatum est, quod praecipit, ut credamus Deum nobis propitium esse propter Christum. Non misit Deus Filium suum in mundum, ut iudicet mundum, sed ut salvetur mundus per ipsum. Qui 225] credit in eum, non iudicatur etc., Ioh. 3, 17. 18. Quoties igitur de misericordia dicitur, addenda est fides promissionis. Et haec fides parit certam spem, quia nititur Verbo et mandato Dei. Si spes niteretur operibus, tunc vero esset incerta, quia opera non possunt pacare 226] conscientiam, ut supra saepe dictum est. Et haec fides facit discrimen inter hos, quibus contingit salus, et illos, quibus non contingit. Fides facit discrimen inter dignos et indignos, quia vita aeterna promissa est iustificatis, fides autem iustificat.

227] Sed hic iterum clamitabunt adversarii, nihil opus esse bonis operibus, si non merentur vitam aeternam. Has calumnias supra refutavimus. Imo vero necesse est bene operari. Iustificatis dicimus promissam esse vitam aeternam. At nec fidem nec iustitiam retinent illi, [R. 134 qui ambulant secundum carnem. Ideo iustificamur, ut iusti bene operari et obedire legi Dei 228] incipiamus. Ideo regeneramur et Spiritum Sanctum accipimus, ut nova vita habeat nova 229] opera, novos affectus, timorem, dilectionem Dei, odium concupiscentiae etc. Haec fides, de qua loquimur, existit in poenitentia, et inter bona opera, inter tentationes et pericula confirmari et crescere debet, ut subinde certius apud nos statuamus, quod Deus propter Christum respiciat nos, ignoret nobis, exaudiat nos. Haec non discuntur sine magnis et multis certaminibus. Quoties recurrit conscientia, quoties sollicitat ad desperationem, quum ostendit aut vetera peccata aut nova aut immunditiam naturae! Hoc chirographum non deletur sine magno 230] agone, ubi testatur experientia, quam difficilis res sit fides. Et dum inter terrores erigimur et consolationem concipimus, simul crescunt alii motus spirituales, notitia Dei, timor Dei, spes, dilectio Dei, et regeneramur, ut ait Paulus Col. 3, 10 et 2 Cor. 3, 18, ad agnitionem Dei, et intuentes gloriam Domini transformamur in eandem imaginem, id est, concipimus veram no- 231] titiam Dei, ut vere timeamus eum, vere confidamus nos respici, nos exaudiri. Haec regeneratio est quasi inchoatio aeternae vitae, ut Paulus ait Rom. 8, 10: Si Christus in vobis 232] est, spiritus vivit, corpus autem mortuum est etc. Et 2 Cor. 5, 2. 3: Superinduemur, si tamen induti, non nudi reperiemur. Ex his iudicare candidus lector potest, nos maxime requirere bona opera, siquidem hanc fidem docemus in poenitentia existere et debere subinde crescere in poenitentia. Et in his rebus perfectionem Christianam et spiritualem ponimus, si simul crescant poenitentia et fides in poenitentia. Haec intelligi melius a piis possunt, quam 233] quae de contemplatione aut perfectione apud adversarios docentur. Sicut autem iustificatio ad fidem pertinet, ita pertinet ad fidem vita aeterna. Et Petrus ait 1 Petr. 1, 9: Reportantes finem seu fructum fidei vestrae, salutem animarum. Fatentur enim adversarii, [R. 135 234] quod iustificati sint filii Dei et coheredes Christi. Postea opera, quia placent Deo propter fidem, merentur alia praemia corporalia et spiritualia. Erunt enim discrimina gloriae sanctorum.

235] Sed hic reclamant adversarii, vitam aeternam vocari mercedem, quare necesse sit eam de condigno mereri per bona opera. Breviter et plane respondemus. Paulus Rom. 6, 23 vitam aeternam donum appellat, quia donata iustitia propter Christum simul efficitur filii Dei et coheredes Christi, sicut ait Iohannes 3, 36: Qui credit in Filium, habet vitam aeternam. Et Augustinus inquit, et hunc secuti alii multi idem dixerunt: Dona sua coronat Deus in nobis. Alibi vero, Luc. 6, 23, scriptum est: Mercēs vestra copiosa erit in coelis. Haec si videntur adversariis 236] pugnare, ipsi expediant. Sed parum aequi iudices sunt, nam doni vocabulum omit-

Die Widersacher aber wollen beweisen, daß wir das ewige Leben mit Werken verdienen de condigno, damit, daß das ewige Leben wird genannt ein Lohn. Wir wollen darauf kurz und richtig antworten. Paulus nennt das ewige Leben ein Geschenk und Gabe; denn wenn wir durch den Glauben gerecht werden, so werden wir Gottes Söhne und Miterben Christi. An einem andern Ort aber steht geschrieben: „Euer Lohn ist reichlich im Himmel.“ Wenn nun die Widersacher dünkt, daß dieses widereinander sei, so mögen sie es ausrichten. Sie tun, wie sie pflegen: sie lassen das Wort donum außen und lassen allenthalben außen das Hauptstück, wie wir vor Gott gerecht werden, item, daß Christus allezeit der Mittler if at any time they are brought to the light, prudent men will easily decide what they should judge. They have found a flaw in words which are very plain and clear. But every one sees that in this passage confidence in our own works is condemned.

Let us, therefore, hold fast to this which the Church confesses, namely, that we are saved by mercy. And lest any one may here think: "If we are to be saved by mercy, hope will be uncertain, if in those who obtain salvation nothing precedes by which they may be distinguished from those who do not obtain it," we must give him a satisfactory answer. For the scholastics, moved by this reason, seem to have devised the meritum condigni. For this consideration can greatly exercise the human mind. We will therefore reply briefly. For the very reason that hope may be sure, for the very reason that there may be an antecedent distinction between those who obtain salvation, and those who do not obtain it, it is necessary firmly to hold that we are saved by mercy. When this is expressed thus unqualifiedly, it seems absurd. For in civil courts and in human judgment, that which is of right or of debt is certain, and mercy is uncertain. But the matter is different with respect to God's judgment; for here mercy has a clear and certain promise and command from God. For the Gospel is properly that command which enjoins us to believe that God is propitious to us for Christ's sake. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved, John 3, 17, 18. As often, therefore, as mercy is spoken of, faith in the promise must be added; and this faith produces sure hope, because it relies upon the Word and command of God. If hope would rely upon works, then, indeed, it would be uncertain, because works cannot pacify the conscience, as has been said above frequently. And this faith makes a distinction between those who obtain salvation, and those who do not obtain it. Faith makes the distinction between the worthy and the unworthy, because eternal life has been promised to the justified; and faith justifies.

But here again the adversaries will cry out that there is no need of good works if they do not merit eternal life. These calumnies we have refuted above. Of course, it is necessary to do good works. We say that eternal life has been promised to the justified. But those who walk according to the flesh retain neither faith nor righteousness. We are for this very end justified, that, being righteous, we may begin to do good works and to obey God's Law. We are regenerated and receive the Holy Ghost for the very end that the new life may produce new works, new dispositions, the fear and love of God, hatred of concupiscence, etc. This faith of which we speak arises in repentance, and ought to be established and grow in the midst of good works, temptations, and dangers, so that we may continually be the more firmly persuaded that God for Christ's sake cares for us, forgives us, hears us. This is not learned without many and great struggles. How often is conscience aroused, how often does it incite even to despair when it brings to view sins, either old or new, or the impurity of our nature! This handwriting is not blotted out without a great struggle, in which experience testifies what a difficult matter faith is. And while we are cheered in the midst of the terrors and receive consolation, other spiritual movements at the same time grow, the knowledge of God, fear of God, hope, love of God; and we are regenerated, as Paul says, Col. 3, 10 and 2 Cor. 3, 18, in the knowledge of God, and, beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, i. e., we receive the true knowledge of God, so that we truly fear Him, truly trust that we are cared for, and that we are heard by Him. This regeneration is, as it were, the beginning of eternal life, as Paul says, Rom. 8, 10: If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. And 2 Cor. 5, 2, 3: We are clothed upon, if so be that, being clothed, we shall not be found naked. From these statements the candid reader can judge that we certainly require good works, since we teach that this faith arises in repentance, and in repentance ought continually to increase; and in these matters we place Christian and spiritual perfection, if repentance and faith grow together in repentance. This can be better understood by the godly than those things which are taught by the adversaries concerning contemplation or perfection. Just as, however, justification pertains to faith, so also life eternal pertains to faith. And Peter says, 1 Pet. 1, 9: Receiving the end, or fruit, of your faith, the salvation of your souls. For the adversaries confess that the justified are children of God and coheirs of Christ. Afterwards works, because on account of faith they please God, merit other bodily and spiritual rewards. For there will be distinctions in the glory of the saints.

But here the adversaries reply that eternal life is called a reward, and that therefore it is merited de condigno by good works. We reply briefly and plainly: Paul, Rom. 6, 23, calls eternal life a gift, because by the righteousness presented for Christ's sake, we are made at the same time sons of God and coheirs of Christ, as John says, 3, 36: He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life. And Augustine says, as also do very many others who follow him: God crowns His gifts in us. Elsewhere indeed, Luke 6, 23, it is written: Your reward is great in heaven. If these passages seem to the adversaries to conflict, they themselves may explain them. But they are not fair judges; for they omit the word gift. They omit also the sources of the entire matter [the chief part, how we are justified before God, also that Christ remains at all times the Mediator], and they select the word reward, and most harshly interpret this not only against Scripture, but also against the usage of the language. Hence they infer that inasmuch as it is called a reward, our works, therefore, are such that tunt et fontes totius negotii, et excerpunt vocabulum mercedis idque acerbissime interpretantur non solum contra Scripturam, sed etiam contra sermonis consuetudinem. Hinc ratiocinantur, quia merces nominatur, igitur opera nostra sunt eiusmodi, quae debeant esse pretium, pro quo debetur vita aeterna. Sunt igitur digna gratia et vita aeterna, nec indigent misericordia aut mediatore Christo 237] aut fide. Plane nova est haec dialectica: vocabulum audimus mercedis, igitur nihil opus est mediatore Christo aut fide habente accessum ad Deum propter Christum, non propter opera nostra. Quis non 238] videt haec esse ἀναλόγητα? Nos non rixamur de vocabulo mercedis. De hac re litigamus, utrum bona opera per se sint digna gratia et vita aeterna, an vero placeant tantum propter fidem, quae apprehendit mediatorum 239] torem Christum. Adversarii nostri non solum hoc tribuunt operibus, quod sint digna gratia et vita aeterna, sed fingunt etiam, quod merita supersint sibi, quae donare aliis [R. 138 et iustificare alios queant, ut quum monachi suorum ordinum merita vendunt aliis. Haec portenta Chrysippeo more coacervant, hac una voce mercedis audita: Merces appellatur, igitur habemus opera, quae sunt pretium, pro quo debetur merces; igitur opera per sese, non propter mediatorem Christum placent. Et quum alius alio plura habeat merita, igitur quibusdam supersunt merita. Et haec merita donare aliis possunt isti, qui merentur. 240] tur. Mane lector, nondum habes totum huius donationis, mortuis induitur cucullus etc. talibus coacervationibus beneficium Christi et iustitia fidei obscurata sunt.

241] Non movemus inanem λογισμὸν de vocabulo mercedis. Si concedent adversarii, quod fide propter Christum iusti reputemur, et quod bona opera propter fidem placeant Deo, de nomine mercedis postea non valde rixabimur. Nos fatemur vitam aeternam mercedem esse, quia est res debita propter promissionem, non propter nostra merita. Est enim promissa iustificatio, quam supra ostendimus proprie esse donum Dei. Et huic dono coniuncta est promissio vitae aeternae, iuxta illud, Rom. 8, 30: Quos iustificavit, eosdem 242] et glorificavit. Huc pertinet, quod Paulus ait 2 Tim. 4, 8: Reposita est mihi corona iustitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus iustus iudex etc. Debetur enim corona iustificationis 243] propter promissionem. Et hanc promissionem scire sanctos oportet, non ut propter suum commodum laborent, debent enim laborare propter gloriam Dei; sed ne desperent in afflictionibus, scire eos oportet voluntatem Dei, quod velit eos adiuvari, eripere, servare. Etsi aliter perfecti, aliter infirmi audiunt mentionem poenarum et praemiorum; nam infirmi laborant sui commodi causa. 244] Et tamen praedicatio praemiorum et poenarum necessaria est. In praedicatione poenarum ira Dei ostenditur, quare ad praedicationem poenitentiae pertinet. In praedicatione praemiorum gratia ostenditur. [R. 137 Et sicut Scriptura saepe mentione bonorum operum fidem complectitur, vult enim complecti iustitiam cordis cum fructibus: ita bleibt, und klauen danach heraus das Wort merces oder „Lohn“ und legen dann dasselbe ihres Gefallens aufs ärgste aus, nicht allein wider die Schrift, sondern auch wider gemeinen Gebrauch zu reden, und schließen dann also: Da steht in der Schrift: „Guer Lohn“ usw.; darum sind unsere Werke so würdig, daß wir dadurch das ewige Leben verdienen. Das ist gar eine neue Dialektika, da finden wir das einzelne Wort „Lohn“; darum tun unsere Werke vollständig genug dem Gesetz, darum sind wir durch unsere Werke Gott angenehm, bedürfen keiner Gnade noch keines Mittlers Christi. Unsere guten Werke sind der Schatz, dadurch das ewige Leben erlangt und erlangt wird. Darum können wir durch unsere guten Werke das erste, höchste Gebot Gottes und das ganze Gesetz halten. Weiter können wir auch tun opera supererogationis, das ist, übrige Werke und mehr, denn das Gesetz fordert. Darum haben die Mönche, so sie mehr tun, denn sie schuldig sind, übriges, überflüssiges Verdienst, das mögen sie andern schenken oder um Geld mittheilen und mögen des Geschenks, als die neuen Götter, ein neu Sakrament einsehen, damit sie bezeugen, daß sie ihre Verdienste jenen verkauft und mitgeteilt haben; wie denn die Barfüßermönche und andere Orden unterkämmt getan, daß sie den toten Körpern haben Ordenskappen angezogen. Das sind keine, starke Gründe, welche sie alle aus der einigen Sylabe „Lohn“ spinnen können, damit sie Christum und den Glauben verdunkeln.

sorten. Addenda sunt enim certa sacramenta

Wir aber zanken nicht um das Wort „Lohn“, sondern von diesen großen, hohen, allerwichtigsten Sachen, nämlich wo christliche Herzen rechten, gewissen Trost suchen sollen; item, ob unsere Werke die Gewissen können zu Ruhe oder Frieden bringen; item, ob wir halten sollen, daß unsere Werke des ewigen Lebens würdig sind, oder ob es um Christus' willen gegeben werde. Diese sind die rechten Fragen in diesen Sachen; wenn da die Gewissen nicht recht berichtet sind, so können sie keinen gewissen Trost haben. Wir aber haben klar genug gesagt, daß die guten Werke das Gesetz nicht erfüllen, daß wir Gottes Barmherzigkeit bedürfen, und daß wir durch den Glauben Gott angenehm werden, und daß die guten Werke, sie setzen, wie köstlich sie wollen, wenn es auch St. Paulus' Werke selbst wären, kein Gewissen können zu Ruhe machen. Aus dem allem folgt, daß wir sollen glauben, daß wir das ewige Leben erlangen durch Christum aus Gnaden, nicht um der Werke oder des Gesetzes willen. Was sagen wir aber von dem Lohn, welches [dessen] die Schrift gedenkt? Für das erste, wenn wir sagten, daß das ewige Leben werde ein Lohn genannt darum, daß es den Gläubigen Christi aus der göttlichen Verheißung gehört, so hätten wir recht gesagt. Aber die Schrift nennt das ewige Leben einen Lohn, nicht daß Gott schuldig sei, um die Werke das ewige Leben zu geben, sondern nachdem das ewige Leben sonst gegeben wird aus andern Ursachen, daß dennoch damit vergolten werden unsere Werke und Trübsale, obgleich der Schatz so groß ist, daß ihn Gott uns um die Werke nicht they ought to be a price for which eternal life is due. They are, therefore, worthy of grace and life eternal, and do not stand in need of mercy, or of Christ as Mediator, or of faith. This logic is altogether new; we hear the term reward, and therefore are to infer that there is no need of Christ as Mediator, or of faith having access to God for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our works! Who does not see that these are anacoluthons? We do not contend concerning the term reward. We dispute concerning this matter, namely, whether good works are of themselves worthy of grace and of eternal life, or whether they please only on account of faith, which apprehends Christ as Mediator. Our adversaries not only ascribe this to works, namely, that they are worthy of grace and of eternal life, but they also state falsely that they have superfluous merits, which they can grant to others, and by which they can justify others, as when monks sell the merits of their orders to others. These monstrosities they heap up in the manner of Chrysippus, where this one word reward is heard, namely: "It is called a reward, and therefore we have works which are a price for which a reward is due; therefore works please by themselves, and not for the sake of Christ as Mediator. And since one has more merits than another, therefore some have superfluous merits. And those who merit them can bestow these merits upon others." Stop, reader; you have not the whole of this sorites. For certain sacraments of this donation must be added; the hood is placed upon the dead. [As the Barefooted monks and other orders have shamelessly done in placing the hoods of their orders upon dead bodies.] By such accumulations the blessings brought us in Christ, and the righteousness of faith have been obscured. [These are acute and strong arguments, all of which they can spin from the single word reward, whereby they obscure Christ and faith.]

We are not agitating an idle logomachy concerning the term reward [but this great, exalted, most important matter, namely, where Christian hearts are to find true and certain consolation; again, whether our works can give consciences rest and peace; again, whether we are to believe that our works are worthy of eternal life, or whether that is given us for Christ's sake. These are the real questions regarding these matters; if consciences are not rightly instructed concerning these, they can have no certain comfort. However, we have stated clearly enough that good works do not fulfil the Law, that we need the mercy of God, that by faith we are accepted with God, that good works, be they ever so precious, even if they were the works of St. Paul himself, cannot bring rest to the conscience. From all this it follows that we are to believe that we obtain eternal life through Christ by faith, not on account of our works, or of the Law. But what do we say of the reward which Scripture mentions?] If the adversaries will concede that we are accounted righteous by faith because of Christ, and that good works please God because of faith, we will not afterwards contend much concerning the term reward. We confess that eternal life is a reward, because it is something due on account of the promise, not on account of our merits. For the justification has been promised, which we have above shown to be properly a gift of God; and to this gift has been added the promise of eternal life, according to Rom. 8, 30: Whom He justified, them He also glorified. Here belongs what Paul says, 2 Tim. 4, 8: There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me. For the crown is due the justified because of the promise. And this promise saints should know, not that they may labor for their own profit, for they ought to labor for the glory of God; but in order that they may not despair in afflictions, they should know God's will, that He desires to aid, to deliver, to protect them. [Just as the inheritance and all possessions of a father are given to the son, as a rich compensation and reward for his obedience, and yet the son receives the inheritance, not on account of his merit, but because the father, for the reason that he is his father, wants him to have it. Therefore it is a sufficient reason why eternal life is called a reward, because thereby the tribulations which we suffer, and the works of love which we do, are compensated, although we have not deserved it. For there are two kinds of compensation: one, which we are obliged, the other, which we are not obliged, to render. E. g., when the emperor grants a servant a principality, he therewith compensates the servant's work; and yet the work is not worth the principality, but the servant acknowledges that he has received a gracious lien. Thus God does not owe us eternal life, still, when He grants it to believers for Christ's sake, that is a compensation for our sufferings and works.] Although the perfect hear the mention of penalties and rewards in one way, and the weak hear it in another way; for the weak labor for the sake of their own advantage. And yet the preaching of rewards and punishments is necessary. In the preaching of punishments the wrath of God is set forth, and therefore this pertains to the preaching of repentance. In the preaching of rewards, grace is set forth. And just as Scripture, in the mention of good works, often embraces faith, — for it wishes righteousness of the heart to be included with the fruits, — so sometimes it offers grace together with other rewards, as in Is. 58, 8 f., and frequently in other places in the prophets. We also confess what we have often testified, that, although justification and eternal life pertain to faith, nevertheless good works merit other bodily and spiritual rewards [which are rendered both in this life and after this life; for God defers most rewards until He glorifies saints after this life, because He wishes them in this life to be exercised in mortifying the old man] and degrees of rewards, according to 1 Cor. 3, 8: Every man shall receive his

Fatemur et hoc, quod saepe testati sumus, quod, etsi iustificatio et vita aeterna ad fidem pertinent, tamen bona opera mereantur alia praemia corporalia et spiritualia et gradus praemiorum iuxta illud, 1 Cor. 3, 8: Unus quisque accipiet mercedem iuxta suum laborem. Nam iustitia evangelii, quae versatur circa promissionem gratiae, gratis accipit iustificationem et vivificationem. Sed impletio legis, quae sequitur fidem, versatur circa legem, in qua non gratis, sed pro nostris operibus offertur et debetur merces. Sed qui hanc merentur, prius iustificati sunt, quam legem faciunt. Itaque prius sunt translati in regnum Filii Dei, ut Paulus ait Col. 1, 13; Rom. 8, 17, et facti co-heredes Christi. Sed adversarii, quoties de merito dicitur, statim transferunt rem a reliquis praemiis ad iustificationem, quum evangelium gratis offerat iustificationem propter Christi merita, non nostra; et merita Christi communicantur nobis per fidem. Ceterum opera et afflictiones merentur non iustificationem, sed alia praemia, ut in his sententiis merces operibus offertur: Qui parce seminat, parce metet, et qui largiter seminat, largiter metet, 2 Cor. 9, 6. Hic clare modus mercedis ad modum operis confertur. Honora patrem et matrem, ut sis longaevus super terram, Exod. 20, 12. Et hic proponit lex certo 247] operi mercedem. Quamquam igitur legis impletio meretur mercedem, proprie enim merces ad legem pertinet: tamen meminisse nos evangelii oportet, quod gratis offert iustificationem propter Christum. Nec legem prius facimus, aut facere possumus, quam reconciliati Deo, iustificati et renati sumus. Nec illa legis impletio placeret Deo, nisi propter fidem essemus accepti. Et quia [R. 138 homines propter fidem sunt accepti, ideo illa inchoata legis impletio placet, et habet mercedem in hac vita et post hanc vitam. De 248] nomine mercedis pleraque alia hic etiam dici poterant ex natura legis, quae, quia longiora sunt, alio in loco explicanda erunt.

249] Verum urgent adversarii, quod proprie mereantur vitam aeternam bona opera, quia Paulus dicit Rom. 2, 6: Reddet unicuique secundum opera eius. Item v. 10: Gloria, honor et pax omni operanti bonum. Ioh. 5, 29: Qui bona fecerunt, in resurrectionem vitae. Matth. 25, 35: Esurivi, et dedistis mihi manducare etc. In his locis et similibus omnibus, in quibus opera laudantur in Scripturis, necesse est intelligere non tantum externa opera, sed fidem etiam cordis, quia Scriptura non loquitur de hypocrisi, sed de iustitia cordis cum fructibus suis. Quoties 251] autem fit mentio legis et operum, sciendum est, quod non sit excludendus Christus mediator. Is est enim finis legis et ipse inquit Ioh. 15, 5: Sine me nihil potestis facere. Ex hoc canone diximus supra iudicari posse omnes locos de operibus. Quare quum operibus redditur vita aeterna, redditur iustificatio, quia neque bene operari possunt homines nisi iustificati, qui aguntur Spiritu Christi, schuldig wäre. Gleichwie das Erbteil oder alle Güter eines Vaters dem Sohn gegeben werden und sind eine reiche Vergeltung und Belohnung seines Gehorsams; aber dennoch empfängt er das Erbe nicht um seines Verdienstes willen, sondern daß es ihm der Vater gönnt als ein Vater usw. Darum ist's genug, daß das ewige Leben deshalb werde ein Lohn genannt, daß dadurch vergolten werden die Trübsale, so wir leiden, und die Werke der Liebe, die wir tun, ob es wohl damit nicht verdient wird. Denn es ist zweierlei Vergelten, eins, das man schuldig ist, das andere, das man nicht schuldig ist. Als, so der Kaiser einem Diener ein Fürkentum gibt, damit wird vergolten des Dieners Arbeit, und ist doch die Arbeit nicht würdig des Fürkentums, sondern der Diener bezehnt, es sei ein Gnadenlehen. Also ist uns Gott um die Werke nicht schuldig das ewige Leben; aber dennoch, so er's gibt uns Christus' willen den Gläubigen, so wird damit unser Leiden und Werke vergolten. Weiter sagen wir, daß die guten Werke wahrlich verdienstlich und meritoria seien. Nicht daß sie Vergebung der Sünden uns sollten verdienen oder vor Gott gerecht machen. Denn sie gefallen Gott nicht, sie geschehen denn von denjenigen, welchen die Sünden schon vergeben sind. So sind sie auch nicht wert des ewigen Lebens, sondern sie sind verdienstlich zu andern Gaben, welche in diesem und nach diesem Leben gegeben werden. Denn Gott, der verzieht viele Gaben bis in jenes Leben, da nach diesem Leben Gott die Heiligen wird zu Ehren setzen. Denn hier in diesem Leben will er den alten Adam kreuzigen und töten mit allerlei Anfechtungen und Trübsalen. Und dahin gehört der Spruch Pauli: „Ein jeder wird Lohn empfangen nach seiner Arbeit.“ Denn die Seligen werden Belohnung haben, einer höher denn der andere. Solchen Unterschied macht das Verdienst, nachdem es nun Gott gefällt, und ist Verdienst, diemeil diejenigen solche gute Werke tun, die Gott zu Kindern und Erben angenommen hat. So haben sie denn eigenes und sonderliches Verdienst, wie ein Kind vor dem andern.

Die Widersacher ziehen auch andere Sprüche an, zu beweisen, daß die Werke das ewige Leben verdienen. Als diese: Paulus sagt: „Er wird einem jeden geben nach seinen Werken.“ Item, Joh. am 5.: „Die Gutes getan haben, werden auferstehen zur Auferstehung des Lebens.“ Item, Matth. 25: „Mich hat gehungert, und ihr habt mich gespeiset.“ Antwort: Diese Sprüche alle, welche die Werke loben, sollen wir verstehen nach der Regel, welche ich oben gesetzt habe, nämlich, daß die Werke außerhalb Christo Gott nicht gefallen, und daß man in keinem Wege ausschließen soll den Mittler Christum. Darum, so der Text sagt, daß das ewige Leben werde gegeben denen, „die Gutes getan haben“, so zeigt er an, daß es werde denjenigen gegeben, die durch den Glauben an Christum zuvor gerecht sind worden. Denn Gott gefallen keine guten Werke, es sei denn der Glaube dabei, dadurch sie glauben, daß sie Gott angenehm seien um Christus' willen; und welche also durch den Glauben sind gerecht worden, die bringen gewißlich gute Werke und gute Früchte;

own reward according to his own labor. [For the blessed will have reward, one higher than the other. This difference merit makes, according as it pleases God; and it is merit, because they do these good works whom God has adopted as children and heirs. For thus they have merit, which is their own and peculiar, as one child with respect to another.] For the righteousness of the Gospel, which has to do with the promise of grace, freely receives justification and quickening. But the fulfilling of the Law, which follows faith, has to do with the Law, in which a reward is offered and is due, not freely, but according to our works. But those who merit this are justified before they do the Law. Therefore, as Paul says, Col. 1, 13; Rom. 8, 17, they have before been translated into the kingdom of God's Son, and been made joint-heirs with Christ. But as often as mention is made of merit, the adversaries immediately transfer the matter from other rewards to justification, although the Gospel freely offers justification on account of Christ's merits and not of our own; and the merits of Christ are communicated to us by faith. But works and afflictions merit, not justification, but other remunerations, as the reward is offered for the works in these passages: He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully, 2 Cor. 9, 6. Here clearly the measure of the reward is connected with the measure of the work. Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land, Ex. 20, 12. Also here the Law offers a reward to a certain work. Although, therefore, the fulfilling of the Law merits a reward, for a reward properly pertains to the Law, yet we ought to be mindful of the Gospel, which freely offers justification for Christ's sake. We neither observe the Law, nor can observe it, before we have been reconciled to God, justified, and regenerated. Neither would this fulfilling of the Law please God, unless we would be accepted on account of faith. And because men are accepted on account of faith, for this very reason the inchoate fulfilling of the Law pleases, and has a reward in this life and after this life. Concerning the term reward, very many other remarks might here be made, derived from the nature of the Law, which, as they are too extensive, must be explained in another connection.

But the adversaries urge that it is the prerogative of good works to merit eternal life, because Paul says, Rom. 2, 6: Who will render to every one according to his works. Likewise v. 10: Glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good. John 5, 29: They that have done good [shall come forth] unto the resurrection of life. Matt. 25, 35: I was an hungred and ye gave Me meat, etc. In these and all similar passages in which works are praised in the Scriptures, it is necessary to understand not only outward works, but also the faith of the heart, because Scripture does not speak of hypocrisy, but of the righteousness of the heart with its fruits. Moreover, as often as mention is made of the Law and of works, we must know that Christ as Mediator is not to be excluded. For He is the end of the Law, and He Himself says, John 15, 5: Without Me ye can do nothing. According to this rule we have said above that all passages concerning works can be judged. Wherefore, when eternal life is granted to works, it is granted to those who have been justified, because no men except justified men, who are led by the Spirit of Christ, can do good works; and without faith and Christ, as Mediator, good works do not please, according to Heb. 11, 6: Without faith it is impossible to please God. When Paul says: He will render to every one according to his works, not only the outward work ought to be understood, but all righteousness or unrighteousness. So: Glory to him that worketh good, i. e., to the righteous. Ye gave Me meat, is cited as the fruit and witness of the righteousness of the heart and of faith, and therefore eternal life is rendered to righteousness. [There it must certainly be acknowledged that Christ means not only the works, but that He desires to have the heart, which He wishes to esteem God aright, and to believe correctly concerning Him, namely, that it is through mercy that it is pleasing to God. Therefore Christ teaches that everlasting life will be given the righteous, as Christ says: The righteous shall go into everlasting life.] In this way Scripture, at the same time with the fruits, embraces the righteousness of the heart. And it often names the fruits, in order that it may be better nec sine mediatore Christo et fide placent bona opera, iuxta illud, Hebr. 11, 6: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo. Quum dicit Paulus: Reddet unicuique secundum opera eius, intelligi debet non tantum opus externum, sed tota iustitia vel iniustitia. Sic: Gloria operanti bonum, hoc est, iusto. Deditis mihi manducare, fructus et testimonium iustitiae cordis et fidei allegatur, redditur 253] igitur vita aeterna iustitiae. Ad hunc modum Scriptura simul complectitur iustitiam cordis cum fructibus. Et saepe fructus nominat, ut ab imperitis magis intelligatur, et ut significet requiri novam vitam et regenerationem, non hypocrisin. Fit autem regeneratio fide in poenitentia.

Wir suchen hier nicht eine unnötige Subtilität, sondern es hat große Ursache, warum man in diesen Fragen einen gewissen Bericht muß haben. Denn alsbald, wenn man den Widersachern zuläßt, daß die Werke das ewige Leben verdienen, bald spinnen sie diese ungeschickte Lehre daraus, daß wir vermögen Gottes Gesez zu halten, daß wir keiner Barmherzigkeit bedürfen, daß wir vor Gott gerecht seien, daß ist, Gott angenehm, durch unsere Werke, nicht um Christus' willen, daß wir auch opera supererogationis und mehr tun können, denn das Gesez erfordert. Also wird dann die ganze Lehre vom Glauben gar unterdrückt. Soll aber eine christliche Kirche sein und bleiben, so muß sie die reine Lehre von Christo, von Gerechtigkeit des Glaubens erhalten werden. Darum müssen wir solche große pharisäische Irrtümer anfechten, damit wir den Namen Christi und die Ehre des Evangelii und Christi retten und den christlichen Herzen einen rechten, beständigen, gewissen Trost erhalten. Denn wie ist es möglich, daß ein Herz oder Gewissen könne zur Ruhe kommen oder die Seligkeit hoffen, wenn in Ansehungungen und Todesängsten vor Gottes Urteil und Augen unsere Werke so gar zu Staub werden, wo es nicht durch Glauben des gewiß wird, daß wir selig werden aus Gnaden, um Christus' willen, nicht um unsere Werke, um unsere Erfüllung des Gesezes? Und freilich St. Lorenz, da er auf dem Rost gelegen und um Christus' willen gemartert, ist nicht also gefinnt gewesen, daß dasselbe sein Werk Gottes Gesez vollständig und rein erfüllte, daß er ohne Sünde wäre, daß er des Mittlers Christi oder der Gnade nicht bedürfte. Er hat's freilich bleiben lassen bei dem Worte des Propheten David, Ps. 143, 2: „Du wollest nicht ins Gericht gehen, Herr, mit deinem Knechte“ usw. St. Bernhardus hat auch nicht gerühmt, daß seine Werke würdig wären des ewigen Lebens, da er spricht: „Perdite vixi, ich habe sündlich gelebt“ usw. Doch richtet er sich getrost wieder auf, hält sich an die Verheißung der Gnade und glaubt, daß er um Christus' willen Vergebung der Sünden habe und das ewige Leben, wie der Psalm sagt, 32, 1: „Wohl denen, welchen die Sünden vergeben sind“, und Paulus zu den Römern am 4, 6: „Dies ist des Menschen Seligkeit, wenn ihm die Gerechtigkeit wird zugerechnet ohne Werke.“ So sagt nun Paulus, der sei selig, welchem die Gerechtigkeit wird zugerechnet durch den Glauben an Christum, ob er gleich kein gut Werk getan hat. Das ist der rechte beständige Trost, welcher in Ansehungungen besteht, damit die Herzen und Gewissen können gestärkt und getröstet werden, nämlich, daß um Christus' willen durch den Glauben uns Vergebung der Sünden, Gerechtigkeit und ewiges Leben gegeben wird. Wenn nun die Sprüche, so von Werken reden, dermaßen verstanden werden, daß sie den Glauben mitbegreifen, so sind sie gar nichts wider diese Lehre. Und man muß allezeit den Glauben mitbegreifen, damit wir den Mittler Christum nicht ausschließen. Dem Glauben aber folgt Erfüllung des Gesezes; denn der Heilige Geist ist da, der macht ein neu Leben. Daß sei genug von diesem Artikel.

257] Non igitur litigamus in hoc loco de parva re cum adversariis. Non quaerimus otiosas subtilitates, quum reprehendimus eos, quod docent vitam aeternam mereri operibus, omissa hac 258] fide, quae apprehendit mediatorem Christum. Nam de hac fide, quae credit nobis Patrem propitium esse propter Christum, nulla apud scholasticos syllaba exstat. Ubique sentiunt, quod simus accepti, iusti propter opera nostra vel ex ratione facta, vel certe facta, inclinante 259] illa dilectione, de qua dicunt. Et tamen habent quaedam dicta, quasi apophthegmata 260] veterum auctorum, quae depravant interpretando. Iactatur in scholis, quod bona opera understood by the inexperienced, and to signify that a new life and regeneration, and not hypocrisy, are required. But regeneration occurs, by faith, in repentance.

No sane man can judge otherwise; neither do we here affect any idle subtily, so as to separate the fruits from the righteousness of the heart; if the adversaries would only have conceded that the fruits please because of faith, and of Christ as Mediator, and that by themselves they are not worthy of grace and of eternal life. For in the doctrine of the adversaries we condemn this, that in such passages of Scripture, understood either in a philosophical or a Jewish manner, they abolish the righteousness of faith, and exclude Christ as Mediator. From these passages they infer that works merit grace, sometimes de congruo, and at other times de condigno, namely, when love is added; i. e., that they justify, and because they are righteousness they are worthy of eternal life. This error manifestly abolishes the righteousness of faith, which believes that we have access to God for Christ's sake, not for the sake of our works, and that through Christ, as Priest and Mediator, we are led to the Father, and have a reconciled Father, as has been sufficiently said above. And this doctrine concerning the righteousness of faith is not to be neglected in the Church of Christ, because without it the office of Christ cannot be considered, and the doctrine of justification that is left is only a doctrine of the Law. But we should retain the Gospel, and the doctrine concerning the promise, granted for Christ's sake.

[We are here not seeking an unnecessary subtily, but there is a great reason why we must have a reliable account as regards these questions. For as soon as we concede to the adversaries that works merit eternal life, they spin from this concession the awkward teaching that we are able to keep the Law of God, that we are not in need of mercy, that we are righteous before God, that is, accepted with God by our works, not for the sake of Christ, that we can also do works of supererogations, namely, more than the Law requires. Thus the entire teaching concerning faith is suppressed. However, if there is to be and abide a Christian Church, the pure teaching concerning Christ, concerning the righteousness of faith, must surely be preserved. Therefore we must fight against these great pharisaical errors, in order that we redeem the name of Christ and the honor of the Gospel and of Christ, and preserve for Christian hearts a true, permanent, certain consolation. For how is it possible that a heart or conscience can obtain rest, or hope for salvation, when in afflictions and in the anguish of death our works in the judgment and sight of God utterly become dust, unless it becomes certain by faith that men are saved by mercy, for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of their works, their fulfilling of the Law? And, indeed, St. Laurentius, when placed on the gridiron, and being tortured for Christ's sake, did not think that by this work he was perfectly and absolutely fulfilling the Law, that he was without sin, that he did not need Christ as Mediator and the mercy of God. He rested his case, indeed, with the prophet, who says: Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified, Ps. 143, 2. Nor did St. Bernard boast that his works were worthy of eternal life, when he says: Perdite vixi, I have led a sinful life, etc. But he boldly comforts himself, clings to the promise of grace, and believes that he has remission of sins and life eternal for Christ's sake, just as Psalm 32, 1 teaches: Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. And Paul says, Rom. 4, 6: David also describeth the blessedness of the man to whom God imputeth righteousness without works. Paul, then, says that he is blessed to whom righteousness is imputed through faith in Christ, even though he have not performed any good works. That is the true, permanent consolation, by which hearts and consciences can be confirmed and encouraged, namely, that for Christ's sake, through faith, the remission of sins, righteousness, and life eternal are given us. Now, if passages which treat of works are understood in such a manner as to comprise faith, they are not opposed to our doctrine. And, indeed, it is necessary always to add faith, so as not to exclude Christ as Mediator. But the fulfilment of the Law follows faith; for the Holy Ghost is present, who renews life. Let this suffice concerning this article.]

We are not, therefore, on this topic contending with the adversaries concerning a small matter. We are not seeking out idle subtilties when we find fault with them for teaching that we merit eternal life by works, while that faith is omitted which apprehends Christ as Mediator. For of this faith which believes that for Christ's sake the Father is propitious to us there is not a syllable in the scholastics. Everywhere they hold that we are accepted and righteous because of our works, wrought either from reason, or certainly wrought by the inclination of that love concerning which they speak. And yet they have certain sayings, maxims, as it were, of the old writers, which they distort in interpreting. In the schools the boast is made that good works please on account of grace, and that confidence must be put in God's grace. Here they interpret grace as a habit by which we love God, as though, indeed, the ancients meant to say that we ought to trust in our love, of which we certainly experience how small and how impure it is. Although it is strange how they hid us trust in love, since they teach us that we are not able to know whether it be present. Why do they not here set forth the grace, the mercy of God toward us? And as often as mention is made of this, they ought to add faith. For the promise of God's mercy, reconciliation, and love towards us is not apprehended unless by faith. With this view they would be right in saying that we ought to trust in grace, that good works please because of grace, placeant propter gratiam, et quod sit confidendum gratiae Dei. Hic interpretantur [R. 140] gratiam habitum, quo nos diligimus Deum, quasi vero voluerint dicere veteres, quod debeamus confidere nostra dilectione, quae, quam sit exigua, quam sit immunda, certe experimur. Quamquam hoc mirum est, quomodo isti iubeant confidere dilectione, quum doceant nesciri, utrum adsit. Cur non exponunt hic gratiam misericordiam Dei erga nos? Et quoties mentio huius fit, addere oportebat fidem. Non enim apprehenditur nisi fide promissio misericordiae, reconciliationis, dilectionis Dei erga nos. In hanc sententiam recte dicerent confidendum esse gratia, 261] placere bona opera propter gratiam, quum fides gratiam apprehendit. Iactatur et hoc in scholis, valere bona opera nostra virtute passionis Christi. Recte dicitur. Sed cur non addunt de fide? Christus enim est propitiatio, ut Paulus Rom. 3, 25 ait, per fidem. Quum fide eriguntur pavidae conscientiae et sentiunt peccata nostra deleta esse morte Christi et Deum nobis reconciliatum esse propter passionem Christi, tum vero prodest nobis passio Christi. Si omittatur doctrina de fide, frustra dicitur opera valere virtute passionis Christi.

262] Et plerasque alias sententias corrumpunt in scholis, propterea quia non tradunt iustitiam fidei, et fidem intelligunt tantum notitiam historiae seu dogmatum, non intelligunt hanc virtutem esse, quae apprehendit promissionem gratiae et iustitiae, quae vivificat corda in ter- 263] roribus peccati et mortis. Quum Paulus inquit Rom. 10, 10: Corde creditur ad iustitiam, ore fit confessio ad salutem. Hic fateri adversarios existimamus, quod confessio ex opere operato non iustificet aut salvet, sed tantum propter fidem cordis. Et Paulus sic loquitur, quod confessio salvet, ut ostendat, qualis fides consequatur vitam aeternam, nempe firma et 264] efficax fides. Non est autem firma fides, quae non ostendit se in confessione. Sic cetera bona opera placent propter fidem, sicut et orationes ecclesiae rogant, ut omnia sint accepta propter Christum. Item petunt omnia propter Christum. Constat enim semper in fine [R. 141] 265] precationum addi hanc clausulam: per Christum, Dominum nostrum. Ideo concludimus, quod fide iustificemur coram Deo, reconciliemur Deo et regeneremur, quae in poenitentia apprehendit promissionem gratiae et vere vivificat perterritam mentem, ac statuit, quod Deus sit nobis placatus ac propitius propter Christum. Et hac fide ait Petrus 1. ep. 1, 5, nos custodiri 266] ad salutem, quae revelabitur. Huius fidei cognitio Christianis necessaria est et uberrimam affert consolationem in omnibus afflictionibus et officium Christi nobis ostendit, quia isti, qui negant homines fide iustificari, negant Christum mediatorem esse ac propitiatorem, negant promissionem gratiae et evangelium. Tantum docent aut doctrinam rationis aut legis de iusti- 267] ficatione. Nos, quantum hic fieri potuit, ostendimus fontes huius causae et exposuimus ea, quae adversarii obiciunt. Quae quidem facile diiudicabunt boni viri, si cogitabunt, quoties citatur locus de dilectione aut operibus, legem non fieri sine Christo, nec nos ex lege, sed ex 268] evangelio, hoc est, promissione gratiae in Christo promissae, iustificari. Et speramus hanc, quamvis brevem, disputationem bonis viris ad confirmandam fidem, ad docendam et consolandam conscientiam utilem futuram esse. Scimus enim ea, quae diximus, consentanea esse scripturis prophetiis et apostolicis, sanctis patribus, Ambrosio, Augustino et plerisque aliis et universae ecclesiae Christi, quae certe confitetur Christum esse propitiatorem et iustificatorem.

269] Nec statim censendum est Romanam ecclesiam sentire, quidquid papa aut cardinales aut episcopi aut theologi quidam aut monachi probant. Constat enim pontificibus magis curae esse dominationem suam quam evangelium Christi. Et perloquens compertum est palam Epicureos esse. Theologos constat plura ex philosophia admiscuisse doctrinae Christianae, [R. 142] 270] quam satis erat. Nec auctoritas horum videri debet tanta, ut nusquam dissentire a disputationibus eorum liceat, quum multi manifesti errores apud eos reperiantur, ut quod possimus ex puris naturalibus Deum super omnia diligere. Hoc dogma peperit alios errores multos, 271] quum sit manifeste falsum. Reclamant enim ubique Scripturae, sancti patres et omnium piorum iudicia. Itaque, etiamsi in ecclesia pontifices aut nonnulli theologi ac monachi docuerunt remissionem peccatorum, gratiam et iustitiam per nostra opera et novos cultus quaerere, qui obscuraverunt Christi officium, et ex Christo non propitiatorem et iustificatorem, sed tan- 272] tum legislatorem fecerunt: mansit tamen apud aliquos pios semper cognitio Christi. Porro Scriptura praedixit, fore ut iustitia fidei hoc modo obscuraretur per traditiones humanas et doctrinam operum. Sicut Paulus saepe (cf. Gal. 4, 9; 5, 7; Col. 2, 8. 16 sq.; 1 Tim. 4, 2 sq. et al.) querit tunc quoque fuisse, qui pro iustitia fidei docebant homines per opera propria et proprios cultus, non fide propter Christum reconciliari Deo et iustificari, quia homines 273] naturaliter ita iudicant Deum per opera placandum esse. Nec videt ratio aliam iustitiam quam iustitiam legis civiliter intellectae. Ideo semper exstiterunt in mundo, qui hanc carnalem iustitiam solam docuerunt, oppressa iustitia fidei, et tales doctores semper existent etiam. 274] Idem accidit in populo Israel. Maxima populi pars sentiebat se per sua opera mereri remissionem peccatorum, cumulabant sacrificia et cultus. Econtra prophetae, damnata illa opinione, docebant iustitiam fidei. Et res gestae in populo Israel sunt exempla eorum, quae in 275] ecclesia futura fuerunt. Itaque non perturbet pias mentes multitudo adversariorum, qui nostram doctrinam improbant. Facile enim iudicari de spiritu eorum potest, quia in quibusdam articulis adeo perspicuam et manifestam veritatem damnaverunt, ut palam appareat 276] eorum impietas. Nam et bulla Leonis X. [Iunii 15, 1520: Exsurge, Domine] damnavit articulum maxime necessarium, quem omnes Christiani teneant et credant, videlicet [R. 143] non esse confidendum, quod simus absoluti propter nostram contritionem, sed propter verbum 277] Christi Matth. 16, 19: Quodcunque ligaveris etc. Et nunc in hoc conventu auctores con-

when faith apprehends grace. In the schools the boast is also made that our good works avail by virtue of Christ's passion. Well said! But why add nothing concerning faith? For Christ is a propitiation, as Paul, Rom. 3, 25, says, through faith. When timid consciences are comforted by faith, and are convinced that our sins have been blotted out by the death of Christ, and that God has been reconciled to us on account of Christ's suffering, then, indeed, the suffering of Christ profits us. If the doctrine concerning faith be omitted, it is said in vain that works avail by virtue of Christ's passion.

And very many other passages they corrupt in the schools because they do not teach the righteousness of faith, and because they understand by faith merely a knowledge of the history or of dogmas, and do not understand by it that virtue which apprehends the promise of grace and of righteousness, and which quickens hearts in the terrors of sin and of death. When Paul says, Rom. 10, 10: With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation, we think that the adversaries acknowledge here that confession justifies or saves, not ex opere operato, but only on account of the faith of the heart. And Paul thus says that confession saves, in order to show what sort of faith obtains eternal life; namely, that which is firm and active. That faith, however, which does not manifest itself in confession is not firm. Thus other good works please on account of faith, as also the prayers of the Church ask that all things may be accepted for Christ's sake. They likewise ask all things for Christ's sake. For it is manifest that at the close of prayers this clause is always added: Through Christ, our Lord. Accordingly, we conclude that we are justified before God, are reconciled to God and regenerated by faith, which in repentance apprehends the promise of grace, and truly quickens the terrified mind, and is convinced that for Christ's sake God is reconciled and propitious to us. And through this faith, says Peter, 1 Ep. 1, 5, we are kept unto salvation, ready to be revealed. The knowledge of this faith is necessary to Christians, and brings the most abundant consolation in all afflictions, and displays to us the office of Christ, because those who deny that men are justified by faith, and deny that Christ is Mediator and Propitiator, deny the promise of grace and the Gospel. They teach only the doctrine either of reason or of the Law concerning justification. We have shown the origin of this case, so far as can here be done, and have explained the objections of the adversaries. Good men, indeed, will easily judge these things, if they will think, as often as a passage concerning love or works is cited, that the Law cannot be observed without Christ, and that we cannot be justified from the Law, but from the Gospel, that is, from the promise of the grace promised in Christ. And we hope that this discussion, although brief, will be profitable to good men for strengthening faith, and teaching and comforting conscience. For we know that those things which we have said are in harmony with the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, with the holy Fathers, Ambrose, Augustine, and very many others, and with the whole Church of Christ, which certainly confesses that Christ is Propitiator and Justifier.

Nor are we immediately to judge that the Roman Church agrees with everything that the Pope, or cardinals, or bishops, or some of the theologians, or monks approve. For it is manifest that to most of the pontiffs their own authority is of greater concern than the Gospel of Christ. And it has been ascertained that most of them are openly Epicureans. It is evident that theologians have mingled with Christian doctrine more of philosophy than was sufficient. Nor ought their influence to appear so great that it will never be lawful to dissent from their disputations, because at the same time many manifest errors are found among them, such as, that we are able from purely natural powers to love God above all things. This dogma, although it is manifestly false, has produced many other errors. For the Scriptures, the holy Fathers, and the judgments of all the godly everywhere make reply. Therefore, even though Popes, or some theologians, and monks in the Church have taught us to seek remission of sins, grace, and righteousness through our own works, and to invent new forms of worship, which have obscured the office of Christ, and have made out of Christ not a Propitiator and Justifier, but only a Legislator, nevertheless the knowledge of Christ has always remained with some godly persons. Scripture, moreover, has predicted that the righteousness of faith would be obscured in this way by human traditions and the doctrine of works. Just as Paul often complains (cf. Gal. 4, 9; 5, 7; Col. 2, 8, 16 sq.; 1 Tim. 4, 2 sq. etc.) that there were even at that time those who, instead of the righteousness of faith, taught that men were reconciled to God and justified by their own works and own acts of worship, and not by faith for Christ's sake; because men judge by nature that God ought to be appeased by works. Nor does reason see a righteousness other than the righteousness of the Law, understood in a civil sense. Accordingly, there have always existed in the world some who have taught this carnal righteousness alone to the exclusion of the righteousness of faith; and such teachers will also always exist. The same happened among the people of Israel. The greater part of the people thought that they merited remission of sins by their works; they accumulated sacrifices and acts of worship. On the contrary, the prophets, in condemnation of this opinion, taught the righteousness of faith. And the occurrences among the people of Israel are illustrations of those things which were to occur in the Church. Therefore, let the multitude of the adversaries, who condemn our doctrine, not disturb godly minds. For their spirit can easily be judged, because in some articles they have condemned truth that is so clear and mani-futationis damnauerunt apertis verbis hoc, quod fidem diximus partem esse poenitentiae, quae consequimur remissionem peccatorum et vincimus terrores peccatorum et conscientia pacata redditur. Quis autem non videt hunc articulum, quod fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum, verissimum, certissimum et maxime necessarium esse omnibus Christianis? Quis ad omnem posteritatem, audiens talem sententiam damnatam esse, iudicabit auctores huius condemnationis ullam Christi notitiam habuisse?

278) Et de spiritu eorum coniectura fieri potest ex illa inaudita crudelitate, quam constat eos in bonos viros plurimos hactenus exercuisse. Et accepimus in hoc conventu quendam reverendum patrem in senatu imperii, quum de nostra confessione sententiae dicerentur, dixisse nullum sibi consilium videri utilius, quam si ad confessionem, quam nos exhibuissemus aramento scriptam, sanguine rescriberetur. Quid diceret crudelius Phalaris? Itaque hanc vocem nonnulli etiam principes iudicaverunt indignam esse, quae in tali consensu diceretur. Quare 279) etiamsi vindicant sibi adversarii nomen ecclesiae, tamen nos sciamus ecclesiam Christi apud hos esse, qui evangelium Christi docent, non qui pravas opiniones contra evangelium defendunt, sicut inquit Dominus Ioh. 10, 27: Oves meae vocem meam audiunt. Et Augustinus ait: Quaestio est, ubi sit ecclesia. Quid ergo facturi sumus? In verbis nostris eam quaeritur sumus, an in verbis capitis sui, Domini nostri Iesu Christi? Puto, quod in illius verbis quaerere debemus, qui veritas est et optime novit corpus suum. Proinde non perturbent [R. 144] nos iudicia adversariorum, quum humanas opiniones contra evangelium, contra auctoritatem sanctorum patrum, qui in ecclesia scripserunt, contra piarum mentium testimonia defendunt.

Art. VII. VIII. (IV.) De Ecclesia.

1) Septimum articulum confessionis nostrae damnauerunt, in quo diximus ecclesiam esse congregationem sanctorum. Et addiderunt longam declamationem, quod mali non sint ab ecclesia segregandi, quum Iohannes comparaverit ecclesiam areae, in qua tritium et paleae simul coaccervatae sint, Matth. 3, 12, et Christus comparaverit eam sagena, in qua 2) pisces boni et mali sunt, 13, 47 etc. Profecto verum est, quod aiunt: Nullum remedium esse adversus scyphanthae morsum. Nihil tam circumspecte dici potest, ut calu- 3) mnia evitare queat. Nos ob hanc ipsam causam adiecimus octavum articulum, ne quis existimaret nos segregare malos et hypocritas ab externa societate ecclesiae, aut adimere sacramentis efficaciam, quae per hypocritas aut malos administrantur. Itaque hic non est opus longa defensione adversus hanc calumniam. Satis nos purgat articulus octavus. Concedimus enim, quod hypocritae et mali in hac vita sint admixti ecclesiae et sint membra ecclesiae, secundum externam societatem signorum ecclesiae, hoc est, Verbi, professionis et sacramentorum, praesertim si non sint excommunicati. Nec sacramenta ideo non sunt efficacia, quia per malos tractantur, imo recte uti possumus sacramentis, quae per 4) malos administrantur. Nam et Paulus 2 Thess. 2, 4 praedicat futurum, ut antichristus sedeat in templo Dei, hoc est, in ecclesia dominetur et gerat officia. At ecclesia non est tantum societas externarum rerum ac rituum, sicut aliae politicae, sed principaliter est societas fidei et Spiritus Sancti in cordibus, quae tamen habet externas [R. 145] notas, ut agnosci possit, videlicet puram evangelii doctrinam et administrationem sacramentorum consentaneam evangelio Christi. Et haec ecclesia sola dicitur corpus Christi, quod Christus Spiritu suo renovat, sanctificat et gubernat, ut testatur Paulus Eph. 1, 22 sq., quum ait: Et ipsum dedit caput super omnia ecclesiae, quae est corpus eius, videlicet integritas, id est, tota congregatio ipsius, qui 5) omnia in omnibus perficit. Quare illi, in quibus nihil agit Christus, non sunt membra

Art. VII und VIII (IV.) Von der Kirche.

Den siebten Artikel unsers Bekenntnisses, da wir sagen, daß die christliche Kirche sei die Versammlung der Heiligen, verdammen die Widersacher und führen weitläufig Geschwätz ein, daß die Bösen oder Gottlosen von der Kirche nicht sollen gesondert werden, hieweil Johannes der Täufer die Kirche vergleicht einer Tenne, in welcher Korn und Spreu beieinander liegen; item, Christus die Kirche vergleicht einem Netze, da böse und gute Fische innen sind. Da sehen wir, daß [es] wahr ist, wie man sagt, daß man nicht so deutlich reden kann, böse Zungen können's belehren. Wir haben eben darum und aus dieser Ursache den achten Artikel dazugesetzt, daß niemand darf Gedanken fassen, als wollten wir die Bösen und Heuchler von der äußerlichen Gesellschaft der Christen oder Kirche absondern, oder als wäre unsere Meinung, daß die Sacramente, wenn sie durch Gottlose gereicht werden, ohne Kraft oder Wirkung seien. Darum darf [bedarf] diese falsche, unrechte Deutung keiner langen Antwort; der achte Artikel entschuldigt uns genugsam. Wir bekennen und sagen auch, daß die Heuchler und Bösen auch mögen Glieder der Kirche sein in äußerlicher Gemeinschaft des Namens und der Ämter, und daß man von Bösen möge die Sacramente recht empfangen, sonderlich wenn sie nicht verbannt [gebannt] sind. Und die Sacramente sind darum nicht ohne Kraft oder Wirkung, daß sie durch Gottlose gereicht werden. Denn auch Paulus zuvor hat prophezeit, daß antichristus soll sitzen im Tempel Gottes, herrschen und regieren in der Kirche, Regiment und Amt darin haben. Aber die christliche Kirche steht nicht allein in Gesellschaft äußerlicher Zeichen, sondern steht vornehmlich in Gemeinschaft der ewigen Güter im Herzen, als des Heiligen Geistes, des Glaubens, der Furcht und Liebe Gottes. Und dieselbe Kirche hat doch auch äußerliche Zeichen, dabei man sie kennt, nämlich, wo Gottes Wort rein geht, wo die Sacramente demselben gemäß gereicht werden, da ist gewiß die Kirche, da sind Christen, und dieselbe Kirche wird allein genannt in der Schrift Christus' Leib. Denn Christus ist ihr Haupt und heiligt und stärkt sie durch seinen Geist, wie Paulus zu den Ephesern am 1. sagt: „Und hat ihn gesetzt zum Haupt der Gemeinde, fest that their godlessness appears openly. For the bull of Leo X condemned a very necessary article, which all Christians should hold and believe, namely, that we ought to trust that we have been absolved not because of our contrition, but because of Christ's word, Matt. 16, 19: Whatsoever thou shalt bind, etc. And now, in this assembly, the authors of the Confutation have in clear words condemned this, namely, that we have said that faith is a part of repentance, by which we obtain remission of sins, and overcome the terrors of sin, and conscience is rendered pacified. Who, however, does not see that this article, that by faith we obtain the remission of sins, is most true, most certain, and especially necessary to all Christians? Who to all posterity, hearing that such a doctrine has been condemned, will judge that the authors of this condemnation had any knowledge of Christ?

And concerning their spirit, a conjecture can be made from the unheard-of cruelty, which it is evident that they have hitherto exercised towards most good men. And in this assembly we have heard that a reverend father, when opinions concerning our Confession were expressed, said in the senate of the Empire that no plan seemed to him better than to make a reply written in blood to the Confession which we had presented written in ink. What more cruel would Phalaris say? Therefore some princes also have judged this expression unworthy to be spoken in such a meeting. Wherefore, although the adversaries claim for themselves the name of the Church, nevertheless we know that the Church of Christ is with those who teach the Gospel of Christ, not with those who defend wicked opinions contrary to the Gospel, as the Lord says, John 10, 27: My sheep hear My voice. And Augustine says: The question is, Where is the Church? What, therefore, are we to do? Are we to seek it in our own words or in the words of its Head, our Lord Jesus Christ? I think that we ought to seek it in the words of Him who is Truth, and who knows His own body best. Hence the judgments of our adversaries will not disturb us, since they defend human opinions contrary to the Gospel, contrary to the authority of the holy Fathers, who have written in the Church, and contrary to the testimonies of godly minds.

Articles VII and VIII: Of the Church.

The Seventh Article of our Confession, in which we said that the Church is the congregation of saints, they have condemned, and have added a long disquisition, that the wicked are not to be separated from the Church, since John has compared the Church to a threshing-floor on which wheat and chaff are heaped together, Matt. 3, 12, and Christ has compared it to a net in which there are both good and bad fishes, Matt. 13, 47. It is, verily, a true saying, namely, that there is no remedy against the attacks of the slanderer. Nothing can be spoken with such care that it can escape detraction. For this reason we have added the Eighth Article, lest any one might think that we separate the wicked and hypocrites from the outward fellowship of the Church, or that we deny efficacy to Sacraments administered by hypocrites or wicked men. Therefore there is no need here of a long defense against this slander. The Eighth Article is sufficient to exculpate us. For we grant that in this life hypocrites and wicked men have been mingled with the Church, and that they are members of the Church according to the outward fellowship of the signs of the Church, i. e., of Word, profession, and Sacraments, especially if they have not been excommunicated. Neither are the Sacraments without efficacy for the reason that they are administered by wicked men; yea, we can even be right in using the Sacraments administered by wicked men. For Paul also predicts, 2 Thess. 2, 4, that Antichrist will sit in the temple of God, i. e., he will rule and bear office in the Church. But the Church is not only the fellowship of outward objects and rites, as other governments, but it is originally a fellowship of faith and of the Holy Ghost in hearts. [The Christian Church consists not alone in fellowship of outward signs, but it consists especially in inward communion of eternal blessings in the heart, as of the Holy Ghost, of faith, of the fear and love of God]; which fellowship nevertheless has outward marks so that it can be recognized, namely, the pure doctrine of the Gospel, and the administration of the Sacraments in accordance with the Gospel of Christ. [Namely, where God's Word is pure, and the Sacraments are administered in conformity with the same, there certainly is the Church, and there are Christians.] And this Church alone is called the body of Christ, which Christ renews [Christ is its Head, and] sanctifies and governs by His Spirit, as Paul testifies, Eph. 1, 22 sq., when he says: And gave Him to be the Head over all things to the Church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Wherefore, those in whom Christ does not act [through His Spirit] are not the members of Christ. This, too, the adversaries acknowledge, namely, that the wicked are dead members Christi. Idque fatentur adversarii, malos esse mortua. membra ecclesiae. Quare miramur, cur reprehenderint nostram descriptionem, 7) quae de vivis membris loquitur. Neque novi quidquam diximus. Paulus omnino eodem modo definiit ecclesiam Eph. 5, 25 sq., quod purificetur, ut sit sancta. Et addit externas notas, Verbum et sacramenta. Sic enim ait: Christus dilexit ecclesiam et se tradidit pro ea, ut eam sanctificet, purificans lavacro aquae per Verbum, ut exhibeat eam sibi gloriosam ecclesiam non habentem maculam neque rugam aut aliquid tale, sed ut sit sancta et inculpata. Hanc sententiam pene totidem verbis nos in confessione posuimus. Sic definit ecclesiam et articulus in symbolo, qui iubet nos credere, quod sit sancta catholica ecclesia. Impii vero non sunt sancta ecclesia. Et videtur additum, quod sequitur, sanctorum communio, ut exponeretur, quid significet ecclesia, nempe congregationem sanctorum, qui habent inter se societatem eiusdem evangelii seu doctrinae et eiusdem Spiritus Sancti, qui corda eorum renovat, sanctificat et gubernat.

heilige Kirche sein. In unserm Glauben folgt bald klar, deutlicher auslegt, was die Kirche heißt, nämlich das Evangelium bekennen, gleich eine Erkenntnis Christi haben, einen Geist haben, welcher ihre Herzen verneuert, heiligt und regiert.

9) Et hic articulus necessaria de causa propositus est. Infinita pericula videmus, quae minantur ecclesiae interitum. Infinita multitudo est impiorum in ipsa ecclesia, qui opprimunt eam. Itaque ne desperemus, sed sciamus ecclesiam tamen mansuram esse; item, ut sciamus, quamvis magna multitudo sit impiorum, tamen ecclesiam existere (R. 146 et Christum praestare illa, quae promissit ecclesiae, remittere peccata, exaudire, dare Spiritum Sanctum: has consolationes proponit 10) nobis articulus ille in symbolo. Et catholicam ecclesiam dicit, ne intelligamus, ecclesiam esse politiam externam certarum gentium, sed magis homines sparsos per totum orbem, qui de evangelio consentiunt et habent eundem Christum, eundem Spiritum Sanctum et eadem sacramenta, sive habeant easdem 11) traditiones humanas sive dissimiles. Et in decretis inquit glossa, ecclesiam large dictam complecti bonos et malos; item, malos nomine tantum in ecclesia esse, non re, bonos vero re et nomine. [Glossa decreti: „Ecclesia Christi, quandoque large sumitur, ut granum et paleam complectitur. . . . Vel dic aliud esse de ecclesia, quod hic negatur de malis; aliud esse in ecclesia, quod in contrariis conceditur. Vel distingue. Nam sunt quidam in ecclesia nomine et re, ut boni catholici; ut hic: quidam neo nomine nec re, ut praecisi.“] Et in hanc sententiam multa leguntur apud patres. Hieronymus enim ait: Qui ergo peccator est aliqua sorde maculatus, de ecclesia Christi non potest appellari nec Christo subiectus dici.

Geist regiert werden, ob sie wohl ungleiche Zeremonien haben. Denn auch im Dekret Gratiani sagt klar die Glosse, daß dies Wort „Kirche“, large zu nehmen, begreift Böse und Gute; item, daß die Bösen allein mit dem Namen in der Kirche seien, nicht mit dem Werke; die Guten aber sind beide mit welche ist sein Leib und die Fülle des, der alles in allem erfüllt.“ Darum in welchen Christus durch seinen Geist nichts wirkt, die sind nicht Gliedmaßen Christi. Und das bekennen auch die Widersacher, daß die Bösen allein tote Gliedmaßen der Kirche sind. Darum kann ich mich nicht genugsam verwundern, warum sie doch unsern Beschluß von der Kirche anfechten, so wir von lebendigen Gliedmaßen der Kirche reden. Und wir haben nichts Neues gesagt. Denn Paulus zu den Ephesern am 5. Kapitel sagt gleich auch also, was die Kirche sei, und setzt auch die äußerlichen Zeichen, nämlich das Evangelium, die Sacramente; denn also sagt er: „Christus hat geliebt die Gemeinde und sich selbst für sie gegeben, auf daß er sie heiligte, und hat sie gereinigt durch das Wasserbad im Wort, auf daß er sie ihm selbst zurechtete eine Gemeinde, die herrlich sei, die nicht hohle Flecken oder Runzel [oder des etwas], sondern daß sie heilig sei, untrüfflich“ usw. Diesen Spruch des Apostels haben wir gar nahe von Wort zu Wort gesetzt in unser Bekenntnis und also bekennen wir auch in unserm heiligen Symbolo und Glauben: „Ich glaube eine heilige christliche Kirche.“ Da sagen wir, daß die Kirche heilig sei; die Gottlosen aber und Bösen können nicht die hernach: „Gemeinschaft der Heiligen“, welches noch die Versammlung, welche ein Christ haben, einen Geist haben, welcher ihre

Und der Artikel von der katholischen oder gemeinen Kirche, welche von aller Nation unter der Sonne zusammen sich schiedt, ist gar tröstlich und hochnützlich. Denn der Haufe der Gottlosen ist viel größer, gar nahe unzählig, welche das Wort verachten, bitter hassen und aufs äußerste verfolgen, als da sind Türken, Mahometisten, andere Tyrannen, Ketzer usw. Darüber wird die rechte Lehre und Kirche oft so gar untergedrückt [unterdrückt] und verloren, wie unterm Papsttum geschehen, als sei keine Kirche, und läßt sich oft ansehen, als sei sie gar untergegangen. Dagegen, daß wir gewiß sein mögen, nicht zweifeln, sondern fest und ganzlich glauben, daß eigentlich eine christliche Kirche bis an das Ende der Welt auf Erden sein und bleiben werde; daß wir auch gar nicht zweifeln, daß eine christliche Kirche auf Erden lebe und sei, welche Christi Braut sei, obwohl der gottlose Haufe mehr und größer ist; daß auch der Herr Christus hier auf Erden in dem Haufen, welcher Kirche heißt, täglich wirke, Sünden verbege, täglich das Gebet erhöhe, täglich in Anfechtungen mit reichem, starkem Trost die Seinen erquide und immer wieder aufrichte: so ist der tröstliche Artikel im Glauben gesetzt: „Ich glaube eine katholische, gemeine, christliche Kirche“, damit niemand denken möchte, die Kirche sei, wie eine andere äußerliche Polizei, an dieses oder jenes Land, Königreich oder Stand gebunden, wie der Papst von Rom sagen will, sondern daß [es] gewiß wahr bleibt, daß der Haufe und die Menschen die rechte Kirche seien, welche hin und wieder in der Welt, vom Aufgang der Sonne bis zum Niedergang, an Christum wahrlich glauben, welche denn ein Evangelium, einen Christum, einerlei Taufe und Sacramente haben, durch einen Heiligen of the Church. Therefore we wonder why they have found fault with our description [our conclusion concerning the Church] which speaks of living members. Neither have we said anything new. Paul has defined the Church precisely in the same way, Eph. 5, 25 f., that it should be cleansed in order to be holy. And he adds the outward marks, the Word and Sacraments. For he says thus: Christ also loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish. In the Confession we have presented this sentence almost in the very words. Thus also the Church is defined by the article in the Creed which teaches us to believe that there is a holy Catholic Church. The wicked indeed are not a holy Church. And that which follows, namely, the communion of saints, seems to be added in order to explain what the Church signifies, namely, the congregation of saints, who have with each other the fellowship of the same Gospel or doctrine [who confess one Gospel, have the same knowledge of Christ] and of the same Holy Ghost, who renews, sanctifies, and governs their hearts.

And this article has been presented for a necessary reason. [The article of the Church Catholic or Universal, which is gathered together from every nation under the sun, is very comforting and highly necessary.] We see the infinite dangers which threaten the destruction of the Church. In the Church itself, infinite is the multitude of the wicked who oppress it [despise, bitterly hate, and most violently persecute the Word, as, e. g., the Turks, Mohammedans, other tyrants, heretics, etc. For this reason the true teaching and the Church are often so utterly suppressed and disappear, as if there were no Church, which has happened under the papacy; it often seems that the Church has completely perished]. Therefore, in order that we may not despair, but may know that the Church will nevertheless remain [until the end of the world], likewise that we may know that, however great the multitude of the wicked is, yet the Church [which is Christ's bride] exists, and that Christ affords those gifts which He has promised to the Church, to forgive sins, to hear prayer, to give the Holy Ghost, this article in the Creed presents us these consolations. And it says Church Catholic, in order that we may not understand the Church to be an outward government of certain nations [that the Church is like any other external polity, bound to this or that land, kingdom, or nation, as the Pope of Rome will say], but rather men scattered throughout the whole world [here and there in the world, from the rising to the setting of the sun], who agree concerning the Gospel, and have the same Christ, the same Holy Ghost, and the same Sacraments, whether they have the same or different human traditions. And the gloss upon the Decrees says that the Church in its wide sense embraces good and evil; likewise, that the wicked are in the Church only in name, not in fact; but that the good are in the Church both in fact and in name. And to this effect there are many passages in the Fathers. For Jerome says: The sinner, therefore, who has been soiled with any blotch cannot be called a member of the Church of Christ, neither can he be said to be subject to Christ.

Namen und Werken darin. Und auf die Meinung lieft man viel Sprüche bei den Vätern. Denn Hieronymus sagt: „Welcher ein Sünder ist und in Sünden noch unrein liegt, der kann nicht genannt werden ein Gliedmaß der Kirche, noch in dem Reich Christi sein.“

12) Quamquam igitur hypocritae et mali sint socii huius verae ecclesiae secundum externos ritus, tamen quum definitur ecclesia, necesse est eam definiri, quae est vivum corpus Christi, item, quae est nomine et re ecclesia. Et multae sunt causae. Necesse est enim intelligi, quae res principaliter efficiat nos membra et viva membra ecclesiae. Si ecclesiam tantum definimus externam politiam esse bonorum et malorum, non intelligent homines regnum Christi esse iustitiam cordis et donationem Spiritus Sancti, sed iudicabunt tantum externam observationem esse certorum cultuum ac rituum. Item, 14) quid interit inter populum legis et ecclesiam, si ecclesia est externa politia? At sic discernit Paulus ecclesiam a populo legis, quod ecclesia sit populus spiritualis, hoc est, non civilibus ritibus distinctus a gentibus, sed verus populus Dei, renatus per Spiritum Sanctum. In populo legis praeter promissionem de Christo habebat et carnale semen promissiones rerum corporalium, regni etc. [R. 147 Et propter has dicebantur populus Dei etiam mali in his, quia hoc carnale semen Deus separaverat ab aliis gentibus per certas ordinationes externas et promissiones; et tamen 15) mali illi non placebant Deo. At evangelium affert non umbram aeternarum rerum, sed ipsas res aeternas, Spiritum Sanctum et iustitiam, qua coram Deo iusti sumus.

von Natur Juden und aus Abrahams Samen geboren waren, über die Verheißung der geistlichen Güter in Christo auch viele Zusagen von leiblichen Gütern, als vom Königreich usw. Und um der göttlichen Zusagen willen waren [wurden] auch die Bösen unter ihnen Gottes Volk genannt. Denn den leiblichen Samen Abrahams und alle gebornen Juden hatte Gott abge sondert von andern Heiden durch dieselben leiblichen Verheißungen; und dieselben Gottlosen und Bösen waren doch nicht das rechte Gottesvolk, gefielen auch Gott nicht. Aber das Evangelium, welches in der Kirche gepredigt wird, bringt mit sich nicht allein den Schatten der ewigen Güter, sondern ein jeder rechter Christ, der wird hier auf Erden der ewigen Güter selbst, auch des ewigen Trostes, des ewigen Lebens und Heiligen Geistes und der Gerechtigkeit, die aus Gott ist, theilhaftig, bis daß er dort vollkommenlich selig werde.

16) Igitur illi tantum sunt populus iuxta evangelium, qui hanc promissionem Spiritus accipiunt. Adhaec ecclesia est regnum Christi, distinctum contra regnum diaboli. Certum est autem impios in potestate diaboli et membra regni diaboli esse, sicut docet Paulus Eph. 2, 2, quum ait, diabolum efficacem esse in incredulis. Et Christus inquit ad Pharisaeos, quibus certe erat externa societas cum ecclesia, id est, cum sanctis in populo legis, praeerant enim, sacrificabant et docebant: Vos ex patre diabolo estis, Ioh. 8, 44. Itaque ecclesia, quae vere est regnum Christi, est proprie congregatio sanctorum. Nam impii reguntur a diabolo et sunt captivi diaboli, non reguntur Spiritu Christi.

17) Sed quid verbis opus est in re manifesta? Si ecclesia, quae vere est regnum Christi, distinguitur a regno diaboli, necesse est impios, quum sint in regno diaboli, non esse ecclesiam; quamquam in hac vita, quia nondum revelatum est regnum Christi, sint admixti ecclesiae et gerant officia in ecclesia. 18) Nec propterea impii sunt regnum Christi, quia revelatio nondum facta est. Semper

Wiewohl nun die Bösen und [die] gottlosen Heuchler mit der rechten Kirche Gesellschaft haben in äußerlichen Zeichen, in Namen und Ämtern, dennoch, wenn man eigentlich reden will, was die Kirche sei, muß man von dieser Kirche sagen, die der Leib Christi heißt und Gemeinschaft hat nicht allein in äußerlichen Zeichen, sondern die Güter im Herzen hat, den Heiligen Geist und Glauben. Denn man muß je recht eigentlich wissen, wodurch wir Gliedmaßen Christi werden, und was uns macht zu lebendigen Gliedmaßen der Kirche. Denn so wir würden sagen, daß die Kirche allein eine äußerliche Polizei wäre, wie andere Requiramente, darin Böse und Gute wären usw., so wird [würde] niemand daraus lernen noch verstehen, daß Christi Reich geistlich ist, wie es doch ist, darin Christus innwendig die Herzen regiert, stärkt, tröstet, den Heiligen Geist und mancherlei geistliche Gaben austeilt, sondern man wird gedenken, es sei eine äußerliche Weise, gewisse Ordnung etlicher Zeremonien und Gottesdiensts. Item, was wollte für ein Unterschied sein zwischen dem Volk des Gesetzes und der Kirche, so die Kirche allein eine äußerliche Polizei wäre? Nun unterscheidet Paulus also die Kirche von den Juden, daß er sagt, die Kirche sei ein geistlich Volk, das ist, ein solch Volk, welches nicht allein in der Polizei und bürgerlichem Wesen unterschieden sei von den Heiden, sondern ein recht Volk Gottes, welches im Herzen erleuchtet wird und neugeboren durch den Heiligen Geist. Item, in dem jüdischen Volk, da hatten alle diejenigen, so Verhalten sind die allein nach dem Evangelio Gottes Volk, welche die geistlichen Güter, den Heiligen Geist empfangen, und dieselbe Kirche ist das Reich Christi, unterschieden von dem Reich des Teufels. Denn es ist gewiß, daß alle Gottlosen in der Gewalt des Teufels sind und Gliedmaßen seines Reichs, wie Paulus zu den Ephesern sagt, daß „der Teufel kräftig regiere in den Kindern des Unglaubens“. Und Christus sagt zu den Pharisäern (welche die Heiligsten waren und auch den Namen hatten, daß sie Gottes Volk und die Kirche wären, welche auch ihr Opfer taten): „Ihr seid aus eurem Vater, dem Teufel.“ Darum, die rechte Kirche ist das Reich Christi, das ist, die Versammlung aller Heiligen; denn die Gottlosen werden nicht regiert durch den Geist Christi.

Was sind aber viele Worte vonnöten in so klarer, öffentlicher Sache? Allein die Widersacher widersprechen der hellen Wahrheit. So die Kirche, welche je gewiß Christi und Gottes Reich ist, unterschieden ist von des Teufels Reich, so können die Gottlosen, welche in des Teufels Reich sind, je nicht die Kirche sein, wiewohl sie in diesem Leben, diemeil das Reich Christi noch nicht offenbart ist, unter den rechten Christen und in der Kirche sind,

Although, therefore, hypocrites and wicked men are members of this true Church according to outward rites [titles and offices], yet when the Church is defined, it is necessary to define that which is the living body of Christ, and which is in name and in fact the Church [which is called the body of Christ, and has fellowship not alone in outward signs, but has gifts in the heart, namely, the Holy Ghost and faith]. And for this there are many reasons. For it is necessary to understand what it is that principally makes us members, and that, living members, of the Church. If we will define the Church only as an outward polity of the good and wicked, men will not understand that the kingdom of Christ is righteousness of heart and the gift of the Holy Ghost [that the kingdom of Christ is spiritual, as nevertheless it is; that therein Christ inwardly rules, strengthens, and comforts hearts, and imparts the Holy Ghost and various spiritual gifts], but they will judge that it is only the outward observance of certain forms of worship and rites. Likewise, what difference will there be between the people of the Law and the Church if the Church is an outward polity? But Paul distinguishes the Church from the people of the Law thus, that the Church is a spiritual people, i. e., that it has been distinguished from the heathen not by civil rites [not in the polity and civil affairs], but that it is the true people of God, regenerated by the Holy Ghost. Among the people of the Law, apart from the promise of Christ, also the carnal seed [all those who by nature were born Jews and Abraham's seed] had promises concerning corporeal things, of government, etc. And because of these even the wicked among them were called the people of God, because God had separated this carnal seed from other nations by certain outward ordinances and promises; and yet, these wicked persons did not please God. But the Gospel [which is preached in the Church] brings not merely the shadow of eternal things, but the eternal things themselves, the Holy Ghost and righteousness, by which we are righteous before God. [But every true Christian is even here upon earth partaker of eternal blessings, even of eternal comfort, of eternal life, and of the Holy Ghost, and of righteousness which is from God, until he will be completely saved in the world to come.]

Therefore, only those are the people, according to the Gospel, who receive this promise of the Spirit. Besides, the Church is the kingdom of Christ, distinguished from the kingdom of the devil. It is certain, however, that the wicked are in the power of the devil, and members of the kingdom of the devil, as Paul teaches, Eph. 2, 2, when he says that the devil now worketh in the children of disobedience. And Christ says to the Pharisees, who certainly had outward fellowship with the Church, i. e., with the saints among the people of the Law (for they held office, sacrificed, and taught): Ye are of your father, the devil, John 8, 44. Therefore, the Church, which is truly the kingdom of Christ, is properly the congregation of saints. For the wicked are ruled by the devil, and are captives of the devil; they are not ruled by the Spirit of Christ.

But what need is there of words in a manifest matter? [However, the adversaries contradict the plain truth.] If the Church, which is truly the kingdom of Christ, is distinguished from the kingdom of the devil, it follows necessarily that the wicked, since they are in the kingdom of the devil, are not the Church; although in this life, because the

enim hoc est regnum Christi, quod Spiritu suo vivificat, sive sit revelatum, sive sit tectum cruce. Sicut idem est Christus, qui nunc glorificatus est, antea afflicto erat. Et 19] conveniunt huc similitudines Christi, qui clare dicit Matth. 13, 38, bonum semen esse filios regni, at zizania filios diaboli; agrum dicit mundum esse, non ecclesiam. Ita Iohannes de illa tota gente Iudaeorum loquitur et dicit fore, ut vera ecclesia separetur ab illo populo. Itaque hic locus magis contra adversarios facit, quam pro eis, quia [R. 148 ostendit verum et spirituale populum a populo carnali separandum esse. Et Christus de specie ecclesiae dicit, quum ait Matth. 13, 47: Simile est regnum coelorum sagenae aut decem virginibus, et docet ecclesiam tectam esse multitudine malorum, ne id scandalum pios offendat; item ut sciamus Verbum et sacramenta efficacia esse, etsi tractentur a malis. Atque interim docet impios illos, quamvis habeant societatem externorum signorum, tamen non esse verum regnum Christi et membra Christi. 20] Sunt enim membra regni diaboli. Neque vero somniamus nos Platoniam civitatem, ut quidam impie cavillantur, sed dicimus existere hanc ecclesiam, videlicet vere credentes ac iustos sparsos per totum orbem. Et addimus notas: puram doctrinam evangelii et sacramenta. Et haec ecclesia proprie est columna veritatis, 1 Tim. 3, 15. Retinet enim purum evangelium et, ut Paulus inquit 1 Cor. 3, 12, fundamentum, hoc est, veram Christi cognitionem et fidem. Etsi sunt in his etiam multi imbecilles, qui supra fundamentum aedificant stipulas perituras, hoc est, quasdam inutiles opiniones, quae tamen, quia non evertunt fundamentum, tum condonantur illis, 21] tum etiam emendantur. Ac sanctorum patrum scripta testantur, quod interdum stipulas etiam aedificaverint supra fundamentum, sed quae non everterunt fidem eorum. Verum pleraque istorum, quae adversarii nostri defendunt, fidem evertunt, ut quod damnant articulum de remissione peccatorum, in quo dicimus fide accipi remissionem peccatorum. Manifestus item et perniciosus error est, quod docent adversarii mereri homines remissionem peccatorum dilectione erga Deum ante gratiam. Nam hoc quoque est tollere fundamentum, hoc est, Christum. Item, quid opus erit fide, si sacramenta ex opere operato 22] sine bono motu utentis iustificant? Sicut autem habet ecclesia promissionem, quod semper sit habitura Spiritum Sanctum, ita [R. 149 habet comminationes, quod sint futuri impii doctores et lupi. Illa vero est proprie ecclesia, quae habet Spiritum Sanctum. Lupi et mali doctores, etsi grassantur in ecclesia, tamen non sunt proprie regnum Christi. Sicut et Lyra testatur, quum ait: Ecclesia non consistit in hominibus ratione potestatis vel dignitatis ecclesiasticae vel saecularis, quia multi principes et summi pontifices et alii inferiores inventi sunt apostatasse a fide. Propter quod ecclesia consistit in illis personis, in quibus est notitia vera et confessio fidei et veritatis. Quid aliud diximus nos in confessione nostra, quam quod hic dicit Lyra?

darin auch Lehramt und andere Ämter mit haben. Und die Gottlosen sind darum mittlerweile nicht ein Stück des Reichs Christi, weil es noch nicht offenbart ist. Denn das rechte Reich Christi, der rechte Haufe Christi, sind und bleiben allezeit diejenigen, welche Gottes Geist erleuchtet hat, stärkt, regiert, ob es wohl vor der Welt noch nicht offenbart, sondern unterm Kreuz verborgen ist, gleichwie es allzeit ein Christus ist und bleibt, der die Zeit gekreuzigt ward und nun in ewiger Herrlichkeit herrscht und regiert im Himmel. Und da reimen sich auch die Gleichnisse Christi hin, da er klar sagt Matth. 13, daß „der gute Same seien die Kinder des Reichs, das Unkraut seien die Kinder des Teufels, der Acker sei die Welt“, nicht die Kirche. Also ist auch zu verstehen das Wort Johannis, da er sagt Matth. 3: „Er wird seine Lente segnen und den Weizen in seine Scheuer sammeln; aber die Spreu wird er verbrennen.“ Da redet er von dem ganzen jüdischen Volk und sagt, die rechte Kirche solle von dem Volk abgesondert werden. Derselbe Spruch ist den Widersachern mehr entgegen denn für sie. Denn er zeigt klar an, wie das recht gläubige, geistliche Volk solle von dem leiblichen Israel abgeschieden werden. Und da Christus spricht: „Das Himmelreich ist gleich einem Netze“, item, „den zehn Jungfrauen“, will er nicht, daß die Bösen die Kirche seien, sondern unterrichtet, wie die Kirche scheint [sichtbar wird] in dieser Welt. Darum spricht er, sie sei gleich diesem ufo.; das ist, wie im Haufen Fische die guten und bösen durcheinanderliegen, also ist die Kirche hier verborgen unter dem großen Haufen und Menge der Gottlosen, und will, daß sich die Frommen nicht ärgern sollen; item, daß wir wissen sollen, daß das Wort und die Sacramente darum nicht ohne Kraft seien, obgleich Gottlose predigen oder die Sacramente reichen. Und lehrt uns Christus damit also, daß die Gottlosen, ob sie wohl nach äußerlicher Gesellschaft in der Kirche sind, doch nicht Gliedmaßen Christi, nicht die rechte Kirche seien, denn sie sind Gliedmaßen des Teufels. Und wir reden nicht von einer erbicktesten Kirche, die nirgend zu finden sei, sondern wir sagen und wissen fürwahr, daß diese Kirche, darin Heilige leben, wahrhaftig auf Erden ist und bleibt, nämlich daß etliche Gotteskinder sind hin und wieder in aller Welt, in allerlei Königreichen, Inseln, Ländern, Städten, vom Aufgang der Sonne bis zum Niedergang, die Christum und das Evangelium recht erkannt haben; und [wir] sagen, dieselbe Kirche habe diese äußerlichen Zeichen: das Predigamt oder Evangelium und die Sacramente. Und dieselbe Kirche ist eigentlich, wie Paulus sagt, „eine Säule der Wahrheit“, denn sie behält das reine Evangelium, den rechten Grund. Und wie Paulus sagt: „Einen andern Grund kann niemand legen außer dem, der gelegt ist, welcher ist Christus.“ Auf den Grund sind nun die Christen gebaut. Und wiewohl nun in dem Haufen, welcher auf den rechten Grund, das ist, Christum und den Glauben, gebaut ist, viel Schwache sind, welche auf solchen Grund Stroh und Heu bauen, das ist, etliche menschliche Gedanken und Opinionen, mit welchen sie doch den Grund, Christum, nicht umstoßen noch verwerfen, derhalben sie dennoch Christen sind und werden ihnen solche Fehle vergeben, werden auch etwa erleuchtet und besser unterrichtet: also sehen wir in Vätern, daß sie auch bisweilen Stroh und Heu kingdom of Christ has not yet been revealed; they are mingled with the Church, and hold offices [as teachers, and other offices] in the Church. Neither are the wicked the kingdom of Christ, for the reason that the revelation has not yet been made. For that is always the kingdom which He quickens by His Spirit, whether it be revealed or be covered by the cross; just as He who has now been glorified is the same Christ who was before afflicted. And with this clearly agree the parables of Christ, who says, Matt. 13, 38, that the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the Wicked One. The field, He says, is the world, not the Church. Thus John [Matt. 3, 12: He will thoroughly purge His floor, and gather His wheat into the garner; but He will burn up the chaff] speaks concerning the whole race of the Jews, and says that it will come to pass that the true Church will be separated from that people. Therefore, this passage is more against the adversaries than in favor of them, because it shows that the true and spiritual people is to be separated from the carnal people. Christ also speaks of the outward appearance of the Church when He says, Matt. 13, 47: The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, likewise, to ten virgins; and He teaches that the Church has been covered by a multitude of evils, in order that this stumbling-block may not offend the pious; likewise, in order that we may know that the Word and Sacraments are efficacious even when administered by the wicked. And meanwhile He teaches that these godless men, although they have the fellowship of outward signs, are nevertheless not the true kingdom of Christ and members of Christ; for they are members of the kingdom of the devil. Neither, indeed, are we dreaming of a Platonic state, as some wickedly charge, but we say that this Church exists, namely, the truly believing and righteous men scattered throughout the whole world. [We are speaking not of an imaginary Church, which is to be found nowhere; but we say and know certainly that this Church, wherein saints live, is and abides truly upon earth; namely, that some of God's children are here and there in all the world, in various kingdoms, islands, lands, and cities, from the rising of the sun to its setting, who have truly learned to know Christ and His Gospel.] And we add the marks: the pure doctrine of the Gospel [the ministry or the Gospel] and the Sacraments. And this Church is properly the pillar of the truth, 1 Tim. 3, 15. For it retains the pure Gospel, and, as Paul says, 1 Cor. 3, 11 [: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ"], the foundation, i. e., the true knowledge of Christ and faith. Although among these [in the body which is built upon the true foundation, i. e., upon Christ and faith] there are also many weak persons, who build upon the foundation stubble that will perish, i. e., certain unprofitable opinions [some human thoughts and opinions], which, nevertheless, because they do not overthrow the foundation, are both forgiven them and also corrected. And the writings of the holy Fathers testify that sometimes even they built stubble upon the foundation, but that this did not overthrow their faith. But most of those errors which our adversaries defend, overthrow faith, as, their condemnation of the article concerning the remission of sins, in which we say that the remission of sins is received by faith. Likewise it is a manifest and pernicious error when the adversaries teach that men merit the remission of sins by love to God, prior to grace. [In the place of Christ they set up their works, orders, masses, just as the Jews, the heathen, and the Turks intend to be saved by their works.] For this also is to remove "the foundation," i. e., Christ. Likewise, what need will there be of faith if the Sacraments justify ex opere operato, without a good disposition on the part of the one using them? [without faith. Now, a person that does not regard faith as necessary has already lost Christ. Again, they set up the worship of saints, call upon them instead of Christ, the Mediator, etc.] But just as the Church has the promise that it will always have the Holy auf den Grund gebaut haben, doch haben sie damit den Grund nicht umstoßen wollen. Aber viele Artikel bei unsern Widersachern stößen den rechten Grund nieder, die Erkenntnis Christi und den Glauben. Denn sie verwerfen und verdammen den hohen, größten Artikel, da wir sagen, daß wir allein durch den Glauben, ohne alle Werke, Vergebung der Sünden durch Christum erlangen. Dagegen lehren sie vertrauen auf unsere Werke, damit Vergebung der Sünden zu verdienen, und setzen anstatt Christi ihre Werke, Orden, Messe, wie auch die Juden, Heiden und Türken mit eigenen Werken vorhaben selig zu werden. Item, sie lehren, die Sacramente machen fromm ex opere operato, ohne Glauben. Wer nun den Glauben nicht nötig achtet, der hat Christum bereits verloren. Item, sie richten Heiligendienst an, rufen sie an anstatt Christi, als Mittler usw. Wie aber klare Verheißungen Gottes in der Schrift stehen, daß die Kirche allezeit soll den Heiligen Geist haben, also stehen auch ernste Dräunungen in der Schrift, daß neben den rechten Predigern werden einschleichen falsche Lehrer und Wölfe. Diese ist aber eigentlich die christliche Kirche, die den Heiligen Geist hat. Die Wölfe und falsche Lehrer, wiewohl sie in der Kirche wüten und Schaden tun, so sind sie doch nicht die Kirche oder das Reich Christi, wie auch Ibra bezeugt, da er sagt: „Die rechte Kirche steht nicht auf Prälaten ihres Gewalts halben, denn viele hohen Standes, Fürsten und Bischöfe, auch viele niedern Standes sind vom Glauben abgefallen. Darum steht die Kirche auf denjenigen, in welchen ist eine rechte Erkenntnis Christi, eine rechte Konfession und Bekenntnis des Glaubens und der Wahrheit.“ Nun haben wir in unserer Konfession nichts anderes gesagt im Grunde denn eben das, was Ibra also mit klaren Worten sagt, daß er nicht klarer reden könnte.

Königreiche, über alle Lande und Leute, über alle Hand hat alles, beide weltliches und geistliches Schwert. Diese Definition, welche sich auf die rechte Kirche gar nicht, aber auf des römischen Papsts Wesen wohl reimt, findet man nicht allein in der Kanonisten Büchern, sondern Daniel der Prophet malt den Antichristen auf diese Weise.

25] Quodsi hoc modo definiremus ecclesiam, fortassis haberemus aequiores iudices. Multa enim exstant immoderate et impie scripta de potestate Romani pontificis, propter quae nemo unquam reus factus est. Nos soli plectimur, quia praedicamus beneficium [R. 150] Christi, quod fide in Christum consequamur remissionem peccatorum, non cultibus excogitatis a pontifice. Porro Christus, prophetarum et apostolorum longe aliter definiunt ecclesiam Christi quam regnum pontificium. Nec 27] est ad pontifices transferendum, quod ad veram ecclesiam pertinet, quod videlicet sint columnae veritatis, quod non errent. Quotusquisque enim curat evangelium aut iudicat dignum esse lectione? Multi etiam palam irrident religiones omnes, aut si quid probant, probant illa, quae humanae rationi consentanea sunt; cetera fabulosa esse arbitrantur 28] et similia tragoediis poetarum. Quare nos iuxta Scripturas sentimus ecclesiam pro-

Aber es wollten gern die Widersacher eine neue römische Definition der Kirche haben, daß wir sollten sagen, die Kirche ist die oberste Monarchia, die größte, mächtigste Hoheit in der ganzen Welt, darin der römische Papst als das Haupt der Kirche aller hohen und niedern Sachen und Handel, weltlicher, geistlicher, wie er will und denken darf, durchaus ganz mächtig ist, von welches [desse] Gewalt (er brauch's, mißbrauch's, wie er wolle) niemand disputieren, reden oder muten darf; item, in welcher Kirche der Papst Macht hat, Artikel des Glaubens zu machen, allerlei Gottesdienste aufzurichten, die Heilige Schrift nach allem seinem Gefallen abzutun, zu verkehren und zu deuten wider alle göttlichen Gesetze, wider sein eigen Dekretal, wider alle Kaiserrechte, wie oft, wieviel und wann es ihn gelüftet, Freiheit und Dispensation um Geld zu verkaufen, von welchem der römische Kaiser, alle Könige, Fürsten und Potentaten schuldig seien, ihre königliche Krone, ihre Herrlichkeit und Titel zu empfangen, als vom Statthalter Christi. Verbalten der Papst ein irdischer Gott, eine oberste Majestät und allein der großmächtigste Herr in aller Welt ist, über alle Güter, geistliche und weltliche, und also in seiner

Wenn wir eine solche Definition setzten und sagten, daß die Kirche wäre eine solche Pracht, wie des Papsts Wesen steht, so möchten wir vielleicht nicht so gar ungnädige Richter haben. Denn es sind der Widersacher Bücher am Tage, darin des Papsts Gewalt allzuhoch gehoben wird; dieselben straft niemand. Allein wir müssen behalten verhalten, daß wir Christus' Wohlthat preisen und hoch heben und die klaren Worte und Lehre der Apostel schreiben und predigen, nämlich daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch den Glauben an Jesum Christum und nicht durch Heuchelei oder erdichtete Gottesdienste, welche der Papst unzählig angerichtet. Christus aber und die Propheten und Apostel schreiben und reden gar viel anders davon, was die Kirche Christi sei, und des Papsts Reich will sich zu derselben Kirche gar nicht reimen, sondern steht ihr gar unähnlich. Darum soll man die Sprüche, so von der rechten Kirche reden, nicht auf die Päpste oder Bischöfe deuten, nämlich daß sie Säulen der Wahrheit

Ghost, so it has also the threatenings that there will be wicked teachers and wolves. But that is the Church in the proper sense which has the Holy Ghost. Although wolves and wicked teachers become rampant [rage and do injury] in the Church, yet they are not properly the kingdom of Christ. Just as Lyra also testifies, when he says: The Church does not consist of men with respect to power, or ecclesiastical or secular dignity, because many princes and archbishops and others of lower rank have been found to have apostatized from the faith. Therefore, the Church consists of those persons in whom there is a true knowledge and confession of faith and truth. What else have we said in our Confession than what Lyra here says [in terms so clear that he could not have spoken more clearly]?

But the adversaries perhaps require [a new Roman definition], that the Church be defined thus, namely, that it is the supreme outward monarchy of the whole world, in which the Roman pontiff necessarily has unquestioned power, which no one is permitted to dispute or censure [no matter whether he uses it rightly, or misuses it], to frame articles of faith; to abolish, according to his pleasure, the Scriptures [to pervert and interpret them contrary to all divine law, contrary to his own decretals, contrary to all imperial rights, as often, to as great an extent, and whenever it pleases him; to sell indulgences and dispensations for money]; to appoint rites of worship and sacrifices; likewise, to frame such laws as he may wish, and to dispense and exempt from whatever laws he may wish, divine, canonical, or civil; and that from him [as from the vicegerent of Christ] the Emperor and all kings receive, according to the command of Christ, the power and right to hold their kingdoms, from whom, since the Father has subjected all things to Him, it must be understood, this right was transferred to the Pope; therefore the Pope must necessarily be [a God on earth, the supreme Majesty,] lord of the whole world, of all the kingdoms of the world, of all things private and public, and must have absolute power in temporal and spiritual things, and both swords, the spiritual and temporal. Besides, this definition, not of the Church of Christ, but of the papal kingdom, has as its authors not only the canonists, but also Daniel 11, 36 ff. [Daniel, the prophet, represents Antichrist in this way.]

Now, if we would define the Church in this way [that it is such pomp, as is exhibited in the Pope's rule], we would perhaps have fairer judges. For there are many things extant written extravagantly and wickedly concerning the power of the Pope of Rome, on account of which no one has ever been arraigned. We alone are blamed, because we proclaim the beneficence of Christ [and write and preach the clear word and teaching of the apostles], that by faith in Christ we obtain remission of sins, and not by [hypocrisy or innumerable] rites of worship devised by the Pope. Moreover, Christ, the prophets, and the apostles define the Church of Christ far otherwise than as the papal kingdom. Neither must we transfer to the Popes what belongs to the true Church, namely, that they are pillars of the truth, that they do not err. For how many of them care for the Gospel, or judge that it [one little page, one letter of it] is worth being read? Many [in Italy and elsewhere] even publicly ridicule all religions, or, if they approve anything, they approve such things only as are in harmony prie dictam esse congregationem sanctorum, qui vere credunt evangelio Christi et habent Spiritum Sanctum. Et tamen fatemur multos hypocritas et malos his in hac vita admixtos habere societatem externorum signorum, qui sunt membra ecclesiae secundum societatem externorum signorum ideoque gerunt officia in ecclesia. Nec admittit sacramentis efficaciam, quod per indignos tractantur, quia repraesentant Christi personam propter vocationem ecclesiae, non repraesentant proprias personas, ut testatur Christus Luc. 10, 16: Qui vos audit, me audit. Quum Verbum Christi, quum sacramenta porrigunt, Christi vice et loco porrigunt. Id docet nos illa vox Christi, ne indignitate ministrorum offendamur.

bekennen doch auch, daß, solange dieses Leben auf Erden währt, viele Heuchler und Böse in der Kirchen seien unter den rechten Christen, welche auch Glieder sind der Kirche, sofern [es] äußerliche Zeichen betrifft. Denn sie haben Ämter in der Kirche, predigen, reichen Sakramente und tragen den Titel und Namen der Christen. Und die Sakramente, Taufe usw., sind darum nicht ohne Wirkung oder Kraft, daß sie durch Unwürdige und Gottlose gereicht werden. Denn um des Berufs willen der Kirche sind solche da, nicht für ihre eigene Person, sondern als Christus, wie Christus zeugt: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich.“ Also ist auch Judas zu predigen gesendet. Wenn nun gleich Gottlose predigen und die Sakramente reichen, so reichen sie dieselben an Christus' Statt. Und das lehrt uns das Wort Christi, daß wir in solchem Fall die Unwürdigkeit der Diener uns nicht sollen irren [irremachen] lassen.

29) Sed de hac re satis clare diximus in Confessione, nos improbare Donatistas et Vigilevitas, qui senserunt homines peccare, accipientes sacramenta ab indignis in ecclesia. Haec in praesentia videbantur sufficere ad defensionem descriptionis ecclesiae, quam tradidimus. Neque videmus, quum ecclesia proprie dicta appelletur corpus Christi, quomodo aliter describenda fuerit, quam nos descripsimus. Constat enim impios ad regnum et corpus diaboli pertinere, qui impellit et habet captivos impios. Haec sunt luce meridiana clariora, quae tamen si pergent calumniari adversarii, non gravabimur copiosius [R. 151] respondere.

30) Damnant adversarii et hanc partem septimi articuli, quod diximus ad veram unitatem ecclesiae satis esse, consentire de doctrina evangelii et administratione sacramentorum, nec necesse esse, ubique similes traditiones humanas esse seu ritus aut ceremonias ab hominibus institutas. Hic distinguunt universales et particulares ritus et probant articulum nostrum, si intelligatur de particularibus ritibus; de universalibus ritibus non recipiunt. Non satis intelligimus, quid velint adversarii. Nos de vera, hoc est, spirituali unitate loquimur, sine qua non potest existere fides in corde seu iustitia cordis coram Deo. Ad hanc, dicimus, non esse necessariam similitudinem rituum humanorum sive universalium sive particularium, quia iustitia fidei non est iustitia alligata certis traditionibus, sicut iustitia legis erat alligata Moisaicis ceremoniis, quia illa iustitia cordis est res vivificans corda. Ad hanc vivificationem nihil conducunt humanae traditiones sive universales, sive particulares, nec sunt

seien, item, daß sie nicht irren können. Denn wieviel findet man wohl oder wieviel sind bis anher gefunden unter Bischöfen, Päpsten usw., die sich des Evangelii mit Ernst und herzlich angenommen oder das Wort geachtet hätten, ein Blättlein, einen Buchstaben darin recht zu lesen. Man weiß wohl leider viele Exempel, daß ihrer viele in Weichland [Italien] und sonst sind, welche die ganze Religion, Christum und das Evangelium verachten und öffentlich für einen Spott halten. Und lassen sie ihnen etwas gefallen, so lassen sie ihnen das gefallen, das menschlicher Vernunft gemäß [ist]; das andere alles halten sie für Fabeln. Darum sagen und schließen wir nach der Heiligen Schrift, daß die rechte christliche Kirche sei der Haufe hin und wieder in der Welt derjenigen, die da wahrlich glauben dem Evangelio Christi und den Heiligen Geist haben. Und wir haben doch auch, daß, solange dieses Leben auf Erden währt, viele Heuchler und Böse in der Kirchen seien unter den rechten Christen, welche auch Glieder sind der Kirche, sofern [es] äußerliche Zeichen betrifft. Denn sie haben Ämter in der Kirche, predigen, reichen Sakramente und tragen den Titel und Namen der Christen. Und die Sakramente, Taufe usw., sind darum nicht ohne Wirkung oder Kraft, daß sie durch Unwürdige und Gottlose gereicht werden. Denn um des Berufs willen der Kirche sind solche da, nicht für ihre eigene Person, sondern als Christus, wie Christus zeugt: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich.“ Also ist auch Judas zu predigen gesendet. Wenn nun gleich Gottlose predigen und die Sakramente reichen, so reichen sie dieselben an Christus' Statt. Und das lehrt uns das Wort Christi, daß wir in solchem Fall die Unwürdigkeit der Diener uns nicht sollen irren [irremachen] lassen.

Aber von dem Stück haben wir klar genug geredet in unserer Confession, nämlich, daß wir es nicht halten mit den Donatisten und Willifiten, die da hielten, daß diejenigen sündigen, die die Sakramente in der Kirche von gottlosen Dienern empfangen. Dieses, achten wir, soll genug sein, zu schließen und zu erhalten die Definition, da wir gesagt, was die Kirche sei. Und nachdem [da] die rechte Kirche in der Schrift genannt wird Christus' Leib, so ist je gar nicht möglich, anders davon zu reden, denn wie wir davon geredet haben. Denn es ist je gewiß, daß die Heuchler und Gottlosen nicht Christus' Leib sein können, sondern in das Reich des Teufels gehören, welcher sie gefangen hat und treibt, wozu er will. Dieses alles ist ganz öffentlich und so klar, daß [es] niemand leugnen mag. Werden aber die Widersacher mit ihren Kalumnien fortfahren, soll ihnen ferner Antwort gegeben werden.

Auch verdammen die Widersacher dieses Stück vom siebten Artikel, da wir gesagt haben, daß genug sei zur Einigkeit der Kirche, daß einerlei Evangelium, einerlei Sakramente gereicht werden, und sei nicht not, daß die Menschenfassungen allenthalben gleichförmig seien. Diese Stücke lassen sie also zu, daß nicht not sei zur Einigkeit der Kirche, daß traditiones particulares gleich seien. Aber daß traditiones universales gleich seien, daß sei not zu wahrer Einigkeit der Kirche. Das ist eine gute, grobe distinctio. Wir sagen, daß diejenigen eine einträchtige Kirche heißen, die an einen Christum glauben, ein Evangelium, einen Geist, einen Glauben, einerlei Sakramente haben, und reden also von geistlicher Einigkeit, ohne welche der Glaube und ein christlich Wesen nicht sein kann. Zu derselben Einigkeit sagen wir nun, es sei nicht not, daß Menschenfassungen, sie seien universales oder particulares, allenthalben gleich seien. Denn die Gerechtigkeit, welche vor Gott gilt, die durch den Glauben kommt, ist nicht gebunden an äußerliche Ceremonien oder Menschenfassungen. Denn der Glaube with human reason, and regard the rest fabulous and like the tragedies of the poets. Wherefore we hold, according to the Scriptures, that the Church, properly so called, is the congregation of saints [of those here and there in the world], who truly believe the Gospel of Christ, and have the Holy Ghost. And yet we confess that in this life many hypocrites and wicked men, mingled with these, have the fellowship of outward signs, who are members of the Church according to this fellowship of outward signs, and accordingly bear offices in the Church [preach, administer the Sacraments, and bear the title and name of Christians]. Neither does the fact that the Sacraments are administered by the unworthy detract from their efficacy, because, on account of the call of the Church, they represent the person of Christ, and do not represent their own persons, as Christ testifies, Luke 10, 16: He that heareth you heareth Me. [Thus even Judas was sent to preach.] When they offer the Word of God, when they offer the Sacraments, they offer them in the stead and place of Christ. Those words of Christ teach us not to be offended by the unworthiness of the ministers.

But concerning this matter we have spoken with sufficient clearness in the Confession that we condemn the Donatists and Wyclifites, who thought that men sinned when they received the Sacraments from the unworthy in the Church. These things seem, for the present, to be sufficient for the defense of the description of the Church which we have presented. Neither do we see how, when the Church, properly so called, is named the body of Christ, it should be described otherwise than we have described it. For it is evident that the wicked belong to the kingdom and body of the devil, who impels and holds captive the wicked. These things are clearer than the light of noonday; however, if the adversaries still continue to pervert them, we will not hesitate to reply at greater length.

The adversaries condemn also the part of the Seventh Article in which we said that "to the unity of the Church it is sufficient to agree concerning the doctrine of the Gospel and the administration of the Sacraments; nor is it necessary that human traditions, rites, or ceremonies instituted by men should be alike everywhere." Here they distinguish between universal and particular rites, and approve our article if it be understood concerning particular rites; they do not receive it concerning universal rites. [That is a fine, clumsy distinction!] We do not sufficiently understand what the adversaries mean. We are speaking of true, i. e., of spiritual unity [we say that those are one harmonious Church who believe in one Christ; who have one Gospel, one Spirit, one faith, the same Sacraments; and we are speaking, therefore, of spiritual unity], without which faith in the heart, or righteousness of heart before God, cannot exist. For this we say that similarity of human rites, whether universal or particular, is not necessary, because the righteousness of faith is not a righteousness bound to certain traditions [outward ceremonies of human ordinances] as the righteousness of the Law was bound to the Mosaic ceremonies, because this righteousness of the heart is a matter that quickens the heart. To this quickening, human traditions, whether they be universal or particular, contribute nothing.

effectus Spiritus Sancti, sicut castitas, patientia, timor Dei, dilectio proximi et opera dilectionis.

32] Nec leves causae fuerunt, cur hunc articulum poneremus. Constat enim multas stultas opiniones de traditionibus serpsisse in ecclesiam. Nonnulli putaverunt humanas traditiones necessarios cultus esse ad promerendam iustificationem. Et postea disputaverunt, qui fieret, quod tanta varietate coleretur Deus, quasi vero observationes illae essent cultus, et non potius externae et politicae ordinationes, nihil ad iustitiam cordis seu cultum Dei pertinentes, quae alibi casu, alibi propter quasdam probabiles rationes variant. Item aliae ecclesiae alias propter tales traditiones excommunicaverunt, ut propter observationem Paschatis, picturas et res similes. [R. 152] Unde imperiti existimaverunt fidem seu iustitiam cordis coram Deo non posse existere sine his observationibus. Exstant enim de hoc negotio multa inepta scripta Summistarum et aliorum.

33] Sed sicut dissimilia spatia dierum ac noctium non laedunt unitatem ecclesiae, ita sentimus non laedi veram unitatem ecclesiae dissimilibus ritibus institutis ab hominibus. Quamquam placet nobis, ut universales ritus propter tranquillitatem serventur. Sicut et nos in ecclesiis ordinem missae, diem dominicum et alios dies festos celebriores libenter servamus. Et gratissimo animo amplectimur utiles ac veteres ordinationes, praesertim quum contineant paedagogiam, qua prodest populum et imperitos assuefacere ac docere. 34] Sed non disputamus nunc, an conducatur propter tranquillitatem aut corporalem utilitatem servare. Alia res agitur. Disputatur enim, utrum observationes traditionum humanarum sint cultus necessarii ad iustitiam coram Deo. Hoc est χρονόμενον in hac controversia, quo constituto postea iudicari potest, utrum ad veram unitatem ecclesiae necesse sit, ubique similes esse traditiones humanas. Si enim traditiones humanae non sunt cultus necessarii ad iustitiam coram Deo, sequitur posse iustos et filios Dei esse, etiamsi quas traditiones non habent, quae alibi receptae sunt. Ut si forma vestitus Germanici non est cultus Dei necessarius ad iustitiam coram Deo, sequitur posse iustos ac filios Dei et ecclesiam Christi esse, etiamsi qui utantur non Germanico, sed Gallico vestitu.

Gleichniß: Wenn dies steht, daß deutsche und französische Kleidung tragen nicht ein nötiger Gottesdienst sei, so folgt, daß etliche gerecht, heilig und in der Kirche Christi sein können, die auch gleich nicht deutsche oder französische Kleidung tragen.

35] Hoc clare docet Paulus ad Col. 2, 16. 17, quum ait: Nemo vos iudicet in cibo aut in potu aut in parte diei festi aut neomeniae aut sabbatorum, quae sunt umbra futurorum, corpus autem Christi. Item, v. 20 sqq.: Si mortui estis cum Christo ab elementis mundi, quid adhuc tamquam viventes mundo decreta facitis: ne tetigeritis, neque gustaveritis, ist ein Nicht im Herzen, daß die Herzen verneuert und lebendig macht; da helfen äußerliche Satzungen oder Ceremonien, sie sind [seien] universal oder particular, wenig zu.

Und es hat nicht geringe Ursachen gehabt, daß wir den Artikel gesetzt haben; denn es ist gar mancher große Irrtum und närrische Opinion von den Satzungen eingerissen in der Kirche. Etliche haben wollen wähnen, daß christliche Heiligkeit und Glaube ohne solche Menschen Satzungen nicht gelte vor Gott, könne auch niemand [ein] Christ sein, er halte denn solche traditiones, so sie doch nichts anderes sind denn äußerliche Ordnungen, welche oft zufällig, oft auch aus Ursachen an einem Ort anders sind denn am andern; wie im weltlichen Regiment eine Stadt andere Gebräuche hat denn die andere. Auch liest man in Historien, daß eine Kirche die andern in Bann getan solcher Satzungen halben, als um des Osters tags willen, um der Bilder willen und dergleichen. Darum haben die Unerfahrenen nicht anders gehalten, denn daß man durch solche Ceremonien vor Gott fromm würde, und daß niemand [ein] Christ sein könnte ohne solche Gottesdienste und Ceremonien. Denn es sind gar viel ungeschickte Bücher der Summisten und anderer davon noch vor Augen.

Aber wie die Einigkeit der Kirche dadurch nicht getrennt wird, ob in einem Lande, an einem Ort die Tage natürlich länger oder kürzer sind denn am andern, also halten wir auch, daß die Einigkeit der Kirche dadurch nicht getrennt wird, ob solche Menschen Satzungen an einem Ort diese, am andern jene Ordnung haben. Wiewohl es uns auch wohlgefällt, daß die Universalceremonien um Einigkeit und guter Ordnung willen gleichförmig gehalten werden, wie wir denn in unsern Kirchen die Messe, des Sonntags Feier und die andern hohen Feiern auch behalten. Und wir lassen uns gefallen alle guten, nützlichen Menschen Satzungen, sonderlich die da zu einer feinen, äußerlichen Zucht dienen der Jugend und des Volks. Aber hier ist die Frage darüber nicht, ob Menschen Satzungen um äußerlicher Zucht willen, um Friedens willen zu halten seien: es ist gar viel eine andere Frage, nämlich ob solche Menschen Satzungen halten ein Gottesdienst sei, dadurch man Gott versöhne, und daß ohne solche Satzungen niemand vor Gott gerecht sein möge. Das ist die Hauptfrage. Wenn darauf schließlich und endlich geantwortet ist, so ist danach klar zu urteilen, ob das heiße einig oder einträchtig mit der Kirche sein, wenn wir allenthalben solche Satzungen zugleich [gleich] halten. Denn so solche Menschen Satzungen nicht ein nötiger Gottesdienst sind, so folgt, daß etliche fromm, heilig, gerecht, Gottesfinder und Christen sein können, die gleich nicht die Ceremonien haben, so in andern Kirchen im Gebrauch sind. Als ein

Also lehrt auch Paulus klar zu den Kolossern am 2: „So laßt nun niemand euch Gewissen machen über Speise, Trank oder bestimmte Feiertage oder Neumonden oder Sabbate, welche sind der Schatten von dem, daß zukünftig war, aber der Körper selbst ist in Christo.“ Item: „So ihr denn nun abgestorben seid mit Christo den Satzungen der Welt, was laßt ihr euch denn ing; neither are they effects of the Holy Ghost, as are chastity, patience, the fear of God, love to one's neighbor, and the works of love.

Neither were the reasons trifling why we presented this article. For it is evident that many [great errors and] foolish opinions concerning traditions had crept into the Church. Some thought that human traditions were necessary services for meriting justification [that without such human ordinances Christian holiness and faith are of no avail before God; also that no one can be a Christian unless he observe such traditions, although they are nothing but an outward regulation]. And afterwards they disputed how it came to pass that God was worshiped with such variety, as though, indeed, these observances were acts of worship, and not rather outward and political ordinances, pertaining in no respect to righteousness of heart or the worship of God, which vary, according to the circumstances, for certain probable reasons, sometimes in one way, and at other times in another [as in worldly governments one state has customs different from another]. Likewise some Churches have excommunicated others because of such traditions, as the observance of Easter, pictures, and the like. Hence the ignorant have supposed that faith, or the righteousness of the heart before God, cannot exist [and that no one can be a Christian] without these observances. For many foolish writings of the Summists and of others concerning this matter are extant.

But just as the dissimilar length of day and night does not injure the unity of the Church, so we believe that the true unity of the Church is not injured by dissimilar rites instituted by men; although it is pleasing to us that, for the sake of tranquillity [unity and good order], universal rites be observed, just as also in the churches we willingly observe the order of the Mass, the Lord's Day, and other more eminent festival days. And with a very grateful mind we embrace the profitable and ancient ordinances, especially since they contain a discipline by which it is profitable to educate and train the people and those who are ignorant [the young people]. But now we are not discussing the question whether it be of advantage to observe them on account of peace or bodily profit. Another matter is treated of. For the question at issue is, whether the observances of human traditions are acts of worship necessary for righteousness before God. This is the point to be judged in this controversy, and when this is decided, it can afterwards be judged whether to the true unity of the Church it is necessary that human traditions should everywhere be alike. For if human traditions be not acts of worship necessary for righteousness before God, it follows that also they can be righteous and be the sons of God who have not the traditions which have been received elsewhere. F. i., if the style of German clothing is not worship of God, necessary for righteousness before God, it follows that men can be righteous and sons of God and the Church of Christ, even though they use a costume that is not German, but French.

Paul clearly teaches this to the Colossians, 2, 16. 17: Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ. Likewise, v. 20 sqq.: If ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the

Et in eandem sententiam inquit Rom. 14, 17: Regnum Dei non est esca et potus, sed iustitia* [37] *et pax et gaudium in Spiritu Sancto. [38] Adversarii dicunt universales traditiones ideo servandas esse, quia existimentur ab apostolis traditae esse. O religiosos homines! Ritus ab apostolis sumptos retineri volunt, non volunt retineri doctrinam apostolorum. [39] Sic iudicandum est de ritibus illis, sicut ipsi apostoli in suis scriptis iudicant. Non enim voluerunt apostoli nos sentire, quod per tales ritus iustificemur, quod tales ritus sint res necessariae ad iustitiam coram Deo. Non voluerunt apostoli tale onus imponere conscientiae; non voluerunt iustitiam et peccatum collocare in observationibus dierum, ci- [40] horum et similium rerum. Imo Paulus appellat huiusmodi opiniones doctrinas daemoniorum, 1 Tim. 4, 1. Itaque voluntas et consilium apostolorum ex scriptis eorum quaeri debet; non est satis allegare exemplum. Servabant certos dies, non quod ea observatio ad iustificationem necessaria esset, sed ut populus sciret, quo tempore conveniendum esset. Servabant et alios quosdam ritus, ordinem [R. 154] lectionum, si quando conveniebant. Quaedam etiam ex patriis moribus, ut sit, retinebat populus, quae apostoli nonnihil mutata ad historiam evangelii accommodaverunt, ut Pascha, Pentecosten, ut non solum docendo, sed etiam per haec exempla memoriam maximarum [41] rerum traderent posteris. Quodsi haec tradita sunt tamquam necessaria ad iustificationem, cur in his ipsis postea multa mutarentur episcopi? Quodsi erant iuris divini, non licuit ea mutare auctoritate humana. Pascha [42] ante synodum Nicaenam alii alio tempore servabant. Neque haec dissimilitudo laesit fidem. Postea ratio inita est, ne incideret nostrum Pascha in Iudaici Paschatis tempus. At apostoli iusserant ecclesias servare Pascha cum fratribus conversis ex fangen mit Säkungen, als lebet ihr noch in der Welt? Die da sagen: Du sollst das nicht an- greifen, du sollst das nicht kosten, du sollst das nicht anrühren, welches sich doch alles unter den Händen verzehrt und ist Menschengebot und -lehre; welche haben einen Schein der Weisheit durch selbst erwählte Geistlichkeit und Demut.“ Denn das ist Pauli Meinung: Der Glaube im Herzen, dadurch wir fromm werden, ist ein geist- lich Ding und Licht im Herzen, dadurch wir ver- neuert werden, andern Sinn und Mut gewinnen. Die Menschensäkungen aber sind nicht ein solch lebendig Licht und Kraft des Heiligen Geistes im Herzen, sind nichts Ewiges; darum machen sie nicht ewig Leben, sondern sind äußerliche, leibliche Übungen, die das Herz nicht ändern. Darum ist nicht zu halten, daß sie nötig seien zu der Gerech- tigkeit, die vor Gott gilt. Und auf die Meinung redet Paulus auch zu den Römern am 14: „Das Reich Gottes ist nicht Speise und Trank, sondern Gerechtigkeit, Friede und Freude im Heiligen Geist.“ Aber es ist nicht not, hier viel Sprüche anzuzeigen, so die ganze Bibel deren voll ist, und wir auch in unserer Konfession, in den letzten Artikeln, deren viele vorgebracht; so wollen wir dieser Sache Hauptfrage hernach auch sonderlich handeln, nämlich ob solche Menschensäkungen ein Gottesdienst seien, welcher not sei zur Seligkeit, da wir denn reichlicher und mehr von dieser Sache reden wollen.

Die Widersacher sagen, man müsse darum solche Säkungen, sonderlich die Universalzeremonien, halten; denn es sei vermutlich, daß sie von den Aposteln auf uns geerbt [seien]. O wie große, heilige, treffliche, apostolische Leute! Wie fromm und geistlich sind sie doch nun geworden! Die Säkungen und Zeremonien, von den Aposteln, wie sie sagen, ausgerichtet, wollen sie halten, und der Apostel Lehre und klare Worte wollen sie nicht halten. Wir sagen aber und wissen, daß es recht ist: Man soll also und nicht anders von allen Säkungen lehren, urteilen und reden, denn wie die Apostel selbst in ihren Schriften davon gelehrt haben. Die Apostel aber setzten auf das allers- stärkste und heftigste allenthalben nicht allein wider diejenigen, so Menschensäkungen wollen hoch heben, sondern auch, die das göttliche Gesetz, die Zeremonien der Beschneidung usw. wollten als nötig achten zur Seligkeit. Die Apostel haben in keinem Weg eine solche Bürde auf die Gewissen legen wollen, daß solche Säkungen von gewissen Tagen, von Fasten, von Speise und dergleichen sollten Sünde sein, so man's nicht hielte. Und, daß mehr ist, Paulus nennt klar solche Lehren Teufelslehren. Darum was die Apostel in dem für gut und recht gehalten, das muß man aus ihren klaren Schriften suchen und nicht allein Exempel anzeigen. Sie haben wohl gehalten etliche gewisse Tage, nicht daß solches nötig wäre, vor Gott fromm und gerecht zu werden, sondern daß das Volk wüßte, wann es sollte zusammen- kommen. Auch haben sie wohl etliche Gebräuche und Zeremonien gehalten, als ordentliche Sektion in der Bibel, wenn sie zusammentamen usw. Auch haben im Anfang der Kirche die Juden, so Chris- ten geworden, viel behalten von ihren jüdischen Festen und Zeremonien, welches die Apostel da- nach auf die Historien des Evangelii gerichtet haben. Also sind unsere Öftern von der Juden world, are ye subject to ordinances (touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using), after the commandments and doctrines of men? Which things have, indeed, a show of wisdom in will-worship and humility. For the meaning is: Since righteousness of the heart is a spiritual matter, quickening hearts, and it is evident that human traditions do not quicken hearts, and are not effects of the Holy Ghost, as are love to one's neighbor, chastity, etc., and are not instruments through which God moves hearts to believe, as are the divinely given Word and Sacraments, but are usages with regard to matters that pertain in no respect to the heart, which perish with the using, we must not believe that they are necessary for righteousness before God. [They are nothing eternal; hence, they do not procure eternal life, but are an external bodily discipline, which does not change the heart.] And to the same effect he says, Rom. 14, 17: The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. But there is no need to cite many testimonies, since they are everywhere obvious in the Scriptures, and in our Confession we have brought together very many of them, in the latter articles. And the point to be decided in this controversy must be repeated after a while, namely, whether human traditions be acts of worship necessary for righteousness before God. There we will discuss this matter more fully.

The adversaries say that universal traditions are to be observed because they are supposed to have been handed down by the apostles. What religious men they are! They wish that the rites derived from the apostles be retained; they do not wish the doctrine of the apostles to be retained. They must judge concerning these rites just as the apostles themselves judge in their writings. For the apostles did not wish us to believe that through such rites we are justified, that such rites are necessary for righteousness before God. The apostles did not wish to impose such a burden upon consciences; they did not wish to place righteousness and sin in the observance of days, food, and the like. Yea, Paul calls such opinions doctrines of devils, 1 Tim. 4, 1. Therefore the will and advice of the apostles ought to be derived from their writings; it is not enough to mention their example. They observed certain days, not because this observance was necessary for justification, but in order that the people might know at what time they should assemble. They observed also certain other rites and orders of lessons whenever they assembled. The people [In the beginning of the Church the Jews who had become Christians] retained also from the customs of the Fathers [from their Jewish festivals and ceremonies], as is commonly the case, certain things which, being somewhat changed, the apostles adapted to the history of the Gospel, as the Passover, Pentecost, so that not only by teaching, but also through these examples they might hand down to posterity the memory of the most important subjects. But if these things were handed down as necessary for justification, why afterwards did the bishops change many things in these very matters? For, if they were matters of divine right, it was not lawful to change them by human authority. Before the Synod of Nice, some observed Easter at one time and others at another time. Neither did this want of uniformity injure faith. Afterward the plan was adopted by which our Passover [Easter] did not fall at the same time as that of the Jewish Passover. But the apostles had commanded the Churches to observe the Passover with the brethren who had been converted from Judaism. Therefore, after the Synod of Nice, certain nations tenaciously held to the custom of observing the Jewish time.

Iudaismo. Itaque hunc morem quaedam gentes pertinaciter post synodum Nicaenam retinuerunt, ut Iudaicum tempus observarent. Verum apostoli decreto illo non voluerunt ecclesiis imponere necessitatem, id quod verba decreti testantur. lubet enim, ne quis curet, etiamsi fratres servantes Pascha non recte supputent tempus. Verba decreti exstant apud Epiphanium: *Ἦμεῖς μὴ ψηφίζετε, ἀλλὰ ποιεῖτε, διὰ τὸν ὅτι ἀδελφοὶ ὑμῶν οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, μετ' αὐτῶν ἅμα ποιεῖτε, καὶ τὴν πλανηθῶσι, μηδὲν ὑμῖν μελέτω. Haec scribit Epiphanius verba esse apostolorum in decreto quodam posita de Paschate, in quibus prudens lector facile potest iudicare, apostolos voluisse populo stultam opinionem de necessitate certi temporis eximere, quum prohibent curare, 43] etiamsi in supputando erretur. Porro quidam in Oriente, qui Audiani appellati sunt ab auctore dogmatis, propter hoc decretum apostolorum contenderunt Pascha cum Iudaeis servandum esse. Hos refellens Epiphanius laudat decretum et inquit nihil continere, quod dissentiat a fide aut ecclesiastica regula, et vituperat Audianos, quod non recte intelligant τὸ ὁμῶν, et interpretatur in hanc sententiam, in quam nos interpretamur, [R. 155] quod non senserint apostoli referre, quo tempore servaretur Pascha, sed quia praecipui fratres ex Iudaeis conversi erant, qui morem suum servabant, horum exemplum propter 44] concordiam voluerint reliquos sequi. Et sapienter admonuerunt lectorem apostoli, se neque libertatem evangelicam tollere, neque necessitatem conscientiae imponere, quia adductum non esse curandum, etiamsi erretur in supputando.

Rechnung des Oftertags geirrt sei. [Die im lateinischen Text zitierte griechische Stelle findet sich nicht in den sogenannten Apostolischen Konstitutionen; auch Epiphanius, gestorben 402, findet den apostolischen Ursprung derselben zweifelhaft.]

45] Multa huius generis colligi possunt ex historiis, in quibus apparet dissimilitudinem humanarum observationum non laedere unitatem fidei. Quamquam quid opus est disputatione? Omnino quid sit iustitia fidei, quid sit regnum Christi, non intelligunt adversarii, si iudicant necessariam esse similitudinem observationum in cibis, diebus, vestitu et similibus rebus, quae non habent mandata 46] tum Dei. Videte autem religiosos homines, adversarios nostros! Requiritur ad unitatem ecclesiae similes observationes humanas, quum ipsi mutaverint ordinationem Christi in usu coenae, quae certe fuit antea ordinatio universalis. Quodsi ordinationes universales necessariae sunt, cur mutant ipsi ordinationem coenae Christi, quae non est humana, sed divina? Sed de hac tota controversia infra aliquoties dicendum erit.

Ostern und unsere Pfingsten von der Juden Pfingsten hergelommen. Und haben die Apostel nicht allein mit Lehren, sondern auch durch solche Feste von der Historie die Erkenntnis Christi und den großen Schatz auf die Nachkommen erben wollen. So nun solche und dergleichen Zeremonien nötig sind zur Seligkeit, warum haben hernach die Bischöfe viel darin verändert? Denn sind sie durch Gottes Befehl eingesezt, so hat kein Mensch Macht gehabt, sie zu verändern. Die Ostern hat man vor dem Concilio zu Nizäa an einem Ort auf eine andere Zeit gehalten denn am andern. Und die Ungleichheit hat dem Glauben oder der christlichen Einigkeit nichts geschadet. Danach hat man mit Gleich den Oftertag verrückt, daß unser Oftertag mit der Juden Oftertag je nicht sollte übereintreffen. Die Apostel aber haben befohlen, in [den] Kirchen den Oftertag also auf die Zeit zu halten, wie ihn die Brüder, so aus dem Judentum bekehrt waren, hielten. Darum haben etliche Bistümer und Völker, auch nach dem Concilio zu Nizäa, hart darüber gehalten, daß der Oftertag mit dem jüdischen Oftertag sollte [zu] gleicher Zeit gehalten werden. Aber die Apostel haben mit ihrem Dekret den Kirchen nicht wollen eine solche Last auflegen, als wäre solches nötig zur Seligkeit, wie die klaren Worte auch desselben ihres Dekrets anzeigen; denn sie drücken's mit klaren Worten aus, „daß niemand sich darum bekümmern solle, ob die Brüder, so Oftertag halten usw., gleich die Zeit nicht eigentlich abrechnen“. Denn Epiphanius zieht an die Worte der Apostel, daraus ein jeder Verständiger klar zu merken hat, daß die Apostel die Leute von dem Irrtum haben wollen abweisen, damit ihm niemand Gewissen mache über Feiertage, gewisse Zeit usw. Denn sie sehen klar dazu, man solle sich nicht groß darum bekümmern, ob schon in der Vergleichen unzählig könnte ich aus den Historien vorbringen und noch klarer anzeigen, daß solche Ungleichheit an [in] äußerlichen Sazungen niemand von der gemeinen Christenkirche absondert oder scheidet. Die Widerjacher verstehen gar nicht, was der Glaube, was das Reich Christi sei, die da lehren, daß in den Sazungen, welche von Speise, von Tragen, von Kleidung und dergleichen Dingen reden, die Gott nicht geboten hat, die Einigkeit der christlichen Kirche stehe. Es mag aber hier jedermann sehen und merken, wie anmaßliche, überaus heilige Leute die Widerjacher seien. Denn so Universalordnungen nötig sind und nicht sollen geändert werden, wer hat ihnen befohlen, die Ordnung im Abendmahl Christi zu ändern, welche nicht eine Menschenjahung ist, sondern eine göttliche Ordnung? Aber davon wollen wir hernach sonderlich handeln.

Den VIII. Artikel lassen ihnen die Widerjacher ganz gefallen, da wir sagen, daß auch Heuchler und Gottlose in der Kirche gefunden werden, und daß die Sacramente nicht darum ohne Kraft seien, ob sie durch Heuchler gerichtet werden: denn sie reichen's an Christus' Statt und nicht für ihre Person, wie der Spruch lautet: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich.“ Doch soll man falsche Lehrer nicht annehmen oder hören; denn dieselben sind nicht

But the apostles, by this decree, did not wish to impose necessity upon the Churches, as the words of the decree testify. For it bids no one to be troubled, even though his brethren, in observing Easter, do not compute the time aright. The words of the decree are extant in Epiphanius: Do not calculate, but celebrate it whenever your brethren of the circumcision do; celebrate it at the same time with them, and even though they may have erred, let not this be a care to you. Epiphanius writes that these are the words of the apostles presented in a decree concerning Easter, in which the discreet reader can easily judge that the apostles wished to free the people from the foolish opinion of a fixed time, when they prohibit them from being troubled, even though a mistake should be made in the computation. Some, moreover, in the East, who were called, from the author of the dogma, Audians, contended, on account of this decree of the apostles, that the Passover should be observed with the Jews. Epiphanius, in refuting them, praises the decree, and says that it contains nothing which deviates from the faith or rule of the Church, and blames the Audians because they do not understand aright the expression, and interprets it in the sense in which we interpret it, because the apostles did not consider it of any importance at what time the Passover should be observed, but because prominent brethren had been converted from the Jews, who observed their custom, and, for the sake of harmony, wished the rest to follow their example. And the apostles wisely admonished the reader neither to remove the liberty of the Gospel, nor to impose necessity upon consciences, because they add that they should not be troubled even though there should be an error in making the computation.

Many things of this class can be gathered from the histories, in which it appears that a want of uniformity in human observances does not injure the unity of faith [separate no one from the universal Christian Church]. Although, what need is there of discussion? The adversaries do not at all understand what the righteousness of faith is, what the kingdom of Christ is, when they judge that uniformity of observances in food, days, clothing, and the like, which do not have the command of God, is necessary. But look at the religious men, our adversaries. For the unity of the Church they require uniform human observances, although they themselves have changed the ordinance of Christ in the use of the Supper, which certainly was a universal ordinance before. But if universal ordinances are so necessary, why do they themselves change the ordinance of Christ's Supper, which is not human, but divine? But concerning this entire controversy we shall have to speak at different times below.

The entire Eighth Article has been approved, in which we confess that hypocrites and wicked persons have been mingled with the Church, and that the Sacraments are efficacious even though dispensed by wicked ministers, because the ministers act in the place of Christ, and do not represent their own persons, according to Luke 10, 16: He that heareth you heareth Me. Impious teachers are to be deserted [are not to be re-christi. Et Christus ait Matth. 7, 15: Cavete a pseudoprophetis. Et Paulus Gal. 1, 9: Si quis aliud evangelium evangelizaverit, anathema sit.

Nam tenere proprium civilis ordinatio est. Licet autem Christianis uti civilibus ordinationibus, sicut hoc aëre, hac luce, cibo, potu. Nam ut haec rerum natura et hi siderum certi motus vere sunt ordinatio Dei et conservantur a Deo, ita legitimae politicae vere sunt ordinatio Dei et retinentur ac defenduntur a Deo adversus diabolum.

[Art. IX. De Baptismo.]

51) Nonus articulus approbatus est, in quo confitemur, quod Baptismus sit necessarius ad salutem, et quod pueri sint baptizandi, et quod baptismus puerorum non sit irritus, sed necessarius et efficax ad salutem. Et quoniam evangelium pure ac diligenter apud nos docetur, Dei beneficio hunc quoque fructum ex eo capimus, quod in ecclesiis nostris nulli exstiterunt Anabaptistae, quia populus Verbo Dei adversus impiam et seditiosam factionem illorum latronum munitus est. Et quum plebrosque alios errores Anabaptistarum damnamus, tum hunc quoque, quod disputant baptismum parvulorum inutilem esse. Certissimum est enim, quod promissio salutis pertinet etiam ad parvulos. Neque vero pertinet ad illos, qui sunt extra ecclesiam Christi, ubi nec Verbum nec sacramenta sunt, quia regnum Christi tantum cum Verbo et sacramentis existit. Igitur necesse est baptizare parvulos, ut applicetur eis promissio salutis iuxta mandatum Christi, Matth. 28, 19: Baptizate omnes gentes. Ubi sicut offertur omnibus salus, ita offertur omnibus baptismus: viris, mulieribus, pueris, infantibus. Sequitur igitur clare infantes baptizandos esse, quia salus cum 53) baptismo offertur. Secundo manifestum est, quod Deus approbat baptismum [R. 157] parvulorum. Igitur Anabaptistae impie sentiunt, qui damnant baptismum parvulorum. Quod autem Deus approbet baptismum parvulorum, hoc ostendit, quod Deus dat Spiritum Sanctum sic baptizatis. Nam si hic baptismus irritus esset, nullis daretur Spiritus Sanctus, nulli fierent salvi, denique nulla esset ecclesia. Haec ratio bonas et pias mentes vel sola satis confirmare potest contra impias et fanaticas opiniones Anabaptistarum.

mehr an Christus' Statt, sondern sind Widerchristi. Und Christus hat von denen klar befohlen: „Hütet euch vor den falschen Propheten“; und Paulus zu den Galatern: „Wer euch ein ander Evangelium predigt, der sei verflucht.“

Sonst, was der Priester eigen Leben belangt, hat uns Christus vermahnt in den Gleichnissen von der Kirche, daß wir nicht schismata oder Trennungen sollen anrichten, ob die Priester oder das Volk nicht allenthalben rein, christlich leben, wie die Donatisten getan haben. Diejenigen aber, die darum an etlichen Orten haben schismata und Trennungen angerichtet, daß sie vorgeben, die Priester dürften nicht Güter oder Eigenes haben, die achten wir für aufrührerisch. Denn Eigenes haben, Güter haben ist eine weltliche Ordnung. Die Christen aber mögen allerlei weltliche Ordnung so frei brauchen, als sie der Luft, Speise, Trank, gemeines Lichts brauchen. Denn gleichwie Himmel, Erde, Sonne, Mond und Sterne Gottes Ordnung sind und von Gott erhalten werden, also sind Politien und alles, was zur Polizei gehört, Gottes Ordnung und werden erhalten und beschützt von Gott wider den Teufel.

Artikel IX. Von der Taufe.

Den neunten Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher auch gefallen, da wir bekennen, daß die Taufe zur Seligkeit vonnöthen sei, und daß die Taufe der jungen Kinder nicht vergeblich sei, sondern nötig und seliglich. Und dieneil das Evangelium bei uns rein und mit allem Fleiß gepredigt wird, so haben wir auch, Gott Lob, den großen Nutzen und selige Frucht davon, daß nicht Wiedertäufer in unsere Kirchen eingerissen [sind]. Denn unser Volk ist, Gott Lob, unterrichtet durch Gottes Wort wider die gottlosen, aufrührerischen Kotten derselben mörderischen Bösewichte, und so wir viel andere Irrtümer der Wiedertäufer dämpfen und verdammen, so haben wir den doch sonderlich wider sie erstritten und erhalten, daß die Kindertaufe nicht unnütz sei. Denn es ist ganz gewiß, daß die göttlichen Verheißungen der Gnade des Heiligen Geistes nicht allein die Alten, sondern auch die Kinder betreffen. Nun gehen die Verheißungen diejenigen nicht an, so außerhalb der Kirche Christi sind, da weder Evangelium noch Sacrament ist. Denn das Reich Christi ist nirgend, denn wo das Wort Gottes und die Sacramente sind. Darum ist es auch recht christlich und not, die Kinder zu taufen, damit sie des Evangelii, der Verheißung des Heils und der Gnade theilhaftig werden, wie Christus befiehlt: „Gehet hin, taufet alle Völker.“ Wie ihnen nun wird Gnade, Heil in Christo, also wird ihnen angeboten die Taufe, beide Männern und Weibern, Knaben und jungen Kindern. So folgt gewiß daraus, daß man die jungen Kinder taufen mag und soll, denn in und mit der Taufe wird ihnen die gemeine Gnade und der Schatz des Evangelii angeboten. Zum andern ist's am Tage, daß Gott der Herr ihm gefallen läßt die Taufe der jungen Kinder. Derhalben lehren die Wiedertäufer unrecht, so dieselbe Taufe verdammen. Daß aber Gott Gefallen hat an der Taufe der jungen Kinder, zeigt er damit an, daß er vielen, so in der Kindheit getauft sind, den Heiligen Geist hat gegeben; denn es sind viel heilige Leute in der Kirche gewesen, die nicht anders getauft sind.

ceived or heard], because these do not act any longer in the place of Christ, but are anti-christs. And Christ says Matt. 7, 15: Beware of false prophets. And Paul, Gal. 1, 9: If any man preach any other gospel unto you, let him be accursed.

Moreover, Christ has warned us in His parables concerning the Church, that when offended by the private vices, whether of priests or people, we should not excite schisms, as the Donatists have wickedly done. As to those, however, who have excited schisms, because they denied that priests are permitted to hold possessions and property, we hold that they are altogether seditious. For to hold property is a civil ordinance. It is lawful, however, for Christians to use civil ordinances, just as they use the air, the light, food, drink. For as this order of the world and fixed movements of the heavenly bodies are truly God's ordinances and these are preserved by God, so lawful governments are truly God's ordinances, and are preserved and defended by God against the devil.

Article IX: Of Baptism.

The Ninth Article has been approved, in which we confess that Baptism is necessary to salvation, and that children are to be baptized, and that the baptism of children is not in vain, but is necessary and effectual to salvation. And since the Gospel is taught among us purely and diligently, by God's favor we receive also from it this fruit, that in our Churches no Anabaptists have arisen [have not gained ground in our Churches], because the people have been fortified by God's Word against the wicked and seditious faction of these robbers. And as we condemn quite a number of other errors of the Anabaptists, we condemn this also, that they dispute that the baptism of little children is unprofitable. For it is very certain that the promise of salvation pertains also to little children [that the divine promises of grace and of the Holy Ghost belong not alone to the old, but also to children]. It does not, however, pertain to those who are outside of Christ's Church, where there is neither Word nor Sacraments, because the kingdom of Christ exists only with the Word and Sacraments. Therefore it is necessary to baptize little children, that the promise of salvation may be applied to them, according to Christ's command, Matt. 28, 19: Baptize all nations. Just as here salvation is offered to all, so Baptism is offered to all, to men, women, children, infants. It clearly follows, therefore, that infants are to be baptized, because with Baptism salvation [the universal grace and treasure of the Gospel] is offered. Secondly, it is manifest that God approves of the baptism of little children. Therefore the Anabaptists, who condemn the baptism of little children, believe wickedly. That God, however, approves of the baptism of little children is shown by this, namely, that God gives the Holy Ghost to those thus baptized [to many who have been baptized in childhood]. For if this baptism would be in vain, the Holy Ghost would be given to none, none would be saved, and finally there would be no Church. [For there have been many holy men in the Church who have not been baptized otherwise.] This reason, even taken alone, can sufficiently establish good and godly minds against the godless and fanatical opinions of the Anabaptists.

[Art. X. De Sacra Coena.]

54] Decimus articulus approbatus est, in quo confitemur nos sentire, quod in coena Domini vere et substantialiter adsint corpus et sanguis Christi et vere exhibeantur cum illis rebus, quae videntur, pane et vino, his, qui sacramentum accipiunt. Hanc sententiam constanter defendimus re diligenter inquisita et agitata. Quum enim Paulus dicat 1 Cor. 10, 16, panem esse participationem corporis Domini etc., sequeretur panem non esse participationem corporis, sed tantum spiritus Christi, si non adesset vere corpus Domini. 55] Et comperimus non tantum Romanam ecclesiam affirmare corporalem praesentiam Christi, sed idem et nunc sentire et olim sensisse Graecam ecclesiam. Id enim testatur canon missae apud illos, in quo aperte orat sacerdos, ut mutato pane ipsum corpus Christi fiat. Et Vulgarius [Theophylactus Bulgarius], scriptor, ut nobis videtur non stultus, inserit inquit, panem non tantum figuram esse, sed vere in carnem mutari. Et longa sententia est Cyrilli in Iohannem, cap. 15, in qua docet, Christum corporaliter nobis exhiberi in coena. Sic enim ait: *Non tamen negamus recta nos fide caritateque sincera Christo spiritaliter coniungi. Sed nullam nobis [R. 158] coniunctionis rationem secundum carnem cum illo esse, id prospecto pernegamus. Idque a divinis Scripturis omnino alienum dicimus. Quis enim dubitavit Christum etiam sic vitam esse, nos vero palmites, qui vitam inde nobis acquirimus? Audi Paulum dicentem 1 Cor. 10, 17; Rom. 12, 5; Gal. 3, 28: Quia „omnes unum corpus sumus in Christo“, quia, „etsi multi sumus, unum tamen in eo sumus. Omnes enim uno pane participamus“. An fortasse putat ignota nobis mysticae benedictionis virtutem esse? Quae quum in nobis sit, nonne corporaliter quoque facit, communicatione carnis Christi, Christum in nobis habitare? Et paulo post: Unde considerandum est non habitudine solum, quae per caritatem intelligitur, Christum in nobis esse, verum 57] etiam participatione naturali etc. Haec recitavimus, non ut hic disputationem de hac re institueremus, non enim improbat hunc articulum Caesarea Maiestas, sed ut clarius etiam perspiceret, quicumque ista legent, nos defendere receptam in tota ecclesia sententiam, quod in coena Domini vere et substantialiter adsint corpus et sanguis Christi et vere exhibeantur cum his rebus, quae videntur, pane et vino. [Artikel X. Vom heiligen Abendmahl.]

Den zehnten Artikel setzten die Widersacher nicht an, darin wir bekennen, daß unser Herr Christi Leib und Blut wahrhaftig im Nachtmahl Christi zugegen und mit den sichtbaren Dingen, Brod und Wein, dargereicht und genommen wird; wie man bisanher in der Kirche gehalten hat, wie auch der Gräben [Griechen] Kanon zeugt. Und Cyrillus spricht, daß uns Christus leiblich gereicht und gegeben wird im Abendmahl. Denn so sagt er: „Wir leugnen nicht, daß wir durch rechten Glauben und reine Liebe Christo geistlich vereinigt werden. Daß wir aber nach dem Fleisch gar keine Vereinigung mit ihm haben sollten, da sagen wir nein zu, und das ist auch wider die Schrift. Denn wer will zweifeln, daß Christus auch also der Weinstock sei, wir die Reben, daß wir Saft und Leben von ihm haben? Höre, wie Paulus sagt: „Wir sind alle e i n Leib in Christo; wievohl unser viel sind, so sind wir in ihm doch eins; denn wir genießen alle eines Brots.“ Meinst du, daß wir die Kraft des göttlichen Segens im Abendmahl nicht wissen? Denn wenn der geschieht, so macht er, daß durch die Genießung des Fleisches und Leibes Christi Christus auch leiblich in uns wohnt.“ Item: „Darum ist das zu merken, daß Christus nicht allein durch geistliche Einigkeit, durch die Liebe, sondern auch durch natürliche Gemeinschaft in uns ist.“ Und wir reden von Gegenwärtigkeit des lebendigen Leibes; denn wir wissen, wie Paulus sagt, „daß der Tod forthin nicht über ihn herrschen wird“. [Was den Meßkanon betrifft, auf den sich der lateinische Text bezieht, so betet der Priester in der „Missa s. Iacobi“: „Αὐτό τὸ πνεῦμά σου τὸ πανάγιον κατέπεμψον, Δέσποτα, ἐφ’ ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ προκείμενα ἅγια δῶρα ταῦτα . . . ἵνα ἐπιφοιτήσῃ τῇ ἀγίᾳ καὶ ἀγαθῇ καὶ ἐνδόξῳ αὐτοῦ παρουσίᾳ ἀγάσῃ καὶ ποιῇ τὸν μὲν ἄρτον τοῦτον σῶμα ἅγιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ σου . . . καὶ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο αἷμα τίμιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ σου.“ In der „Liturgia s. Marci“ betet der Priester: „Ἐξαποστείλον . . . ἐφ’ ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἄρτους τούτους καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ ποτήρια ταῦτα τὸ πνεῦμά σου τὸ ἅγιον, ἵνα ἀντὰ ἀγάσῃ καὶ τελειώσῃ ὡς παντοδύναμος θεὸς καὶ ποιῇ τὸν μὲν ἄρτον σῶμα.“ In der „Missa s. Basili“: „Εὐλόγησον, Δέσποτα, τὸν ἅγιον ἄρτον . . . τὸν μὲν ἄρτον τοῦτον, αὐτὸ τὸ τίμιον σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου . . . μεταβάλων τῷ πνεύματι τῷ ἁγίῳ.“ In der „Missa s. Chrysostomi“: „Εὐλόγησον, Δέσποτα, τὸν ἅγιον ἄρτον . . . ποιῇσον τὸν μὲν ἄρτον τοῦτον τίμιον σῶμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ σου.“ In der „Liturgia s. Gregorii“ betet der Priester: „Mitte super nos gratiam Spiritus Sancti tui, qui purificet et commutet has propositas oblationes in corpus et sanguinem liberationis nostrae. Et fiat panis corpus sacrosanctum

[Artikel XI. Von der Beichte.]

Den ersten Artikel, da wir sagen von der Absolution, lassen ihnen die Widersacher gefallen. Aber was die Beichte belangt, setzen sie dieses

Article X: Of the Holy Supper.

The Tenth Article has been approved, in which we confess that we believe, that in the Lord's Supper the body and blood of Christ are truly and substantially present, and are truly tendered, with those things which are seen, bread and wine, to those who receive the Sacrament. This belief we constantly defend, as the subject has been carefully examined and considered. For since Paul says, 1 Cor. 10, 16, that the bread is the communion of the Lord's body, etc., it would follow, if the Lord's body were not truly present, that the bread is not a communion of the body, but only of the spirit of Christ. And we have ascertained that not only the Roman Church affirms the bodily presence of Christ, but the Greek Church also both now believes, and formerly believed, the same. For the canon of the Mass among them testifies to this, in which the priest clearly prays that the bread may be changed and become the very body of Christ. And Vulgarius, who seems to us to be not a silly writer, says distinctly that bread is not a mere figure, but is truly changed into flesh. And there is a long exposition of Cyril on John 15, in which he teaches that Christ is corporeally offered us in the Supper. For he says thus: Nevertheless, we do not deny that we are joined spiritually to Christ by true faith and sincere love. But that we have no mode of connection with Him, according to the flesh, this indeed we entirely deny. And this, we say, is altogether foreign to the divine Scriptures. For who has doubted that Christ is in this manner a vine, and we the branches, deriving thence life for ourselves? Hear Paul saying 1 Cor. 10, 17; Rom. 12, 5; Gal. 3, 28: We are all one body in Christ; although we are many, we are, nevertheless, one in Him; for we are all partakers of that one bread. Does he perhaps think that the virtue of the mystical benediction is unknown to us? Since this is in us, does it not also, by the communication of Christ's flesh, cause Christ to dwell in us bodily? And a little after: Whence we must consider that Christ is in us not only according to the habit, which we call love, but also by natural participation, etc. We have cited these testimonies, not to undertake a discussion here concerning this subject, for His Imperial Majesty does not disapprove of this article, but in order that all who may read them may the more clearly perceive that we defend the doctrine received in the entire Church, that in the Lord's Supper the body and blood of Christ are truly and substantially present, and are truly tendered with those things which are seen, bread and wine. And we speak of the presence of the living Christ [living body]; for we know that death hath no more dominion over Him, Rom. 6, 9.

Article XI: Of Confession.

The Eleventh Article, Of Retaining Absolution in the Church, is approved. But they add a correction in reference to confession, dam esse constitutionem cap. Omnis utriusque,* ut et quotannis fiat confessio, et quamvis omnia peccata enumerari non queant, tamen diligentiam adhibendam esse, ut colligantur, et illa, quae redigi in memoriam possunt, recenseantur. [Concilium Lateranense, A. D. 1515, can. 21: „Omnis utriusque sexus fidelis, postquam ad annos discretionis pervenerit, omnia sua solus peccata fideliter confiteatur, saltem semel in anno, proprio sacerdoti, et iniunctam sibi poenitentiam studeat pro viribus adimplere, suscipiens reverenter ad minus in Pascha eucharistiae sacramentum, nisi forte de consilio proprii sacerdotis ob aliquam rationabilem causam ad tempus ab eius perceptione duxerit abstinendum; alioquin et vivens ab ingressu ecclesiae arceatur, et moriens Christiana careat sepultura. Unde hoc salutare statutum frequenter in ecclesiis publicetur, ne quisquam ignorantiae caecitate velamen excusationis assumat. Si quis autem alieno sacerdoti voluerit iusta de causa sua confiteri peccata, licentiam prius postulet et obtineat a proprio sacerdote, cum aliter ille ipse non possit solvere vel ligare.“ Mansi, Collectio amplissima 22, 1007.] De hoc toto articulo dicemus paulo post copiosius, quum sententiam nostram de poenitentia totam explicabimus. Constat nos beneficium absolutionis et potestatem clavium ita illustravisse et ornasse, ut multae afflictae conscientiae ex doctrina nostrorum consolationem conceperint, postquam audiverunt mandatum Dei esse, imo propriam evangelii vocem, [R. 159 ut absolutioni credamus et certo statuamus nobis gratis donari remissionem peccatorum propter Christum, et sentiamus vere nos hac fide reconciliari Deo. Haec sententia multas] pias mentes erexit, et initio commendationem maximam apud omnes bonos viros attulit Luthero, quum ostendit certam et firmam consolationem conscientiae, quia antea tota vis absolutionis erat oppressa doctrinis operum, quum de fide et gratuita remissione nihil docerent sophistae et monachi.

60] Ceterum de tempore, certe in ecclesiis nostris plurimi saepe in anno utuntur sacramentis, absolutione et coena Domini. Et qui docent de dignitate et fructibus sacramentorum, ita dicunt, ut invitent populum, ut saepe utantur sacramentis. Exstant enim de hac re multa a nostris ita scripta, ut adversarii, si qui sunt boni viri, haud dubie probent ac 61] laudent. Denuntiatur et excommunicatio flagitiosis et contemptoribus sacramentorum. Haec ita fiunt et iuxta evangelium et iuxta 62] veteres canones. Sed certum tempus non praescribitur, quia non omnes pariter eodem tempore idonei sunt. Imo si accurrant eodem tempore omnes, non possunt ordine audiri et institui homines. Et veteres canones ac patres non constituunt certum tempus. Tantum ita dicit canon: Si qui intrant ecclesiam Dei et deprehenduntur nunquam communicare, admonentur. Quodsi non communicant, ad poenitentiam accedant. Si communicant, non semper abstineant. Si non fecerint, abstineant. [Concilium Toletanum, A. D. 400, can. 13: „De his, qui intrant in ecclesiam, et deprehenduntur nunquam communicare, admonentur, ut si (quod si) non communicant, ad poenitentiam accedant; si communicant, non super abstineantur; si non fecerint, abstineantur.“

dazu, daß mit der Beichte soll gehalten werden nach dem Kapitel Omnis utriusque sexus, daß ein jeder Christ alle Jahr einmal beichte, und ob er alle Sünden so rein nicht kann erzählen, daß er doch Fleiß habe, sich deren aller zu erinnern, und soviel er sich erinnern mag, daß er die in der Beichte sage. Vom ganzen Artikel wollen wir hernach weiter handeln, wenn wir von der christlichen Buße werden reden. Es ist am Tage und es können die Widersacher nicht leugnen, daß die Unsern von der Absolution, von den Schlüsseln, also christlich, richtig, rein gepredigt, geschrieben und gelehrt haben, daß viel betrübte, angefochtene Gewissen daraus großen Trost empfangen, nachdem sie dieses nötigen Stills Mar unterrichtet sind, nämlich daß es Gottes Gebot ist, daß es der rechte Brauch des Evangelii ist, daß wir der Absolution glauben und gewiß bei uns darsichalten, daß ohne unser Verdienst uns Sünden vergeben werden durch Christum, daß wir auch so wahrhaftig, wenn wir dem Wort der Absolution glauben, Gotte werden verjöhnt, als hörten wir eine Stimme vom Himmel. Diese Lehre, welche fast [sehr] nötig, ist vielen angefochtenen Gewissen fast tröstlich gewesen. Auch haben viel rebliche, verständigige Leute, viel fromme Herzen im Anfang dieser unserer Lehre halben D. Luther hoch gelobt und des eine sonderne Freude gehabt, daß der nötige, gewisse Trost wiederum wäre an [den] Tag gebracht. Denn zuvor war die ganze nötige Lehre von der Buße und Absolution untergedrückt [unterdrückt], nachdem die Sophisten keinen rechten und beständigen Trost des Gewissens lehrten, sondern wieseten die Leute auf ihre eigenen Werke, daraus eitel Verzweiflung in erschrodene Gewissen kommt.

Was aber die gewisse Zeit der Beichte belangt, so ist es wahr und den Widersachern unterborhen, daß in unsern Kirchen viele Leute des Jahrs nicht allein einmal, sondern oft beichten, der Absolution und des heiligen Sakraments brauchen. Und die Prediger, wenn sie von dem Brauch und Nutz der heiligen Sakramente lehren, lehren sie also, daß sie das Volk mit Fleiß vermahnen, des heiligen Sakraments oft zu gebrauchen. Und es sind auch die Bücher und Schriften der Unsern am Licht, welche also geschrieben, daß die Widersacher, welche ehrbare, gottesfürchtige Leute sind, solche nicht ansechten, sondern loben müssen. So wird auch von unsern Predigern allezeit daneben gemeldet, daß die sollen verbannt und ausgeschlossen werden, die in öffentlichen Lustern leben, Hurerei, Ehebruch usw.; item, so die heiligen Sakramente verachten. Das halten wir also nach dem Evangelio und nach den alten canonibus. Aber auf gewisse Tage oder Zeit im Jahr wird niemand zum Sakrament gedrungen; denn es ist nicht möglich, daß die Leute alle gleich auf eine gewisse Zeit geschickt seien, und wenn sie alle in einer ganzen Pfarre auf eine Zeit zum Altar laufen, können sie nicht so fleißig verhört und unterrichtet werden, wie sie bei uns unterrichtet werden. Und die alten Canones und Väter sehen keine gewisse Zeit; allein also sagt der Canon: „So etliche sich zu der namely, that the regulation headed, Omnis Utriusque, be observed, and that both annual confession be made, and, although all sins cannot be enumerated, nevertheless diligence be employed in order that they be recollected, and those which can be recalled, be recounted. Concerning this entire article, we will speak at greater length after a while, when we will explain our entire opinion concerning repentance. It is well known that we have so elucidated and extolled [that we have preached, written, and taught in a manner so Christian, correct, and pure] the benefit of absolution and the power of the keys that many distressed consciences have derived consolation from our doctrine; after they heard that it is the command of God, nay, rather the very voice of the Gospel, that we should believe the absolution, and regard it as certain that the remission of sins is freely granted us for Christ's sake; and that we should believe that by this faith we are truly reconciled to God [as though we heard a voice from heaven]. This belief has encouraged many godly minds, and, in the beginning, brought Luther the highest commendation from all good men, since it shows consciences sure and firm consolation; because previously the entire power of absolution [entire necessary doctrine of repentance] had been kept suppressed by doctrines concerning works, since the sophists and monks taught nothing of faith and free remission [but pointed men to their own works, from which nothing but despair enters alarmed consciences].

But with respect to the time, certainly most men in our churches use the Sacraments, absolution and the Lord's Supper, frequently in a year. And those who teach of the worth and fruits of the Sacraments speak in such a manner as to invite the people to use the Sacraments frequently. For concerning this subject there are many things extant written by our theologians in such a manner that the adversaries, if they are good men, will undoubtedly approve and praise them. Excommunication is also pronounced against the openly wicked [those who live in manifest vices, fornication, adultery, etc.] and the despisers of the Sacraments. These things are thus done both according to the Gospel and according to the old canons. But a fixed time is not prescribed, because all are not ready in like manner at the same time. Yea, if all are to come at the same time, they cannot be heard and instructed in order [so diligently]. And the old canons and Fathers do not appoint a fixed time. The canon speaks only thus: If any enter the Church and be found never to commune, let them be admonished that, if they do not commune, they zeit davon halten. Paulus 1 Kor. 11 sagt, daß diejenigen das Sakrament zum Gericht empfangen, die es unwürdig empfangen. Darum zwingen unsere Pfarrer diejenigen nicht, die nicht geschickt sind, das Sakrament zu empfangen.

63) De enumeratione peccatorum in confessione sic docentur homines, ne laquei iniciantur conscientiis. Etiam si prodest rudes assuefacere, ut quaedam enumerent, ut doceri facilius possint: verum disputamus [R. 160 nunc, quid sit necessarium iure divino. Non igitur debebant adversarii nobis allegare constitutionem Omnis utriusque, quae nobis non est ignota, sed ex iure divino ostendere, quod enumeratio peccatorum sit necessaria ad consequendam remissionem. Tota ecclesia per universam Europam scit, quales laqueos iniecerit conscientiis illa particula constitutionis, quae iubet omnia peccata confiteri. Nec tantum habet incommodi textus per se, quantum postea affinxerunt Summistae, qui colligunt circumstantias peccatorum. Quales ibi labyrinthi, quanta carnificina fuit optimarum mentium! Nam feros et profanos ista 64) terribilissima nihil movebant. Postea quales tragoediae excitavit quaeatio de proprio sacerdote inter pastores et fratres, qui tunc minime erant fratres, quum de regno confessionum belligerabantur. Nos igitur sentimus enumerationem peccatorum non esse necessariam iure divino. Idque placet Panormitano et plerisque aliis eruditis iurisconsultis. Nec volumus imponere necessitatem conscientiis nostrorum per constitutionem illam Omnis utriusque, de qua perinde iudicamus, ut de aliis traditionibus humanis, de quibus sentimus, quod non sint cultus ad iustificationem necessarii. Et haec constitutio rem impossibilem praecipit, ut omnia peccata confiteamur. Constat autem plurima nos nec meminisse, nec intelligere iuxta illud Ps. 19, 13: Delicta quis intelligit?

war. Darum halten wir, daß Gott nicht geboten hat, die Sünden namhaftig zu machen und zu erzählen. Und das hält auch Panormitanus und viel andere Gelehrte. Darum wollen wir keine Bürde auf die Gewissen legen durch das Kapitel Omnis utriusque sexus, sondern sagen von demselben wie von andern Menschenfahrungen, nämlich daß es nicht ein Gottesdienst sei, der nötig sei zur Seligkeit. Auch so wird in dem Kapitel ein unmöglich Ding geboten, nämlich daß wir alle Sünden beichten sollen. Nun ist's gewiß, daß wir vieler Sünden nicht können gedenken, auch wohl die größten Sünden nicht sehen, wie der Psalm sagt: „Wer kennet seine Fehle?“

Rirche begeben und befunden werden, daß sie das Sakrament nicht brauchen, soll man sie vermahnen. Wo eilsche nicht kommunizieren, sollen sie zur Buße vermahnt werden; so sie aber wollen für Christen gehalten sein, sollen sie sich nicht alles empfangen, die nicht geschickt sind, das Sakrament zu empfangen.

Von dem Erzählen aber und Erinnerung der Sünden in der Beichte unterrichten unsere Prediger also die Leute, daß sie doch die Gewissen nicht verstriden, als sei es not, alle Sünden bei Namen zu erzählen. Wie wohl es nun gut ist, die Groben, Unerfahrenen dazu [zu] unterweisen, daß sie eilsche Sünden in der Beichte namhaftig machen, was sie drückt, damit man sie leichtlicher unterrichten kann: so disputieren wir doch davon hier nicht, sondern davon, ob Gott geboten habe, daß man die Sünden also alle erzählen müsse, und ob die Sünden unerzählt nicht mögen vergeben werden. Derhalben sollten die Widersacher uns nicht angezogen haben das Kapitel Omnis utriusque sexus, welches wir sehr wohl kennen, sondern aus der Heiligen Schrift, aus Gottes Wort, uns bewiesen haben, daß solch Erzählen der Sünden von Gott geboten wäre. Es ist leider allzu klar am Tage und rüchtig [richtig] durch alle Kirchen in ganz Europa, wie diese particula des Kapitels Omnis utriusque sexus, da es gebietet, man solle schuldig sein, alle Sünden zu beichten, die Gewissen in Elend, Jammer und Verstridung gebracht hat. Und der Text an ihm selbst hat nicht so viel Schaden getan als hernach der Summistens Bücher, darin die Umstände, Zirkumstanz der Sünden zusammengelesen; denn damit haben sie erst die Gewissen recht irremacht und unsäglich geplagt, und dazu eitel gutherzige Leute, denn die Frechen und Wilben haben danach nicht viel gefragt. Darüber, nachdem der Text also lautet: ein jeder sollte seinem eigenen Priester beichten, was großes Jamms und wie mörblichen Reid und Haß hat zwischen Pfarrern und Mönchen allerlei Ordens diese Frage angerichtet, welches doch der eigene Priester wäre! Denn da war alle Brüderschaft, alle Freundschaft aus, wenn es um die Herrschaft, um den Beichtpfennig zu tun

Wo verständige, gottesfürchtige Pfarrerhen und Prediger sind, die werden wohl wissen, wiesfern not und nütze sein mag, die Jugend und sonst unerfahrene Leute in der Beichte zu fragen. Aber diese Tyranei über die Gewissen, da die Summistens als die Stadmeister die Gewissen ohne Unterlaß geplagt haben, können noch wollen wir nicht loben; welche dennoch weniger beschwerlich gewesen wären, wenn sie doch mit einem Wort auch des Glaubens an Christum, dadurch die Gewissen recht getröstet werden, gebacht hätten. Nun aber ist von Christo, vom Glauben, vom Vergessen der Sünde nicht eine Silbe, nicht ein Tüttel in so viel großen Büchern ihrer Dekretale, ihrer Kommentare, ihrer Summistens, ihrer Konfessionale; da wird niemand ein Wort lesen, daraus er Chricome to repentance. If they commune [if they wish to be regarded as Christians], let them not be expelled; if they fail to do so, let them be excommunicated. Christ [Paul] says, 1 Cor. 11, 29, that those who eat unworthily eat judgment to themselves. The pastors, accordingly, do not compel those who are not qualified to use the Sacraments.

Concerning the enumeration of sins in confession, men are taught in such a way as not to ensnare their consciences. Although it is of advantage to accustom inexperienced men to enumerate some things [which worry them], in order that they may be the more readily taught, yet we are now discussing what is necessary according to divine Law. Therefore, the adversaries ought not to cite for us the regulation Omnis Utriusque, which is not unknown to us, but they ought to show from the divine Law that an enumeration of sins is necessary for obtaining their remission. The entire Church, throughout all Europe, knows what sort of snares this point of the regulation, which commands that all sins be confessed, has cast upon consciences. Neither has the text by itself as much disadvantage as was afterwards added by the Summists, who collect the circumstances of the sins. What labyrinths were there! How great a torture for the best minds! For the licentious and profane were in no way moved by these instruments of terror. Afterwards, what tragedies [what jealousy and hatred] did the questions concerning one's own priest excite among the pastors and brethren [monks of various orders], who then were by no means brethren when they were warring concerning jurisdiction of confessions! [For all brotherliness, all friendship, ceased, when the question was concerning authority and confessor's fees.] We, therefore, believe that, according to divine Law, the enumeration of sins is not necessary. This also is pleasing to Panormitanus and very many other learned juriconsulta. Nor do we wish to impose necessity upon the consciences of our people by the regulation Omnis Utriusque, of which we judge, just as of other human traditions, that they are not acts of worship necessary for justification. And this regulation commands an impossible matter, that we should confess all sins. It is evident, however, that most sins we neither remember nor understand [nor do we indeed even see the greatest sins], according to Ps. 19, 13: Who can understand his errors?

If the pastors are good men, they will know how far it is of advantage to examine [the young and otherwise] inexperienced persons; but we do not wish to sanction the torture [the tyranny of consciences] of the Summists, which notwithstanding would have been less intolerable if they had added one word concerning faith, which comforts and encourages consciences. Now, concerning this faith, which obtains the remission of sins, there is not a syllable in so great a mass of regulations, glosses, summaries, books of confession. Christ is nowhere read there. [Nobody will there read a word by which he could learn to know Christ, or what Christ is.] Only the lists of sins are read [to the end of gathering and accumulating sins; and this would be of some value if they understood those rationem, et tamen experiebatur impossibile esse. Sed haerent alia non minora vitia in doctrina adversariorum de poenitentia, quae iam recensimus.

Summen nichts anderes denn von Narrenwerk, von Menschenjagungen. O was hat die heillose, gottlose Lehre viel fromme Herzen und Gewissen, die gern recht getan hätten, zur Verzweiflung gebracht, welche nicht haben ruhen können! Denn sie mußten nicht anders, sie mußten sich also streifen und beißen mit dem Erzählen, Zusammenrechnen der Sünden, und befanden doch immer Unruhe, und daß es ihnen unmöglich war. Aber nicht weniger ungeschicktes Dinges haben die Widersacher von der ganzen Buße gelehrt, welches wir hernach wollen erzählen.

Art. XII. (V.) De Poenitentia.

1) In articulo duodecimo probant primam partem, quae exponimus lapsis post baptismum contingere posse remissionem peccatorum, quocunque tempore et quotiescunque convertuntur. Secundam partem damnant, in qua poenitentiae partes dicimus esse contritionem et fidem. Negant fidem esse alteram partem 2) poenitentiae. Quid hic, Carole, Caesar invictissime, faciamus? Haec est propria vox evangelii, quod fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum. Hanc vocem evangelii damnant isti scriptores Confutationis. Nos igitur nullo modo assentiri Confutationi possumus. Non possumus saluberrimam vocem evangelii et plenam consolationis damnare. Quid est aliud negare, quod fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum, quam contumelia afficere sanguinem et mortem Christi? Rogamus igitur te, Carole, Caesar invictissime, ut nos de hac re maxima, quae praecipuum evangelii locum, quae veram Christi cognitionem, quae verum cultum Dei continet, patienter ac diligenter audias et cognoscas. Comperient enim omnes boni viri, nos in hac re praecipue docuisse vera, pia, salubria et necessaria universae ecclesiae Christi. Comperient ex scriptis nostrorum plurimum lucis accessisse evangelio, et multos perniciosos errores emendatos [R. 162 esse, quibus antea obruta fuit doctrina de poenitentia per scholasticorum et canonistarum opiniones.

wissen, welche auch den ganzen Christenglauben, das ganze Evangelium, die Erkenntnis Christi und das Höchste, Größte nicht allein in diesem vergänglichem, sondern auch künftigem Leben, ja unser aller ewiges Gelingen und Verderben vor Gott belangt, gnädiglich und mit Fleiß hören und erkennen. Es sollen alle gottesfürchtigen, frommen und ehrbaren Leute nicht anders befinden, denn daß wir in dieser Sache die göttliche Wahrheit und eitel heilsamen, hochnützigsten, tröstlichsten Unterricht der Gewissen gelehrt haben und lehren lassen, daran allen frommen Herzen der ganzen christlichen Kirche das Merklichste und Größte, ja all ihr Heil und Wohlfahrt gelegen, ohne welchen Unterricht kein Predigamt, keine christliche Kirche sein noch bleiben kann. Es sollen alle Gottesfürchtigen befinden, daß diese Lehre der Unsern von der Buße das Evangelium und reinen Verstand wieder an [den] Tag gebracht hat, und daß dadurch viel schädliche, bössliche Irrtümer abgetan, wie denn durch der Scholastiker und Canonisten Bücher diese Lehre, was doch rechte Buße sei oder nicht sei, gar unterdrückt war.

4) Ac priusquam accedimus ad defensionem nostrae sententiae, hoc praefandum est. Omnes boni viri omnium ordinum, ac theologici ordinis etiam, haud dubie fatentur ante Lutheri scripta confusissimam fuisse doctrinam poenitentiae. Exstant libri Sententiariorum, ubi sunt infinitae quaestiones, quas nulli theologi unquam satis explicare poterunt. Populus neque rei summam complecti potuit nec videre, quae praecipue requirentur in poenitentia, ubi praerenda esset pax 6) conscientiae. Prodeat nobis aliquis ex adversariis, qui dicat, quando fiat remissio pec-

Artikel XII. (V.) Von der Buße.

In dem zwölften Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher den ersten Teil gefallen, da wir sagen, daß alle diejenigen, so nach der Taufe in Sünde fallen, Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, zu welcher Zeit und wie oft sie sich bekehren. Den andern Teil verwerfen und verdammen sie, da wir sagen, die Buße habe zwei Stücke, contritionem und fidem, das ist, zur Buße gehören diese zwei, ein reines, zer schlagenes Herz und der Glaube, daß ich glaube, daß ich Vergebung der Sünden durch Christum erlange. Da höre man nun, wozu die Widersacher nein sagen! Da dürfen sie unverschämt verneinen, daß der Glaube nicht ein Stück der Buße sei. Was sollen wir nun hier, allergnädigster Herr Kaiser, gegen diese Leute tun? Gemüß ist's, daß wir durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Dieses Wort ist nicht unser Wort, sondern die Stimme und Wort Jesu Christi, unsers Heilandes. Das klare Wort Christi nun verdammen diese Meister der Confutation, darum können wir in keinem Wege in die Confutation willigen. Wir wollen, ob Gott will, die klaren Worte des Evangelii, die heilige göttliche Wahrheit und das selige Wort, darin aller Trost und Seligkeit steht, nicht verleugnen. Denn dieses also verneinen, daß wir durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, was wäre das anders, denn das Blut Christi und seinen Tod lästern und schänden? Daram bitten wir, allergnädigster Herr Kaiser, daß Ew. Kaiserliche Majestät in dieser großen, höchsten, allerwichtigsten Sache, welche unsere eigene Seele und Ge-

Und ehe wir zur Sache greifen, müssen wir dieses anzeigen: Es werden alle ehrbaren, redlichen, gelehrten Leute hohen und niedern Standes, auch die Theologen selbst bestimmen müssen, und ohne Zweifel auch die Feinde, werden von ihrem eigenen Herzen überzeugt, daß zuvor und ehe denn Doktor Luther geschrieben hat, eitel dummheit, verirrte Schriften und Bücher von der Buße vorhanden gewesen [sind], Wie man sieht bei den Sententiarier, da unzählige unnütze Fragen sind, welche noch keine Theologi selbst haben genugsam können auflösen. Viel weniger hat das Volk aus ihren Predigten und verirrten sins which God regards as such]. And the greater part is occupied with sins against human traditions, and this is most vain. This doctrine has forced to despair many godly minds, which were not able to find rest, because they believed that by divine Law an enumeration was necessary, and yet they experienced that it was impossible. But other faults of no less moment inhere in the doctrine of the adversaries concerning repentance, which we will now recount.

of all ranks, and also of the theological rank, undoubtedly confess that before the writings of Luther appeared, the doctrine of repentance was very much confused. The books of the Sententiaries are extant, in which there are innumerable questions which no theologians were ever able to explain satisfactorily. The people were able neither to comprehend the sum of the matter, nor to see what things especially were required in repentance, where peace of conscience was to be

Article XII (V): Of Repentance.

In the Twelfth Article they approve of the first part, in which we set forth that such as have fallen after baptism may obtain remission of sins at whatever time, and as often as they are converted. They condemn the second part, in which we say that the parts of repentance are contrition and faith [a penitent, contrite heart, and faith, namely, that I receive the forgiveness of sins through Christ]. [Hear, now, what it is that the adversaries deny.] They [without shame] deny that faith is the second part of repentance. What are we to do here, O Charles, thou most invincible Emperor? The very voice of the Gospel is this, that by faith we obtain the remission of sins. [This word is not our word, but the voice and word of Jesus Christ, our Savior.] This voice of the Gospel these writers of the Confutation condemn. We, therefore, can in no way assent to the Confutation. We cannot condemn the voice of the Gospel, so salutary and abounding in consolation. What else is the denial that by faith we obtain remission of sins than to treat the blood and death of Christ with scorn? We therefore beseech thee, O Charles, most invincible Emperor, patiently and diligently to hear and examine this most important subject, which contains the chief topic of the Gospel, and the true knowledge of Christ, and the true worship of God [these great, most exalted and important matters which concern our own souls and consciences, yea, also the entire faith of Christians, the entire Gospel, the knowledge of Christ, and what is highest and greatest, not only in this perishable, but also in the future life: the everlasting welfare or perdition of us all before God]. For all good men will ascertain that especially on this subject we have taught things that are true, godly, salutary, and necessary for the whole Church of Christ [things of the greatest significance to all pious hearts in the entire Christian Church, on which their whole salvation and welfare depends, and without instruction on which there can be or remain no ministry, no Christian Church]. They will ascertain from the writings of our theologians that very much light has been added to the Gospel, and many pernicious errors have been corrected, by which, through the opinions of the scholastics and canonists, the doctrine of repentance was previously covered.

Before we come to the defense of our position, we must say this first: All good men

catorum. Bone Deus, quantae tenebrae sunt! Dubitant, utrum in attritione vel in contritione fiat remissio peccatorum. Et si sit propter contritionem, quid opus est absolutione, quid agit potestas clavium, si peccatum iam est remissum? Hic vero multo magis etiam sudant et potestatem clavium impie extenuant. 7) Alii somniant potestate clavium non remitti culpam, sed mutari poenas aeternas in temporales. Ita saluberrima potestas esset ministerium non vitae et Spiritus, sed tantum irae et poenarum. Alii, videlicet cautiore, fingunt potestatem clavium remitti peccata coram ecclesia, non coram Deo. Hic quoque perniciosus error est. Nam si potestas clavium non consolatur nos coram Deo, quae res tandem reddet pacatam conscientiam? Iam 8) illa sunt magis etiam perplexa. Docent nos contritione mereri gratiam. Ubi si quis interroget, quare Saul, Iudas et similes non consequantur gratiam, qui horribiliter contriti sunt? Hic de fide et de evangelio respondendum erat, quod Iudas non crediderit, non erexerit se evangelio et promissione Christi. Fides enim ostendit discrimen inter contritionem Iudae et Petri. Verum adversarii de lege respondent, quod Iudas non dilexerit 9) Deum, sed timuerit poenas. Quando [R. 163] autem territa conscientia praesertim in seriis, veris et illis magnis terroribus, qui describuntur in psalmis ac prophetis et quos certe degustant isti, qui vere convertuntur, iudicare poterit, utrum Deum propter se timeat, an fugiat aeternas poenas? Hi magni motus literis et vocabulis discerni possunt, re ipsa non ita divelluntur, ut isti suaves sophistae 10) somniant. Hic appellamus iudicia omnium bonorum et sapientum virorum. Hi haud dubie fatebuntur has disputationes apud adversarios perplexissimas et intricatissimas esse. Et tamen agitur de re maxima, de praecipuo evangelii loco: de remissione peccatorum. Tota haec doctrina de his quaestionibus, quas recensuimus, apud adversarios plena est errorum et hypocrisis, et obscurat beneficium Christi, potestatem clavium et iustitiam fidei.

Judas habe Gott nicht geliebt, sondern habe sich vor der Strafe gesürchtet. Ist aber das nicht ungewiß und ungeschickt von der Buße gelehrt? Denn wann will ein erschrocken Gewissen, sonderlich in den rechten großen Ängsten, welche in Psalmen und Propheten beschrieben werden, wissen, ob es Gott aus Liebe als seinen Gott fürchtet, oder ob es seinen Zorn und ewige Verdammnis nicht und haßt? Es mögen diejenigen von diesen großen Ängsten nicht viel erfahren haben, diemeil sie also mit Worten spielen und nach ihren Träumen Unterschied machen. Aber im Herzen, und wenn es zur Erfahrung kommt, findet sich's viel anders, und mit den schlechten Schläben und Worten findet kein Gewissen Ruhe, wie die guten, sanften, müßigen Sophisten träumen. Hier berufen wir uns auf [die] Erfahrung aller Gottesfürchtigen, auf alle redlichen, verständigen Leute, die auch gern die Wahrheit erkennen: die werden bekennen, daß die Widersacher in allen ihren Büchern nichts Rechtshaffenes gelehrt haben von der Buße, sondern eitel vermorren, unnütz Geschwätz; und ist doch dies ein Hauptartikel der christlichen Lehre, von der Buße, von Vergebung der Sünden. Nun ist dieselbe Lehre von den Fragen, die Jesu erzählt, voll großer Irrtümer und Heuchelei, dadurch die rechte Lehre von Christo, von den Schlüssel, vom Glauben zu unsäglichem Schaden der Gewissen unterdrückt gewesen.

11) Haec sunt in primo actu. Quid quum ventum est ad confessionem? Quantum ibi negotii est in illa infinita enumeratione peccatorum, quae tamen magna ex parte consumitur in traditionibus humanis? Et quo magis crucientur bonae mentes, fingunt hanc 12) enumerationem esse iuris divini. Et quum ipsam enumerationem exigant praetextu iuris

Büchern von der Buße eine Summa fassen mögen oder merken, was doch zu wahrer Buße vornehmlich gehört, wie oder durch was Weise ein Herz und Gewissen Ruhe und Frieden suchen müßte; und Trost! es trete noch einer hervor, der aus ihren Büchern einen einigen Menschen unterrichte, wann gewiß die Sünden vergeben sind. Lieber Herr Gott, wie sieht man da Blindheit! Wie wissen sie so gar nichts davon, wie sind ihre Schriften eitel Nacht, eitel Finsternis! Sie bringen Fragen vor, ob in attritione oder contritione Vergebung der Sünden geschehe, und so die Sünde vergeben wird um der Reue oder Kontrition willen, was dann der Absolution vonnöten sei; und so die Sünden schon vergeben sind, was dann die Gewalt der Schlüssel vonnöten sei. Und da ängsten sie sich und verbrehen sich erst über [zerbrechen sich den Kopf darüber] und machen die Gewalt der Schlüssel gar zunichte. Etliche unter ihnen erdichten und sagen, durch die Gewalt der Schlüssel werde nicht vergeben die Schuld vor Gott, sondern die ewige Pein werde dadurch verwandelt in zeitliche; und machen also aus der Absolution, aus [der] Gewalt der Schlüssel, dadurch wir Trost und Leben gewarten sollen, eine solche Gewalt, dadurch uns nur Strafe aufgelegt werde. Die andern wollen klüger sein, die sagen, daß durch [die] Gewalt der Schlüssel Sünden vergeben werden vor den Leuten oder vor der christlichen Gemeinde, aber nicht vor Gott. Das ist auch fast ein [ein sehr] schädlicher Irrtum: denn so die Gewalt der Schlüssel, welche von Gott gegeben ist, uns nicht tröstet vor Gott, wodurch will denn das Gewissen zur Ruhe kommen? Darüber so lehren und schreiben sie noch ungeschickter und verwirrter Ding: sie lehren, man könne durch Reue Gnade verdienen, und wenn sie da gefragt werden, warum denn Saul und Judas und dergleichen nicht Gnade verdienen haben, in welchen gar eine schreckliche Kontrition gewesen ist: auf diese Frage sollten sie antworten, daß es Judas und Saul am Evangelio und Glauben gefehlt hätte, daß Judas sich nicht getröstet hat durchs Evangelium und hat nicht geglaubt; denn der Glaube unterscheidet die Reue Petri und Judas. Aber die Widersacher gedenken des Evangelii und Glaubens gar nicht, sondern des Gesekes: sagen, Weiter richten sie noch mehr Irrtümer an, wenn man von der Reue reden soll; da lehren sie nichts, denn lange Register machen und Sünden erzählen und mehrenteils Sünden wider Menschengebote, und treiben hier die Leute, als sei solch Zählen de iure divino, daß ist, von Gott geboten; und dieses noch so hoch beschwerlich nicht, wenn sie nur auch recht von der Absolsought for. Let any one of the adversaries come forth and tell us when remission of sins takes place. O good God, what darkness there is! They doubt whether it is in attrition or in contrition that remission of sins occurs. And if it occurs on account of contrition, what need is there of absolution, what does the power of the keys effect, if sins have been already remitted? Here, indeed, they also labor much more, and wickedly detract from the power of the keys. Some dream that by the power of the keys guilt is not remitted, but that eternal punishments are changed into temporal. Thus the most salutary power would be the ministry, not of life and the Spirit, but only of wrath and punishments. Others, namely, the more cautious, imagine that by the power of the keys sins are remitted before the Church and not before God. This also is a pernicious error. For if the power of the keys does not console us before God, what, then, will pacify the conscience? Still more involved is what follows. They teach that by contrition we merit grace. In reference to which, if any one should ask why Saul and Judas and similar persons, who were dreadfully contrite, did not obtain grace, the answer was to be taken from faith and according to the Gospel, that Judas did not believe, that he did not support himself by the Gospel and promise of Christ. For faith shows the distinction between the contrition of Judas and of Peter. But the adversaries take their answer from the Law, that Judas did not love God, but feared the punishments. [Is not this teaching uncertain and improper things concerning repentance?] When, however, will a terrified conscience, especially in those serious, true, and great terrors which are described in the psalms and the prophets, and which those certainly taste who are truly converted, be able to decide whether it fears God for His own sake [out of love it fears God, as its God], or is fleeing from eternal punishments? [These people may not have experienced much of these anxieties, because they juggle words and make distinctions according to their dreams. But in the heart, when the test is applied, the matter turns out quite differently, and the conscience cannot be set at rest with paltry syllables and words.] These great emotions can be distinguished in letters and terms; they are not thus separated in fact, as these sweet sophists dream. Here we appeal to the judgments of all good and wise men [who also desire to know the truth]. They undoubtedly will confess that these discussions in the writings of the adversaries are very confused and intricate. And nevertheless the most important subject is at stake, the chief topic of the Gospel, the remission of sins. This entire doctrine concerning these questions which we have reviewed, is, in the writings of the adversaries, full of errors and hypocrisy, and obscures the benefit of Christ, the power of the keys, and the righteousness of faith [to inexpressible injury of conscience].

These things occur in the first act. What when they come to confession? What a work there is in the endless enumeration of sins, which is nevertheless, in great part, devoted to those against human traditions! And in order that good minds may by this means be the more tortured, they falsely assert that this enumeration is of divine right. And while they demand this enumeration under the pretext of divine right, in the mean time they speak coldly concerning absolution, which is truly of divine right. They falsely assert that the Sacrament itself confers grace divini, interim de absolutione, quae vere est iuris divini, frigide loquuntur. Fingunt ipsum sacramentum ex opere operato conferre gratiam sine bono motu utentis; de fide apprehendente absolutionem et consolante conscientiam nulla fit mentio. Hoc vere est, quod dici solet, ἀτιθέναι πρὸς τῶν μνηστικῶν.

13] Restat tertius actus de satisfactionibus. Hic vero habet confusissimas disputationes. Fingunt aeternas poenas mutari in poenas purgatorii, et harum partem remitti potestate clavium, partem docent redimendam esse satisfactionibus. Addunt amplius, quod oporteat satisfactiones esse opera supererogationis, et haec constituunt in stultissimis observationibus, velut in peregrinationibus, [R. 164 rosariis aut similibus observationibus, quae 15] non habent mandata Dei. Deinde, sicut purgatorium satisfactionibus redimunt, ita excogitata est ars redimendi satisfactiones, quae fuit quaestuosissima. Vendunt enim indulgentias, quas interpretantur esse remissiones satisfactionum. Et hic quaestus non solum ex vivis, sed multo amplior est ex mortuis.* Neque solum indulgentiis, sed etiam sacrificio missae redimunt satisfactiones mortuorum. Denique infinita res est de satisfactionibus. Inter haec scandala (non enim possumus enumerare omnia) et doctrinas demoniorum iacet obruta doctrina de iustitia fidei in Christum et de beneficio Christi. Quare intelligunt omnes boni viri utiliter et pie reprehensam esse doctrinam sophistarum et canonistarum de poenitentia. Nam haec dogmata aperte falsa sunt, et non solum aliena a Scripturis sanctis, sed etiam ab ecclesiasticis patribus:

ganze christliche Lehre vom Glauben, von Christo, merken und verstehen hier alle ehrbaren, redlichen, ehrliebenden, verständigen Leute, geschweige denn Christen, daß ganz hoch vonnöten gewesen ist, solche ungodtliche Lehre der Sophisten und Canonisten von der Buße zu tabeln. Denn dieselbe ihre Lehre ist öffentlich falsch, unrecht, wider die klaren Worte Christi, wider alle Schrift der Apostel, wider die ganze heilige Schrift und Väter, und sind das ihre Irrtümer:

17] I. Quod per bona opera extra gratiam facta mereamur ex pacto divino gratiam.

18] II. Quod per attritionem mereamur gratiam.

19] III. Quod ad deletionem peccati sola detestatio criminis sufficiat.

20] IV. Quod propter contritionem, non fide in Christum consequamur remissionem peccatorum.

21] V. Quod potestas clavium valeat ad remissionem peccatorum non coram Deo, sed coram ecclesia.

22] VI. Quod potestate clavium non remittantur peccata coram Deo, sed quod sit instituta potestas clavium, ut mutet poenas aeternas in temporales, ut imponat certas satisfactiones conscientis, ut instituat novos cultus et ad tales satisfactiones et cultus obliget conscientias.

23] VII. Quod enumeratio delictorum in confessione, de qua praecipunt adversarii, sit necessaria iure divino.

24] VIII. Quod canonicae satisfactiones necessariae sint ad poenam purgatorii [R. 165 redimendam, aut prosint tamquam compensation und Glauben hätten gelehrt. Aber da fahren sie abermal vorüber und lassen den hohen Trost liegen und dichten, daß Werk, beichten und reuen, mache fromm ex opere operato, ohne Christum, ohne Glauben. Das heißen rechte Juden.

Das dritte Stück von diesem Spiel ist die satisfactio oder Genugtun für die Sünde. Dasselbst lehren sie noch ungeschickter, verwirrter, werfen das Hundert ins Tausend, daß dasselbst nicht ein Tröpflein guten oder nötigen Trostes ein arm Gewissen finden möchte. Denn da erdichten sie ihnen selbst, daß die ewige Pein werde vor Gott verwandelt in Pein des Fegfeuers, und ein Teil der Pein werde vergeben und erlassen durch die Schlüssel, für einen Teil aber müsse man genugtun mit Werken. Darüber sagen sie weiter und nennen die Genugtun opera supererogationis, daß sind denn bei ihnen die kindischen, närrischen Werke, als Wallfahrten, Rosenkränze und dergleichen, da kein Gebot Gottes von ist. Und weiter, wie sie die Pein des Fegfeuers ablaufen und lösen mit ihrem Genugtun, also haben sie noch weiter ein Fündlein erbachet, dieselben *Genugtun*en für das Fegfeuer auch abzulösen, welches denn ein recht genießlicher, reicher Kauf und großer Jahrmarkt geworden. Denn sie haben unverschämt ihren Ablass verkauft und gesagt, wer Ablass löse, der laufe sich also ab, da er sonst müßte genugtun; und die Ketzschmerei, den Jahrmarkt, haben sie unverschämt getrieben, nicht allein daß sie den Lebendigen Ablass verkauft, sondern auch für die Toten hat man Ablass müssen kaufen. Darüber haben sie auch den schrecklichen Mißbrauch der Messe eingeführt, daß sie die Toten haben mit Messen erlösen wollen, und unter solchen Teufelsleichen ist unterdrückt gewesen die

ganze christliche Lehre vom Glauben, von Christo, merken und verstehen hier alle ehrbaren, redlichen, ehrliebenden, verständigen Leute, geschweige denn Christen, daß ganz hoch vonnöten gewesen ist, solche ungodtliche Lehre der Sophisten und Canonisten von der Buße zu tabeln. Denn dieselbe ihre Lehre ist öffentlich falsch, unrecht, wider die klaren Worte Christi, wider alle Schrift der Apostel, wider die ganze heilige Schrift und Väter, und sind das ihre Irrtümer:

I. Daß uns Gott muß die Sünde vergeben, so wir gute Werke tun, auch außerhalb der Gnade.

II. Daß wir durch die Attrition oder Reue Gnade verdienen.

III. Daß unsere Sünde auszulösen genug sei, wenn ich die Sünde an mir selbst hasse und schelte.

IV. Daß wir durch unsere Reue, nicht um des Glaubens willen an Christum, Vergebung der Sünden erlangen.

V. Daß die Gewalt der Schlüssel verleihe Vergebung der Sünden nicht vor Gott, sondern vor der Kirche oder den Leuten.

VI. Daß durch die Gewalt der Schlüssel nicht allein die Sünden vergeben werden, sondern dieselbe Gewalt sei darum eingesetzt, daß sie die ewige Pein vermale in zeitliche, und daß sie den Gewissen etliche *Genugtun*en auflege und Gottesdienste und satisfactiones aufrichte, dazu die Gewissen vor Gott verpflichte und verbinde.

VII. Daß das Erzählen und eigentlich Rechnen aller Sünden von Gott geboten sei.

VIII. Daß satisfactiones, welche doch von Menschen aufgesetzt, not seien, zu bezahlen die Pein oder auch die Schuld; denn wiewohl man ex opere operato, without a good disposition on the part of the one using it; no mention is made of faith apprehending the absolution and consoling the conscience. This is truly what is generally called ἀπέναι πρὸ τῶν μυστηρίων, departing before the mysteries. [Such people are called genuine Jews.]

The third act [of this play] remains, concerning satisfactions. But this contains the most confused discussions. They imagine that eternal punishments are commuted to the punishments of purgatory, and teach that a part of these is remitted by the power of the keys, and that a part is to be redeemed by means of satisfactions. They add further that satisfactions ought to be works of supererogation, and they make these consist of most foolish observances, such as pilgrimages, rosaries, or similar observances which do not have the command of God. Then, just as they redeem purgatory by means of satisfactions, so a scheme of redeeming satisfactions which was most abundant in revenue [which became quite a profitable, lucrative business and a grand fair] was devised. For they sell [without shame] indulgences which they interpret as remissions of satisfactions. And this revenue [this trafficking, this fair, conducted so shamelessly] is not only from the living, but is much more ample from the dead. Nor do they redeem the satisfactions of the dead only by indulgences, but also by the sacrifice of the Mass. In a word, the subject of satisfactions is infinite. Among these scandals (for we cannot enumerate all things) and doctrines of devils lies buried the doctrine of the righteousness of faith in Christ and the benefit of Christ. Wherefore, all good men understand that the doctrine of the sophists and canonists concerning repentance has been censured for a useful and godly purpose. For the following dogmas are clearly false, and foreign not only to Holy Scripture, but also to the Church Fathers: —

I. That from the divine covenant we merit grace by good works wrought without grace.

II. That by attrition we merit grace.

III. That for the blotting out of sin the mere detestation of the crime is sufficient.

IV. That on account of contrition, and not by faith in Christ, we obtain remission of sins.

V. That the power of the keys avails for the remission of sins, not before God, but before the Church.

VI. That by the power of the keys sins are not remitted before God, but that the power of the keys has been instituted to commute eternal to temporal punishments, to impose upon consciences certain satisfactions, to institute new acts of worship, and to obligate consciences to such satisfactions and acts of worship.

VII. That according to divine right the enumeration of offenses in confession, concerning which the adversaries teach, is necessary.

VIII. That canonical satisfactions are necessary for redeeming the punishment of purgatory, or they profit as a compensation for the blotting out of guilt. For thus uninformed persons understand it. [For, although in the satio ad delendam culpam. Sic enim imperiti intelligunt.

25] IX. Quod susceptio sacramenti poenitentiae ex opere operato sine bono motu utentis, hoc est, sine fide in Christum, consequatur gratiam.

26] X. Quod potestate clavium per indulgentias liberentur animae ex purgatorio.

28] Nos igitur, ut explicaremus pias conscientias ex his labyrinthis sophistarum, constituimus duas partes poenitentiae, videlicet contritionem et fidem. Si quis volet addere tertiam, videlicet dignos fructus poenitentiae, hoc est, mutationem totius vitae ac morum in 29] melius, non refragabimur. De contritione praecidimus illas otiosas et infinitas disputationes, quando ex dilectione Dei, quando ex timore poenae dolemus. Sed dicimus contritionem esse veros terrores conscientiae, quae Deum sentit irasci peccato, et dolet se peccasse. Et haec contritio ita fit, quando Verbo Dei arguuntur peccata, quia haec est summa praedicationis evangelii, arguere peccata et offerre remissionem peccatorum et iustitiam propter Christum et Spiritum Sanctum et vitam aeternam, et ut renati bene 30] faciamus. Sic complectitur summam evangelii Christus, quum ait Lucae ultimo, v. 47: Praedicari in nomine meo poenitentiam et remissionem peccatorum inter omnes gentes. 31] Et de his terroribus loquitur Scriptura, ut Ps. 38, 5: Quoniam iniquitates meae supergressae sunt caput meum, sicut onus grave gravatae sunt super me, etc. Afflictus sum et humiliatus sum nimis. Rugiebam a gemitu cordis mei. Et Ps. 6, 3. 4: Miserere mei, Domine, quoniam infirmus sum. Sana me, Domine, quoniam conturbata sunt ossa mea, et anima mea turbata est valde. Et tu, Domine, usque quo? Et Es. 38, 10. 13: Ego dixi in dimidio dierum meorum: Vadam [R. 166 ad portas inferi. Sperabam usque ad mane. Quasi leo, sic contrivit omnia ossa mea. In 32] his terroribus sentit conscientia iram Dei adversus peccatum, quae est ignota securis hominibus secundum carnem ambulanti. Videt peccati turpitudinem et serio dolet se peccasse; etiam fugit interim horribilem iram Dei, quia non potest eam sustinere humana 33] natura, nisi sustentetur Verbo Dei. Ita Paulus ait, Gal. 2, 19: Per legem legi mortuus 34] sum. Lex enim tantum accusat et terret conscientias. In his terroribus adversarii nostri nihil de fide dicunt: ita tantum proponunt verbum, quod arguit peccata. Quod quomodo solum traditur, doctrina legis est, non evangelii. His doloribus ac terroribus dicunt homines mereri gratiam, si tamen diligunt Deum. At quomodo diligunt Deum homines in veris terroribus, quum sentiunt horribilem et inexplicabilem humana voce iram Dei? Quid aliud nisi desperationem docent, qui in his terroribus tantum ostendunt legem?

in der Schule die satisfactiones allein für die Pein abzuegen, so versteht doch männiglich, daß man dadurch Vergebung der Schuld verbiene.

IX. Daß wir aus Empfangung des Sacraments der Buße, ex opere operato, wenn das Herz gleich nicht dabei ist, ohne den Glauben an Christum, Gnade erlangen.

X. Daß aus der Gewalt der Schlüssel durch den Ablass die Seelen aus dem Fegfeuer erlöst werden.

XI. Daß in Reservatsfällen nicht die Strafe der canonum, sondern die Schuld der Sünden vor Gott durch den Papst möge reserviert werden in denen, die sich wahrlich [wahrhaft] zu Gott befehren.

Daß wir nun den Gewissen hülfen aus den unzähligen Striden und verworrenen Rezen der Sophisten, so sagen wir, die Buße oder Bekehrung habe zwei Stücke, contritionem und fidem. So nun jemand will das dritte Stück dazusetzen, nämlich die Früchte der Buße und Bekehrung, welche sind gute Werke, so folgen sollen und müssen, mit dem will ich nicht groß fechten. Wenn wir aber de contritione, das ist, von rechter Reue, reden, schneiden wir ab die unzähligen unnützen Fragen, da sie Fragen vorgeben, wann wir aus der Liebe Gottes, item, wann wir aus Furcht der Strafe Reue haben. Denn es sind allein bloße Worte und vergebliche Geschwätze derjenigen, die nicht erfahren haben, wie einem erschrockenen Gewissen zu Sinne ist. Wir sagen, daß contritio oder rechte Reue das sei, wenn das Gewissen erschreckt wird und seine Sünde und den großen Zorn Gottes über die Sünde anhebt zu fühlen, und ist ihm leid, daß es gesündigt hat. Und dieselbe contritio geht also zu, wenn unsere Sünde durch Gottes Wort gestraft wird. Denn in diesen zwei Stücken steht die Summa des Evangelii. Erstlich sagt es: Bessert euch! und macht jedermann zu Sündern. Zum andern bietet's an Vergebung der Sünden, das ewige Leben, Seligkeit, alles Heil und den Heiligen Geist durch Christum, durch welchen wir neugeboren werden. Also sagt auch die Summa des Evangelii Christus, da er Luca am letzten sagt: „zu predigen in meinem Namen Buße und Vergebung der Sünden unter allen Heiden“. Und von dem Schrecken und Angst des Gewissens redet die Schrift im 38. Psalm: „Denn meine Missetaten sind über mein Haupt gegangen; wie eine schwere Last sind sie mir zu schwer geworden.“ Und im 6. Psalm: „Herr, sei mir gnädig, denn ich bin schwach! Heile mich, Herr; denn meine Gebeine sind erschrocken, und meine Seele ist sehr erschrocken usw. Ach du Herr, wie lange!“ Und Jes. 38: „Ich sprach: Nun muß ich zur Hölle's Pforten fahren, da ich länger zu leben gedachte usw. Ich dachte: Möchte ich bis morgen leben; aber er zerbrach mir alle meine Gebeine wie ein Löwe.“ Item: „Meine Augen wollten mir brechen; Herr, ich leide Not!“ usw. In denselben Ängsten fühlt das Gewissen Gottes Zorn und Ernst wider die Sünde, welches gar eine unbekante Sache ist solchen müßigen und fleischlichen Leuten wie den Sophisten und ihresgleichen. Denn da merkt erst das Gewissen, was die Sünde für ein großer Ungehorsam gegen Gott ist, da brüdt erst recht das Gewissen der schrecklichen Zorn Gottes, und es ist unmöglich der menschlichen Natur, denselben zu tragen, wenn sie nicht durch Gottes Wort würde aufgerichtet. Also sagt Pau-

schools satisfactions are made to apply only to the punishment, everybody thinks that remission of guilt is thereby merited.]

IX. That the reception of the sacrament of repentance ex opere operato, without a good disposition on the part of the one using it, i. e., without faith in Christ, obtains grace.

X. That by the power of the keys our souls are freed from purgatory through indulgences.

XI. That in the reservation of cases not only canonical punishment, but the guilt also, ought to be reserved in reference to one who is truly converted.

In order, therefore, to deliver pious consciences from these labyrinths of the sophists, we have ascribed to repentance [or conversion] these two parts, namely, contrition and faith. If any one desires to add a third, namely, fruits worthy of repentance, i. e., a change of the entire life and character for the better [good works which shall and must follow conversion], we will not make any opposition. From contrition we separate those idle and infinite discussions, as to when we grieve from love of God, and when from fear of punishment. [For these are nothing but mere words and a useless babbling of persons who have never experienced the state of mind of a terrified conscience.] But we say that contrition is the true terror of conscience, which feels that God is angry with sin, and which grieves that it has sinned. And this contrition takes place in this manner when sins are censured by the Word of God, because the sum of the preaching of the Gospel is this, namely, to convict of sin, and to offer for Christ's sake the remission of sins and righteousness, and the Holy Ghost, and eternal life, and that as regenerate men we should do good works. Thus Christ comprises the sum of the Gospel when He says in the last chapter of Luke, v. 74: That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in My name among all nations. And of these terrors Scripture speaks, as Ps. 38, 4. 8: For mine iniquities are gone over mine head, as a heavy burden they are too heavy for me. . . . I am feeble and sore broken; I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart. And Ps. 6, 2. 3: Have mercy upon me, O Lord; for I am weak; O Lord, heal me; for my bones are vexed. My soul is also sore vexed; but Thou, O Lord, how long! And Is. 38, 10. 13: I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years. . . . I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will He break all my bones. [Again, v. 14: Mine eyes fail with looking upward; O Lord, I am oppressed.] In these terrors, conscience feels the wrath of God against sin, which is unknown to secure men walking according to the flesh [as the sophists and their like]. It sees the turpitude of sin, and seriously grieves that it has sinned; meanwhile it also flees from the dreadful wrath of God, because human nature, unless sustained by the Word of God, cannot endure it. Thus Paul says, Gal. 2, 19: I through the Law am dead to the Law. For the Law only accuses lus: „Durch das Gesetz bin ich dem Gesetz gestorben.“ Denn das Gesetz klagt allein die Gewissen an, gebietet, was man tun solle, und erschreckt sie. Und da reden die Widersacher nicht ein Wort vom Glauben, lehren also kein Wort vom Evangelio noch von Christo, sondern eitel Gesetzelehre und sagen, daß die Leute mit solchem Schmerz, Reue und Leid, mit solchen Ängsten Gnad' verdienen, doch wo sie aus Liebe Gottes Reue haben oder Gott lieben. Lieber Herr Gott, was ist doch das für eine Predigt für die Gewissen, denen Trost's bonndöten ist! Wie können wir doch dann Gott lieben, wenn wir in so hohen, großen Ängsten und unsäglichem Kampf stehen, wenn wir so großen, schrecklichen Gottes Ernst und Zorn fühlen, welcher sich da stärker fühlt, denn kein Mensch auf Erden nachsagen oder reden kann? Was lehren doch solche Prediger und Doctores anders denn eitel Verzweiflung, die in so großen Ängsten einem armen Gewissen kein Evangelium, keinen Trost, allein das Gesetz predigen?

35] Nos igitur addimus alteram partem poenitentiae de fide in Christum, quod in his terroribus debeat conscientia proponi evangelium de Christo, in quo promittitur gratis remissio peccatorum per Christum. Debent igitur credere, quod propter Christum gratis 36] remittantur ipsis peccata. Haec fides erigit, sustentat et vivificat contritos, iuxta illud, Rom. 5, 1: Iustificati ex fide pacem habemus. Haec fides consequitur remissionem peccatorum. Haec fides iustificat coram Deo, ut idem locus testatur: Iustificati ex fide. Haec fides ostendit discrimen inter contritionem Iudae et Petri, Saulis et Davidis. Ideo Iudae aut Saulis contritio non prodest, quia non accedit ad eam haec fides apprehendens remissionem peccatorum donatam propter Christum. Ideo prodest Davidis aut Petri contritio, quia ad eam fides accedit [R. 167 apprehendens remissionem peccatorum donatam] 37] tam propter Christum. Nec prius dilectio adest, quam sit facta fide reconciliatio. Lex enim non fit sine Christo, iuxta illud, Rom. 5, 2: Per Christum habemus accessum ad Deum. Et haec fides paulatim crescit et per omnem vitam luctatur cum peccato, ut vincat peccatum et mortem. Ceterum fidem sequitur 38] dilectio, ut supra diximus. Et sic clare definiri potest filialis timor, talis pavor, qui cum fide coniunctus est, hoc est, ubi fides consolatur et sustentat pavidum cor. Servilis timor, ubi fides non sustentat pavidum cor.

recht gelehrt, was timor filialis sei, nämlich ein solches Fürchten und Erschrecken vor Gott, da dennoch der Glaube an Christum uns wiederum tröstet. Servilis timor autem, knechtliche [knechtische] Furcht, ist Furcht ohne Glauben, da wird eitel Zorn und Verzweiflung.

39] Porro potestas clavium administrat et exhibet evangelium per absolutionem, quae est vera vox evangelii. Ita et absolutionem complectimur, quum de fide dicimus, quia fides est ex auditu, ut ait Paulus Rom. 10, 17. Nam audito evangelio, audita absolutione erigitur et concipit consolationem conscientia. 40] Et quia Deus vere per Verbum vivificat, claves vere coram Deo remittunt peccata, iuxta illud, Luc. 10, 16: Qui vos audit, me audit. Quare voci absolventis non secus ac 41] voci de coelo sonanti credendum est. Et absolutio proprie dici potest sacramentum poenitentiae, ut etiam scholastici theologi 42] eruditiores loquuntur. Interim haec fides in tentationibus multipliciter alitur per evangelii sententias et per usum sacramentorum. Haec enim sunt signa novi testamenti, hoc est, signa remissionis peccatorum. Offerunt igitur remissionem peccatorum, sicut clare testantur verba coenae Domini, Matth. 26, 26. 28: Hoc est corpus meum, quo pro vobis traditur. Hic est calix novi testamenti etc.

Wir aber fügen das andere Stück der Buße dazu, nämlich den Glauben an Christum, und sagen, daß in solchem Schrecken den Gewissen soll vorgehalten werden das Evangelium von Christo, in welchem verheißen ist Vergebung der Sünden aus Gnaden durch Christum. Und solche Gewissen sollen glauben, daß ihnen um Christus' willen Sünden vergeben werden. Derselbe Glaube richtet wieder auf, tröstet und macht wieder lebendig und fröhlich solche zerschlagene Herzen; wie Paulus zu den Röm. 5 sagt: „So wir nun gerechtfertigt sind, so haben wir Frieden mit Gott.“ Derselbe Glaube zeigt recht an den Unterschied unter der Reue Juda und Petri, Sauls und David's. Und darum ist Juda und Sauls Reue nichts nütze gewesen; denn da ist nicht Glaube gewesen, der sich gehalten hätte an die Verheißung Gottes durch Christum. Dagegen sind David's und St. Peters Reue rechtschaffen gewesen; denn da ist der Glaube gewesen, welcher gesagt hat die Zusage Gottes, welche anbietet Vergebung der Sünden durch Christum. Denn eigentlich ist in keinem Herzen einige Liebe Gottes, es sei denn, daß wir erst Gott versöhnt werden durch Christum. Denn Gottes Gesetz oder das erste Gebot kann ohne Christum niemand erfüllen noch halten; wie Paulus zu den Epheßern, 2, 18; 3, 12, sagt: „Durch Christum haben wir einen Zutritt zu Gott.“ Und der Glaube kämpft das ganze Leben durch wider die Sünde und wird durch mancherlei Anfechtungen probiert und nimmt zu. Wo nun der Glaube ist, da folgt denn erst die Liebe Gottes, wie wir hier oben gesagt. Und das heißt also Die Gewalt nun der Schlüssel, die verkündigt uns durch die Absolution das Evangelium. Denn das Wort der Absolution verkündigt mir Frieden und ist das Evangelium selbst. Darum wenn wir vom Glauben reden, wollen wir die Absolution mitbegriffen haben. Denn der Glaube ist aus dem Gehör, und wenn ich die Absolution höre, das ist, die Zusage göttlicher Gnade oder das Evangelium, so wird mein Herz und Gewissen geträufet. Und diem Weil Gott durch das Wort wahrlich neu Leben und Trost ins Herz gibt, so werden auch durch [die] Gewalt der Schlüssel wahrhaftig hier auf Erden die Sünden losgezählt, also daß sie vor Gott im Himmel los sind, wie der Spruch lautet: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich.“ Darum sollen wir das Wort der Absolution nicht weniger achten noch glauben, denn wenn wir Gottes klare Stimme vom Himmel hörten, und die Absolution, das selige, tröstliche Wort, sollte billig das Sacrament der Buße heißen, wie denn auch etliche Scholastici, welche gelehrt denn die andern gewesen, davon reden. Und derselbe Glaube an das Wort soll für und and terrifies consciences. In these terrors our adversaries say nothing of faith; they present only the Word, which convicts of sin. When this is taught alone, it is the doctrine of the Law, not of the Gospel. By these griefs and terrors, they say, men merit grace, provided they love God. But how will men love God in true terrors when they feel the terrible and inexpressible wrath of God? What else than despair do those teach who, in these terrors, display only the Law?

We therefore add as the second part of repentance, Of Faith in Christ, that in these terrors the Gospel concerning Christ ought to be set forth to consciences, in which Gospel the remission of sins is freely promised concerning Christ. Therefore, they ought to believe that for Christ's sake sins are freely remitted to them. This faith cheers, sustains, and quickens the contrite, according to Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God. This faith obtains the remission of sins. This faith justifies before God, as the same passage testifies: Being justified by faith. This faith shows the distinction between the contrition of Judas and Peter, of Saul and of David. The contrition of Judas or Saul is of no avail, for the reason that to this there is not added this faith, which apprehends the remission of sins, bestowed as a gift for Christ's sake. Accordingly, the contrition of David or Peter avails, because to it there is added faith, which apprehends the remission of sins granted for Christ's sake. Neither is love present before reconciliation has been made by faith. For without Christ the Law [God's Law or the First Commandment] is not performed, according to [Eph. 2, 18; 3, 12] Rom. 5, 2: By Christ we have access to God. And this faith grows gradually and throughout the entire life, struggles with sin [is tested by various temptations] in order to overcome sin and death. But love follows faith, as we have said above. And thus filial fear can be clearly defined as such anxiety as has been connected with faith, i. e., where faith consoles and sustains the anxious heart. It is servile fear when faith does not sustain the anxious heart [fear without faith, where there is nothing but wrath and doubt].

Moreover, the power of the keys administers and presents the Gospel through absolution, which [proclaims peace to me and] is the true voice of the Gospel. Thus we also comprise absolution when we speak of faith, because faith cometh by hearing, as Paul says Rom. 10, 17. For when the Gospel is heard, and the absolution [i. e., the promise of divine grace] is heard, the conscience is encouraged and receives consolation. And because God truly quickens through the Word, the keys truly remit sins before God [here on earth sins are truly canceled in such a manner that they are canceled also before God in heaven] according to Luke 10, 16: He that heareth you heareth Me. Wherefore the voice of the one absolving must be believed not otherwise than we would believe a voice from heaven. And absolution [that blessed word of comfort] properly can be called a sacrament of repentance, as also the more learned scholastic theologians speak. Meanwhile this faith is nourished in a manifold way in temptations, through the declarations of the Gospel [the hearing of sermons, reading] and the use of the Sacraments. For these are [seals and] signs of [the covenant and grace in] the New Testament, i. e., signs of [propitiation and] the remission of sins. They offer, therefore, the remission of sins, as the words of the

Ita fides concipitur et confirmatur per absolutionem, per auditum evangelii, per usum sacramentorum, ne succumbat, dum luctatur 43] cum terroribus peccati et mortis. Haec ratio poenitentiae plana et perspicua est, et augeat dignitatem potestatis clavium et [R. 168 sacramentorum, et illustrat beneficium Christi, docet nos uti mediatore ac propitiatore Christo.

Wort der Absolution, durch die Prediger des Evangelii, durch Empfangung des Sacraments, damit er in solchen Schreden und Ängsten des Gewissens nicht untergehe. Das ist eine klare, gewisse, richtige Lehre von der Buße; dadurch kann man verstehen und wissen, was die Schlüssel sind oder nicht sind, was die Sacramente nütze sind, was Christi Wohlthat ist, warum und wie Christus unser Mittler ist.

44] Sed quia Confutatio damnat nos, quod has duas partes poenitentiae posuerimus, ostendendum est, quod Scriptura in poenitentia seu conversione impii ponat has praecipuas partes. Christus enim inquit Matth. 11, 28: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis et onerati estis, et ego reficiam vos. Hic duo membra sunt. Labor et onus significant contritionem, pavores et terrores peccati et mortis. Venire ad Christum est credere, quod propter Christum remittantur peccata; quum credimus, vivificantur corda Spiritu Sancto 45] per verbum Christi. Sunt igitur hic duae partes praecipuae, contritio et fides. Et Marci primo, v. 16, Christus ait: Agite poenitentiam et credite evangelio. Ubi in priore particula arguit peccata, in posteriore consolatur nos et ostendit remissionem peccatorum. Nam credere evangelio non est illa generalis fides, quam habent et diaboli, sed proprie est credere remissionem peccatorum propter Christum donatam. Haec enim revelatur in evangelio. Videtis et hic duas partes coniungi, contritionem, quum arguuntur peccata, et fidem, quum dicitur: Credite evangelio. Si quis hic dicat Christum complecti etiam fructus poenitentiae seu totam novam vitam, non dissentimus. Nam hoc nobis sufficit, quod hae partes praecipuae nominantur: contritio et fides.

46] Paulus fere ubique, quum describit conversionem seu renovationem, facit has duas partes, mortificationem et vivificationem, ut Col. 2, 11: In quo circumcisi estis circumcisione non manu facta, videlicet exspoliatione corporis peccatorum carnis. Et postea, v. 12: In quo simul resuscitati estis per fidem efficaciae Dei. Hic duae sunt partes. Altera est exspoliatio corporis peccatorum, altera est resuscitatio per fidem. Neque haec [R. 169 verba, mortificatio, vivificatio, exspoliatio corporis peccatorum, resuscitatio, Platonice intelligi debent de simulata mutatione; sed mortificatio significat veros terrores, quales sunt morientium, quos sustinere natura non posset, nisi erigeretur fide. Ita hic exspoliationem corporis peccatorum vocat, quam nos dicimus usitate contritionem, quia in illis doloribus concupiscentia naturalis expurgatur. Et vivificatio intelligi debet non imaginatio für gekräftt werden durch Predigthören, durch Lesen, durch Brauch der Sacramente. Denn das sind die Siegel und Zeichen des Bundes und der Gnade im neuen Testament; das sind Zeichen der Veröhnung und Vergebung der Sünden. Denn sie bieten an Vergebung der Sünden, wie denn klar zeugen die Worte im Abendmahl: „Das ist mein Leib, der für euch gegeben wird“ usw. „Das ist der Kelch des neuen Testaments“ usw. Also wird auch der Glaube gekräftt durch das Diemeil aber die Widersacher verdammen, daß wir die zwei Teile der Buße gesetzt haben, so müssen wir anzeigen, daß nicht wir, sondern die Schrift diese zwei Stücke der Buße oder Befeh- rung also ausdrückt. Christus sagt Matthäi 11: „Kommt zu mir alle, die ihr mühselig und beladen seid, und ich will euch erquiden.“ Da sind zwei Stücke: die Last oder die Bürde, da Christus von redet, daß ist, der Jammer, das große Erschreden vor Gottes Zorn im Herzen; zum andern das Kommen zu Christo, denn das Kommen ist nichts anderes, denn glauben, daß um Christus' willen uns Sünden vergeben werden, und daß wir durch den Heiligen Geist neugeboren und lebendig werden. Darum müssen diese zwei die vornehmsten Stücke in der Buße sein: die Reue und der Glaube. Und Marci am 1. sagt Christus: „Tut Buße und glaubet dem Evangelio!“ Für das erste macht er uns zu Sündern und schreckt uns. Zum andern tröstet er uns und verkündigt Vergebung der Sünden. Denn dem Evangelio glauben heißt nicht allein die Historien des Evangelii glauben, welchen Glauben auch die Teufel haben, sondern heißt eigentlich glauben, daß uns durch Christum Sünden vergeben sind; denn denselben Glauben predigt uns das Evangelium. Da seht ihr auch die zwei Stücke: die Reue oder das Schreden des Gewissens, da er sagt: „Tut Buße!“ und den Glauben, da er sagt: „Glaubet dem Evangelio!“ Ob nun jemand wollte sagen, Christus begreift auch die Früchte der Buße, das ganze neue Leben, das sehten wir nicht groß an. Es ist uns hier genug, daß die Schrift diese zwei Stücke vornehmlich ausdrückt: Reue und Glauben.

Paulus in allen Episteln, sooft er handelt, wie wir belehrt werden, faßt er diese zwei Stücke zusammen: Sterben des alten Menschen, das ist, Reue, Erschreden vor Gottes Zorn und Gericht, und dagegen Verneuerung durch den Glauben. Denn durch [den] Glauben werden wir getröstet und wieder zum Leben gebracht und errettet von Tod und Hölle. Von diesen zwei Stücken redet er klar Röm. 6, 2. 4. 11: „Daß wir der Sünde gestorben sind“, das geschieht durch Reue und Schreden; „und wiederum sollen wir mit Christo auferstehen“, das geschieht, so wir durch [den] Glauben wiederum Trost und Leben erlangen. Und diemeil Glaube soll Trost und Frieden im Gewissen bringen laut des Spruchs Röm. 5, 1: „So wir gerecht sind worden durch den Glauben, haben wir Frieden“, folgt, daß zuvor Schreden und Angst im Gewissen ist. Also geben Reue und Glaube nebeneinander.

Lord's Supper clearly testify, Matt. 26, 26, 28: This is My body, which is given for you. This is the cup of the New Testament, etc. Thus faith is conceived and strengthened through absolution, through the hearing of the Gospel, through the use of the Sacraments, so that it may not succumb while it struggles with the terrors of sin and death. This method of repentance is plain and clear, and increases the worth of the power of the keys and of the Sacraments, and illumines the benefit of Christ, and teaches us to avail ourselves of Christ as Mediator and Propitiator.

But as the Confutation condemns us for having assigned these two parts to repentance, we must show that [not we, but] Scripture expresses these as the chief parts in repentance or conversion. For Christ says, Matt. 11, 28: Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Here there are two members. The labor and the burden signify the contrition, anxiety, and terrors of sin and of death. To come to Christ is to believe that sins are remitted for Christ's sake; when we believe, our hearts are quickened by the Holy Ghost through the Word of Christ. Here, therefore, there are these two chief parts, contrition and faith. And in Mark 1, 15 Christ says: Repent ye and believe the Gospel, where in the first member He convicts of sins; in the latter He consoles us, and shows the remission of sins. For to believe the Gospel is not that general faith which devils also have [is not only to believe the history of the Gospel], but in the proper sense it is to believe that the remission of sins has been granted for Christ's sake. For this is revealed in the Gospel. You see also here that the two parts are joined, contrition when sins are reproved, and faith, when it is said: Believe the Gospel. If any one should say here that Christ includes also the fruits of repentance or the entire new life, we shall not dissent. For this suffices us, that contrition and faith are named as the chief parts.

Paul almost everywhere, when he describes conversion or renewal, designates these two parts, mortification and quickening, as in Col. 2, 11: In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, namely, by putting off the body of the sins of the flesh. And afterward, v. 12: Wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God. Here are two parts. [Of these two parts he speaks plainly Rom. 6, 2. 4. 11, that we are dead to sin, which takes place by contrition and its terrors, and that we should rise again with Christ, which takes place when by faith we again obtain consolation and life. And since faith is to bring consolation and peace into the conscience, according to Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace, it follows that there is first terror and anxiety in the conscience. Thus contrition and faith go side by side.] One is putting off the body of sins; the other is the rising again through faith. Neither ought these words, mortification, quickening, putting off the body of sins, rising again, to be understood in a Platonic way, concerning a feigned change; but mortification signifies true terrors, such as those of the dying, which nature could not sustain unless it were supported by faith. So he names that as the putting off of the body of sins which we ordinarily call contrition, because in these griefs the natural concupiscence is purged away. And quickening ought not to be understood as a Platonic fancy, but as consolation which truly sustains life that is escaping in contrition. Here, therefore, are two parts: contrition and faith. For as conscience cannot be paci-

47] Platonica, sed consolatio, quae vere sustentat fugientem vitam in contritione. Sunt ergo hic duae partes, contritio et fides. Quia enim conscientia non potest reddi pacata nisi fide, ideo sola fides vivificat, iuxta hoc dictum, Hab. 2, 4; Rom. 1, 17: Iustus ex fide vivit.

48] Et deinde in Colossensibus, 2, 14, inquit, Christum delere chirographum, quod per legem adversatur nobis. Hic quoque duae sunt partes, chirographum et deletio chirographi. Est autem chirographum conscientia arguens et condemnans nos. Porro lex est verbum, quod arguit et condemnat peccata. Haec igitur vox, quae dicit: Peccavi Domino, sicut David ait 2 Sam. 12, 13, est chirographum. Et hanc vocem impii et securi homines non emittunt serio. Non enim vident, non legunt scriptam in corde sententiam legis. In veris doloribus ac terroribus cernitur haec sententia. Est igitur chirographum ipsa contritio, condemnans nos. Delere chirographum est tollere hanc sententiam, qua pronuntiamus, fore ut damnemur, et sententiam insculpere, qua sentiamus nos liberatos esse ab illa condemnatione. Est autem fides nova illa sententia, quae abolet priorem sententiam et reddit pacem et vitam cordi.

49] Quamquam quid opus est multa citare testimonia, quum ubique obvia sint in Scripturis. Psalmo 118, 18: Castigans castigavit me Dominus, et morti non tradidit me. Psalmo 119, 28: Defecit anima mea prae angustia; confirma me Verbo tuo. Ubi in priore membro continetur contritio, in [R. 170 secundo] modus clare describitur, quomodo in contritione recreemur, scilicet Verbo Dei, quod 50] offert gratiam. Id sustentat et vivificat corda. Et 1 Reg. 2 (1 Sam. 2, 6): Dominus mortificat et vivificat, deducit ad inferos et reducit. Horum altero significatur contritio, 51] altero significatur fides. Et Es. 28, 21: Dominus irascetur, ut faciat opus suum. Alienum est opus eius, ut operetur opus suum. Alienum opus Dei vocat, quum terret, quia Dei proprium opus est vivificare et consolari. Verum ideo terret, inquit, ut sit locus consolationi et vivificationi, quia secunda corda et non sententia iram Dei fastidiunt consolatio- 52] nem. Ad hunc modum solet Scriptura haec duo coniungere, terrores et consolationem, ut doceat haec praecipua membra esse in poenitentia, contritionem et fidem consolantem et iustificantem. Neque videmus, quomodo natura poenitentiae clarius et simplicius tradi possit.

Buße oder Bekehrung gehören, erstlich heraliche Reue, danach Glaube, der das Gewissen wieder aufrichte. Und ist je gewiß also, daß nicht wohl möglich ist, von der Sache klarer oder richtiger zu reden. So wissen wir fürwahr, daß Gott in seinen Christen, in der Kirche, also wirkt.

53] Haec enim sunt duo praecipua opera Dei in hominibus, perterrefacere, et iustificare ac vivificare perterrefactos. In haec duo opera distributa est universa Scriptura. Altera pars lex est, quae ostendit, arguit et condemnat peccata. Altera pars evangelium, hoc est, promissio gratiae in Christo donatae, et haec promissio subinde repetitur in tota Scriptura, primum tradita Adae, postea patriarchis, deinde a prophetis illustrata, postremo praedicata et exhibita a Christo inter Iudaeos et ab apostolis sparsa in totum mundum. 54] Nam fide huius promissionis sancti omnes iustificati sunt, non propter suas attritiones vel contritiones.

von demselben Christo Verheißungen geschehen, welche dann die Propheten hernach gepredigt; und zuletzt ist dieselbe Verheißung der Gnade durch Christum selbst, als er nun gekommen war, gepredigt unter den Juden und endlich durch die Apostel unter die Heiden in alle Welt ausgebreitet. Denn durch den Glauben an das Evangelium oder an die Zusage von Christo sind alle Patriarchen, alle Heiligen von Anbeginn der Welt gerecht vor Gott geworden und nicht um ihrer Reue oder Leids oder einigerlei Werke willen.

55] Et exempla ostendunt similiter has duas partes. Adam obiurgatur post peccatum et

Wiemohl, was ist not, viel Sprüche oder Zeugnisse der Schrift einzuführen, so die ganze Schrift der Sprüche voll ist? Als im 118. Psalm: „Der Herr züchtigt mich wohl, aber er gibt mich dem Tode nicht.“ Und im 119. Psalm: „Meine Seele vergethet vor Gramen; richte mich auf nach deinen Worten!“ Erstlich sagt er von Schreden oder von der Reue. Im andern Stück des Verses zeigt er klar an, wie ein reuig arm Gewissen wieder getöstet wird, nämlich durch das Wort Gottes, welches Gnade anbietet und wieder erquicket. Item 1 Sam. 2: „Der Herr tötet und macht lebendig; er führt in die Hölle und wieder heraus.“ Da werden auch die zwei Stücke gerührt [berührt]: Reue und Glaube. Item Jesaja am 28: „Der Herr wird zürnen, daß er sein Werk tue, welches doch nicht sein Werk ist.“ Er sagt: Gott werde schreden, wiewohl dasselbe nicht Gottes Werk sei; denn Gottes eigen Werk ist, lebendig machen. Andere Werke, als Schreden, Töten, sind nicht Gottes eigene Werke. Denn Gott macht allein lebendig, und wenn er schredet, tut er's darum, daß sein seliger Trost uns desto angenehmer und süßer werde; denn sichere und fleischliche Herzen, die Gottes Zorn und ihre Sünde nicht fühlen, achten keines Trosts. Auf die Weise pflegt die Heilige Schrift die zwei Stücke beieinander zu setzen, erstlich das Schreden, danach den Trost, daß sie anzeige, daß diese zwei Stücke zu einer rechten

Dies sind nun die vornehmsten zwei Werke, dadurch Gott in den Seinen wirkt. Von den zwei Stücken redet die ganze Schrift: erstlich, daß er unsere Herzen erschredet und uns die Sünde zeigt; zum andern, daß er wiederum uns tröstet, aufrichtet und lebendig macht. Darum führt auch die ganze Schrift diese zweierlei Lehre: Eine ist das Gesetz, welche uns zeigt unsern Jammer, strafft die Sünde. Die andere Lehre ist das Evangelium; denn Gottes Verheißung, da er Gnade zusagt durch Christum, und die Verheißung der Gnade wird von Adam her durch die ganze Schrift immer wiederholt. Denn erstlich ist die Verheißung der Gnade oder das erste Evangelium Adam zugesagt: „Ich will Feindschaft setzen“ usw. Hernach sind Abraham und andern Patriarchen fied except by faith, therefore faith alone quickens, according to the declaration, Hab. 2, 4; Rom. 1, 17: The just shall live by faith.

And then in Col. 2, 14 it is said that Christ blots out the handwriting which through the Law is against us. Here also there are two parts, the handwriting and the blotting out of the handwriting. The handwriting, however, is conscience, convicting and condemning us. The Law, moreover, is the word which reproves and condemns sins. Therefore, this voice which says, I have sinned against the Lord, as David says, 2 Sam. 12, 13, is the handwriting. And wicked and secure men do not seriously give forth this voice. For they do not see, they do not read the sentence of the Law written in the heart. In true griefs and terrors this sentence is perceived. Therefore the handwriting which condemns us is contrition itself. To blot out the handwriting is to expunge this sentence by which we declare that we shall be condemned, and to engrave the sentence according to which we know that we have been freed from this condemnation. But faith is the new sentence, which reverses the former sentence, and gives peace and life to the heart.

However, what need is there to cite many testimonies since they are everywhere obvious in the Scriptures? Ps. 118, 18: The Lord hath chastened me sore, but He hath not given me over unto death. Ps. 119, 28: My soul melteth for heaviness; strengthen Thou me according unto Thy word. Here, in the first member, contrition is contained, and in the second the mode is clearly described how in contrition we are revived, namely, by the Word of God, which offers grace. This sustains and quickens hearts. And 1 Sam. 2, 6: The Lord killeth and maketh alive; He bringeth down to the grave and bringeth up. By one of these, contrition is signified; by the other, faith is signified. And Is. 28, 21: The Lord shall be wroth that He may do His work, His strange work, and bring to pass His act, His strange act. He calls it the strange work of the Lord when He terrifies, because to quicken and console is God's own work. [Other works, as, to terrify and to kill, are not God's own works, for God only quickens.] But He terrifies, he says, for this reason, namely, that there may be a place for consolation and quickening, because hearts that are secure and do not feel the wrath of God loathe consolation. In this manner Scripture is accustomed to join these two, the terrors and the consolation, in order to teach that in repentance there are these chief members, contrition, and faith that consoles and justifies. Neither do we see how the nature of repentance can be presented more clearly and simply. [We know with certainty that God thus works in His Christians, in the Church.]

For the two chief works of God in men are these, to terrify, and to justify and quicken those who have been terrified. Into these two works all Scripture has been distributed.

The one part is the Law, which shows, reproves, and condemns sins. The other part is the Gospel, i. e., the promise of grace bestowed in Christ, and this promise is constantly repeated in the whole of Scripture, first having been delivered to Adam [I will put enmity, etc., Gen. 3, 15], afterwards to the patriarchs; then, still more clearly proclaimed by the prophets; lastly, preached and set forth among the Jews by Christ, and disseminated over the entire world by the apostles. For all the saints were justified by faith in this promise, and not by their own attrition or contrition.

And the examples [how the saints became godly] show likewise these two parts. After perterrefcit; haec fuit contritio. Postea promittit Deus gratiam, dicit futurum semen, quo destruetur regnum diaboli, mors et peccatum; ibi offert remissionem peccati. Haec sunt praecipua. Nam etsi postea additur poena, tamen haec poena non meretur remissionem peccati. Et de hoc genere [R. 171] poenarum paulo post dicemus.

Sünden. Das sind die zwei Stücke. Denn wiewohl Gott hernach Adam Strafe auflegt, so verdient er doch durch die Strafe nicht Vergebung der Sünden. Und von derselben aufgelegten Strafe wollen wir hernach sagen.

56] Sie David obiurgatur a Nathan et perterrefactus inquit 2 Sam. 12, 13: Peccavi Domino. Ea est contritio. Postea audit absolutionem: Dominus sustulit peccatum tuum, non morieris. Haec vox erigit Davidem et fide sustentat, iustificat et vivificat eum. Additur et hic poena, sed haec poena non mere-
57] tur remissionem peccatorum. Nec semper adduntur peculiare poenae, sed haec duo semper existere in poenitentia oportet, contritionem et fidem, ut Luc. 7, 37. 38. Mulier peccatrix venit ad Christum lacrymans. Per has lacrymas agnoscitur contritio. Postea audit absolutionem: Remittuntur tibi peccata; fides tua salvam te fecit; vade in pace. Haec est altera pars poenitentiae, fides, quae
58] erigit et consolatur eam. Ex his omnibus apparet piis lectoribus nos eas partes poenitentiae ponere, quae propriae sunt in conversione seu regeneratione et remissione peccati. Fructus digni et poenae sequuntur regenerationem et remissionem peccati. Ideoque has duas partes posuimus, ut magis conspici fides possit, quam in poenitentia requirimus. Et magis intelligi potest, quid sit fides, quam praedicat evangelium, quum opponitur contritioni ac mortificationi.

fromm, heilig oder neugeboren wird. Die Früchte aber und guten Werke, item Geduld, daß wir gern leiden Kreuz und Strafe, was Gott dem alten Adam auflegt, daß alles folgt, wenn also erst durch den Glauben die Sünde vergeben ist und wir neugeboren sind. Und wir haben diese zwei Stücke klar gesetzt, damit der Glaube an Christum, davon die Sophisten, Canonisten alle geschwiegen, auch einmal gelehrt werde, damit man auch desto klarer sehen möge, was der Glaube sei oder nicht sei, wenn er also gegen das große Schrecken und Angst gehalten wird.

60] Adversarii quum de fide loquuntur et dicunt eam praecedere poenitentiam, [R. 172] intelligunt fidem, non hanc, quae iustificat, sed quae in genere credit Deum esse, poenas propositas esse impiis etc. Nos praeter illam an, nämlich das Gesetz und Evangelium. Denn Adam, als er gefallen war, wird er erst gestraft, daß sein Gewissen erschrickt und in große Ängste kommt; dasselbe ist die rechte Reue oder contritio. Hernach sagt ihm Gott Gnade und Heil zu durch den ebenedeiten Samen, das ist, Christum, durch welchen der Tod, die Sünde und des Teufels Reich sollte zerbrochen werden; da bietet er ihm wieder an Gnade und Vergebung der Sünden, durch welchen Gott hernach Adam Strafe auflegt, so verdient

Also wird David vom Propheten Nathan hart angeredet und erschreckt, daß er spricht und bekennet: „Ich habe vor dem Herrn gesündigt.“ Das ist nun die Reue. Hernach hört er das Evangelium und die Absolution: „Der Herr hat deine Sünde weggenommen, du sollst nicht sterben.“ Als David das Wort glaubt, empfängt sein Herz wieder Trost, Licht und Leben. Und wiewohl ihm auch die Strafe wird aufgelegt, so verdient er doch durch die Strafe nicht Vergebung der Sünden. Und es sind auch wohl Exempel, da solche sonderliche Strafen nicht dazugetan werden, sondern diese zwei Stücke gehören allzeit vornehmlich zu einer rechten Buße: erstlich, daß unser Gewissen die Sünde erkenne und erschrecke; zum andern, daß wir der göttlichen Befehle glauben. Als Luk. 7 kommt das arme, sündige Weib zu Christo und weint bitterlich. Das Weinen zeigt die Reue an. Hernach hört sie das Evangelium: „Deine Sünden sind dir vergeben; dein Glaube hat dir geholfen; gehe hin in Frieden.“ Das ist nun das andere, vornehmste Stück der Buße, nämlich der Glaube, der sie wieder tröstet. Aus diesem können hier alle christlichen Leser merken, daß wir nicht unnötige Disputationes einführen, sondern klar, richtig und eigentlich die Stücke der Buße setzen, ohne welche die Sünden nicht können vergeben werden, ohne welche niemand vor Gott

Diemeil aber die Widersacher diesen klaren, gewissen, trefflichen Artikel ohne alle Scheu und Scham nachdrücklich verdammen, da wir sagen, daß die Menschen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch den Glauben an Christum, so wollen wir des etliche Gründe und Beweisungen setzen, aus welchen zu verstehen sei, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden nicht erlangen ex opere operato oder durch das getane Werk, durch Reue oder Leid usw., sondern allein durch den Glauben, da ein jeder für sich selbst glaubt, daß ihm [die] Sünden vergeben sind. Denn dieser Artikel ist der vornehmste und nötigste, darum wir mit den Widersachern streiten; welcher auch der nötigste ist allen Christen zu wissen. So wir aber hier oben im Artikel De iustificatione von demselben genugsam gesagt, so wollen wir desto kürzer hier dasselbe handeln.

Die Widersacher, wenn sie vom Glauben reden, sagen sie, der Glaube müsse vor der Buße hergehen, und verstehen nicht den Glauben, welcher vor Gott gerecht macht, sondern den Glauben, durch welchen in genere, das ist, insgemein, ge-his sin Adam is reproved and becomes terrified; this was contrition. Afterward God promises grace, and speaks of a future seed (the blessed seed, i. e., Christ), by which the kingdom of the devil, death, and sin will be destroyed; there He offers the remission of sins. These are the chief things. For although the punishment is afterwards added, yet this punishment does not merit the remission of sin. And concerning this kind of punishment we shall speak after a while.

So David is reproved by Nathan, and, terrified, he says, 2 Sam. 12, 13: I have sinned against the Lord. This is contrition. Afterward he hears the absolution: The Lord also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die. This voice encourages David, and by faith sustains, justifies, and quickens him. Here a punishment is also added, but this punishment does not merit the remission of sins. Nor are special punishments always added, but in repentance these two things ought always to exist, namely, contrition and faith, as Luke 7, 37, 38. The woman, who was a sinner, came to Christ weeping. By these tears the contrition is recognized. Afterward she hears the absolution: Thy sins are forgiven; thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace. This is the second part of repentance, namely, faith, which encourages and consoles her. From all these it is apparent to godly readers that we assign to repentance those parts which properly belong to it in conversion, or regeneration, and the remission of sin. Worthy fruits and punishments [likewise, patience that we be willing to bear the cross, and punishments, which God lays upon the old Adam] follow regeneration and the remission of sin. For this reason we have mentioned these two parts, in order that the faith which we require in repentance [of which the sophists and canonists have all been silent] might be the better seen. And what that faith is which the Gospel proclaims can be better understood when it is set over against contrition and mortification.

But as the adversaries expressly condemn our statement that men obtain the remission of sins by faith, we shall add a few proofs from which it will be understood that the remission of sins is obtained not ex opere operato because of contrition, but by that special faith by which an individual believes that sins are remitted to him. For this is the chief article concerning which we are contending with our adversaries, and the knowledge of which we regard especially necessary to all Christians. As, however, it appears that we have spoken sufficiently above concerning the same subject, we shall here be briefer. For very closely related are the topics of the doctrine of repentance and the doctrine of justification.

When the adversaries speak of faith, and say that it precedes repentance, they understand by faith, not that which justifies, but that which, in a general way, believes that God exists, that punishments have been threatened to the wicked [that there is a hell], etc. In addition to this faith we require that each one believe that his sins are remitted to him. Concerning this special faith we are disputing, and we oppose it to the opinion which bids us trust not in the fidem requirimus, ut credat sibi quisque remitti peccata. De hac fide speciali litigamus; et opponimus eam opinioni, quae iubet confidere non in promissione Christi, sed in opere operato contritionis, confessionis et satisfactionum etc. Haec fides ita sequitur terrores, ut vincat eos et reddat pacatam conscientiam. Huic fidei tribuimus, quod iustificet et regenet, dum ex terroribus liberat, et pacem, gaudium et novam vitam in corde parit. Hanc fidem defendimus vere esse necessariam ad remissionem peccatorum, ideo ponimus inter partes poenitentiae. Nec aliud sentit ecclesia Christi, etiamsi adversarii nostri reclamant.

61] Principio autem interrogamus adversarios, utrum absolutionem accipere pars sit poenitentiae nec ne. Quod si a confessione separant, ut sunt subtiles in distinguendo, non videmus, quid prosit confessio sine absolutione. Sin autem non separant a confessione acceptionem absolutionis, necesse est eos sentire, quod fides sit pars poenitentiae, quia absolutio non accipitur nisi fide. Quod autem absolutio non accipitur nisi fide, ex Paulo probari potest, qui docet Rom. 4, 16, quod promissio non possit accipi nisi fide. Absolutio autem est promissio remissionis peccatorum. 62] Igitur necessario requirit fidem. Nec videmus, quomodo dicatur is accipere absolutionem, qui non assentitur ei. Et quid aliud est non assentiri absolutioni, quam Deum accusare mendacii? Si cor dubitet, sentit incerta et inania esse, quae promittit Deus. Ideo 1 Joh. 5, 10 scriptum est: Qui non credit Deo, mendacem facit eum, quia non credit in testimonium, quod testificatus est Deus de Filio suo.

Die weil das Herz wankt, zweifelt, hält's für ungewiß, was Gott da zugesagt. Darum steht 1 Joh. 5 geschrieben: „Wer Gott nicht glaubt, der lügenkraft ihn, denn er glaubt nicht dem Zeugnis, das Gott von seinem Sohne zeugt.“

glaubt wird, daß ein Gott sei, daß eine Hölle sei usw. Wir reden aber darüber [außerdem] von einem Glauben, da ich für mich gewiß glaube, daß mir die Sünden vergeben sind um Christus' willen. Von diesem Glauben streiten wir, der nach dem Schrecken folgen soll und muß, und das Gewissen trösten und das Herz in dem schweren Kampf und Angst wieder zufrieden machen. Und das wollen wir, will's Gott, ewiglich verstehen und wider alle Pforten der Hölle erhalten, daß derselbe Glaube muß da sein, sollen jemand Sünden vergeben werden. Darum setzen wir dieses Stück auch zur Buße. Es kann auch die christliche Kirche nicht anders halten, denn daß Sünden vergeben werden durch solchen Glauben, wiewohl die Widersacher als die wütenden Hunde damider bellen.

Für das erste frage ich hier die Widersacher, ob es auch ein Stück der Buße sei, die Absolution hören oder empfangen. Denn wo sie die Absolution absondern von der Beichte, wie sie denn subtil sein wollen zu distinguieren, so wird niemand wissen oder sagen können, was die Beichte ohne die Absolution nütze sei. So sie aber die Absolution von der Beichte nicht absondern, so müssen sie sagen, daß der Glaube an das Wort Christi sei ein Stück der Buße, so man die Absolution nicht empfangen kann denn allein durch den Glauben. Daß man aber das Wort der Absolution nicht empfangen kann denn allein durch den Glauben, ist zu beweisen aus Paulo, Röm. 4, da er sagt, daß die Verheißung Gottes niemand fassen kann denn allein durch den Glauben. Die Absolution aber ist nichts anderes denn das Evangelium, eine göttliche Zusage der Gnade und Huld Gottes usw. Darum kann man sie nicht haben noch erlangen denn allein durch den Glauben. Denn wie kann denjenigen das Wort der Absolution nütze werden, die sie nicht glauben? Die Absolution aber nicht glauben, was ist das anders, denn Gott Lügen strafen?

Zum andern, so müssen sie die Widersacher gewiß bekennen, daß die Vergebung der Sünden sei ein Stück oder, daß wir auf ihre Weise reden, sei finis, das Ende, oder terminus ad quem der ganzen Buße. Denn was hülfte Buße, wenn nicht Vergebung der Sünden erlangt würde? Darum dasjenige, dadurch Vergebung der Sünden erlangt wird, soll und muß je ein vornehmstes Stück der Buße sein. Eigentlich ist es aber wahr, klar und gewiß, wenn [wenngleich] alle Teufel, alle Pforten der Hölle damider schrien, daß das Wort von der Vergebung der Sünden niemand fassen kann denn allein durch den Glauben. Röm. 3: „Welchen Gott hat vorgestellt zu einem Gnadenstuhl durch den Glauben“ usw. Item Röm. 5: „Durch welchen wir auch einen Zutritt haben im Glauben zu dieser Gnade“ usw. Denn ein erschrocken Gewissen, das seine Sünde fühlt, merkt bald, daß Gottes Zorn mit unsern elenden Werken nicht zu versöhnen ist, sondern also kommt ein Gewissen recht zum Frieden, wenn es sich hält an den Mittler Christum und glaubt den göttlichen Zusagungen. Denn diejenigen verstehen nicht, was Vergebung der Sünden sei, oder wie man dieselbe erlangt, die da wähnen, die Herzen und Gewissen promise of Christ, but in the opus operatum of contrition, confession, and satisfactions, etc. This faith follows terrors in such a manner as to overcome them, and render the conscience pacified. To this faith we ascribe justification and regeneration, inasmuch as it frees from terrors, and brings forth in the heart not only peace and joy, but also a new life. We maintain [with the help of God we shall defend to eternity and against all the gates of hell] that this faith is truly necessary for the remission of sins, and accordingly place it among the parts of repentance. Nor does the Church of Christ believe otherwise, although our adversaries [like mad dogs] contradict us.

Moreover, to begin with, we ask the adversaries whether to receive absolution is a part of repentance, or not. But if they separate it from confession, as they are subtle in making the distinction, we do not see of what benefit confession is without absolution. If, however, they do not separate the receiving of absolution from confession, it is necessary for them to hold that faith is a part of repentance, because absolution is not received except by faith. That absolution, however, is not received except by faith can be proved from Paul, who teaches, Rom. 4, 16, that the promise cannot be received except by faith. But absolution is the promise of the remission of sins [nothing else than the Gospel, the divine promise of God's grace and favor]. Therefore, it necessarily requires faith. Neither do we see how he who does not assent to it may be said to receive absolution. And what else is the refusal to assent to absolution but charging God with falsehood? If the heart doubts, it regards those things which God promises as uncertain and of no account. Accordingly, in 1 John 5, 10 it is written: He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of His Son.

Secondly, we think that the adversaries acknowledge that the remission of sins is either a part, or the end, or, to speak in their manner, the terminus ad quem of repentance. [For what does repentance help if the forgiveness of sins be not obtained?] Therefore that by which the remission of sins is received is correctly added to the parts [must certainly be the most prominent part] of repentance. It is very certain, however, that even though all the gates of hell contradict us, yet the remission of sins cannot be received except by faith alone, which believes that sins are remitted for Christ's sake, according to Rom. 3, 25: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood. Likewise Rom. 5, 2: By whom also we have access by faith unto grace, etc. For a terrified conscience cannot set against God's wrath our works or our love, but it is at length pacified when it apprehends Christ as Mediator, and believes the promises given for His sake. For those who dream that without faith in Christ hearts become pacified, do not understand what the remission of sins is, or how it came to us. Peter, 1 Ep.

missionem peccatorum propter sua opera, non propter Christum. Et Petrus ait in Actis, cap. 10, 43: Huic omnes prophetae testimonium perhibent, remissionem peccatorum accipere per nomen eius omnes, qui credunt in eum. Non potuit dici magis dilucide, quam quod ait: per nomen eius, et addit: omnes, qui credunt in eum. Tantum igitur ita accipimus remissionem peccatorum per nomen Christi, hoc est, propter Christum, non propter ulla nostra merita atque opera. Et hoc ita fit, quum credimus nobis remitti peccata propter Christum.

Sünden durch den Namen Christi, daß ist, um Christus' willen, nicht um unser Verdienstes oder Werke willen, und daß geschieht also, wenn wir Christus' willen.

68] Adversarii nostri vociferantur se esse ecclesiam, se consensum ecclesiae sequi. At Petrus hic in nostra causa etiam allegat consensum ecclesiae: Huic, inquit, omnes prophetae perhibent testimonium, remissionem peccatorum accipere per nomen eius etc. Profecto consensus prophetarum iudicandus est universalis ecclesiae consensus esse. [R. 174 Nec papae nec ecclesiae concedimus potestatem decernendi contra hunc consensum pro-] phetarum. At bulla Leonis aperte damnat hunc articulum de remissione peccatorum, damnant et adversarii in confutatione. Quae ex re apparet, qualis sit ecclesia iudicanda istorum, qui non solum decretis improbant hanc sententiam, quod remissionem peccatorum consequamur fide, non propter opera nostra, sed propter Christum, sed etiam iubent eam vi ac ferro abolere, iubent omni genere crudelitatis perdere viros bonos, qui sic sentiunt.

Sie dürfen Gebote ausgeben lassen, daß man fromme, redliche Leute, die also lehren, solle verjagen, und trachten ihnen durch allerlei Tyrannie, als die Bluthunde, nach Leib und Leben.

68] Sed habent magni nominis auctores, Scotum, Gabrielem et similes, dicta patrum, quae in decretis truncata citantur. Certe, si numeranda sunt testimonia, vincunt. Est enim maxima turba nugacissimorum scriptorum in sententias, qui tamquam coniurati defendunt illa signa de merito attritionis et operum et cetera, quae supra recitavimus. 69] Sed ne quis multitudine moveatur, non magna auctoritas est in testimoniis posteriorum, qui non genuerunt sua scripta, sed tantum compilatis superioribus transfuderunt illas opiniones ex aliis libris in alios. Nihil iudicii adhibuerunt, sed ut pedanei senatores [Du Cange, Glossarium, Tom. 6, p. 242: „Pedaneus iudex, inferior, qui minora iudicia exercet. . . . Pedarii dicti senatores, qui nondum maioribus honoribus functi, pedibus itabant in curiam.“] taciti comprobaverunt superiorum errores non intellectos. Nos igitur hanc Petri vocem non dubitemus opponere 70] quamlibet multis legionibus Sententiariorum, quae allegat consensum prophetarum. 71] Et accedit testimonium Spiritus Sancti ad hanc concionem Petri. Sic enim ait textus, könnten gestiftet werden ohne den Glauben an Christum. Petrus der Apostel führt ein dem Spruch Jes. 49: „Wer an ihn glaubt, der wird nicht zuschanden werden.“ Derhalben müssen die Heuchler vor Gott zuschanden werden, die da meinen, sie wollen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch ihre Werke, nicht um Christus' willen. Und Petrus in den Geschichten der Apostel am 10. sagt: „Dem Jesu geben Zeugnis alle Propheten, daß diejenigen Vergebung der Sünden durch seinen Namen erlangen, so an ihn glauben.“ Er hätte nicht klarer reden können, denn daß er sagt „durch seinen Namen“, und setzt dazu: „alle, die an ihn glauben“. Darum erlangen wir Vergebung der Die Widersacher schreien wohl, sie seien die christliche Kirche, und sie hielten, was die catholica, gemeine Kirche hält. Petrus aber, der Apostel, hier in unserer Sache und unserm höchsten Artikel rühmt auch eine catholica, gemeine Kirche, da er sagt: „Dem Jesu geben Zeugnis alle Propheten, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch seinen Namen.“ Ich meine je, wenn alle heiligen Propheten einträchtig zusammenstimmen (nachdem Gott auch einen einigen Propheten für einen Weltshatz achtet), solle je auch ein Dekret, eine Stimme und einträchtige klarer Beschlus sein der gemeinen, katholischen, christlichen, heiligen Kirche und billig dafürgehalten werden. Wir werden weder Papst, Bischof noch Kirche die Gewalt einräumen, wider aller Propheten einträchtige Stimme etwas zu halten oder zu [be]schließen. Noch [dennoch] hat Papst Leo X. diesen Artikel als irrigen dürfen verdammen. Und die Widersacher verdammen dieses auch. Darum ist genug am Tag, was das für eine feine christliche Kirche sei, die nicht allein diesen Artikel, nämlich daß wir Vergebung der Sünden ohne Werke, durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen, verdammen darf, sondern auch über dem Befehnte dieses Artikels unschuldig Blut verdammen und erwürgen. Sie dürfen Gebote ausgeben lassen, daß man fromme, redliche Leute, die also lehren, solle verjagen, und trachten ihnen durch allerlei Tyrannie, als die Bluthunde, nach Leib und Leben.

Aber sie werden vielleicht sagen, sie haben [hätten] auch Lehrer für sich, Scotum, Gabrielem und dergleichen, die auch großen Namen haben, dazu auch die Sprüche der Väter, welche im Dekret verstümpelt [verstümmelt] angezogen. Ja, es ist wahr, sie heißen alle Lehrer und Stribenten, aber am Gesange kann man merken, welche Vögel es sind. Dieselben Stribenten haben nichts anderes denn Philosophie gelehrt und von Christo und Gottes Werk nichts gemerkt: das beweisen ihre Bücher klar. Derhalben lassen wir uns nicht irren, sondern wissen fürwahr, daß wir das Wort des heiligen Apostels Petri, als eines großen Doktors, fröhlich mögen halten gegen alle Sententiaros über einen Haufen, und wenn ihrer viel tausend wären. Denn Petrus sagt klar, es sei eine einträchtige Stimme aller Propheten, und dieselbe herrliche Predigt des hohen, großen Apostels hat Gott kräftig dasmal beschäftigt durch Austeilung des Heiligen Geistes. Denn also sagt der Text: „Als Petrus noch redete, fiel der Heilige Geist auf alle, die dem Wort zuhörten.“ Derhalben sollen die christlichen Gewissen das wohl merken, daß dieses Gottes Wort und Gebot ist, daß uns ohne Verdienst Sünden vergeben werden durch

2, 6, cites from Is. 49, 23, and 28, 16: He that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. It is necessary, therefore, that hypocrites be confounded, who are confident that they receive the remission of sins because of their own works, and not because of Christ. Peter also says in Acts 10, 43: To Him give all the prophets witness that through His name, whosoever believeth in Him, shall receive remission of sins. What he says, through His name, could not be expressed more clearly, and he adds: Whosoever believeth in Him. Thus, therefore, we receive the remission of sins only through the name of Christ, i. e., for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of any merits and works of our own. And this occurs when we believe that sins are remitted to us for Christ's sake.

Our adversaries cry out that they are the Church, that they are following the consensus of the Church [what the Church catholic, universal, holds]. But Peter also here cites in our issue the consensus of the Church: To Him give all the prophets witness, that through His name, whosoever believeth in Him, shall receive remission of sins, etc. The consensus of the prophets is assuredly to be judged as the consensus of the Church universal. [I verily think that if all the holy prophets are unanimously agreed in a declaration (since God regards even a single prophet as an inestimable treasure), it would also be a decree, a declaration, and a unanimous strong conclusion of the universal, catholic, Christian, holy Church, and would be justly regarded as such.] We concede neither to the Pope nor to the Church the power to make decrees against this consensus of the prophets. But the bull of Leo openly condemns this article, Of the Remission of Sins, and the adversaries condemn it in the Confutation. From which it is apparent what sort of a Church we must judge that of these men to be, who not only by their decrees censure the doctrine that we obtain the remission of sins by faith, not on account of our works, but on account of Christ, but who also give the command by force and the sword to abolish it, and by every kind of cruelty [like bloodhounds] to put to death good men who thus believe.

But they have authors of a great name, Scotus, Gabriel, and the like, and passages of the Fathers which are cited in a mutilated form in the decrees. Certainly, if the testimonies are to be counted, they win. For there is a very great crowd of most trifling writers upon the Sententiae, who, as though they had conspired, defend these figments concerning the merit of attrition and of works, and other things which we have above recounted. [Aye, it is true, they are all called teachers and authors, but by their singing you can tell what sort of birds they are. These authors have taught nothing but philosophy, and have known nothing of Christ and the work of God; their books show this plainly.] But lest any one be moved by the multitude of citations, there is no great weight in the testimonies of the later writers, who did not originate their own writings, but only, by compiling from the writers before them, transferred these opinions from some books into others. They have exercised no judgment, but just like petty judges silently have approved the errors of their superiors, which they have not understood. Let us not, therefore, hesitate to oppose this utterance of Peter, which cites the consensus of the prophets, to ever so many legions of the Sententiaries. And to this utterance of Peter the testimony of the Holy Ghost is added. For the text speaks thus, Acts 10, 44: While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word. Therefore, let pious consciences know that the command of God is this, that they believe that they are freely forgiven for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our works. And by this command of God let them sustain themselves against despair, and against the terrors of sin and of death. And let them

Act. 10, 44: Adhuc loquente Petro verba haec cecidit Spiritus Sanctus super omnes, qui 72] audiebant verbum. Sciant igitur pia conscientiae hoc esse mandatum Dei, ut credant sibi gratis ignosci propter Christum, non propter opera nostra. Et hoc mandato Dei sustentent se adversus desperationem et 73] adversus terrores peccati et mortis. Et hanc sententiam sciant a principio mundi in ecclesia exstitisse apud sanctos. Petrus [R. 175 enim clare allegat consensum prophetarum, et apostolorum scripta testantur eos idem sentire. Nec desunt patrum testimonia. Nam Bernardus idem dicit verbis minime obscuris: Necesse est enim primo omnium credere, quod remissionem peccatorum habere non possis nisi per indulgentiam Dei, sed adde adhuc, ut credas et hoc, quod per ipsum peccata tibi donantur. Hoc est testimonium, quod perhibet Spiritus Sanctus in corde tuo dicens: Dimissa sunt tibi peccata tua. Sic enim arbitrat apostolus gratis iustificari hominem per fidem. 74] Haec Bernardi verba mirifice illustrent causam nostram, quia non solum requirit, ut in genere credamus peccata remitti per misericordiam, sed iubet addere specialem fidem, qua credamus, et nobis ipsis remitti peccata, et docet, quomodo certi reddamur de remissione peccatorum, videlicet quum fide corda eriguntur et fiunt tranquilla per Spiritum Sanctum. Quid requirunt amplius adversarii? Num adhuc audent negare fide nos consequi remissionem peccatorum, aut fidem partem esse poenitentiae?

sagt, daß wir nicht allein insgemein glauben sollen, dieses muß dazugesetzt werden, daß ich für mich glaube, daß mir Sünden vergeben seien. Und lehrt darüber noch eigentlicher und klarer, wie wir inwendig im Herzen der Gnade, der Vergebung unserer Sünden gewiß werden, nämlich wenn die Herzen getröstet werden und gestift inwendig durch diesen Trost. Wie aber nun, ihr Widersacher? Ist St. Bernhard auch ein Acker? Was wollt ihr doch mehr haben? Wollt ihr noch leugnen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch den Glauben?

75] Tertio adversarii dicunt peccatum ita remitti, quia attritus seu contritus elicit actum dilectionis Dei, per hunc actum meretur accipere remissionem peccatorum. Hoc nihil est nisi legem docere, deletio evangelio et abolita promissione de Christo. Tantum enim requirunt legem et nostra opera, quia lex exigit dilectionem. Praeterea docent confidere, quod remissionem peccatorum consequamur propter contritionem et dilectionem. Hoc quid est aliud nisi collocare fiduciam in nostra opera, non in Verbum et promissionem Dei de Christo? Quodsi lex satis est ad consequendam remissionem peccatorum, quid opus est evangelio, quid opus est Christo, si propter nostrum opus consequimur remissionem 76] nem peccatorum? Nos contra a lege ad evangelium revocamus conscientias, et [R. 176 a fiducia propriorum operum ad fiduciam promissionis et Christi, quia evangelium exhibet nobis Christum et promittit gratis remissionem peccatorum propter Christum. Hac promissione iubet nos confidere, quod propter Christum reconciliemur Patri, non propter nostram contritionem aut dilectionem. Non enim alius est mediator aut propitiator nisi Christus. Nec legem facere possumus, nisi prius per Christum reconciliati simus. Et si

Christum, nicht um unserer Werke willen, und solch Gotteswort und -gebot ist ein rechter, starrer, gewisser, unbergänglicher Trost wider alles Schrecken der Sünde, des Todes, wider alle Anfechtung und Verzweiflung, Qual und Angst des Gewissens. Da wissen die müßigen Sophisten wenig von, und die selige Predigt, das Evangelium, welche Vergebung der Sünden predigt durch den gebenedeiten Samen, das ist, Christum, ist von Anbeginn der Welt aller Patriarchen, aller frommen Könige, aller Propheten, aller Gläubigen größter Schatz und Trost gewesen; denn sie haben an denselben Christum geglaubt, da wir an glauben. Denn von Anfang der Welt ist kein Heiliger anders denn durch den Glauben des heiligen Evangelii selig geworden. Darum sagt auch Petrus, es sei eine eintrachtige Stimme aller Propheten (und die Apostel predigen auch eintrachtig gleich daselbe), und zeigt an, daß die Propheten gleich als durch einen Mund geredet haben. Darüber sind die Zeugnisse der heiligen Väter. Denn Bernhardus sagt mit klaren Worten also: „Darum ist vor allen Dingen not zu wissen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden nicht anders haben können denn durch Gottes Gnade; doch sollst du dieses dazusetzen, daß du das glaubst, daß auch dir, nicht allein andern, durch Christum Sünden vergeben werden. Das ist das Zeugnis des heiligen Geistes inwendig in deinem Herzen, wenn er dir selbst sagt in deinem Herzen, dir selbst find deine Sünden vergeben. Denn also nennt's der Apostel, daß der Mensch ohne Verdienst gerecht wird, durch den Glauben.“ Diese Worte St. Bernhards streichen erst diese unsere Lehre recht heraus und setzen sie recht an das Licht. Denn er Für das dritte sagen die Widersacher, daß die Sünde also vergeben werde, quia attritus vel contritus elicit actum dilectionis Dei; denn wir uns aus der Vernunft vornehmen, Gott zu lieben, durch das Werk, sagen sie, erlangen wir Vergebung der Sünden. Das ist nichts anderes, denn das Evangelium und die göttlichen Verheißungen abtun und eitel Gesetz lehren; denn sie reden von eitel Gesetz und unsern Werken; denn das Gesetz fordert Liebe. Darum lehren sie vertrauen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch solche Reue und unser Lieben. Was ist das anders, denn vertrauen auf unsere Werke, nicht auf die Zusage oder Verheißung von Christo? So nun das Gesetz genug ist, Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen, was ist Christi, was ist des Evangelii bedürft? Wir aber weisen die Gewissen ab von dem Gesetz, von ihren Werken auf das Evangelium und die Verheißung der Gnade. Denn das Evangelium, das bietet Christum an und eitel Gnade und heißt uns auf die Zusage vertrauen, daß wir um Christus' willen verjöhnt werden dem Vater, nicht um unserer Reue oder Liebe willen; denn es ist kein anderer Mittler oder Verjöhner denn Christus. So können wir das Gesetz nicht erfüllen, wenn wir nicht erst durch Christum verjöhnt sind; und ob wir schon etwas Gutes tun, so müssen wir es doch dafürhalten, know that this belief has existed among saints from the beginning of the world. [Of this the idle sophists know little; and the blessed proclamation, the Gospel, which proclaims the forgiveness of sins through the blessed Seed, that is, Christ, has from the beginning of the world been the greatest consolation and treasure to all pious kings, all prophets, all believers. For they have believed in the same Christ in whom we believe; for from the beginning of the world no saint has been saved in any other way than through the faith of the same Gospel.] For Peter clearly cites the consensus of the prophets, and the writings of the apostles testify that they believe the same thing. Nor are testimonies of the Fathers wanting. For Bernard says the same thing in words that are in no way obscure: For it is necessary first of all to believe that you cannot have remission of sins except by the indulgence of God, but add yet that you believe also this, namely, that through Him sins are forgiven thee. This is the testimony which the Holy Ghost asserts in your heart, saying: "Thy sins are forgiven thee." For thus the apostle judges that man is justified freely through faith. These words of Bernard shed a wonderful light upon our cause, because he not only requires that we in a general way believe that sins are remitted through mercy, but he bids us add special faith, by which we believe that sins are remitted even to us; and he teaches how we may be rendered certain concerning the remission of sins, namely, when our hearts are encouraged by faith, and become tranquil through the Holy Ghost. What more do the adversaries require? [But how now, ye adversaries? Is St. Bernard also a heretic?] Do they still dare deny that by faith we obtain the remission of sins, or that faith is a part of repentance?

Thirdly, the adversaries say that sin is remitted, because an attrite or contrite person elicits an act of love to God [if we undertake from reason to love God], and by this act merits to receive the remission of sins. This is nothing but to teach the Law, the Gospel being blotted out, and the promise concerning Christ being abolished. For they require only the Law and our works, because the Law demands love. Besides, they teach us to be confident that we obtain remission of sins because of contrition and love. What else is this than to put confidence in our works, not in the Word and promise of God concerning Christ? But if the Law be sufficient for obtaining the remission of sins, what need is there of the Gospel? What need is there of Christ if we obtain remission of sins because of our own work? We, on the other hand, call consciences away from the Law to the Gospel, and from confidence in their own works to confidence in the promise and Christ, because the Gospel presents to us Christ, and promises freely the remission of sins for Christ's sake. In this promise it bids us trust, namely, that for Christ's sake we are reconciled to the Father, and not for the sake of our own contrition or love. For there is no other Mediator or Propitiator than Christ. Neither can we do the works of the Law unless we have first been reconciled through Christ. And if we would do anything, yet we must believe that not for the sake of these quid faceremus, tamen sentiendum est, quod non propter illa opera, sed propter Christum mediatorem et propitiatorem consequimur remissionem peccatorum.

77) Imo contumelia Christi et evangelii abrogatio est sentire, quod remissionem peccatorum propter legem aut aliter consequamur quam fide in Christum. Et hanc rationem supra tractavimus de iustificatione, quum diximus, quare profiteamur homines fide iustificari, non dilectione. Itaque doctrina adversariorum, quum docent homines contritione et dilectione sua consequi remissionem peccatorum et confidere hac contritione et dilectione, tantum est doctrina legis, et quidem non intellectae, sicut Iudaei in velatam Moysis faciem intuebantur. Pingamus enim adesse dilectionem, fingamus adesse opera, tamen neque dilectio neque opera possunt esse propitiatio pro peccato. Ac ne possunt quidem opponi irae et iudicio Dei, iuxta illud Ps. 143, 2: Non intrabis in iudicium cum servo tuo, quia non iustificabitur in conspectu tuo omnis vivens. Nec debet honos Christi transferri in nostra opera.

79) Propter has causas contendit Paulus, quod non iustificemur ex lege, et opponit legi promissionem remissionis peccatorum, quae propter Christum donatur, ac docet nos gratis propter Christum fide accipere remissionem peccatorum. Ad hanc promissionem revocat nos Paulus a lege. In hanc promissionem iubet intueri, quae certe irrita erit, [R. 177 si prius lege iustificamur, quam per promissionem, aut si propter nostram iustitiam con- 80] sequimur remissionem peccatorum. At constat, quod ideo nobis data est promissio, ideo exhibitus est Christus, quia legem non possumus facere. Quare necesse est prius nos promissione reconciliari, quam legem facimus. Promissio autem tantum fide accipitur. Igitur necesse est contritos apprehendere fide promissionem remissionis peccatorum donatae propter Christum, ac statuere, quod gratis propter Christum habeant placatum Patrem. 81) Haec est sententia Pauli ad Rom. 4, 16, ubi inquit: Ideo ex fide, ut secundum gratiam firma sit promissio. Et ad Gal. 3, 22: Conclusit Scriptura omnia sub peccatum, ut promissio ex fide Iesu Christi detur credentibus, id est, omnes sunt sub peccato, nec possunt aliter liberari, nisi fide apprehendant pro- 82) missionem remissionis peccatorum. Prius igitur oportet nos fide accipere remissionem peccatorum, quam legem facimus, etsi, ut supra dictum est, fidem dilectio sequitur, quia renati Spiritum Sanctum accipiunt; ideo legem facere incipiunt.

83) Citaremus plura testimonia, nisi obvia essent cuilibet pio lectori in Scripturis. Et nos non nimis prolixi esse cupimus, ut facilius 84) haec causa perspicui possit. Neque vero dubium est, quin haec sit sententia Pauli, daß wir nicht um der Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen.

Derhalben heißt daß Christum geschmäht und daß Evangelium abgetan, wenn jemand wollte halten, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden durch das Gesetz oder auf andere Weise denn durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen. Und dieses haben wir auch oben gehandelt De iustificatione, da wir gesagt haben, warum wir lehren, daß wir durch den Glauben gerecht werden und nicht durch die Liebe Gottes oder durch unsere Liebe gegen Gott. Derhalben, wenn die Widersacher lehren, daß wir durch Reue und Liebe Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und darauf vertrauen, ist nichts anderes, denn das Gesetz lehren, welches sie dennoch nicht verstehen, was es für eine Liebe gegen Gott fordere, sondern sehen wie die Zugen allein in das verdeckte Angesicht Moßis. Denn ich will gleich setzen, daß die Werke und die Liebe da seien; dennoch können weder Werke noch Liebe Gott versöhnen, oder als viel als Christus gelten, wie der Psalm sagt: „Du wollest nicht mit deinem Knechte in das Gericht gehen“ uim. Darum sollen wir die Ehre Christi nicht unsern Werken geben.

Aus dieser Ursache streitet Paulus, daß wir nicht durch das Gesetz gerecht werden, und hält gegen das Gesetz die Zusage Gottes, die Verheißung der Gnade, welche um Christus' willen uns gegeben wird. Da rückt uns Paulus herum und weist uns vom Gesetz auf die göttliche Verheißung; da will er, daß wir sollen auf Gott und seine Zusage sehen und den Herrn Christum für unsern Schatz halten; denn dieselbe Zusage wird vergeblich sein, so wir durch des Gesetzes Werke gerecht vor Gott werden, so wir durch unsere Gerechtigkeit Vergebung der Sünden verdienen. Nun ist es gewiß, daß Gott darum die Zusage tut, darum Christus auch gekommen ist, daß wir das Gesetz nicht halten noch erfüllen können. Darum müssen wir erst durch die Verheißung versöhnt werden, ehe wir das Gesetz erfüllen; die Verheißung aber kann man nicht fassen denn allein durch den Glauben. Darum alle diejenigen, so rechte Reue haben, ergreifen die Verheißung der Gnade durch den Glauben und glauben gewiß, daß wir dem Vater versöhnt werden durch Christum. Das ist auch die Meinung Pauli zu den Römern am 4.: „Darum erlangen wir Gnade durch den Glauben, daß die Verheißung fest stehe.“ Und zu den Galatern am 3.: „Die Schrift hat alles unter die Sünde beschloffen, daß die Verheißung Jesu Christi durch den Glauben werde gegeben den Gläubigen“, das ist, alle Menschen sind unter der Sünde und können nicht erlöst werden, sie ergreifen denn Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben. Darum müssen wir erst Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben erlangen, ehe wir das Gesetz erfüllen. Wie wohl, wie wir oben gesagt, aus dem Glauben die Liebe gewiß folgt, denn diejenigen, so glauben, empfangen den Heiligen Geist. Darum fangen sie an, dem Gesetz hold zu werden und demselben zu gehorchen.

Wir wollten hier mehr Sprüche einführen, aber die Schrift ist deren allenthalben voll. Ich wollte es auch gern nicht zu lang machen, damit diese Sache desto klarer sei. Denn es hat gar keinen Zweifel, daß dieses Pauli Meinung sei, daß wir works, but for the sake of Christ, as Mediator and Propitiator, we obtain the remission of sins.

Yea, it is a reproach to Christ and a repeal of the Gospel to believe that we obtain the remission of sins on account of the Law, or otherwise than by faith in Christ. This method also we have discussed above in the chapter Of Justification, where we declared why we confess that men are justified by faith, not by love. Therefore the doctrine of the adversaries, when they teach that by their own contrition and love men obtain the remission of sins, and trust in this contrition and love, is merely the doctrine of the Law, and of that, too, as not understood [which they do not understand with respect to the kind of love towards God which it demands], just as the Jews looked upon the veiled face of Moses. For let us imagine that love is present, let us imagine that works are present, yet neither love nor works can be a propitiation for sin [or be of as much value as Christ]. And they cannot even be opposed to the wrath and judgment of God, according to Ps. 143, 2: Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. Neither ought the honor of Christ to be transferred to our works.

For these reasons Paul contends that we are not justified by the Law, and he opposes to the Law the promise of the remission of sins, which is granted for Christ's sake, and teaches that we freely receive the remission of sins for Christ's sake. Paul calls us away from the Law to this promise. Upon this promise he bids us look [and regard the Lord Christ our treasure], which certainly will be void if we are justified by the Law before we are justified through the promise, or if we obtain the remission of sins on account of our own righteousness. But it is evident that the promise was given us and Christ was tendered to us for the very reason that we cannot do the works of the Law. Therefore it is necessary that we are reconciled by the promise before we do the works of the Law. The promise, however, is received only by faith. Therefore it is necessary for contrite persons to apprehend by faith the promise of the remission of sins granted for Christ's sake, and to be confident that freely for Christ's sake they have a reconciled Father. This is the meaning of Paul, Rom. 4, 16, where he says: Therefore it is of faith that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure. And Gal. 3, 22: The Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given them that believe, i. e., all are under sin, neither can they be freed otherwise than by apprehending by faith the promise of the remission of sins. Therefore we must by faith accept the remission of sins before we do the works of the Law; although, as has been said above, love follows faith, because the regenerate receive the Holy Ghost, and accordingly begin [to become friendly to the Law and] to do the works of the Law.

We would cite more testimonies if they were not obvious to every godly reader in the Scriptures. And we do not wish to be too prolix, in order that this case may be the more readily seen through. Neither, indeed, quam defendimus, quod fide accipiamus remissionem peccatorum propter Christum, quod fide mediatorem Christum opponere debeamus irae Dei, non opera nostra. Nec perturbentur piae mentes, etiamsi Pauli sententias calumniantur adversarii. Nihil tam simpliciter dicitur, quod non queat depravari cavillando. Nos scimus hanc, quam diximus, veram et germanam sententiam Pauli esse, scimus hanc nostram sententiam piis conscientis firmam consolationem afferre, sine qua nemo consistere in iudicio Dei queat.

85] Itaque repudientur illae pharisaicae opiniones adversariorum, quod non accipiamus fide remissionem peccatorum, sed [R. 178 quod oporteat mereri dilectione nostra et operibus, quod dilectionem nostram et opera nostra irae Dei opponere debeamus. Haec doctrina legis est, non evangelii, quae fingit prius hominem lege iustificari, quam per Christum reconciliatus sit Deo, quum Christus dicat Ioh. 15, 5: Sine me nihil potestis facere; item: Ego sum vitis vera, vos palmites. 86] Verum adversarii fingunt nos esse palmites non Christi, sed Mosis. Prius enim volunt lege iustificari, dilectionem nostram et opera offerre Deo, quam reconciliantur Deo per Christum, quam sint palmites Christi. Paulus contra contendit legem non posse fieri sine Christo. Ideo promissio prius accipienda est, ut fide reconciliemur Deo propter Christum, quam legem facimus. Haec satis perspicua esse piis conscientis existimamus. Et hinc intelligent, cur supra professi simus, iustificari homines fide, non dilectione, quia oportet nos opponere irae Dei non nostram dilectionem aut opera, aut confidere nostra dilectione ac operibus, sed Christum mediatorem. Et prius oportet apprehendere promissionem remissionis peccatorum, quam legem facimus.

sagt haben, daß wir allein durch den Glauben vor Dilektion usw. Denn all unser Vermögen, alles Tun und Werk sind zu schwach, Gottes Zorn megzunehmen und zu stillen; darum müssen wir Christum, den Mittler, darstellen.

88] Postremo, quando erit pacata conscientia, si ideo accipimus remissionem peccatorum, quia nos diligimus aut legem facimus? Semper enim accusabit nos lex, quia nunquam legi Dei satisfacimus. Sicut inquit Paulus Rom. 4, 15: Lex iram operatur. Chrysostomus quaerit de poenitentia, unde certi reddamur peccata nobis remissa esse. Quaerunt et in sententiis eadem de re adversarii. Hoc non potest explicari, non possunt conscientiae reddi tranquillae, nisi sciant mandatum Dei esse et ipsum evangelium, ut certo statuant propter Christum gratis remitti peccata, nec dubitent sibi remitti. Si quis dubitat, is, ut Iohannes ait 1 ep. 5, 10, accusat promissionem divinam mendacii. Hanc certitudinem fidei nos docemus requiri in evangelio. Adversarii relinquunt conscientias incertas et ambigentes.

Vergebung der Sünden erlangen um Christus' willen durch den Glauben, daß wir auch den Mittler setzen müssen gegen Gottes Zorn, nicht unsere Werke. Es sollen sich auch fromme, christliche Gewissen daran nichts irren, ob die Widersacher die klaren Sprüche Pauli fälschlich auslegen und unrecht deuten. Denn so einfältig, so gewiß und rein, so klar kann man nichts reden oder schreiben, man kann ihm mit Worten eine andere Nase machen. Wir sind aber des gewiß und wissen's fürwahr, daß die Meinung, die wir gesetzt, die rechte Meinung Pauli ist. So hat das auch keinen Zweifel, daß diese Lehre allein ein recht gewisser Trost ist, die Herzen und Gewissen in rechtem Kampf und in agone des Todes und Ansehung zu stillen, zu trösten, wie es die Erfahrung gibt.

Derhalben nur weit, weit von uns mit den pharisäischen Lehren der Widersacher, da sie sagen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden nicht durch den Glauben erlangen, sondern daß wir sie verdienen müssen mit unsern Werken und mit unserer Liebe gegen Gott; item, daß wir mit unsern Werken und Liebe sollen Gottes Zorn versöhnen! Denn es ist eine recht pharisäische Lehre, eine Lehre des Gesetzes, nicht des Evangelii, da sie lehren, daß der Mensch erst durch das Gesetz gerecht werde, ehe er durch Christum Gott versöhnt werde, so doch Christus sagt: „Ohne mich könnt ihr nicht tun“; item: „Ich bin der Weinstock, ihr seid die Reben.“ Die Widersacher aber, die reden davon, als seien wir nicht Christi Reben, sondern Moßs. Denn sie wollen erst durchs Gesetz fromm und gerecht vor Gott werden und erst unsere Werke und Dilektion Gott opfern, ehe sie Reben am Weinstock Christi sind. Paulus aber, welcher freilich ein viel höherer Doktor ist denn die Widersacher, redet klar und freiet wiederum dies allein, daß niemand das Gesetz tun könne ohne Christum. Darum diejenigen, so die Sünde und Angst des Gewissens recht fühlen oder erfahren haben, die müssen sich an die Zusage der Gnade halten, daß sie durch den Glauben erst Gott versöhnt werden um Christus' willen, ehe sie das Gesetz erfüllen. Dieses alles ist öffentlich und klar genug bei gottesfürchtigen Gewissen. Und hieraus werden Christen wohl verstehen, warum wir hieroben ge-

Endlich aber sollten die Widersacher bedenken: wann will doch ein arm Gewissen zu Frieden kommen und stille werden, so wir Gnade und Vergebung der Sünden darum erlangen, daß wir Gott liebhaben, oder daß wir das Gesetz erfüllen? Das Gesetz wird uns allezeit anlagern; denn kein Mensch erfüllt das Gesetz, wie Paulus sagt: „Das Gesetz richtet Zorn an.“ Es fragt Chrysostomus, so fragen auch die Sententiarii, wie einer gewiß wird, daß ihm die Sünden vergeben seien. Es ist wahrlich wohl Fragens wert. Wohl dem, der da recht Antwort gibt! Auf diese allernötigste Frage ist nicht möglich zu antworten, es ist auch nicht möglich, das Gewissen in Ansehung recht zu trösten oder zu stillen, man antworte denn auf diese Meinung. Es ist Gottes Beschluß, Gottes Befehl von Anbeginn der Welt her, daß uns durch den Glauben an den ebenedeiten Samen, daß ist, is there any doubt that the meaning of Paul is what we are defending, namely, that by faith we receive the remission of sins for Christ's sake, that by faith we ought to oppose to God's wrath Christ as Mediator, and not our works. Neither let godly minds be disturbed, even though the adversaries find fault with the judgments of Paul. Nothing is said so simply that it cannot be distorted by caviling. We know that what we have mentioned is the true and genuine meaning of Paul; we know that this our belief brings to godly consciences [in agony of death and temptation] sure comfort, without which no one can stand in God's judgment.

Therefore let these pharisaic opinions of the adversaries be rejected, namely, that we do not receive by faith the remission of sins, but that it ought to be merited by our love and works; that we ought to oppose our love and our works to the wrath of God. Not of the Gospel, but of the Law is this doctrine, which feigns that man is justified by the Law before he has been reconciled through Christ to God, since Christ says, John 15, 5: Without Me ye can do nothing; likewise: I am the true Vine; ye are the branches. But the adversaries feign that we are branches, not of Christ, but of Moses. For they wish to be justified by the Law, and to offer their love and works to God before they are reconciled to God through Christ, before they are branches of Christ. Paul, on the other hand [who is certainly a much greater teacher than the adversaries], contends that the Law cannot be observed without Christ. Accordingly, in order that we [those who truly feel and have experienced sin and anguish of conscience must cling to the promise of grace, in order that they] may be reconciled to God for Christ's sake, the promise must be received before we do the works of the Law. We think that these things are sufficiently clear to godly consciences. And hence they will understand why we have declared above that men are justified by faith, not by love, because we must oppose to God's wrath not our love or works (or trust in our love and works), but Christ as Mediator [for all our ability, all our deeds and works, are far too weak to remove and appease God's wrath]. And we must apprehend the promise of the remission of sins before we do the works of the Law.

Lastly, when will conscience be pacified if we receive remission of sins on the ground that we love, or that we do the works of the Law? For the Law will always accuse us, because we never satisfy God's Law. Just as Paul says, Rom. 4, 15: The Law worketh wrath. Chrysostom asks concerning repentance, Whence are we made sure that our sins are remitted us? The adversaries also, in their "Sentences," ask concerning the same subject. [The question, verily, is worth asking; blessed the man that returns the right answer.] This cannot be explained, consciences cannot be made tranquil, unless they know that it is God's command and the very Gospel that they should be firmly confident that for Christ's sake sins are remitted freely, and that they should not doubt that these are remitted to them. If any one doubts, he charges, as John says, 1 Ep. 5, 10, the divine promise with falsehood. We teach that this certainty of faith is required in the Gospel. The adversaries leave consciences uncertain and wavering. Consciences, however, do nothing from faith when they perpetually doubt whether they have remission. [For it is not possible that there should be rest, or a quiet and peaceful conscience, if they doubt whether God be gracious. For if they doubt whether they have a gracious God, whether they are doing right, whether they have forgiveness of sins, how can, etc.] How can they in this doubt call upon God, how can they be confident that they are heard? Thus the entire 89] Nihil autem agunt conscientiae ex [R. 179 fide, quum perpetuo dubitant, utrum habeant remissionem. Quomodo possunt in hac dubitatione invocare Deum, quomodo possunt statuere, quod exaudiantur? Ita tota vita est sine Deo et sine vero cultu Dei. Hoc est, quod Paulus inquit Rom. 14, 23: peccatum esse, quicquid non fit ex fide. Et quia in hac dubitatione perpetuo versantur, nunquam experiuntur, quid sit fides. Ita fit, ut ad extremum ruant in desperationem. Talis est doctrina adversariorum, doctrina legis, abrogatio evangelii, doctrina desperationis. Nunc 90] libenter omnibus bonis viris permittimus iudicium de hoc loco poenitentiae, nihil enim habet obscuri, ut pronuntiet, utri magis pia et salubria conscientia docuerint, nos an adversarii. Profecto non delectant nos hae disensiones in ecclesia, quare nisi magnas et necessarias causas haberemus dissentendi ab adversariis, summa voluntate taceremus. Nunc quum ipsi manifestam veritatem damnent, non est integrum nobis deserere causam, non nostram, sed Christi et ecclesiae.

Eine solch schädliche Lehre führen die Widersacher, nämlich eine solche Lehre, dadurch das ganze Evangelium wird weggetan, Christus unterdrückt, die Leute in Verzweiflung und Qual der Gewissen, endlich, wenn Anfechtungen kommen, in Verzweiflung geführt. Dieses wolle nun Kaiserliche Majestät gnädiglich betrachten und wohl aufsehen; es belangt [betrifft] nicht Gold oder Silber, sondern Seelen und Gewissen. Auch wollen alle Ehrbaren, Verständigen hier wohl aufmerken, was diese Sache sei oder nicht sei. Hier mögen wir leiden, daß alle ehrbaren Leute urtheilen, welcher Theil für die christlichen Gewissen das Nützlichste gelehrt habe, wir oder die Widersacher. Denn wahrlich soll man es dafürhalten, daß uns mit Zank und Zwiespalt nicht wohl ist. Und wenn es nicht die größten, allerwichtigsten Ursachen hätte, nämlich unser aller Gewissen, Heil und Seele belangend, warum wir dieses müssen mit den Widersachern so heftig streiten, so wollten wir wohl schweigen. Aber nachdem sie das heilige Evangelium, alle klare Schrift der Apostel, die göttliche Wahrheit, verdammen, so können wir mit Gott und Gewissen diese seltsame Lehre und göttliche Wahrheit, daran wir endlich, wenn dies arme zeitliche Leben aufhört und aller Creaturen Hilfe aus ist, den ewigen, höchsten Trost [er]warten, nicht verleugnen, auch von dieser Sache in keinem Wege weichen, welche nicht unser allein ist, sondern der ganzen Christenheit, und belangt den höchsten Schatz, Jesum Christum.

91] Diximus, quas ob causas posuerimus has duas partes poenitentiae, contritionem et fidem. Idque hoc fecimus libentius, quia circumferuntur multa dicta de poenitentia, quae truncata citantur ex patribus, quae ad obscurandam fidem detorserunt adversarii. Talia sunt: Poenitentia est mala praeterita plangere, et plangenda iterum non committere. Item: Poenitentia est quaedam dolentis vindicta, puniens in se, quod dolet se commisisse. In his dictis nulla sit mentio fidei. Ac ne in scholis quidem, quum interpretantur, aliquid 92] de fide additur. Quare nos eam, ut magis conspici doctrina fidei posset, inter partes poenitentiae numeravimus. Nam illa dicta, quae contritionem aut bona opera requirunt et nullam fidei iustificantis mentionem faciunt, 93] periculosa esse res ipsa ostendit. Et merito desiderari prudentia in istis potest, [R. 180 qui centones illos sententiarum et decretorum congesserunt. Nam quum patres alias de alia parte poenitentiae loquantur, non tantum de una parte, sed de utraque, hoc est, de contritione et fide, excerpere et coniungere sententias profuisset.

und Canonisten über ihr Dekret billig weißlicher geschrieben haben. Denn so die Väter von dem andern Theil der Buße auch reden, nicht allein von einem Theil, sondern von beidem, von der Reue und vom Glauben, so sollten sie beides beieinander gesetzt haben.

durch den Glauben, um Christus' willen, ohne Verdienst sollen Sünden vergeben werden. So jemand aber daran wankt oder zweifelt, der lästet Gott in seiner Verheißung, wie Johannes sagt. Da sagen wir nun, daß ein Christ solches für gewiß als Gottes Befehl halten soll, und hält er's also, so ist er gewiß und fühlt Frieden und Trost. Die Widersacher, wenn sie lange predigen und lehren außer dieser Lehre, lassen sie die armen Gewissen im Zweifel stecken. Da ist nicht möglich, daß da sollte Ruhe sein, ein still oder friedlich Gewissen, wenn sie zweifeln, ob Gott gnädig sei. Denn so sie zweifeln, ob sie einen gnädigen Gott haben, ob sie recht tun, ob sie Vergebung der Sünden haben, wie können sie denn in dem Zweifel Gott anrufen, wie können sie gewiß sein, daß Gott ihr Gebet achte und erhöhe? Also ist all ihr Leben ohne Glauben, und können Gott nicht recht dienen. Das ist's, das Paulus zu den Römern sagt: „Was nicht aus dem Glauben ist, das ist Sünde.“ Und die weil sie in dem Zweifel allezeit und ewig stecken bleiben, so erfahren sie nimmer, was Gott, was Christus, was Glaube sei. Darüber geht's zuletzt also, daß sie in Verzweiflung, ohne Gott, ohne alle Gotteserkenntnis sterben.

Wir haben nun angezeigt, aus was Ursachen wir die zwei Stücke der Buße gesetzt haben, nämlich die Reue und den Glauben. Und das haben wir darum auch getan, denn man findet allerlei Sprüche hin und wieder in Büchern der Widersacher von der Buße, welche sie aus Augustino und den andern alten Vätern stückweise, verstückelt einführen, welche sie denn allenthalben dahin gedeutet und gestreckt haben, die Lehre vom Glauben ganz unterzudrücken [zu unterdrücken]. Als diesen Spruch haben sie gesetzt: „Die Buße ist ein Schmerz, dadurch die Sünde gekraft wird.“ Item: „Die Buße ist, daß ich beweine die vorigen Sünden und die beklagten Sünden nicht wieder tue.“ In den Sprüchen wird des Glaubens gar nicht gedacht, und auch in ihren Schulen, da sie gleich solche Sprüche nach der Länge [weitläufig] handeln, gedenken sie des Glaubens gar nicht. Darum, damit die Lehre vom Glauben desto bekannter würde, haben wir den Glauben für ein Stück der Buße gesetzt. Denn die Sprüche, die unsere Reue und unsere guten Werke lehren und des Glaubens gar nicht gedenken, die sind gar gefährlich [ganz gefährlich], wie die Erfahrung gibt. Darum, wenn sie die große Fahr der Seelen und Gewissen bedacht hätten, sollten die Sententarii life is without God [faith] and without the true worship of God. This is what Paul says, Rom. 14, 23: Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. And because they are constantly occupied with this doubt, they never experience what faith [God or Christ] is. Thus it comes to pass that they rush at last into despair [die in doubt, without God, without all knowledge of God]. Such is the doctrine of the adversaries, the doctrine of the Law, the annulling of the Gospel, the doctrine of despair. [Whereby Christ is suppressed, men are led into overwhelming sorrow and torture of conscience, and finally, when temptation comes, into despair. Let His Imperial Majesty graciously consider and well examine this matter; it does not concern gold or silver, but souls and consciences.] Now we are glad to refer to all good men the judgment concerning this topic of repentance (for it has no obscurity), in order that they may decide whether we or the adversaries have taught those things which are more godly and healthful to consciences. Indeed, these dissensions in the Church do not delight us; wherefore, if we did not have great and necessary reasons for dissenting from the adversaries, we would with the greatest pleasure be silent. But now, since they condemn the manifest truth, it is not right for us to desert a cause which is not our own, but is that of Christ and the Church. [We cannot with fidelity to God and conscience deny this blessed doctrine and divine truth, from which we expect at last, when this poor temporal life ceases and all help of creatures fails, the only eternal, highest consolation: nor will we in anything recede from this cause, which is not only ours, but that of all Christendom, and concerns the highest treasure, Jesus Christ.]

We have declared for what reasons we assigned to repentance these two parts, contrition and faith. And we have done this the more readily because many expressions concerning repentance are published which are cited in a mutilated form from the Fathers [Augustine and the other ancient Fathers], and which the adversaries have distorted in order to put faith out of sight. Such are: Repentance is to lament past evils, and not to commit again deeds that ought to be lamented. Again: Repentance is a kind of vengeance of him who grieves, thus punishing in himself what he is sorry for having committed. In these passages no mention is made of faith. And not even in the schools, when they interpret, is anything added concerning faith. Therefore, in order that the doctrine of faith might be the more conspicuous, we have enumerated it among the parts of repentance. For the actual fact shows that those passages which require contrition or good works, and make no mention of justifying faith, are dangerous [as experience proves]. And prudence can justly be desired in those who have collected these centos of the "Sentences" and decrees. For since the Fathers speak in some places concerning one part, and in other places concerning another part of repentance, it would have been well to select and combine their judgments not only concerning one part, but concerning both, i. e., concerning contrition and faith.

94] Nam Tertullianus egregie de fide loquitur, amplificans iusiurandum illud apud prophetam, Ezech. 33, 11: Vivo ego, dicit Dominus, nolo mortem peccatoris, sed ut convertatur et vivat. Quia enim iurat Deus nolle se mortem peccatoris, ostendit requiri fidem, ut iuranti credamus, et certo statuamus eum nobis ignoscere. Magna debet esse auctoritas apud nos promissionum divinarum per sese. At haec promissio etiam iureiurando confirmata est. Quare si quis non statuit sibi ignosci, is negat Deum verum iurasse, quia blasphemia atrocior nulla excogitari potest. Sic enim ait Tertullianus: Invitat praemio ad salutem, iurans etiam. „Vivo“ dicens cupit sibi credi. O beatos, quorum causa iurat Deus! O miserrimos, si nec iuranti Domino 95] credimus! Atque hic sciendum est, quod haec fides debeat sentire, quod gratis nobis ignoscat Deus propter Christum, propter suam promissionem, non propter nostra opera, contritionem, confessionem aut satisfactiones. Nam si fides nitatur his operibus, statim fit incerta, quia conscientia pavida videt haec 96] opera indigna esse. Ideo praeclare ait Ambrosius de poenitentia: Ergo et agendam poenitentiam et tribuendam veniam credere nos convenit, ut veniam tamen tamquam ex fide speremus, tamquam ex syngrapha fides impetrat. Item: Fides est, quae peccata 97] nostra cooperit. Exstant itaque sententiae apud patres non solum de contritione et operibus, sed etiam de fide. Verum adversarii, quum neque naturam poenitentiae intelligant, neque sermonem patrum, excerptum dicta de parte poenitentiae, videlicet de operibus; alibi dicta de fide, quum non intelligant, praetereunt.

rechte Art der Buße, verstehen auch der Väter Sprüche nicht, glauben sie heraus etliche verkümmelt von einem Teil der Buße, nämlich von der Reue und von den Werken; und was vom Glauben geredet ist, da laufen sie überhin.

De Confessione et Satisfactione.

1] Boni viri facile iudicare possunt plurimum referre, ut de superioribus partibus, videlicet contritione et fide, conservetur vera doctrina. Itaque in his locis illustrandis semper plus versati sumus, de confessione et satisfactionibus non admodum rixati sumus. 2] Nam et nos confessionem retinemus praecipue propter absolutionem, quae est verbum Dei, quod de singulis auctoritate divina pro- 3] nuntiat potestas clavium. Quare impium esset ex ecclesia privatam absolutionem tollere. Neque quid sit remissio peccatorum aut potestas clavium, intelligunt, si qui pri- 5] vatam absolutionem aspernantur. Ceterum de enumeratione delictorum in confessione supra diximus, quod sentiamus eam non 6] esse iure divino necessariam. Nam quod obiciunt quidam iudicem prius debere cognoscere causam, priusquam pronuntiat, hoc nihil ad hanc rem pertinet, quia ministerium absolutionis beneficium est seu gratia, non est 7] iudicium seu lex. Itaque ministri in ecclesia habent mandatum remittendi peccata, non habent mandatum cognoscendi occulta

Denn Tertullianus auch redet gar tröstlich vom Glauben, und sonderlich preißt er den göttlichen Eid, davon der Prophet redet: „Als wahr ich lebe, sagt der Herr, will ich nicht den Tod des Sünders, sondern daß er sich bekehre und lebe.“ Dieweil Gott schwört, sagt er, er wolle nicht den Tod des Sünders, so erfordert er gewiß den Glauben, daß wir seinem Eid und Schwören glauben sollen, daß er uns [die] Sünden vergeben wolle. Gottes Zusagen sollen ohne daß bei uns aufs höchste angesehen und geachtet sein. Nun ist die Zusage mit einem Eid bekräftigt. Darum so jemand hält, daß ihm [die] Sünden nicht vergeben werden, der lügenstrafft Gott, welches die größte Gotteslästerung ist. Denn also sagt Tertullianus: Invitat praemio ad salutem, iurans etiam etc.; das ist: „Gott loddet uns zu unserm eigenen Heil mit seinem eigenen Eide, daß man ihm glaube. O wohl denen, um derenwillen Gott schwört! O wehe uns elenden Leuten, wenn wir auch dem göttlichen Eide nicht glauben!“ Und hier müssen wir wissen, daß der Glaube gewiß dasürhalten soll, daß uns Gott aus Gnaden Sünde vergibt um Christus' willen, nicht um unserer Werke willen, um Beichte oder Genugtuung willen. Denn alsbald wir uns auf Werke gründen, werden wir ungewiß. Denn ein erschrodnen Gewissen merkt bald, daß seine besten Werke nichts wert seien gegen Gott. Darum sagt Ambrosius ein fein Wort von der Buße: „Wir müssen Buße tun und auch glauben, daß uns Gnade widerfähre, doch also, daß wir der Gnade hoffen aus dem Glauben; denn der Glaube wartet und erlangt, wie aus einer Handschrift, Gnade.“ Item: „Der Glaube ist eben das, dadurch die Sünden bedeckt werden.“ Darum sind klare Sprüche in den Büchern der Väter nicht allein von Werken, sondern auch vom Glauben. Aber die Widerfacher, so sie nicht verstehen die

Von der Beichte und Genugtuung.

Gottesfürchtige, ehrbare, fromme, christliche Leute können hier wohl merken, daß viel daran gelegen ist, daß man die poenitentia, von der Reue und dem Glauben, eine rechte, gewisse Lehre in der Kirche habe und erhalte. Denn der große Petrus vom Ablass usw., item, die ungeschickte Lehre der Sophisten hat uns genug gewikhigt, was großen Unrats und Fährlichkeit daraus entsteht, wenn man hier fehlschlägt. Wie hat manch fromm Gewissen unter dem Papsttum hier so mit großer Arbeit den rechten Weg gesucht und unter solcher Finsternis nicht gefunden! Darum haben wir allezeit großen Fleiß gehabt, von diesem Stüd klar, gewiß, richtig zu lehren. Von der Beichte und Genugtuung haben wir nicht sonders [sonders] gezannt. Denn die Beichte behalten wir auch um der Absolution willen, welche ist Gottes Wort, dadurch uns die Gewalt der Schlüssel lospricht von Sünden. Darum wäre es wider Gott, die Absolution aus der Kirche also abtun usw. Diejenigen, so die Absolution verachten, die wissen nicht, was Vergebung der Sünden ist, oder was die Gewalt der Schlüssel ist. Von dem Erzählen aber der Sünden haben wir oben in unserm Be-

For Tertullian speaks excellently concerning faith, dwelling upon the oath in the prophet, Ezek. 33, 11: As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. For as God swears that He does not wish the death of a sinner, He shows that faith is required, in order that we may believe the one swearing, and be firmly confident that He forgives us. The authority of the divine promises ought by itself to be great in our estimation. But this promise has also been confirmed by an oath. Therefore, if any one be not confident that he is forgiven, he denies that God has sworn what is true, than which a more horrible blasphemy cannot be imagined. For Tertullian speaks thus: He invites by reward to salvation, even swearing. Saying, "I live," He desires that He be believed. Oh, blessed we, for whose sake God swears! Oh, most miserable if we believe not the Lord even when He swears! But here we must know that this faith ought to be confident that God freely forgives us for the sake of Christ, for the sake of His own promise, not for the sake of our works, contrition, confession, or satisfactions. For if faith relies upon these works, it immediately becomes uncertain, because the terrified conscience sees that these works are unworthy. Accordingly, Ambrose speaks admirably concerning repentance: Therefore it is proper for us to believe both that we are to repent, and that we are to be pardoned, but so as to expect pardon as from faith, which obtains it as from a handwriting. Again: It is faith which covers our sins. Therefore, there are sentences extant in the Fathers, not only concerning contrition and works, but also concerning faith. But the adversaries, since they understand neither the nature of repentance nor the language of the Fathers, select passages concerning a part of repentance, namely, concerning works; they pass over the declarations made elsewhere concerning faith, since they do not understand them.

Article VI:

Of Confession and Satisfaction.

Good men can easily judge that it is of the greatest importance that the true doctrine concerning the above-mentioned parts, namely, contrition and faith, be preserved. [For the great fraud of indulgences, etc., and the preposterous doctrines of the sophists have sufficiently taught us what great vexation and danger arise therefrom if a foul stroke is here made. How many a godly conscience under the Papacy sought with great labor the true way, and in the midst of such darkness did not find it!] Therefore, we have always been occupied more with the elucidation of these topics, and have disputed nothing as yet concerning confession and satisfaction. For we also retain confession, especially on account of the absolution, as being the word of God which, by divine authority, the power of the keys pronounces upon individuals. Therefore it would be wicked to remove private absolution from the Church. Neither do they understand what the remission of sins or the power of the keys is, if there are any who despise private absolution. But in reference to the enumeration of offenses in confession, we have said above that we hold that it is not necessary by divine right. For the objection, made by some, that a judge ought to investigate a case before he pronounces upon it, pertains in no way to this subject; because the ministry of absolution is favor or grace, it is not a legal process, or law. [For God is the Judge, who has committed to the apostles, not the office

Sache. Denn die Absolution ist schlecht der Befehl loszusprechen, und ist nicht ein neu Gericht, Sünde zu erforschen. Denn Gott ist der Richter, der hat den Aposteln nicht das Richteramt, sondern die Gnadenexekution befohlen, diejenigen loszusprechen, so es begehren; und sie entbinden auch und absolvieren von Sünden, die uns nicht einfallen. Darum ist die Absolution eine Stimme des Evangelii, dadurch wir Trost empfangen, und ist nicht ein Urtheil oder Befehl.

9] Et ridiculum est hoc transferre dictum Salomonis, Prov. 27, 23: Diligenter cognosce vultum pecoris tui. Nihil enim dicit Salomon de confessione, sed tradit oeconomicum praeceptum patrifamilias, ut utatur suo et abstineat ab alieno, et iubet eum res suas diligenter curare; ita tamen, ne studio augendarum facultatum occupatus animus abiciat timorem Dei aut fidem aut curam Verbi Dei. Sed adversarii nostri mirifica metamorphosi transformant dicta Scripturae in quaslibet sententias. Hic cognoscere significat [R. 182 eis audire confessiones, vultus non externam conversationem, sed arcana conscientiae. Pecudes significant homines. Sane bella est interpretatio et digna istis contemptoribus studiorum eloquentiae. Quodsi velit aliquis per similitudinem transferre praeceptum a patrefamilias ad pastorem ecclesiae, certe vultum debet interpretari de externa conversatione. Haec similitudo magis quadrabit.

Grammatika fehlen. Wenn jemand an dem Ort je mit einem Seelenhirten zu vergleichen, so müßte der äußerlichen Wandel bedeuten.

10] Sed omittamus ista. Aliquoties fit in Psalmis mentio confessionis, ut Ps. 32, 5: Dixi, confitebor adversum me iniustitiam meam Domino, et tu remisisti iniquitatem peccati mei. Talis confessio peccati, quae Deo fit, est ipsa contritio. Nam quum Deo fit confessio, corde fieri necesse est, non solum voce, sicut fit in scenis ab histrionibus. Est igitur talis confessio contritio, in qua sentientes iram Dei confitemur Deum iuste irasci, nec placari posse nostris operibus, et tamen quaerimus misericordiam propter promissionem Dei. Talis est haec confessio, Ps. 51, 6: Tibi soli peccavi, ut tu iustificeris et vincas, quum iudicaris. Id est: Fateor me peccatorem esse et meritum aeternam iram, nec possum opponere meas iniustitias, mea merita tuae irae. Ideo pronuntio te iustum esse, quum condemnas et punis nos. Pronuntio te vincere, quando hypocritae iudicant te, quod sis iniustus, qui ipsos punias aut condemnes bene meritos. Imo nostra merita non possunt opponi tuo iudicio, sed ita iustificabimur, si tu iustifices, si tu reputes nos iustos per misericordiam tuam. 12] Fortassis et Iacobum citabit aliquis, 5, 16: Confitemini vicissim delicta. Sed hic non loquitur de confessione sacerdotibus facienda, sed in genere de reconciliatione fratrum inter se. Iubet enim mutuam esse confessionem.

kenntnis gesagt, daß wir halten, es sei von Gott nicht geboten. Denn daß sie sagen, ein jeglicher Richter muß erst die Sachen und Gebrechen hören, ehe er das Urtheil spreche, also müssen erst die Sünden erzählt werden usw.: das tut nichts zur

Und es ist nährlich und kindisch genug bei Verständigen, den Spruch Salomonis, da er am 27. sagt: Diligenter cognosce vultum pecoris tui, das ist: „Habe acht auf deine Schafe“ usw., an dem Ort von der Beichte oder Absolution einzuführen. Denn Salomo redet da gar nicht von der Beichte, sondern gibt ein Gebot den Hausvätern, daß sie sollen mit dem Thier zufrieden sein und sich fremdes Guts enthalten, und beschließt mit dem Wort, ein jeder solle seines Viehes und Güter fleißig wahrnehmen; doch soll er aus Geiz Gottesfürcht, Gottes Gebot und Wort nicht vergessen. Aber die Widerfacher machen aus der Schrift Schwarz und Weiß, wann und wie sie wollen, wider alle natürliche Art der klaren Worte an dem Ort: Cognosce vultum pecoris etc. Da muß cognoscere Beichtgehören heißen. „Vieh“ oder „Schafe“ muß da Menschen heißen. Stabulum, achten wir, heißt auch eine Schule, da solche Doctores und Oratores innen sind. Aber ihnen geschieht recht, die also die Heilige Schrift, alle guten Künste verachten, daß sie so grob in der Luft hänge, einen Hausvater, davon Salomo redet, vultus da nicht arcana conscientiae, sondern den Aber ich lasse das fahren. Es wird an etlichen Orten in Psalmen gedacht des Wortes confessio, als im 32. Psalm: „Ich will dem Herrn meine Übertretung bekennen wider mich.“ Dasselbe Beichten und Bekennen, das Gott geschieht, ist die Reue selbst. Denn wenn wir Gott beichten, so müssen wir im Herzen uns für Sünder erkennen, nicht allein mit dem Munde, wie die Heuchler die Worte allein nachreden. So ist diese Beichte, die Gott geschieht, eine solche Reue im Herzen, da ich Gottes Ernst und Zorn fühle, Gott recht gebe, daß er billig zürnt, daß er auch mit unserm Verdienst nicht könne versöhnt werden, und da wir doch Barmherzigkeit suchen, nachdem Gott hat Gnade in Christo zugesagt. Also ist das eine Beichte im 51. Psalm: „An dir allein hab' ich gesündigt, daß du recht erfunden werdest, wenn du gerichtet wirst.“ Das ist: Ich bekenne mich einen Sünder, und daß ich verdient habe ewigen Zorn, und kann mit meinen Werken noch mit meinem Verdienst deinen Zorn nicht stillen. Darum sage ich, daß du gerecht bist und billig uns straffst. Ich gebe dir recht, obwohl die Heuchler dich richten, du seiest unrecht, daß du ihr Verdienst und gute Werke nicht ansehest. Ja, ich weiß, daß meine Werke vor deinem Urtheil nicht bestehen, sondern also werden wir gerecht, so du uns für gerecht schädest durch deine Barmherzigkeit. Es möchte etwa auch einer den Spruch Iakobi anziehen: „Bekennet einander eure Sünden.“ Er redet aber da nicht von der Beichte, die dem Priester geschieht usw., sondern redet von einem Versöhnen und Bekennen, wenn ich sonst mich mit meinem Nächsten versöhne.

of judges, but the administration of grace, namely, to acquit those who desire, etc.] Therefore ministers in the Church have the command to remit sin; they have not the command to investigate secret sins. And indeed, they absolve from those that we do not remember; for which reason absolution, which is the voice of the Gospel remitting sins and consoling consciences, does not require judicial examination.

And it is ridiculous to transfer hither the saying of Solomon, Prov. 27, 23: Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks. For Solomon says nothing of confession, but gives to the father of a family a domestic precept, that he should use what is his own, and abstain from what is another's; and he commands him to take care of his own property diligently, yet in such a way that, with his mind occupied with the increase of his resources, he should not cast away the fear of God, or faith or care in God's Word. But our adversaries, by a wonderful metamorphosis, transform passages of Scripture to whatever meaning they please. [They produce from the Scriptures black and white, as they please, contrary to the natural meaning of the clear words.] Here to know signifies with them to hear confessions, the state, not the outward life, but the secrets of conscience; and the flocks signify men. [Stable, we think, means a school within which there are such doctors and orators. But it has happened aright to those who thus despise the Holy Scriptures and all fine arts that they make gross mistakes in grammar.] The interpretation is assuredly neat, and is worthy of these despisers of the pursuits of eloquence. But if any one desires by a similitude to transfer a precept from a father of a family to a pastor of a Church, he ought certainly to interpret "state" [V. vultus, countenance] as applying to the outward life. This similitude will be more consistent.

But let us omit such matters as these. At different times in the Psalms mention is made of confession, as, Ps. 32, 5: I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Such confession of sin which is made to God is contrition itself. For when confession is made to God, it must be made with the heart, not alone with the voice, as is made on the stage by actors. Therefore, such confession is contrition, in which, feeling God's wrath, we confess that God is justly angry, and that He cannot be appeased by our works, and, nevertheless, we seek for mercy because of God's promise. Such is the following confession, Ps. 51, 4: Against Thee only have I sinned, that Thou mightest be justified, and be clear when Thou judgest, i. e., "I confess that I am a sinner, and have merited eternal wrath, nor can I set my righteousnesses, my merits, against Thy wrath; accordingly, I declare that Thou art just when Thou condemnest and punishest us; I declare that Thou art clear when hypocrites judge Thee to be unjust in punishing them or in condemning the well-deserving. Yea, our merits cannot be opposed to Thy judgment; but we shall thus be justified, namely, if Thou justifiest us, if through Thy mercy Thou accountest us righteous." Perhaps some one may also cite Jas. 5, 16: Confess your faults one to another. But here the reference is not to confession that is to be made to the priests, but, in general, concerning the reconciliation of brethren to each other. For it commands that the confession be mutual.

13] Porro adversarii nostri multos doctores receptissimos damnabunt, si contentent enumerationem delictorum in confessione necessariam esse iure divino. Quamquam [R. 183 enim confessionem probamus et quandam examinationem prodesse iudicamus, ut institui homines melius possint: tamen ita moderanda res est, ne conscientis iniiciantur laquei, quae nunquam erunt tranquillae, si existimabunt se non posse consequi remissionem peccatorum, nisi facta illa scrupulosa enumeratione. 14] Hoc certe falsissimum est, quod adversarii posuerunt in Confutatione, quod confessio integra sit necessaria ad salutem. Est enim impossibilis. Et quales laqueos hic iniiciunt conscientiae, quum requirunt integram confessionem! Quando enim statuet conscientia integrum esse confessionem? Apud scriptores ecclesiasticos fit mentio confessionis, sed hi non loquuntur de hac enumeratione occultorum delictorum, sed de ritu publicae poenitentiae. Quia enim lapsi aut famosi non recipiebantur sine certis satisfactionibus, ideo confessionem faciebant isti apud presbyteros, ut pro modo delictorum praescriberentur eis satisfactiones. Haec tota res nihil simile habuit huic enumerationi, de qua nos disputamus. Confessio illa fiebat, non quod sine ea non posset fieri remissio peccatorum coram Deo, sed quod non poterant satisfactiones praescribi, nisi prius cognito genere delicti. Nam alia delicta habebant alios canones.

16] Et ex illo ritu publicae poenitentiae reliquum habemus etiam nomen satisfactionis. Nolebant enim sancti patres recipere lapsos aut famosos, nisi prius cognita et spectata poenitentia eorum, quantum fieri poterat. Et huius rei multae videntur fuisse causae. Nam ad exemplum pertinebat castigare lapsos, sicut et Glossa in Decretis admonet, et indecorum erat homines famosos statim admittere ad communionem. [Glossa Decreti: „Si crimina aliquorum nolentium confiteri fuerint manifesta vel probata: praelati eorum debent eos prius admonere et increpare, ut emendantur; quodsi non fecerint, ferro excommunicationis sunt ab aliis separandi.“] Hi mores diu iam antiquati sunt. Nec necesse est eos restituere, quia non sunt necessarii ad remissionem. 17] nem peccatorum coram Deo. Neque hoc senserunt patres, mereri homines remissionem peccatorum per tales mores aut talia opera. Quamquam haec spectacula imperitos solent fallere, ut putent se per haec opera mereri remissionem peccatorum coram Deo. Verum si quis sic sensit, iudaice et gentiliter [R. 184 sensit. Nam et ethnici habuerunt quasdam expiationes delictorum, per quas fingeant se 18] reconciliari Deo. Nunc autem more antiquato manet nomen satisfactionis et vestigium moris, quod in confessione praescribunt certae satisfactiones, quas definiunt esse opera non debita. Nos vocamus satisfactiones 19] canonicas. De his sic sentimus, sicut de enumeratione, quod satisfactiones canonicae

Es müssen auch die Widersacher gar viel ihre eigenen Lehrer verdammen, so sie wollen sagen, daß Erzählung der Sünden müsse geheißen und von Gott geboten sei. Denn wiewohl wir die Beichte auch behalten und sagen, es sei nicht unnütz, daß man die Jugend und unerfahrene Leute auch frage, damit sie desto besser mögen unterrichtet werden: doch ist das alles also zu mähigen, damit die Gewissen nicht gefangen werden, welche nimmer können zufrieden sein, solange sie in dem Wahn sind, daß man vor Gott schuldig sei, die Sünden zu erzählen. Derhalben ist das Wort der Widersacher, da sie sagen, daß zur Seligkeit not sei eine ganz reine Beichte, da keine Sünde verschwiegen [wird] usw., ganz falsch. Denn solche Beichte ist unmöglich. O Herr Gott, wie jämmerlich haben sie manch fromm Gewissen geplagt und gequält damit, da sie gelehrt, die Beichte müsse ganz rein sein und keine Sünde ungebeichtet bleiben! Denn wie kann ein Mensch immer gewiß werden, wann er ganz rein gebeichtet habe? Die Väter gedenten auch der Beichte, aber sie reden nicht von Erzählung der heimlichen Sünden, sondern von einer Ceremonie einer öffentlichen Buße. Denn vorzeiten hat man diejenigen, so in öffentlichen Lastern gewesen, nicht wieder angenommen in der Kirche ohne eine öffentliche Ceremonie und Strafe; derhalben so mußten sie den Priestern ihre Sünden namhaftig beichten, daß nach der Größe der Übertretung die satisfactiones konnten aufgelegt werden. Das ganze Ding aber ist nicht gleich gewesen dem Sündenberzählen, davon wir reden. Denn dieselbe Beichte und Bekenntnis geschah nicht darum, daß ohne dieselbe Beichte Vergebung der Sünden vor Gott nicht geschehen kann, sondern daß man ihnen keine äußerliche Strafe könnte auflegen, man wüßte denn die Sünde.

Und von der äußerlichen Ceremonie der öffentlichen Buße ist auch das Wort satisfactio oder Genugthuung hergekommen. Denn die Väter wollten diejenigen, so in öffentlichen Lastern erfunden, nicht wieder annehmen ohne eine Strafe. Und dieses hatte viele Ursachen. Denn es diente zu einem Exempel, daß öffentliche Laster gestraft würden; wie auch die Glossa im Decret sagt. So war es auch ungeschickt, daß man diejenigen, so in offene Laster gefallen waren, sollte bald unverfugt zu dem Sacrament zulassen. Dieselben Ceremonien alle sind nun vorläufigt abgekommen, und ist nicht not, daß man sie wieder aufrichte, denn sie tun gar nichts zu der Veröhnung vor Gott. Auch ist es der Väter Meinung in keinem Wege gewesen, daß die Menschen dadurch sollten Vergebung der Sünden erlangen; wiewohl solche äußerliche Ceremonien leichtlich die Unerfahrenen dahin bringen, daß sie meinen, sie hülfen etwas zur Seligkeit. Wer nun das lehrt oder hält, der lehrt und hält ganz jüdisch und heidnisch. Denn die Heiden haben auch gehabt etliche Reinigungen, da sie haben wollen wäshen, sie würden dadurch gegen [mit] Gott veröhnt. Nun aber, so dieselbe Weise der öffentlichen Buße abgekommen ist, ist geblieben der Name satisfactio, und ist noch geblieben der Schatten des alten Brauchs, daß sie in der Beichte Genugthuung auflegen und nennen's opera non debita. Wir nennen's satisfactiones canonicas. Davon lehren wir, wie von Erzählung der Sünden, nämlich, daß dieselben öffentlichen Ceremonien von Gott nicht geboten sind, auch nicht not und nicht helfen zur Ver-

Again, our adversaries will condemn many most generally received teachers if they will contend that in confession an enumeration of offenses is necessary according to divine Law. For although we approve of confession, and judge that some examination is of advantage, in order that men may be the better instructed [young and inexperienced persons be questioned], yet the matter must be so controlled that snares are not cast upon consciences, which never will be tranquil if they think that they cannot obtain the remission of sins, unless this precise enumeration be made. That which the adversaries have expressed in the Confutation is certainly most false, namely, that a full confession is necessary for salvation. For this is impossible. And what snares they here cast upon the conscience when they require a full confession! For when will conscience be sure that the confession is complete? In the Church-writers mention is made of confession, but they do not speak of this enumeration of secret offenses, but of the rite of public repentance. For as the fallen or notorious [those guilty of public crimes] were not received without fixed satisfactions [without a public ceremony or reproof], they made confession on this account to the presbyters, in order that satisfactions might be prescribed to them according to the measure of their offenses. This entire matter contained nothing similar to the enumeration concerning which we are disputing. This confession was made, not because the remission of sins before God could not occur without it, but because satisfactions could not be prescribed unless the kind of offense were first known. For different offenses had different canons.

And from this rite of public repentance there has been left the word "satisfaction." For the holy Fathers were unwilling to receive the fallen or the notorious, unless, as far as it was possible, their repentance had been first examined into and exhibited publicly. And there seem to have been many causes for this. For to chastise those who had fallen served as an example, just as also the gloss upon the decrees admonishes, and it was improper immediately to admit notorious men to the communion [without their being tested]. These customs have long since grown obsolete. Neither is it necessary to restore them, because they are not necessary for the remission of sins before God. Neither did the Fathers hold this, namely, that men merit the remission of sins through such customs or such works, although these spectacles [such outward ceremonies] usually lead astray the ignorant to think that by these works they merit the remission of sins before God. But if any one thus holds, he holds to the faith of a Jew and heathen. For also the heathen had certain expiations for offenses through which they imagined to be reconciled to God. Now, however, although the custom has become obsolete, the name satisfaction still remains, and a trace of the custom also remains of prescribing in confession certain satisfactions, which they define as works that are not due. We call them canonical satisfactions. Of these we hold, just as of the enumeration, that canonical satisfactions [these public ceremonies] are not necessary by divine Law for the remission of sins; just as those ancient exhibitions of satisfactions in public non sint necessariae iure divino ad remissionem peccatorum, sicut neque illa spectacula vetera satisfactionum in poenitentia publica iure divino necessaria fuerunt ad remissionem peccatorum. Retinenda est enim sententia de fide, quod fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum propter Christum, non propter nostra opera praecedentia aut sequentia. Et nos ob hanc causam praecipue de satisfactionibus disputavimus, ne susciperentur ad obscurandam iustitiam fidei, neve existimarent homines se propter illa opera consequi remissionem peccatorum. Et adiuvant errorem multa dicta, quae in scholis iactantur, quale est, quod in definitione satisfactionis ponunt: fieri eam ad placandam divinam offensam.

21] Sed tamen fatentur adversarii, quod satisfactiones non prosint ad remissionem culpae. Verum fingunt satisfactiones prodesset ad redimendas poenas seu purgatorii seu alias. Sic enim docent in remissione peccati Deum remittere culpam, et tamen, quia convenit iustitiae divinae punire peccatum, mutare poenam aeternam in poenam temporalem. Addunt amplius partem illius temporalis poenae remitti potestate clavium, reliquum autem redimi per satisfactiones. Nec potest intelligi, quarum poenarum pars remittatur potestate clavium, nisi dicant partem [R. 185 poenarum purgatorii remitti; qua ex re sequeretur satisfactiones tantum esse poenas redimendes purgatorium. Et has satisfactiones dicunt valere, etiamsi fiant ab his, qui relapsi sunt in peccatum mortale, quasi vero divina offensa placari queat ab his, qui sunt in peccato mortali. Haec tota res est commentitia, recens conficta sine auctoritate Scripturae et veterum scriptorum ecclesiasticorum. Ac ne Longobardus quidem de satisfactionibus 23] hoc modo loquitur. Scholastici viderunt in ecclesia esse satisfactiones. Nec animadvertunt illa spectacula instituta esse tum exempli causa, tum ad probandos hos, qui petebant recipi ab ecclesia. In summa, non viderunt esse disciplinam et rem prorsus politicam. Ideo superstitiose sinnerunt eas non ad disciplinam coram ecclesia, sed ad placandum Deum valere. Et sicut alias saepe incommode commiscuerunt spiritualia et politica, idem accidit et in satisfactionibus. At 24] qui glossa in canonibus aliquoties testatur has observationes institutas esse propter disciplinam ecclesiae.

Gnade begehrten, auch herzlich sich befehrt hätten. In Summa, sie haben nicht gesehen, daß solche satisfactione eine äußerliche Zucht, Strafe und disciplina ist gewesen und ein solch Ding, wie eine andere weltliche Zucht, zu einer Scheu oder Furcht aufgerichtet. Darüber haben sie gelehrt, daß sie nicht allein zu einer Zucht, sondern auch Gott zu versöhnen dienten und not wären zur Seligkeit. Wie sie aber in vielen andern Stücken das Reich Christi, welches geistlich ist, und der Welt Reich und äußerliche Zucht ineinandergeflocht haben, also haben sie auch getan mit den satisfactionibus. Aber die Glossen in canonibus zeigen an etlichen vielen Orten an, daß dieselben satisfactiones allein zu einem Exempel vor der Kirche dienen sollen.

25] Videte autem, quomodo in Confutatione, quam ausi sunt obtrudere Caesareae Maiestati, probent haec sua signmenta. Multa dicta ex Scripturis citant, ut fucum imperitis faciant, quasi haec res habeat auctoritatem ex Scripturis, quae adhuc Longobardi tempore ignota erat. Allegant has sententias: Facite gebung der Sünden. Denn diese Lehre muß vor allen Dingen erhalten werden und stehenbleiben, daß wir durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, nicht durch unsere Werke, die vor oder nach geschehen, wenn wir befehrt oder neugeboren sind in Christo. Und wir haben vornehmlich aus dieser Ursache von den satisfactionibus geredet, damit niemand die Genugtuung also verkünde, daß dadurch die Lehre vom Glauben würde untergedrückt [unterdrückt], als könnten wir durch unsere Werke Vergebung der Sünden verdienen. Denn der gefährliche Irrtum von satisfactionibus ist also eingerissen und bekräftigt durch etliche ungeschickte Lehren, so die Widersacher schreiben, die Genugtuung sei ein solch Werk, dadurch der göttliche Zorn und Ungnade versöhnt werde.

Je doch bekennen die Widersacher selbst, daß die satisfactiones nicht lösmachen die Schuld vor Gott, sondern sie erlöschten, daß sie allein quitt- und lösmachen die Pein oder Strafe. Denn so lehren sie, daß, wenn die Sünde vergeben wird, so wird die Schuld oder culpa ohne Mittel, allein durch Gott, vergeben; und doch, diemeil er ein gerechter Gott ist, läßt er Sünde nicht ohne Strafe und verwandelt die ewige Strafe in eine zeitliche Strafe. Darüber lehren sie, daß ein Teil der zeitlichen Strafe erlassen werde durch die Gewalt der Schlüssel. Ein Teil aber soll durch die satisfactiones oder Genugtuungen bezahlt werden. Und man kann nicht verstehen, welches Teil der Strafe oder Pein erlassen werde durch die Gewalt der Schlüssel, sie wollten denn sagen, daß ein Teil der Pein des Fegefeuers erlassen werde, daraus folgen wollte, daß die satisfactiones allein dienten, zu erlösen die Pein des Fegefeuers. Und weiter sagen sie, die satisfactiones taugen vor Gott, wenn sie gleich von denjenigen geschehen, die in Todssünden gefallen sind; gleich als lasse sich Gott von denen versöhnen, die in Todssünden liegen und seine Feinde sind. Dieses alles sind eitel erträumte, erdichtete Lehren und Worte, ohne allen Grund der Schrift und wider alle Schriften der alten Väter. Auch redet Longobardus selbst nicht auf die Weise von den satisfactionibus. Die Scholastici haben wohl von Hörensagen gehabt, daß etwann [vorzeiten] satisfactiones in der Kirche gewesen wären, und haben nicht bedacht, daß es eine äußerliche Ceremonie gewesen, da die publice poenitentes oder die Büsser sich gegen die Kirche zeigen mußten mit einer Ceremonie, welche dazu war eingekehrt, erlich zu einem Schreden und Exempel, daran sich andere möchten stoßen, zum andern zu einer Probe, ob dieselben Sünder oder Büsser, so wieder

Sier laßt uns aber sehen, wie die Widersacher solche ihre Träume gründen und beweisen in der Confutation, welche sie Kaiserlicher Majestät zulegt aufgehängt. Sie ziehen viele Sprüche der Schrift an, daß sie den Unerscharen einen Schein machen, als sei ihre Lehre von satisfactionibus in der Schrift gegründet, welche doch noch zu Kon-repentance were not necessary by divine Law for the remission of sins. For the belief concerning faith must be retained, that by faith we obtain remission of sins for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of our works that precede or follow [when we are converted or born anew in Christ]. And for this reason we have discussed especially the question of satisfactions, that by submitting to them the righteousness of faith be not obscured, or men think that for the sake of these works they obtain remission of sins. And many sayings that are current in the schools aid the error, such as that which they give in the definition of satisfaction, namely, that it is wrought for the purpose of appeasing the divine displeasure.

But, nevertheless, the adversaries acknowledge that satisfactions are of no profit for the remission of guilt. Yet they imagine that satisfactions are of profit in redeeming from the punishments, whether of purgatory or other punishments. For thus they teach that in the remission of sins, God [without means, alone] remits the guilt, and yet, because it belongs to divine justice to punish sin, that He commutes eternal into temporal punishment. They add further that a part of this temporal punishment is remitted by the power of the keys, but that the rest is redeemed by means of satisfactions. Neither can it be understood of what punishments a part is remitted by the power of the keys, unless they say that a part of the punishments of purgatory is remitted, from which it would follow that satisfactions are only punishments redeeming from purgatory. And these satisfactions, they say, avail even though they are rendered by those who have relapsed into mortal sin, as though indeed the divine displeasure could be appeased by those who are in mortal sin. This entire matter is fictitious, and recently fabricated without the authority of Scripture and the old writers of the Church. And not even Longobardus speaks in this way of satisfactions. The scholastics saw that there were satisfactions in the Church; and they did not notice that these exhibitions had been instituted both for the purpose of example, and for testing those who desired to be received by the Church. In a word, they did not see that it was a discipline, and entirely a secular matter. Accordingly, they superstitiously imagined that these avail not for discipline before the Church, but for appeasing God. And just as in other places they frequently, with great inaptness, have confounded spiritual and civil matters [the kingdom of Christ, which is spiritual, and the kingdom of the world, and external discipline], the same happens also with regard to satisfactions. But the gloss on the canons at various places testifies that these observances were instituted for the sake of church discipline [should serve alone for an example before the Church].

Let us see, moreover, how in the Confutation which they had the presumption to obtrude upon His Imperial Majesty, they prove these figments of theirs. They cite many passages from the Scriptures, in order to impose upon the inexperienced, as though this subject which was unknown even in the time of Longobard, had authority from the Scripfructus dignos poenitentiae, Matth. 3, 8; Marc. 1, 15. Item: Exhibete membra vestra servire iustitiae, Rom. 6, 19. Item, Christus praedicat poenitentiam, Matth. 4, 17: Agite poenitentiam! Item, Christus, Luc. 24, 47, iubet apostolos poenitentiam praedicare, et Petrus praedicat poenitentiam, Act. 2, 38. Postea citant quaedam dicta patrum et canones et concludunt: satisfactiones in ecclesia contra expressum evangelium et conciliorum et patrum decreta abolendae non sunt, quin imo absoluti a sacerdote iniunctam poenitentiam perficere debent, illud Pauli, Tit. 2, 14, sequentes: Dedit semetipsum pro nobis, ut [R. 186] redimeret nos ab omni iniquitate et mundaret sibi populum acceptabilem, sectatorem bonorum operum.

26] Deus perdat istos impios sophistas, tam seculste detorquentes Verbum Dei ad sua somnia vanissima! Quis bonus vir non commoveatur indignitate tanta? Christus inquit: Agite poenitentiam, apostoli praedicant poenitentiam: igitur poenae aeternae compensantur poenis purgatorii, igitur claves habent mandatum remittendi partem poenarum purgatorii, igitur satisfactiones redimunt poenas purgatorii. Quis docuit istos asinos hanc dialecticam? Sed haec neque dialectica neque sophistica est, sed est sycphantica. Ideo allegant hanc vocem: Agite poenitentiam, ut, quum tale dictum contra nos citatum imperiti audiunt, concipiant opinionem nos totam poenitentiam tollere. His artibus alienare animos et inflammare odia conantur, ut conclament contra nos imperiti, tollendos esse e medio tam pestilentes haereticos, qui improbant poenitentiam.

Wiewohl sie wissen, daß wir recht von der Buße lehren, so wollen sie doch die Leute abschrecken und gern viele Leute wider uns erbittern, daß die Unerfahrenen schreien sollen: Kreuzige, kreuzige solche schädliche Ketzer, welche von der Buße nichts halten! und werden also öffentlich als die Lügner hier übermunden.

27] Sed speramus apud bonos viros has calumnias parum profecturas esse. Et Deus tantam impudentiam ac malitiam non diu feret. Nec utiliter consulti suae dignitati Romanus pontifex, quod tales patronos adhibet, quod rem maximam iudicio horum sophistarum permittit. Nam quum nos in confessione fere summam doctrinae Christianae universae complexi simus, adhibendi fuerant iudices de tantis, tam multis et tam variis negotiis pronuntiaturi, quorum doctrina et fides probator esset quam horum sophistarum, qui hanc Confutationem scripserunt. Id-
28] que te, Campegi, pro tua sapientia providere decebat, ne quid in tantis rebus isti scriberent, quod aut hoc tempore aut ad posteros videatur posse minuere Romanae sedis existimationem. Si Romana sedes censet aequum esse, ut omnes gentes agnoscant eam pro magistra fidei, debet operam dare, ut docti et integri viri de religionibus cognoscant. Quid enim iudicabit mundus, si quando [R. 187] proferetur in lucem scriptum adversariorum, quid iudicabit posteritas de his calumniosis

gobardus' Zeiten unbekannt war. Sie bringen diese Sprüche hervor: „Iut Buße, bringt Früchte der Buße!“ Item: „Begebet eure Gliedmaßen, zu dienen der Gerechtigkeit!“ Item, Christus hat gesagt: „Iut Buße!“ Item, Christus befiehlt den Aposteln, Buße zu predigen. Item, Petrus predigt Buße in Geschichten der Apostel am 2. Danach zeigen sie an etliche Sprüche der Väter und die Kanones und beschließen, es sollen die Genugtuungen in der Kirche wider das Evangelium, wider der Väter und Konzilien Dekrete, wider den Beschluß der heiligen Kirche nicht abgetan werden, sondern diejenigen, so Absolution erlangen, sollen ihre Buße und Satisfaction, Genugtuung, so ihnen vom Priester aufgelegt, vollbringen.

Gott wolle schänden und strafen solche verzweifelte Sophisten, die so verräterisch und bösslich das heilige Evangelium auf ihre Träume deuten! Welchem frommen, ehrbaren Mann sollte nicht solch großer, öffentlicher Mißbrauch göttlichen Wortes im Herzen wehe tun? Christus spricht: „Iut Buße!“ Die Apostel predigen auch: „Iut Buße!“ Darum ist durch die Sprüche bewiesen, daß Gott Sünden nicht verberge ohne um der erdichteten Satisfaction willen? Wer hat die groben, unverschämten Gesel solche Dialektika gelehrt? Es ist aber nicht Dialektik noch Sophistik, sondern es sind Habsstüde, mit Gottes Wort also zu spielen und so verdrücklichen Mutwillen [zu] treiben. Darum ziehen sie den Spruch als dunkel und verdeckt an aus dem Evangelio: „Iut Buße“ usw., daß, wenn die Unerfahrenen hören, daß dies Wort aus dem Evangelio wird wider uns angezogen, [sie] denken sollen, wir seien solche Leute, die gar nichts von der Buße halten. Mit solchen Bösewichtstücken gehen sie mit uns um.

Aber wir trösten uns des und wissen's fürwahr, daß bei gottesfürchtigen, ja bei ehrbaren, frommen, redlichen Leuten solche unverschämte Lügen und Fälscherei der Heiligen Schrift doch nichts schaffen. So wird auch Gott der Herr, als wahr er ein lebendiger Gott ist, solche unverschämte Gotteslästerung und ungehörte Bosheit nicht lange leiden, sie werden sich gewiß am ersten und andern [zweiten] Gebot Gottes verbrennen. Und nachdem wir in unserer Konfession fast alle höchsten Artikel der ganzen christlichen Lehre begriffen haben, also daß über diese Sache keine größere, hochwichtigere Sache kann unter der Sonne sein, sollte man zu diesen hohen, allermichtigsten Sündeln, die ganze heilige, christliche Religion, Wohlfahrt und Einigkeit der ganzen christlichen Kirche und in aller Welt so viel unzählige Seelen und Gewissen jeztund dieser Zeit und bei unsern Nachkommen belangend, billig mit allem treuen, höchsten Fleiß Leute gesucht und außerlesen haben, die gottesfürchtiger, verständiger, erfahrener, tauglicher und redlicher wären, auch mehr treuen, guten Herzens und Sinnes zu gemeinem Nutzen, zur Einigkeit der Kirche, zur Wohlfahrt des Reichs trügen und erzeigten denn die losen, leichtfertigen Sophisten, so die Konfutation geschrieben haben. Und Ihr, Herr Kardistures. They bring forward such passages as these: Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance, Matt. 3, 8; Mark 1, 15. Again: Yield your members servants to righteousness, Rom. 6, 19. Again, Christ preaches repentance, Matt. 4, 17: Repent. Again, Christ Luke 24, 47, commands the apostles to preach repentance, and Peter preaches repentance, Acts 2, 38. Afterward they cite certain passages of the Fathers and the canons, and conclude that satisfactions in the Church are not to be abolished contrary to the plain Gospel and the decrees of the Councils and Fathers [against the decision of the Holy Church]; nay, even that those who have been absolved by the priest ought to bring to perfection the repentance that has been enjoined, following the declaration of Paul, Titus 2, 14: Who gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

May God put to confusion these godless sophists who so wickedly distort God's Word to their own most vain dreams! What good man is there who is not moved by such indignity? "Christ says, Repent, the apostles preach repentance; therefore eternal punishments are compensated by the punishments of purgatory; therefore the keys have the power to remit part of the punishments of purgatory; therefore satisfactions redeem the punishments of purgatory"! Who has taught these asses such logic? Yet this is neither logic nor sophistry, but cunning trickery. Accordingly, they appeal to the expression repent in such a way that, when the inexperienced hear such a passage cited against us, they may derive the opinion that we deny the entire repentance. By these arts they endeavor to alienate minds and to enkindle hatred, so that the inexperienced may cry out against us [Crucify! crucify!], that such pestilent heretics as disapprove of repentance should be removed from their midst. [Thus they are publicly convicted of being liars in this matter.]

But we hope that among good men these calumnies [and misrepresentations of Holy Scripture] may make little headway. And God will not long endure such impudence and wickedness. [They will certainly be consumed by the First and Second Commandments.] Neither has the Pope of Rome consulted well for his own dignity in employing such patrons, because he has entrusted a matter of the greatest importance to the judgment of these sophists. For since we include in the Confession almost the sum of the entire Christian doctrine, judges should have been appointed to make a declaration concerning matters so important and so many and various, whose learning and faith would have been more approved than that of these sophists who have written this Confutation. It was particularly becoming for you, O Campegius, in accordance with your wisdom, to have taken care that in regard to matters of such importance they should write nothing which either at this time or with posterity might seem to be able to diminish regard for the Roman See. If the Roman See judges it right that all nations should acknowledge her as mistress of the faith, she ought to take pains that learned and uncorrupt men make investigation concerning matters of religion. For what will the world judge if at any time the writing of the adversaries be brought to light? What will posterity judge concerning these reproachful judicial investigations? You see, O Campegius, that these are the last times, in which Christ predicted that there would be the greatest danger to religion. You, therefore, who ought, as it were, to sit on the watch-tower and control religious matters, should in these times employ unusual wisdom and diligence. There are many signs which, unless you heed them, threaten a change to the Roman state. And you make a mistake if you think that Churches should be retained only by force and arms. Men ask to be taught concerning religion. How many do you suppose there are, not only in Germany, but also in England, in Spain, in France, in Italy, and finally even in the city of Rome, who, since they see that con-qui tamquam in specula sedere et gubernare religiones debetis, his temporibus oportuit singularem adhibere tum prudentiam, tum diligentiam. Multa sunt signa, quae, nisi provideritis, minantur mutationem Romano statui.

30] Et erras, si tantum vi et armis existimas ecclesias retinendas esse. Doceri de religione postulant homines. Quam multos esse existimas non tantum in Germania, sed etiam in Anglia, in Hispania, in Galliis, in Italia, denique in ipsa urbe Roma, qui, quoniam vident exortas esse de maximis rebus controversias, dubitare alicubi incipiunt et taciti indignantur, quod has tantas res rite cognoscere et iudicare recusatis, quod non explicatis ambigentes conscientias, quod tantum iubetis nos armis opprimi ac deleri. Multi 31] sunt boni viri, quibus haec dubitatio morte acerbior est. Non satis expendis, quanta res sit religio, si bonos viros leviter existimas angere, sicubi incipiunt ambigere de aliquo dogmate. Et haec dubitatio non potest non parere summam odii acerbiter adversus illos, qui, quum mereri conscientias debebant, obsistunt, quominus explicari res 32] possit. Non hic dicimus Dei iudicium vobis pertimescendum esse. Nam hoc leviter curare pontifices putant, qui, quum ipsi teneant claves, scilicet patefacere sibi coelum, quum volunt, possunt. De hominum iudiciis deque tacitis voluntatibus omnium gentium loquimur, quae profecto hoc tempore requirunt, ut haec negotia ita cognoscantur atque constituentur, ut sanentur bonae mentes et a dubitatione liberentur. Quid enim futurum sit, si quando eruperint odia illa adversus vos, pro tua sapientia facile iudicare potes. Verum hoc beneficio devincere omnes [R. 188] gentes vobis poteritis, quod omnes sani homines 33] conscientias sanaveritis. Haec non eo diximus, quod nos de nostra confessione dubitemus. Scimus enim eam veram, piam et piis conscientias utilem esse. Sed credibile est passim multos esse, qui non de levibus rebus ambigunt, nec tamen audiunt idoneos doctores, qui mereri conscientias ipsorum possint.

34] Sed redeamus ad propositum. Scripturae citatae ab adversariis prorsus nihil loquuntur de canonicis satisfactionibus et de opinionibus scholasticorum, quum constet eas nuper natas esse. Quare mera calumnia est, quod detorquent Scripturas ad illas suas opiniones. Nos dicimus, quod poenitentiam, hoc est, conversionem seu regenerationem, boni fructus, bona opera, in omni vita sequi debeant. Nec potest esse vera conversio aut vera contritio, ubi non sequuntur mortificationes carnis et boni fructus. Veri terrores, veri dolores animi non patiuntur corpus indulgere voluptatibus, et vera fides non est ingrata Deo, nec contemnit mandata Dei. Denique nulla est interior poenitentia, nisi foris pariat etiam castigationes carnis. Et 35] hanc dicimus esse sententiam Iohannis, quum ait Matth. 3, 8: Facite fructus dignos poenitentiae, item Pauli, quum ait Rom. 6, 19: Exhibete membra vestra servire iustitiae; sicut et alibi, Rom. 12, 1, inquit: Exhibete corpora vestra hostiam vivam, sanctam etc. Et quum Christus inquit Matth. 4, 17: Agite poenitentiam, certe loquitur de tota poenitentia, de tota novitate vitae et fructibus; nam Campeggi, als der Verständige, dem diese Sache zu Rom vertraut, des Weisheit man rühmen will, wenn Ihr auch nichts denn des Papsts und Stuhls zu Rom Ehre wölltet achten oder ansehen, hättet hier besser sollen haushalten und diesem mit höchstem Fleiß vorkommen, daß in solcher so gar großen, trefflichen Sache durch die oder dergleichen Sophisten nicht eine solch ungeschickte confutatio wäre geschrieben, welche beide zu dieser Zeit und künftig bei den Nachkommen Euch nicht anders denn zu eitlem Spott, zur Verkleinerung eures Gerüchts und Namens, zu ewigem, unverwindlichem Schimpf und Schaden gereichen wird. Ihr Romanisten seht, daß diese die letzten Zeiten sind vor dem jüngsten Tag, von welchen Christus warnt, daß viele Fährlichkeiten sollen vorkommen in der Kirche. Ihr nun, die ihr wollt Wächter, die Hirten und Häupter der Kirche genannt sein, sollt in dieser Zeit mit sonderm, treuem, höchstem Fleiß Aufsehen haben. Es sind viele Zeichen vor Augen schon, daß, wo ihr euch nicht ganz wohl in die Zeit und Sachen schickt und richtet, daß es mit dem ganzen römischen Stuhl und Wesen eine große, starke Veränderung gewinnen will. Und dürft euch in Sinn nicht nehmen, ja dürft nicht gedenken, daß ihr die Gemeinden und Kirchen allein mit dem Schwert und Gewalt wollt bei euch und dem römischen Stuhl erhalten. Denn gute Gewissen schreien nach der Wahrheit und rechtem Unterricht aus Gottes Wort, und denselben ist der Tod nicht so bitter, als bitter ihnen ist, wo sie etwa in einem Stüde zweifeln; darum müssen sie suchen, wo sie Unterricht finden. Wollt ihr die Kirche bei euch erhalten, so müßt ihr danach trachten, daß ihr recht lehren und predigen laßt; damit könnt ihr einen guten Willen und beständigen Gehorsam anrichten.

Wir wollen hier wieder zur Sache kommen. Die Sprüche aus der Schrift, so angezogen von Widersachern, reden nicht von den Genußnahmen und Satisfactionen, davon die Widersacher streiten. Darum ist es lauter Fälscherei der Schrift, daß sie Gottes Wort auf ihre Meinung deuten. Wir sagen, wo rechte Buße, Verneuerung des Heiligen Geistes, ist im Herzen, da folgen gewiß gute Früchte, gute Werke, und ist nicht möglich, daß ein Mensch sollte sich zu Gott bekehren, rechte Buße tun, herzlich Reue haben, und sollten nicht folgen gute Werke, gute Früchte. Denn ein Herz und Gewissen, das recht seinen Jammer und Sünde gefühlt hat, recht erschreckt ist, das wird nicht viele Wollüste der Welt achten oder suchen. Und wo der Glaube ist, da ist er Gott dankbar, achtet und liebt herzlich seine Gebote. Auch ist inwendig im Herzen gewißlich keine rechte Buße, wenn wir nicht äußerlich gute Werke, christliche Geduld erzeigen. Und also meiner's auch Johannes der Täufer, da er sagt: „Erzeiget rechte Früchte der Buße.“ Item Paulus, da er sagt zu den Römern am 6.: „Begebet eure Glieder zu Waffen der Gerechtigkeit“ uim. Und Christus, da er spricht: „Tut Buße!“ redet wahrlich von der ganzen Buße und von dem ganzen neuen Leben troversies have arisen concerning subjects of the greatest importance, are beginning here and there to doubt, and to be silently indignant that you refuse to investigate and judge aright subjects of such weight as these; that you do not deliver wavering consciences; that you only bid us be overthrown and annihilated by arms? There are many good men to whom this doubt is more bitter than death. You do not consider sufficiently how great a subject religion is, if you think that good men are in anguish for a slight cause whenever they begin to doubt concerning any dogma. And this doubt can have no other effect than to produce the greatest bitterness of hatred against those who, when they ought to heal consciences, plant themselves in the way of the explanation of the subject. We do not here say that you ought to fear God's judgment. For the hierarchs think that they can easily provide against this, for since they hold the keys, of course they can open heaven for themselves whenever they wish. We are speaking of the judgments of men and the silent desires of all nations, which, indeed, at this time require that these matters be investigated and decided in such a manner that good minds may be healed and freed from doubt. For, in accordance with your wisdom, you can easily decide what will take place if at any time this hatred against you should break forth. But by this favor you will be able to bind to yourself all nations, as all sane men regard it as the highest and most important matter, if you heal doubting consciences. We have said these things not because we doubt concerning our Confession. For we know that it is true, godly, and useful to godly consciences. But it is likely that there are many in many places who waver concerning matters of no light importance, and yet do not hear such teachers as are able to heal their consciences.

But let us return to the main point. The Scriptures cited by the adversaries speak in no way of canonical satisfactions, and of the opinions of the scholastics, since it is evident that the latter were only recently born. Therefore it is pure slander when they distort Scripture to their own opinions. We say that good fruits, good works in every kind of life, ought to follow repentance, i. e., conversion or regeneration [the renewal of the Holy Ghost in the heart]. Neither can there be true conversion or true contrition where mortifications of the flesh and good fruits do not follow [if we do not externally render good works and Christian patience]. True terrors, true griefs of mind, do not allow the body to indulge in sensual pleasures, and true faith is not ungrateful to God, neither does it despise God's commandments. In a word, there is no inner repentance unless it also produces outwardly mortifications of the flesh. We say also that this is the meaning of John when he says, Matt. 3, 8: Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance. Likewise of Paul when he says, Rom. 6, 19: Yield your members servants to righteousness; just as he likewise says elsewhere, Rom. 12, 1: Present your bodies a living sacrifice, etc. And when Christ says, Matt. 4, 17: Repent, He certainly speaks of the entire repentance, of the entire newness of life and its fruits; He does not speak of non loquitur de illis hypocriticis satisfactionibus, quas fingunt scholastici tum quoque valere ad compensationem poenae purgatorii aut aliarum poenarum, quum sunt ab his, qui sunt in peccato mortali.

36] Ac multa colligi argumenta possunt, quod haec dicta Scripturae nullo modo pertineant ad scholasticas satisfactiones. [R. 189 Isti fingunt satisfactiones esse opera indebita; Scriptura autem in his sentiis requirit opera debita. Nam haec vox Christi est vox 37] praecepti: Agite poenitentiam. Item, adversarii scribunt confidentem, si recusset suscipere satisfactiones, non peccare, sed persolutum esse has poenas in purgatorio. Iam hae sententiae sine controversia praecepta sunt ad hanc vitam pertinentia: Agite poenitentiam; facite fructus dignos poenitentiae; exhibete membra vestra servire iustitiae. Quare non possunt detorqueri ad satisfactiones, quas recusare licet. Non enim licet recusare prae- 38] cepta Dei. Tertio, indulgentiae remittunt illas satisfactiones, ut docet cap. Quum ex eo, de poenitentis et remissione. [Decret. Grat., lib. V, tit. 38, c. 14: „Decernimus, ut, cum dedicatur basilica, non extendatur indulgentia ultra annum . . .; ac deinde in anniversario dedicationis tempore 40 dies de iniunctis poenitentis indulta remissio non excedat.“] At indulgentiae non solvunt nos illis praeceptis: Agite poenitentiam; facite fructus dignos poenitentiae. Itaque manifestum est male detorqueri illa dicta Scripturae ad canonicas satisfactiones. Videte 39] porro, quid sequatur. Si poenae purgatorii sunt satisfactiones seu satisfassiones, aut satisfassiones sunt redemptio poenarum purgatorii: num etiam hae sententiae prae- ciipiunt, ut animae castigentur in purgatorio? Id quum sequi necesse sit ex adversariorum opinionibus, hae sententiae novo modo interpretandae erunt: Facite fructus dignos poenitentiae; agite poenitentiam, hoc est, patiamini poenas purgatorii post hanc vitam. Sed 40] piget has ineptias adversariorum pluribus refellere. Constat enim Scripturam loqui de operibus debitis, de tota novitate vitae, non de his observationibus operum non debitorum, de quibus loquuntur adversarii. Et tamen his figmentis defendunt ordines, venditionem missarum et infinitas observationes, quod scilicet sint opera, si non pro culpa, tamen pro poena satisfaciencia.

die Widersacher reden. Und doch mit diesen Lügen verteidigen sie die Möncherei, das Kaufen und Verkaufen der Messen und unzählige andere Traditionen, nämlich, daß es Werke seien, genuggutun für die Sünden und Strafe, ob sie gleich für die Schuld gegen Gott nicht genuggutun.

41] Quum igitur Scripturae citatae non dicant, quod operibus non debitis poenae aeternae compensandae sint, temere affirmant adversarii, quod per satisfactiones canonicas poenae illae compensentur. Nec habent [R. 190 claves mandatum poenas aliquas commutandi, item partem poenarum remittendi. Ubi enim leguntur haec in Scripturis? Christus de remissione peccati loquitur, quum ait Matth. 18, 18: Quidquid solveritis etc., quo remisso sublata est mors aeterna, et reddita vita und seinen Früchten. Er redet nicht von den heuchlerischen Satisfactionen, davon die Scholastici träumen und dürfen sagen, daß sie dann auch gelten vor Gott für die Strafe, wenn sie in Sünden geschehen. Das sollte freilich ein köstlicher Gottesdienst sein!

Auch so find sonst viele Argumente und Gründe, daß die obangezeigten Sprüche der Schrift sich nichts reimen auf die Genuggutungen, davon die Scholastici reden. Sie erdichten und sagen, die satisfassiones seien Werke, die wir nicht schuldig seien. Die Heilige Schrift aber in den Sprüchen, so eingeführt, fordert solche Werke, die wir schuldig sind. Denn dieses Wort Christi, da er sagt: „Tut Buße!“ ist ein Wort des göttlichen Gebots. Item, die Widersacher schreiben, daß diejenigen, so da beichten, ob sie schon die aufgelegten satisfassiones nicht wollen annehmen, daß sie doch darum nicht sündigen, sondern werden im Fegfeuer müssen Strafe tragen und genuggutun. Nun hat's je keinen Zweifel, daß diese Sprüche: „Tut Buße!“ usw., item Pauli: „Gebet eure Gliedmaßen, zu dienen der Gerechtigkeit“ und dergleichen Sprüche, seien Christi und der Apostel, die das Fegfeuer gar nichts, sondern allein dieses Leben angehen. Derhalben können sie nicht gestreckt werden zu den aufgelegten satisfassiones, die ich mag annehmen oder nicht annehmen; denn Gottes Gebote find uns nicht also frei heimgestellt usw. Zum dritten, so lehrt des Papsts Recht und Canon, daß durch den Ablass solche satisfassiones werden erlassen, cap. Quum ex eo, de poenitentis. Aber der Ablass macht niemand los von diesen Geboten: „Tut Buße, erzeiget rechte Früchte der Buße!“ usw. Darum ist es hell am Tage, daß man ganz ungekündet die Sprüche der Schrift einführt von den satisfassiones. Denn so die Bösen [Strafen] des Fegfeuers sind satisfassiones oder satisfassiones, oder so die satisfassiones sind Quittierung der Pein des Fegfeuers, so müssen die obangezeigten Sprüche Christi und Pauli auch beweisen und probieren [daraus], daß die Seelen ins Fegfeuer fahren und daselbst Pein leiden. So nun das von Not folgt aus der Widersacher Opinion, so müssen die Sprüche alle neue Röde anziehen und also ausgelegt werden: Facite fructus etc., „erzeiget rechte Früchte der Buße“, das ist: Leidet im Fegfeuer nach diesem Leben. Aber es ist verdrücklich, so von öffentlichem Irrtum der Widersacher mehr Worte zu machen. Denn man weiß fürwahr, daß die Schrift an den Orten redet von Werken, die wir schuldig sind, und von dem ganzen neuen Leben eines Christen usw., nicht von den erdichteten Werken, die wir nicht schuldig sind, davon

So nun die Sprüche, aus der Schrift angezogen, gar nicht melden, daß durch die Werke, so wir nicht schuldig [sind], die ewige Pein oder Fegfeuer bezahlt werden, so sagen die Widersacher ohne allen Grund, daß durch solche satisfassiones die Peinen des Fegfeuers abgelöst werden. So haben auch die Schlüssel nicht Befehl, Pein aufzulegen oder die Pein zum Teil, halb oder ganz, zu quittieren. Man liest solche Träume und Lügen nirgend in der Schrift. Christus redet von Vergebung der Sünden, da er sagt: „Was those hypocritical satisfactions which, the scholastics imagine, avail for compensating the punishment of purgatory or other punishments when they are made by those who are in mortal sin.

Many arguments, likewise, can be collected to show that these passages of Scripture pertain in no way to scholastic satisfactions. These men imagine that satisfactions are works that are not due [which we are not obliged to do]; but Scripture, in these passages, requires works that are due [which we are obliged to do]. For this word of Christ, Repent, is the word of a commandment. Likewise the adversaries write that if any one who goes to confession should refuse to undertake satisfactions, he does not sin, but will pay these penalties in purgatory. Now the following passages are, without controversy, precepts pertaining to this life: Repent; Bring forth fruits meet for repentance; Yield your members servants to righteousness. Therefore they cannot be distorted to the satisfactions which it is permitted to refuse. For to refuse God's commandments is not permitted. [For God's commands are not thus left to our discretion.] Thirdly, indulgences remit these satisfactions, as is taught by the Chapter, De Poenitentia et Remissione, beginning Quum ex eo, etc. But indulgences do not free us from the commandments: Repent; Bring forth fruits meet for repentance. Therefore it is manifest that these passages of Scripture have been wickedly distorted to apply to canonical satisfactions. See further what follows. If the punishments of purgatory are satisfactions, or satisfactions are a redemption of the punishments of purgatory, do these passages also give commandment that souls be punished in purgatory? [The above-cited passages of Christ and Paul must also show and prove that souls enter purgatory and there suffer pain.] Since this must follow from the opinions of the adversaries, these passages should be interpreted in a new way [these passages should put on new coats]: Bring forth fruits meet for repentance; Repent, i. e., suffer the punishments of purgatory after this life. But we do not care about refuting in more words these absurdities of the adversaries. For it is evident that Scripture speaks of works that are due, of the entire newness of life, and not of these observances of works that are not due, of which the adversaries speak. And yet, by these figments they defend orders [of monks], the sale of Masses and infinite observances, namely, as works which, if they do not make satisfaction for guilt, yet make satisfaction for punishment.

Since, therefore, the passages of Scripture cited do not say that eternal punishments are to be compensated by works that are not due, the adversaries are rash in affirming that these satisfactions are compensated by canonical satisfactions. Nor do the keys have the command to commute some punishments, and likewise to remit a part of the punishments. For where are such things [dreams and lies] read in the Scriptures? Christ speaks of the remission of sins when He says, Matt. 18, 18: Whatsoever ye shall loose, etc. [i. e.], sin being forgiven, death eternal is taken away, and life eternal bestowed. Nor does Whatsoever ye shall bind speak of the aeterna. Neque hic loquitur de imponendis poenis: Quidquid ligaveris, sed de retinendis peccatis illorum, qui non convertuntur. Sed 42) dictum Longobardi de parte poenarum remittenda sumptum est a canonicis poenis; harum partem remittebant pastores. Quamquam igitur sentimus, quod poenitentia debeat bonos fructus parere propter gloriam et mandatum Dei; et boni fructus habent mandata Dei, vera ieiunia, verae orationes, verae elemosynae etc.: tamen hoc nusquam reperimus in Scripturis sanctis, quod poenae aeternae non remittantur nisi propter poenam purgatorii aut satisfactiones canonicas, hoc est, propter certa quaedam opera non debita, aut quod potestas clavium habeat mandatum commutandi poenas aut partem remittendi. Haec probanda erant adversariis.

43) Praeterea mors Christi non est solum satisfactio pro culpa, sed etiam pro aeterna morte, iuxta illud Hos. 13, 14: Ero mors tua, o mors. Quid est igitur monstri, dicere, quod Christi satisfactio redimat culpam, nostrae poenae redimant mortem aeternam, ut iam illa vox: Ero mors tua, intelligi debeat non de Christo, sed de nostris operibus, et quidem non de operibus a Deo praeceptis, sed de frigidis quibusdam observationibus excogitatis ab hominibus! Et dicuntur mortem abolere, 44) etiam quum fiunt in peccato mortali. Incredible est, quanto cum dolore has ineptias adversariorum recitemus, quas qui expendit, non potest non succensere istis doctrinis daemoniorum, quas sparsit in ecclesia diabolus, ut opprimeret cognitionem legis et evangelii, poenitentiae et vivificationis et beneficiorum 45) Christi. Nam de lege sic dicunt: Deus condescendens nostrae infirmitati constituit homini mensuram eorum, ad quae de [R. 191] necessitate tenetur, quae est observatio praeceptorum, ut de reliquo, id est, de operibus supererogationis, possit satisfacere de commissis. Hic fingunt homines legem Dei ita facere posse, ut plus etiam, quam lex exigit, facere possimus. Atqui Scriptura ubique clamat, quod multum absimus ab illa perfectione, quam lex requirit. Sed isti fingunt legem Dei contentam esse externa et civili iustitia, non vident eam requirere veram dilectionem Dei ex toto corde etc., damnare totam concupiscentiam in natura. Itaque nemo tantum facit, quantum lex requirit. Ridiculum igitur est, quod fingunt nos amplius facere posse. Quamquam enim externa opera facere possumus non mandata lege Dei, tamen illa est vana et impia fiducia, quod legi Dei sit satis 46) factum. Et verae orationes, verae elemosynae, vera ieiunia habent praecepta Dei; et ubi habent praeceptum Dei, non possunt sine peccato omitti. Verum illa opera, quatenus non sunt praecepta lege Dei, sed habent certam formam ex humano praescripto, sunt opera traditionum humanarum, de quibus Christus dicit Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me mandatis hominum, ut certa ieiunia instituta non ad carnem coercendam, sed ut per id opus reddatur honos Deo, ut ait Scotus, et compensetur mors aeterna. thr auflöset“ usw. Wenn die Sünde vergeben ist, so ist auch der Tod weggenommen und das ewige Leben gegeben. Auch so redet der Text: „Was ihr auflöset“ usw., nicht von Strafe auflösen, sondern daß auf diejenigen die Sünden bleiben, die sich nicht bekehren. Wiewohl wir nun halten, daß nach der rechten Buße gute Früchte und Werke folgen sollen, Gott zu Lob und Dank, und von denselben guten Werken und Früchten haben wir Gottes Gebote, als von Fasten, Beten, Almosen usw.: so findet man doch nirgend in der Schrift, daß Gottes Zorn oder die ewigen Peinen sollten mögen abgelöst werden durch die Pein des Fegefeuers oder durch satisfactiones oder Genugthun, das ist, durch etliche Werke, die wir ohne das nicht schuldig wären, oder daß die Gewalt der Schlüssel Befehl haben, Pein aufzulegen oder einen Theil der Pein zu erlassen. Dasselbe sollten nun die Widersacher aus der Schrift beweisen; das werden sie wohl lassen.

Darüber so ist es gewiß, daß Christus' Tod eine Genugthung ist nicht allein für die Schuld gegen Gott, sondern auch für den ewigen Tod, wie klar der Spruch Hoseas lautet: „Tod, ich will dein Tod sein.“ Was ist es denn für ein Greuel, zu sagen, daß Christi Tod genugthue für die Schuld gegen Gott, aber die Pein, so wir leiden, die erlöse uns vom ewigen Tode, also daß dies Wort des Propheten: „Tod, ich will dein Tod sein“ nicht von Christo, sondern von unsern Werken, und dazu von elenden menschlichen Sagenen, die Gott nicht geboten hat, sollen verstanden werden! Und noch darüber dürfen sie sagen, daß dieselben Werke für den ewigen Tod genugthun, wenn sie gleich in Todsünden gehehen. Es muß billig einem frommen Herzen wohl tun die ganz ungehörte Rede der Widersacher. Denn wer es liest und bedenkt, dem müssen sie herzlich weh tun solche öffentliche Teufelslehren, die der leidige Satan in die Welt gestreut hat, die rechte Lehre des Evangelii unterzubrüden [zu unterbrücken], damit niemand oder wenige möchten unterrichtet werden, was Gesetz oder Evangelium, was Buße oder Glaube oder was die Wohlthaten Christi seien. Denn vom Gesetz sagen sie also: Gott hat unsere Schwachheit angesehen und hat dem Menschen ein Ziel und Maß gesetzt der Werke, welche er zu tun schuldig ist; das sind die Werke der zehn Gebote usw., daß er von dem übrigen, von den operibus supererogationis, das ist, von den Werken, die er nicht schuldig ist, möchte genugthun für seine Fehle und Sünden. Da erdichten sie ihnen selbst einen Traum, als vermöge oder könne ein Mensch also Gottes Gesetz erfüllen, daß er etwas mehr und übriges tue, denn das Gesetz erfordert, so doch die ganze Heilige Schrift zeugt, alle Propheten auch zeugen, daß Gottes Gesetz viel Höheres fordere, denn wir immer [je] zu tun vermögen. Aber sie wollen wähnen, das Gesetz Gottes und Gott sei zufrieden mit äußerlichen Werken, und sehen nicht, wie das Gesetz fordert, daß wir Gott lieben sollen von ganzem Herzen usw. und aller bösen Lüfte los sein. Darum ist kein Mensch auf Erden, der so viel tut, als das Gesetz erfordert. Darum ist's bei Verständigen ganz nährlich und kindisch anzusehen, daß sie erbiethen, wir können noch etwas mehr tun, denn das göttliche Gesetz erfordert. Denn wiewohl wir die armen, äußerlichen Werke tun können, die nicht Gott, sondern Menschen geboten imposing of punishments, but of retaining the sins of those who are not converted. Moreover, the declaration of Longobard concerning remitting a part of the punishments has been taken from the canonical punishments; a part of these the pastors remitted. Although, therefore, we hold that repentance ought to bring forth good fruits for the sake of God's glory and command, and good fruits, true fastings, true prayers, true alms, etc., have the commands of God, yet in the Holy Scriptures we nowhere find this, namely, that eternal punishments are not remitted except on account of the punishment of purgatory or canonical satisfactions, i. e., on account of certain works not due, or that the power of the keys has the command to commute their punishments or to remit a portion. These things the adversaries were to prove. [This they will not attempt.]

Besides, the death of Christ is a satisfaction not only for guilt, but also for eternal death, according to Hos. 13, 14: O death, I will be thy death. How monstrous, therefore, it is to say that the satisfaction of Christ redeemed from the guilt, and our punishments redeem from eternal death; as the expression, I will be thy death, ought then to be understood, not concerning Christ, but concerning our works, and, indeed, not concerning the works commanded by God, but concerning some frigid observances devised by men! And these are said to abolish death, even when they are wrought in mortal sin. It is incredible with what grief we recite these absurdities of the adversaries, which cannot but cause one who considers them to be enraged against such doctrines of demons, which the devil has spread in the Church in order to suppress the knowledge of the Law and Gospel, of repentance and quickening, and the benefits of Christ. For of the Law they speak thus: "God, condescending to our weakness, has given to man a measure of those things to which of necessity he is bound; and this is the observance of precepts, so that from what is left, i. e., from works of supererogation, he can render satisfaction with reference to offenses that have been committed." Here men imagine that they can observe the Law of God in such a manner as to be able to do even more than the Law exacts. But Scripture everywhere exclaims that we are far distant from the perfection which the Law requires. Yet these men imagine that the Law of God has been comprised in outward and civil righteousness; they do not see that it requires true love to God "with the whole heart," etc., and condemns the entire concupiscence in the nature. Therefore no one does as much as the Law requires. Hence their imagination that we can do more is ridiculous. For although we can perform outward works not commanded by God's Law [which Paul calls beggarly ordinances], yet the confidence that satisfaction is rendered God's Law [yea, that more is done than God demands] is vain and wicked. And true prayers, true alms, true fastings, have God's command; and where merus precum, certus modus eleemosynarum, quum ita fiunt, ut ille modus sit cultus ex opere operato, reddens honorem Deo et compensans mortem aeternam. Iam illa longius recedunt a praeceptis Dei, peregrinationes, et harum magna est varietas, alius facit iter cataphractus, alius facit iter nudis pedibus. Haec vocat Christus inutiles cultus, quare non prosunt ad placandam offensam Dei, ut adversarii loquuntur. Et tamen haec opera magnificis titulis ornantur, vocantur opera supererogationis, tribuitur eis honos, [R. 192 quod sint pretium pro morte aeterna. Ita 48] praeferuntur operibus praeceptorum Dei. salzion gelte, obgleich einer in Todsünden liegt. Darüber sind noch Werke, die noch weniger göttlichen Befehl oder Gebot haben, als da sind Rosenkränze, Wallfahrten, welche denn mancherlei sind. Denn etliche gehen in vollem Harnisch zu St. Jakob, etliche mit bloßen Füßen und dergleichen. Das nenn' Christus vergebliche, unnütze Gottesdienste. Darum sind sie nicht nütze, Gott zu versöhnen, wie doch die Widersacher sagen, und dieselben Werke, als Wallfahrten, rühmen sie doch und achten's für große, löbliche Werke, nennen es opera supererogationis, und, das schändlicher ist, das noch gotteslästerlicher ist, man gibt ihnen die Ehre, die Christi Tod und Blut allein gebührt, daß sie sollen das pretium, das ist, der Schatz, sein, damit wir von dem ewigen Tod erlöst sind. Alsui des leidigen Teufels, der Christus' heiligen und teuren Tod so schmählen und lästern darf! Also werden dieselben Wallfahrten vorgezogen den rechten Werken, so in den zehn Geboten sind ausgedrückt, und wird also [auf] zweierlei Weise Gottes Gesetz verbunkelt: erstlich, daß sie wäñnen, sie haben dem Gesetz genuggethan, so sie die äußerlichen Werke getan haben; zum andern, daß sie die elenden Menschenfakungen höher achten denn die Werke, so Gott geboten hat.

49] Deinde obscuratur poenitentia et gratia. Nam mors aeterna non redimitur illa compensatione operum, quia est otiosa, nec degustat in praesentia mortem. Alia res opponenda est morti, quum tentat nos. Sicut enim ira Dei fide in Christum vincitur, ita vincitur mors fide in Christum. Sicut Paulus ait 1 Cor. 15, 57: Deo gratia, qui dat nobis victoriam per Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum; non inquit: Qui dat nobis victoriam, si adversus mortem opponamus satisfactiones nostras. Adversarii otiosas speculationes tractant de remissione culpae, nec vident, quomodo in remissione culpae liberetur cor ab ira Dei et a morte aeterna per fidem in Christum. Quum igitur mors Christi sit satisfactio pro morte aeterna, et quum ipsi adversarii fateantur illa opera satisfactionum esse opera non debita, sed opera traditionum humanarum, de quibus Christus inquit Matth. 15, 9, quod sint inutiles cultus: tuto possumus affirmare, quod satisfactiones canonicae non sint necessariae iure divino ad remissionem culpae aut poenae aeternae aut poenae purgatorii.

haben, welche Paulus bettelische Sagenen nennt, so ist doch das ein nährlich, vergeblich Vertrauen, daß ich vertrauen wollte, ich hätte damit Gottes Gesetz erfüllt, ja mehr getan, denn Gott erfordert. Item, rechte Gebete und rechte Almosen, rechte Fasten, die sind von Gott geboten, und im Fall, da sie von Gott geboten sind, da kann man sie ohne Sünde nicht nachlassen. Dagegen diese Werke, sofern sie nicht geboten sind in Gottes Gesetz, sondern haben eine Form nach menschlicher Wahl, so sind sie nichts denn Menschenfagenen, von welchen Christus sagt: "Sie dienen mir vergeblich mit Menschengeboten." Wie denn sind etliche gewisse Fasten, nicht dazu erfunden, das Fleisch zu zähmen, sondern damit Gott zu ehren und, wie Scotus sagt, des ewigen Todes los zu werden. Item, wie denn sind etliche Gebete, etliche gewisse Almosen, welche sollen ein Gottesdienst sein, welcher ex opere operato Gott versöhne und von ewiger Verdammnis erlöse. Denn sie sagen und lehren, daß solche Werke ex opere operato, das ist, durchs getane Werk, für die Sünde genugthun, und lehren, daß solche Satisfaktionen sind noch Werke, die noch weniger göttlichen Wallfahrten, welche denn mancherlei sind. Denn sie mit bloßen Füßen und dergleichen. Das nennt man sich nicht nütze, Gott zu versöhnen, wie doch Wallfahrten, rühmen sie doch und achten's für große, und, das schändlicher ist, das noch gotteslästerlicher. Nur allein gehührt, daß sie sollen das pretium, den Tod erlöst hin. Nui des leidigen Teufels, der lästern darf! Also werden dieselben Wallfahrten denn ausgeschieden, und wird also [auf] zweierlei eihen, sie haben dem Gesetz genuggethan, so sie die in den elenden Menschenfagenen höher achten denn Darüber wird auch unterdrückt die Lehre von der Buße und Gnade. Denn der ewige Tod und die Ängste der Hölle lassen sich nicht also quittieren, wie sie wägen wollten. Man muß gar viel einen andern und größeren Schatz haben, dadurch wir vom Tode, ewigen Ängsten und Schmerzen erlauft werden, denn unsere Werke sind. Denn solche Wertheiligkeit ist ein müßig Ding, und die Wertheiligkeit schmeden nicht einmal, was der Tod ist, sondern wie Gottes Zorn nicht anders mag noch kann überwunden werden denn durch den Glauben an Christum, also wird auch der Tod überwunden allein durch Christum, wie Paulus sagt: „Gott sei Lob, der uns Sieg gibt durch Jesum Christum, unsern Herrn.“ Er sagt nicht: der uns Sieg gibt durch unsere Genußnahme. Die Widersacher reden fast [sehr] kalt und schlaf- rig von der Vergebung der Sünden gegen Gott und sehen nicht, daß Vergebung solcher Schuld und Erlösung von Gottes Zorn und ewigem Tode ein solch groß Ding ist, daß solches allein durch den einzigen Mittler Christum und durch den Glauben an ihn erlangt wird. So nun der Tod und das Blut Christi die rechte Bezahlung ist für den ewigen Tod, und die Widersacher selbst bekennen, daß solche Werke der Satisfaktion Werke

they have God's command, they cannot without sin be omitted. But these works, in so far as they have not been commanded by God's Law, but have a fixed form derived from human rule, are works of human traditions of which Christ says, Matt. 15, 9: In vain they do worship Me with the commandments of men, such as certain fasts appointed not for restraining the flesh, but that, by this work, honor may be given to God, as Scotus says, and eternal death be made up for; likewise, a fixed number of prayers, a fixed measure of alms when they are rendered in such a way that this measure is a worship ex opere operato, giving honor to God, and making up for eternal death. For they ascribe satisfaction to these ex opere operato, because they teach that they avail even in those who are in mortal sin. There are works which depart still farther from God's commands, as [rosaries and] pilgrimages; and of these there is a great variety: one makes a journey [to St. Jacob] clad in mail, and another with bare feet. Christ calls these "vain acts of worship," and hence they do not serve to appease God's displeasure, as the adversaries say. And yet they adorn these works with magnificent titles; they call them works of supererogation; to them the honor is ascribed of being a price paid instead of eternal death. Thus they are preferred to the works of God's commandments [the true works expressly mentioned in the Ten Commandments]. In this way the Law of God is obscured in two ways, one, because satisfaction is thought to be rendered God's Law by means of outward and civil works, the other, because human traditions are added, whose works are preferred to the works of the divine Law.

In the second place, repentance and grace are obscured. For eternal death is not atoned for by this compensation of works, because it is idle, and does not in the present life taste of death. Something else must be opposed to death when it tries us. For just as the wrath of God is overcome by faith in Christ, so death is overcome by faith in Christ. Just as Paul says, 1 Cor. 15, 57: But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. He does not say: "Who giveth us the victory if we oppose our satisfactions against death." The adversaries treat of idle speculations concerning the remission of guilt, and do not see how, in the remission of guilt, the heart is freed by faith in Christ from God's anger and eternal death. Since, therefore, the death of Christ is a satisfaction for eternal death, and since the adversaries themselves confess that these works of satisfactions are works that are not due, but are works of human traditions, of which Christ says, Matt. 15, 9, that they are vain acts of worship, we can safely affirm that canonical satisfactions are not necessary by divine Law for the remission of guilt, or eternal punishment, or the punishment of purgatory.

But the adversaries object that vengeance or punishment is necessary for repentance, dictam punientem etc. [Augustinus, De Vera et Falsa Poenitentia: „Ille poenam tenet, qui semper vindicat, quod commississe dolet. Poenitentia itaque est vindicta, puniens in se, quod dolet commississe.“] Concedimus vindictam seu poenam in poenitentia necessariam esse non tamquam meritum seu pretium, sicut adversarii fingunt satisfactiones, sed vindicta formaliter est in poenitentia, hoc est, quia ipsa regeneratio fit perpetua mortificatione vetustatis. Sit sane belle dictum a Scoto, poenitentiam appellari quasi poenae tenentiam. Sed de qua poena, de qua vindicta loquitur Augustinus? Certe de vera [R. 193] poena, de vera vindicta, scilicet de contritione, de veris terroribus. Neque hic excludimus mortificationes externas corporis, quae [52] sequuntur veros animi dolores. Longe errant adversarii, si verius poenam esse iudicant satisfactiones canonicas quam veros terrores in corde. Stultissimum est nomen poenae detorquere ad illas frigidas satisfactiones, non referre ad illos horribiles terrores conscientiae, de quibus ait David Ps. 18, 5; 2 Sam. 22, 5: Circumdederunt me dolores mortis etc. Quis non malit loricatus et cataphractus quaerere templum Iacobi, Basilicam Petri etc., quam sustinere illam ineffabilem vim doloris, quae est etiam in mediocribus, si sit vera poenitentia.

[53] At, inquiunt, convenit iustitiae Dei punire peccatum. Certe punit in contritione, quum in illis terroribus iram suam ostendit. Sicut significat David, quum orat Ps. 6, 1: Domine, ne in furore tuo arguas me. Et Ieremias, cap. 10, 24: Corripe me, Domine; verumtamen in iudicio, non in furore, ne ad nihilum redigas me. Hic sane de acerbissimis poenis loquitur. Et fatentur adversarii contritionem posse tantam esse, ut non requiratur satisfactio. Verius igitur contritio [54] poena est quam satisfactio. Praeterea subiecti sunt sancti morti et omnibus communibus afflictionibus, sicut ait Petrus 1 ep. 4, 17: Quia tempus est incipere iudicium a domo Dei; si autem primum a nobis, qualis erit finis istorum, qui non credunt evangelio? Et ut hae afflictiones plerumque sint poenae peccatorum, tamen in piis habent alium finem potius, scilicet ut exerceant eos, ut inter tentationes discant quaerere auxilium Dei, agnoscant diffidentiam cordium suorum etc., sicut Paulus de se inquit 2 Cor. 1, 8: Sed ipsi in nobis sententiam mortis habuimus, si consideremus nobis ipsis, sed Deo excitanti mortuos. Et Esaias ait, 26, 16: Angustia, in qua clamant, disciplina [R. 194] tua est ipsis, hoc est, afflictiones sunt disciplina [55] plina, qua Deus exercet sanctos. Item, afflictiones propter praesens peccatum infliguntur, quia in sanctis mortificant et extingunt concupiscentiam, ut renovari Spiritu possint, sicut ait Paulus Rom. 8, 10: Corpus mortuum est propter peccatum, id est, mortificatur propter praesens peccatum, quod ad [56] huc in carne reliquum est. Et mors ipsa servit ad hoc, ut aboleat hanc carnem peccati, ut prorsus novi resurgamus. Neque iam in morte credentis, postquam fide terrores mortis vicit, ille aculeus est et sensus irae, de quo dicit Paulus 1 Cor. 15, 56: Aculeus mortis peccatum est, potentia vero peccati lex. Illa potentia peccati, ille sensus irae vere est Buße sei eine Rache, Angst und Strafe über die Sünde“. Antwort: Unsere Widersacher sind grobe Esel, daß sie die Worte Augustini, der da redet von der Reue und ganzen Buße, deuten auf die Jeremieus der Satisfaktion und weiter noch daran hängen, daß solche satisfactio soll verdienen Vergebung des ewigen Todes. Wir lehren auch, daß in der Buße Strafe der Sünden sei; denn die großen Schreden, dadurch die Sünde in uns gerichtet wird, ist eine Strafe, viel größer und höher denn Wallfahrten und dergleichen Gaukelspiel. Aber solch Schreden geht die satisfactioes nicht an, so verdient es auch nicht Vergebung der Sünden oder des ewigen Todes, sondern wo wir nicht durch [den] Glauben geströkt würden, wäre solch Schreden und Strafe eitel Sünde und Tod. Also lehrt Augustinus von der Strafe. Aber unsere Widersacher, die groben Esel, wissen gar nicht, was Buße oder Reue sei, sondern gehen mit ihrem Gaukelspiel um, mit Rosenkränzen, Wallfahrten und dergleichen.

Aber da sprechen sie: Gott, als [da] er ein gerechter Richter ist, muß die Sünde ohne Strafe nicht lassen. Ja, wahrlich straft er die Sünde, wenn er in solchem Schreden die Gewissen so stark mit seinem Jorn drängt und ängstet, wie David im 6. Psalm sagt: „Herr, strafe mich nicht in deinem Grimm!“ Und Jeremias am 10. Kapitel: „Strafe mich, Herr, doch mit Gnaden, nicht in deinem Grimme, daß ich nicht vergehe.“ Da redet er wahrlich von großer, unfägliger Angst, und die Widersacher selbst bekennen, die Reue könne so bitter und geschwind [heftig] sein, daß die Satisfaktion nicht not sei. Darum ist die contritio oder Reue gewisser eine Pein denn die satisfactio. Darüber müssen die Heiligen den Tod, allerlei Kreuz und Trübsal tragen wie die andern; wie Petrus sagt 1 Petr. 4: „Es ist Zeit, daß Gericht anzufangen an dem Hause Gottes.“ Und wiewohl dieselben Trübsale oft Böen und Strafe sind über die Sünde, so haben sie doch in den Christen eine andere Ursache, nämlich daß sie sollen die Christen treiben und üben, daß sie in Ansehung merken ihren schwachen Glauben und lernen Gottes Hilfe und Trost suchen, wie Paulus von ihm selbst sagt 2 Kor. 1: „Da wir über die Mäßen beschweret waren und über Macht, also daß wir bei uns beschloffen hatten, wir müßten sterben, damit wir lerneten nicht auf uns verlassen.“ Und Jesaias sagt: „Die Not und Angst, darin sie stehen und dich anrufen, ist ihnen eine Zucht“, das ist, die Trübsal ist die Kinderzucht, dadurch Gott übt die Heiligen. Item, die Trübsale auch schickt uns Gott zu, die Sünde in uns, so noch übrig ist, zu töten und zu dämpfen, daß wir im Geist verneuert werden; wie Paulus Röm. 8 sagt: „Der Leib ist tot um der Sünde willen“, das ist, er wird täglich mehr und mehr getötet um der Sünde willen, die noch im Fleisch übrig ist, und der Tod selbst dient dazu, daß er des sündlichen Fleisches ein Ende mache, und daß wir gar heilig und verneuert aufstehen von [den] Toten. Von diesen Trübsalen und Bönen werden wir nicht los durch die satisfactioes; der-because Augustine says that repentance is vengeance punishing, etc. We grant that vengeance or punishment is necessary in repentance, yet not as merit or price, as the adversaries imagine that satisfactions are. But vengeance is in repentance formally, i. e., because regeneration itself occurs by a perpetual mortification of the oldness of life. The saying of Scotus may indeed be very beautiful, that poenitentia is so called because it is, as it were, poenae tenentia, holding to punishment. But of what punishment, of what vengeance, does Augustine speak? Certainly of true punishment, of true vengeance, namely, of contrition, of true terrors. Nor do we here exclude the outward mortifications of the body, which follow true grief of mind. The adversaries make a great mistake if they imagine that canonical satisfactions [their juggler's tricks, rosaries, pilgrimages, and such like] are more truly punishments than are true terrors in the heart. It is most foolish to distort the name of punishment to these frigid satisfactions, and not to refer them to those horrible terrors of conscience of which David says, Ps. 18, 4; 2 Sam. 22, 5: The sorrows of death compassed me. Who would not rather, clad in mail and equipped, seek the church of James, the basilica of Peter, etc., than bear that ineffable violence of grief which exists even in persons of ordinary lives, if there be true repentance?

But they say that it belongs to God's justice to punish sin. He certainly punishes it in contrition, when in these terrors He shows His wrath. Just as David indicates when he prays, Ps. 6, 1: O Lord, rebuke me not in Thine anger. And Jeremiah, 10, 24: O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in Thine anger, lest Thou bring me to nothing. Here indeed the most bitter punishments are spoken of. And the adversaries acknowledge that contrition can be so great that satisfaction is not required. Contrition is therefore more truly a punishment than is satisfaction. Besides, saints are subject to death, and all general afflictions, as Peter says, 1 Ep. 4, 17: For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God? And although these afflictions are for the most part the punishments of sin, yet in the godly they have a better end, namely, to exercise them, that they may learn amidst trials to seek God's aid, to acknowledge the distrust of their own hearts, etc., as Paul says of himself, 2 Cor. 1, 9: But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead. And Isaiah says, 26, 16: They poured out prayer when Thy chastening was upon them, i. e., afflictions are a discipline by which God exercises the saints. Likewise afflictions are inflicted because of present sin, since in the saints they mortify and extinguish concupiscence, so that they may be renewed by the Spirit, as Paul says, Rom. 8, 10: The body is dead because of sin, i. e., it is mortified [more and more every day] because of present sin which is still left in the flesh. And death itself serves this purpose, namely, to abolish this flesh of sin, that we may rise absolutely new. Neither is there now in the death of the believer, since by faith he has overcome the terrors of death, that sting and sense of wrath of which Paul speaks 1 Cor. 15, 56: The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the Law. This strength of sin, this sense of wrath, is truly a punishment as long as it is present; without this sense of wrath, death is not properly a punishment. Moreover, canonical satisfactions do not belong to these punishments; as the adversaries say that by poena, donec adest; mors sine illo sensu irae 57] proprie non est poena. Porro satisfactiones canonicae non pertinent ad has poenas, quia adversarii dicunt potestate clavium remitti aliquam partem poenarum. Item, claves iuxta ipsos condonant satisfactiones et poenas, quarum causa sunt satisfactiones. At constat illas afflictiones communes non tolli potestate clavium. Et si de his poenis volunt intelligi, quare addunt, quod in purgatorio oporteat satisfacere?

58] Obiiciunt de Adamo, de Davide, qui propter adulterium punitus est. Ex his exemplis faciunt universalem regulam, quod singulis peccatis respondeant propriae poenae temporales in remissionem peccatorum. Prius dictum est sanctos sustinere poenas, quae sunt opera Dei, sustinent contritionem seu terrores, sustinent et alias communes afflictiones. Ita sustinent aliqui proprias poenas a Deo impositas, exempli causa. Et hae poenae nihil pertinent ad claves, quia claves neque imponere neque remittere eas possunt, sed Deus sine ministerio clavium imponit et remittit.

Nec sequitur universalis regula: Davidi propria poena imposita est; igitur praeter communes afflictiones alia quaedam purgatorii poenae est, in qua singulis peccatis singuli gradus respondent. Ubi docet [R. 195 hoc Scriptura, non posse nos a morte aeterna liberari, nisi per illam compensationem certarum poenarum praeter communes afflictiones? At contra saepissime docet remissionem peccatorum gratis contingere propter Christum, Christum esse victorem peccati et mortis. Quare non est assuendum meritum satisfactionis. Et quamvis afflictiones reliquae sint, tamen has interpretatur praesentis peccati mortificationes esse, non compensationes aeternae mortis seu pretia pro aeterna morte.

61] Iob excusatur, quod non sit afflictus propter praeterita mala facta. Itaque afflictiones non semper sunt poenae aut signa irae. Imo pavidae conscientiae docendae sunt, alios fines afflictionum potiores esse, ne sentiant se a Deo reici, si in afflictionibus nihil nisi poenam et iram Dei videant. Alii fines potiores sunt considerandi, quod Deus alienum opus faciat, ut suum opus facere possit etc., sicut longa concione docet Esaias 62] cap. 28, 21. Et quum discipuli interrogarent de caeco, quis peccasset, Ioh. 9, 2, 3, respondet Christus causam caecitatis esse non peccatum, sed ut opera Dei in eo manifestentur. Et apud Ieremiam, 49, 12, dicitur: Quibus non erat iudicium, bibentes bibent etc. Sicut prophetae interfecti sunt, Iohannes Ba- 63] ptista et alii sancti. Quare afflictiones non semper sunt poenae pro certis factis praeteritis, sed sunt opera Dei destinata ad nostram utilitatem, et ut potentia Dei fiat conspectior in infirmitate nostra.

die vorigen Sünden, sondern sind Gottes Werke, zu unserm Nutz gerichtet, daß Gottes Stärke und Kraft in unserer Schwachheit desto klarer erkannt werde, wie er mitten im Tode helfen kann usw.

haben kann man nicht sprechen, daß die satisfactiones gelten für solch Kreuz und Trübsal und zeitliche Strafen der Sünden wegnehmen. Denn dies ist gewiß, daß die Gewalt der Schlüssel niemand frei, los absolvieren kann vom Kreuz oder von andern gemeinen Trübsalen. Und so sie wollen, daß das Wort poenae, dadurch genuggetan wird, solle von gemeinen Trübsalen verstanden werden, wie lehren sie denn, man müsse im Fegfeuer genügtun?

Sie werfen uns Exempel vor von Adam und David, welcher um seines Ehebruchs willen gestraft ist. Aus den Exempeln machen sie eine Regel, daß jegliche Sünde müsse ihre gewisse zeitliche Strafe haben, ehe die Sünden vergeben werden. Ich habe vor[hin] gesagt, daß die Christen Trübsal leiden, dadurch sie gezüchtigt werden, so leiden sie Schreden im Gewissen, manchen Kampf und Anfechtung. Also legt unser Herrgott auch etlichen Sündern eigene Pön und Strafe auf zu einem Exempel. Und mit den Pönen hat die Gewalt der Schlüssel nichts zu tun, sondern allein Gott hat sie aufzulegen und zu lösen, wie er will.

Es folgt auch gar nicht, ob [weil] David eine eigene Strafe aufgelegt ist, daß darum über das gemeine Kreuz und Trübsal aller Christen noch eine Pein des Fegfeuers sei, da eine jegliche Sünde ihren Grad und Maß der Pein hat. Denn es ist nirgend in der Schrift zu finden, daß wir von ewiger Pein und Tod nicht sollten können erlöst werden denn durch solche Quittierung unsers Leidens und Genugtuns. Aber allenthalben zeugt die Schrift, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden ohne Verdienst erlangen durch Christum, und daß Christus allein die Sünde und den Tod überwunden hat. Darum sollen wir unser Verdienst nicht daran pfehen [annähen] und stützen. Und wie wohl Christen allerlei Pön, Strafe und Trübsal leiden müssen, so zeigt doch die Schrift an, daß solche uns aufgelegt werden, den alten Adam zu töten und zu demütigen, nicht damit uns von dem ewigen Tod zu lösen.

Iob wird entschuldigt in der Schrift, daß er nicht geplagt sei um einiger bösen Thaten willen. Darum sind die Trübsale und Anfechtungen nicht allezeit göttlichen Zornes Zeichen, sondern man muß die Gewissen fleißig unterrichten, daß sie die Trübsale lernen gar viel anders ansehen, nämlich als Gnadenzeichen, daß sie nicht denken, Gott habe sie von sich gestoßen, wenn sie in Trübsalen sind. Man soll die andern rechten Früchte des Kreuzes ansehen, nämlich daß Gott uns angreift und darum ein fremd Werk tut, wie Jesaias sagt, damit er sein eigen Werk in uns haben möge; wie er denn davon eine lange, tröstliche Predigt macht im 28. Kapitel. Und da die Jünger fragten von dem Blinden, Iob, 9, sagt Christus, daß weder des Blinden Eltern noch er gesündigt habe, sondern Gottes Ehre und Werke mühten offenbart werden. Und also sagt auch Jeremias der Prophet: „Diejenigen, so nicht schuld dran haben, sollen auch den Kelch trinken“ usw. Also sind die Propheten erlöhrt, also ist Johannes Baptista getötet und andere Heilige. Darum sind die Trübsale nicht allezeit Strafen oder Pönen für the power of the keys a part of the punishments is remitted. Likewise, according to these very men, the keys remit the satisfactions, and the punishments on account of which the satisfactions are made. But it is evident that the common afflictions are not removed by the power of the keys. And if they wish to be understood concerning these punishments, why do they add that satisfaction is to be rendered in purgatory?

They oppose the example of Adam, and also of David, who was punished for his adultery. From these examples they derive the universal rule that peculiar temporal punishments in the remission of sins correspond to individual sins. It has been said before that saints suffer punishments, which are works of God; they suffer contrition or terrors, they also suffer other common afflictions. Thus, for example, some suffer punishments of their own that have been imposed by God. And these punishments pertain in no way to the keys, because the keys neither can impose nor remit them, but God, without the ministry of the keys, imposes and remits them [as He will].

Neither does the universal rule follow: Upon David a peculiar punishment was imposed, therefore, in addition to common afflictions, there is another punishment of purgatory, in which each degree corresponds to each sin. Where does Scripture teach that we cannot be freed from eternal death except by the compensation of certain punishments in addition to common afflictions? But, on the other hand, it most frequently teaches that the remission of sins occurs freely for Christ's sake, that Christ is the Victor of sin and death. Therefore the merit of satisfaction is not to be patched upon this. And although afflictions still remain, yet Scripture interprets these as the mortifications of present sin [to kill and humble the old Adam], and not as the compensations of eternal death or as prices for eternal death.

Job is excused that he was not afflicted on account of past evil deeds; therefore afflictions are not always punishments or signs of wrath. Yea, terrified consciences are to be taught that other ends of afflictions are more important [that they should learn to regard troubles far differently, namely, as signs of grace], lest they think that they are rejected by God when in afflictions they see nothing but God's punishment and anger. The other more important ends are to be considered, namely, that God is doing His strange work so that He may be able to do His own work, etc., as Isaiah teaches in a long discourse, chap. 28. And when the disciples asked concerning the blind man who sinned, John 9, 2. 3, Christ replies that the cause of his blindness is not sin, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him. And in Jeremiah, 49, 12, it is said: They whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken. Thus the prophets and John the Baptist and other saints were killed. Therefore afflictions are not always punishments for certain past deeds, but they are the works of God, intended for our profit, and that the power of God might be made more manifest in our weakness [how He can help in the midst of death].

Sic Paulus ait 2 Cor. 12, 5. 9: Potentia Dei perficitur in infirmitate mea. Itaque corpora nostra debent esse hostiae, propter voluntatem Dei, ad obedientiam nostram declarandam, non ad compensandam mortem aeternam, pro qua aliud pretium habet Deus, scilicet 64] mortem Filii sui. Et in hanc sententiam interpretatur Gregorius ipsam etiam poenam Davidis, quum ait: Si Deus propter peccatum illud fuerat comminatus, ut sic humiliaretur a filio, cur dimisso peccato, quod erat ei comminatum, implevit? Respondetur, remissionem illam peccati factam esse, ne [R. 198] homo ad percipiendam vitam impediretur aeternam. Subsecutum vero illud comminationis exemplum, ut pietas hominis etiam in illa humilitate exerceretur atque probaretur. Sic et mortem corporis propter peccatum Deus homini influit et post peccatorum remissionem propter exercendam iustitiam non ademit, videlicet ut exerceatur et probetur iustitia istorum, qui sanctificantur.

65] Neque vero tolluntur communes calamitates proprie per illa opera satisfactionum canonicarum, hoc est, per illa opera traditionum humanarum, quae ipsi sic valere dicunt ex opere operato, ut, etiamsi fiant in peccato 66] mortali, tamen redimant poenas. Et quum obicitur illud Pauli, 1 Cor. 11, 31: Si nos iudicaremus ipsi, non iudicaremur a Domino, verbum iudicare intelligi debet de tota poenitentia et fructibus debitis, non de operibus non debitis. Adversarii nostri dant poenas contemptae grammatices, quum intelligunt iudicare idem esse, quod cataphractum peregre ire ad sanctum Iacobum aut similia opera. Iudicare significat totam poenitentiam, significat damnare peccata. Haec 67] damnatio vere fit in contritione et mutatione vitae. Tota poenitentia, contritio, fides, boni fructus impetrant, ut mitigentur poenae et calamitates publicae et privatae, sicut Esaias capite primo, v. 17—19 docet: Desinite male facere, et discite benefacere etc. Si fuerint peccata vestra ut coccinum, quasi nix dealbabitur. Si volueritis et audieritis me, 68] bona terrae comedetis. Nec est ad satisfactiones et opera traditionum humanarum transferenda gravissima et saluberrima sententia a tota poenitentia et operibus debitis seu a Deo praeceptis. Et hoc prodest docere, quod mitigentur communia mala per nostram poenitentiam et per veros fructus poenitentiae, per bona opera facta ex fide, non, ut isti fingunt, facta in peccato mortali. [R. 197] 69] Et huc pertinet exemplum Ninivitarum, Ionae 3, 10, qui sua poenitentia (de tota loquimur), reconciliati sunt Deo et impetraverunt, ne deleteretur civitas.

70] Quod autem patres mentionem faciunt satisfactionis, quod concilia fecerunt canones, diximus supra disciplinam ecclesiasticam fuisse exempli causa constitutam. Nec sentiebant hanc disciplinam necessariam esse vel ad culpae vel ad poenae remissionem. Nam si qui in his mentionem purgatorii fecerunt, interpretantur esse non compensationem

Also sagt Paulus: „Gottes Kraft und Stärke läßt sich in Schwachheit erfahren und sehen.“ Darum sollen wir unsere Leiber opfern in Gottes Willen, unsern Gehorsam und Geduld zu erzeigen, nicht von dem ewigen Tode oder ewiger Pein uns zu erlösen. Denn da hat Gott einen andern Schatz verordnet, nämlich den Tod seines Sohnes, unsers Herrn Christi. Und also legt St. Gregorius das Exempel Davids aus, da er sagt: „So Gott um derselben Sünde willen ihm gedraut hat, daß er also von seinem eigenen Sohn sollte gedemütigt werden, warum hat er denn solches ergehen lassen, da die Sünde schon vergeben war? Ist zu antworten, daß die Vergebung geschehen ist, daß der Mensch nicht verhindert würde, das ewige Leben zu empfangen. Die gedraute Strafe ist nichtsdestoweniger gefolgt, daß er ihn prüfte und in Demut behielt. Also hat auch Gott dem Menschen den natürlichen Tod aufgelegt und denselben auch, als die Sünde vergeben, nicht weggenommen, damit bewährt werden und geprüft diejenigen, welchen Sünde vergeben und sie geheiligt werden.“

Nun ist öffentlich, daß die Schlüssel diese gemeine Strafe, als Krieg, Teuerung und dergleichen Plagen, nicht wegnehmen; item, daß auch canonicae satisfactiones uns nicht losmachen von solchen Plagen, also daß unsere satisfactiones dafür helfen oder gelten sollten, wenn wir schon in Todsünden liegen. Auch bekennen die Widersacher selbst, daß sie die satisfactiones auflegen nicht für solche gemeine Plagen, sondern für das Fegfeuer. Darum sind ihre satisfactiones eitel erdichtete Träume. Aber hier ziehen etliche den Spruch Pauli an 1 Kor. 11: „So wir uns selbst richteten, so würden wir nicht gerichtet.“ Daraus schließen sie: so wir uns selbst Strafe auflegten, würde Gott gnädiger strafen. Antwort: Paulus redet von Besserung des ganzen Lebens, nicht von äußerlicher Strafe und Zeremonie, darum tut dieser Spruch nichts zur Satisfaction. Denn was fragt Gott nach der Strafe ohne Besserung? Ja, es ist eine greuliche Gotteslästerung, daß man lehrt, unsere Satisfaction lindert Gottes Strafe, wenn sie schon in Todsünden geschieht. Paulus redet von Reue und Glauben und von der ganzen Besserung, redet nicht von der äußerlichen Strafe allein. Darum kann man hieraus nicht mehr erzwingen denn: so wir uns bessern, so wende Gott seine Strafe ab. Das ist wahr und ist nützlich, tröstlich und not zu predigen, daß Gott die Strafe lindert, wenn wir uns bessern, wie er mit Ninivitar. Und also lehrt Jesaias im 1. Kapitel: „Wenn schon eure Sünden blutrot sind, sollen sie dennoch ab und schneeweiß sein, wenn ihr euch bessert.“ Und diese Besserung steht nicht in der canonica satisfactione, sondern in andern Stücken der Buße, in Reue, im Glauben, in guten Werken, so folgen nach dem Glauben. Aber unsere Widersacher deuten diese tröstlichen Sprüche auf ihre Lügen und Gaukelspiel von der Satisfaction.

Daß aber die alten Lehrer und Väter der Satisfaction gedenken, daß die Concilia von den satisfactionibus Canones gemacht, habe ich oben gesagt, es sei eine äußerliche Ceremonie gewesen, und ist der Väter Meinung nicht gewesen, daß dieselbe Ceremonie der Buße sollte ein Auslösen sein der Schuld gegen Gott oder der Pein. Denn so etliche Väter gleich sind, die des Feg-

Thus Paul says, 2 Cor. 12, 5, 9: The strength of God is made perfect in my weakness. Therefore, because of God's will, our bodies ought to be sacrifices, to declare our obedience [and patience], and not to compensate for eternal death, for which God has another price, namely, the death of His own Son. And in this sense Gregory interprets even the punishment of David when he says: If God on account of that sin had threatened that he would thus be humbled by his son, why, when the sin was forgiven, did He fulfil that which He had threatened against him? The reply is that this remission was made that man might not be hindered from receiving eternal life, but that the example of the threatening followed, in order that the piety of the man might be exercised and tested even in this humility. Thus also God inflicted upon man death of body on account of sin, and after the remission of sins He did not remove it, for the sake of exercising justice, namely, in order that the righteousness of those who are sanctified might be exercised and tested.

Nor, indeed, are common calamities [as war, famine, and similar calamities], properly speaking, removed by these works of canonical satisfactions, i. e., by these works of human traditions, which, they say, avail ex opere operato, in such a way that, even though they are wrought in mortal sin, yet they redeem from the punishments. [And the adversaries themselves confess that they impose satisfactions, not on account of such common calamities, but on account of purgatory; hence, their satisfactions are pure imaginations and dreams.] And when the passage of Paul, 1 Cor. 11, 31, is cited against us: If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged by the Lord [they conclude therefrom that, if we impose punishment upon ourselves, God will judge us the more graciously], the word to judge ought to be understood of the entire repentance and due fruits, not of works which are not due. Our adversaries pay the penalty for despising grammar when they understand to judge to be the same as to make a pilgrimage clad in mail to the church of St. James, or similar works. To judge signifies the entire repentance; it signifies to condemn sins. This condemnation truly occurs in contrition and the change of life. The entire repentance, contrition, faith, the good fruits, obtain the mitigation of public and private punishments and calamities, as Isaiah teaches chap. 1, 17—19: Cease to do evil; learn to do well, etc. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land. Neither should a most important and salutary meaning be transferred from the entire repentance, and from works due or commanded by God, to the satisfactions and works of human traditions. And this it is profitable to teach, that common evils are mitigated by our repentance and by the true fruits of repentance, by good works wrought from faith, not, as these men imagine, wrought in mortal sin. And here belongs the example of the Ninevites, Jonah 3, 10, who by their repentance (we speak of the entire repentance) were reconciled to God, and obtained the favor that their city was not destroyed.

Moreover, the making mention, by the Fathers, of satisfaction, and the framing of canons by the councils, we have said above, was a matter of church-discipline instituted on account of the example. Nor did they hold that this discipline is necessary for the reaeternae poenae, non satisfactionem, sed purificationem imperfectarum animarum. Sicut Augustinus ait venialia condecernari, hoc est, mortificari diffidentiam erga Deum et alios 71] affectus similes. Interdum scriptores transferunt satisfactionis vocabulum ab ipso ritu seu spectaculo ad significandam veram mortificationem. Sic Augustinus ait: Vera satisfactio est peccatorum causas excidere, hoc est, mortificare carnem, item coercere carnem, non ut compensentur aeternae poenae, sed ne caro pertrahat ad peccandum. [Gennadius Massiliensis, De fide sive dogmatibus ecclesiasticis liber ad Gelasium papam: „Satisfactio poenitentiae est, causas peccatorum excidere, nec earum suggestionibus aditum indulgere.“]

72] Ita Gregorius de restitutione loquitur falsam esse poenitentiam, si non satisfiat illis, quorum res occupatas tenemus. Non enim vere dolet se furatum esse aut rapuisse is, qui adhuc furatur. Tantisper enim fur aut praedo est, dum est iniustus possessor alienae rei. Civilis illa satisfactio necessaria est, quia scriptum est Eph. 4, 28: Qui furatus est, 73] deinceps non furetur. Item Chrysostomus inquit: In corde contritio, in ore confessio, in opere tota humilitas. Hoc nihil contra nos facit. Debent sequi bona opera poenitentiam, debet poenitentia esse, non simulatio, sed totius vitae mutatio in melius.

75] Architecti Confutationis scribunt, non esse tolerandum, ut satisfactiones contra expressum evangelium aboleantur. Nos igitur hactenus ostendimus canonicas illas satisfactiones, hoc est, opera non debita, facienda propter compensationem poenae, non habere 76] mandatum evangelii. Res ipsa hoc ostendit. Si opera satisfactorum sunt opera non debita, quare allegant expressum evangelium? Nam si evangelium iuberet compensari poenas per talia opera, iam essent debita opera. Sed sic loquuntur, ut fucum faciant imperitis, et allegant testimonia, quae de debitis operibus loquuntur, quum ipsi in suis satisfactionibus praescribant opera non debita. Imo ipsi concedunt in scholis, sine peccato recusari posse satisfactiones. Falso igitur hic scribunt, quod expresso evangelio cogamur satisfactiones illas canonicas suscipere.

und welche sie opera non debita nennen. Sie lehren und geben selbst nach in ihren Schulen, daß man ohne Todsünde solche Satisfactionen könne nachlassen. Darum ist das falsch, daß sie sagen, das klare Evangelium vermöge [verfüge, gebiete], man müsse die satisfactiones halten.

77] Ceterum nos saepe iam testati sumus, quod poenitentia debeat bonos fructus parere, feuers gebenken, so legen sie es doch selbst aus: ob es auch wäre, so sei es doch nicht Erlösung von ewigem Tod und Pein, welches Christus allein tut, sondern daß es ein Reinigen und Segen sei (wie sie reden) der unvollkommenen Seelen. Also sagt Augustinus: „Die täglichen Sünden werden verbrannt und ausgelöscht, als schwacher Glaube gegen Gott und dergleichen“ usw. Man findet auch an etlichen Orten, daß die Väter das Wort satisfactio oder Genugtuung, welches ursprünglich von der Ceremonie der öffentlichen Bönitz herkommt, wie ich gesagt, brauchen für rechte Reue und Tötung des alten Adams. Also sagt Augustinus [Gennadius von Massilia]: „Die rechte satisfactio oder Genugtuung ist, Ursachen der Sünden abschneiden, das ist, das Fleisch töten“ usw.; item, „das Fleisch zähmen und fasten; nicht daß ewiger Tod oder Pein damit quittiert werde, sondern daß uns das Fleisch nicht zu Sünden ziehen möge“.

Also sagt Gregorius von Wiebergeben fremder Güter, daß es eine falsche Buße sei, wenn denjenigen nicht genug geschieht, deren Güter wir mit Unrecht innehaben. Denn den gereuet's nicht, daß er gestohlen hat, der noch immer stiehlt. Denn solange er fremd Gut innehat, so lange ist er ein Dieb oder Räuber. Dieselbe satisfactio gegen die, so einer schuldig ist, soll gegen dieselben geschehen, und von derselben civili satisfactione ist nicht not, hier zu disputieren.

Item, die Väter schreiben, daß es genug sei, daß einmal im ganzen Leben geschehe die publica Bönitz oder die öffentliche Buße, davon die canones satisfactorum gemacht sind. Daraus kann man merken, daß ihre Meinung nicht gewesen, daß dieselben Canones nötig sein sollten zur Vergebung der Sünden. Denn ohne dieselben Ceremonien der öffentlichen Buße lehren sie sonst viel von der christlichen Buße, da sie der canones satisfactorum nicht gedenken.

Die Esel, so die Confutation gestellt haben, sagen, es sei nicht zu leiden, daß man die satisfactiones wider das öffentliche Evangelium wolle abtun. Wir haben aber bisanher klar genug angezeigt, daß dieselben canonicas satisfactiones, das ist, solche Werke (wie sie davon reden), so wir nicht schuldig sind, in der Schrift oder Evangelio nicht gegründet sind. So zeigt das die Sache an ihr selbst an. Denn wenn die satisfactiones Werke sind, die man nicht schuldig ist, warum sagen sie, wir lehren wider das klare Evangelium? Denn so im Evangelio stünde, daß die ewige Pein und Tod weggenommen würden durch solche Werke, so wären es Werke, die man vor Gott zu tun schuldig wäre. Aber sie reden also, daß sie den Unerfahrenen einen Schein vor der Nase machen, und ziehen Sprüche der heiligen Schrift an, welche von rechten christlichen Werken, die wir schuldig sind, reden, so sie doch ihr Genugtun gründen auf Werke, die wir nicht schuldig sind, mission either of the guilt or of the punishment. For if some of them made mention of purgatory, they interpret it not as compensation for eternal punishment [which only Christ makes], not as satisfaction, but as purification of imperfect souls. Just as Augustine says that venial [daily] offenses are consumed, i. e., distrust towards God and other similar dispositions are mortified. Now and then the writers transfer the term satisfaction from the rite itself or spectacle, to signify true mortification. Thus Augustine says: True satisfaction is to cut off the causes of sin, i. e., to mortify the flesh, likewise to restrain the flesh, not in order that eternal punishments may be compensated for, but so that the flesh may not allure to sin.

Thus concerning restitution, Gregory says that repentance is false if it does not satisfy those whose property we have taken. For he who still steals does not truly grieve that he has stolen or robbed. For he is a thief or robber, so long as he is the unjust possessor of the property of another. This civil satisfaction is necessary, because it is written Eph. 4, 28: Let him that stole, steal no more. Likewise Chrysostom says: In the heart, contrition; in the mouth, confession; in the work, entire humility. This amounts to nothing against us. Good works ought to follow repentance; it ought to be repentance, not simulation, but a change of the entire life for the better.

Likewise, the Fathers wrote that it is sufficient if once in life this public or ceremonial penitence occur, about which the canons concerning satisfactions have been made. Therefore it can be understood that they held that these canons are not necessary for the remission of sins. For in addition to this ceremonial penitence, they frequently wish that penitence be rendered otherwise, where canons of satisfactions were not required.

The composers of the Confutation write that the abolition of satisfactions contrary to the plain Gospel is not to be endured. We, therefore, have thus far shown that these canonical satisfactions, i. e., works not due, and that are to be performed in order to compensate for punishment, have not the command of the Gospel. The subject itself shows this. If works of satisfaction are works which are not due, why do they cite the plain Gospel? For if the Gospel would command that punishments be compensated for by such works, the works would already be due. But thus they speak in order to impose upon the inexperienced, and they cite testimonies which speak of works that are due, although they themselves in their own satisfactions prescribe works that are not due. Yea, in their schools they themselves concede that satisfactions can be refused without [mortal] sin. Therefore they here write falsely that we are compelled by the plain Gospel to undertake these canonical satisfactions.

But we have already frequently testified that repentance ought to produce good fruits; et qui sint boni fructus, docent mandata, videlicet invocatio, gratiarum actio, confessio evangelii, docere evangelium, obedire parentibus et magistratibus, servire vocationi, non occidere, non retinere odia, sed esse placabilem, dare egentibus, quantum pro facultatibus possumus, non scortari, non moechari, sed coercere et refrenare, castigare carnem, non propter compensationem poenae aeternae, sed ne obtemperet diabolo, ne offendat Spiritum Sanctum, item vera dicere. Hi fructus habent praecepta Dei, et propter gloriam et mandatum Dei fieri debent, habent et praemia. Sed quod non remittantur poenae aeternae nisi propter compensationem certarum traditionum aut purgatorii, hoc non docet Scriptura. Indulgentiae olim erant condonationes publicarum illarum observationum, ne nimium gravarentur homines. Quodsi [R. 199] humana auctoritate remitti satisfactiones et poenae queunt, non igitur iure divino necessaria est illa compensatio; nam ius divinum non tollitur humana auctoritate. Porro quum nunc per se antiquitas sit mos, et quidem dissimulantibus episcopis, nihil opus est remissionibus illis. Et tamen mansit nomen indulgentiarum. Et sicut satisfactiones non intellectae sunt de politica disciplina, sed de compensatione poenae: ita indulgentiae male intellectae sunt, quod liberent a[ni-79] mas ex purgatorio. At clavis non habet potestatem nisi super terram ligandi et solvendi, iuxta illud Matth. 16, 19: Quidquid ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum in coelo; quidquid solveris super terram, erit solutum in coelo. Quamquam, ut supra diximus, clavis potestatem habet non imponendi poenas aut cultus instituendi, sed tantum habet mandatum remittendi peccata his, qui convertuntur, et arguendi et excommunicandi istos, qui nolunt converti. Sicut enim solvere significat remittere peccata, ita ligare significat non remittere peccata. Loquitur enim Christus de regno spirituali. Et mandatum Dei est, ut ministri evangelii absolvant hos, qui convertuntur, iuxta illud 2 Cor. 10, 8: Potestas nobis data est ad aedificationem. Quare [80] reservatio casuum politica res est. Est enim reservatio poenae canonicae, non est reservatio culpaе coram Deo in his, qui vere convertuntur. Proinde recte iudicant adversarii, quum fatentur, quod in articulo mortis illa reservatio casuum non debeat impedire absolutionem.

geben, binden heißt Sünden nicht vergeben. Denn Christus redet von einem geistlichen Reich, und Gott hat befohlen, diejenigen, so sich befehren, von Sünden zu entbinden, wie Paulus sagt: „Die Gewalt ist uns gegeben zu erbauen und nicht zu brechen.“ Darum ist auch die reservatio casuum, das ist, darin der Papst und die Bischöfe etliche Fälle vorbehalten, ein äußerlich, weltlich Ding. Denn sie behalten ihnen vor die Absolution a poena canonica, nicht von der Schuld gegen Gott. Darum lehren die Widerjacher recht, da sie selbst bekennen und sagen, daß an [in] der Todesstunde eine solche reservatio oder Vorbehaltung nicht solle hindern die rechte christliche Absolution.

sein könne, und was rechte gute Werke seien, lehren die zehn Gebote, nämlich Gott den Herrn wahrlich und von Herzen am höchsten groß achten, fürchten und lieben, ihn in Nothen fröhlich anrufen, ihm allezeit danken, sein Wort bekennen, daselbe Wort hören, auch andere dadurch trösten, lehren, Eltern und Obrigkeit gehorsam sein, seines Amtes und Berufs treulich warten, nicht bitter, nicht [ge]hässig sein, nicht töten, sondern tröstlich, freundlich sein dem Nächsten, den Armen nach Vermögen helfen, nicht huren, nicht ehebrechen, sondern das Fleisch allenthalben im Zaum halten. Und das alles, nicht für den ewigen Tod oder ewige Pein genugsam, welches Christo allein geschieht, sondern also zu tun, damit dem Teufel nicht Raum gegeben werde und Gott erzürnt und der Heilige Geist betrübt und geunehet werde. Diese Früchte und guten Werke hat Gott geboten, haben auch ihre Belohnung, und um Gottes Ehre und göttlichen Gebots willen sollen sie auch geschehen. Daß aber die ewigen Peinen nicht anders erlassen werden denn allein durch Genugsam im Fegfeuer oder etliche gute Werke menschlicher Traditionen, da sagt die Heilige Schrift nirgend von. Durch den Ablass werden etwa solche aufgelegte Buße und Satisfaction quittiert den publicis poenitentibus oder Büßern, daß die Leute nicht zu sehr beschwert werden. Haben nun Menschen Macht, die satisfactiones und aufgelegten Strafen oder Pönen zu erlassen, so ist solche satisfactio von Gott nicht geboten. Denn göttlichen Befehl und Gebot kann ein Mensch nicht abtun. Nachdem aber die alte Weise der öffentlichen Buße und Genugsamung ist vorlängst abgetan, welches die Bischöfe von einer Zeit auf die andere haben geschehen lassen, ist des Ablasses nicht bedürftig, und ist doch der Name indulgentia oder Ablass in der Kirche geblieben. Gleichwie nun das Wort satisfactio ist anders verstanden denn für eine Kirchenordnung und Ceremonie, also hat man dies Wort Indulgenz oder Ablass auch unrecht geendet und ausgelegt für solche Gnade und Ablass, durch welchen die Seelen aus dem Fegfeuer erlöst werden, so doch die ganze Gewalt der Schlüssel in der Kirche nicht weiter sich erstreckt denn allein hier auf Erden, wie der Text lautet: „Was du binden wirst auf Erden, das soll gebunden sein im Himmel; was du auflösen wirst auf Erden, das soll aufgelöst sein im Himmel.“ So ist die Gewalt der Schlüssel nicht eine solche Gewalt, sonderliche eigene Strafen oder Gottesdienst aufzurichten, sondern allein Sünden zu vergeben denjenigen, so sich befehren, und zu verbannen [bannen] diejenigen, so sich nicht befehren. Denn auflösen an dem Ort heißt Sünden ver-

and what the good fruits are the [Ten] Commandments teach, namely, [truly and from the heart most highly to esteem, fear, and love God, joyfully to call upon Him in need], prayer, thanksgiving, the confession of the Gospel [hearing this Word], to teach the Gospel, to obey parents and magistrates, to be faithful to one's calling, not to kill, not to retain hatred, but to be forgiving [to be agreeable and kind to one's neighbor], to give to the needy, so far as we can according to our means, not to commit fornication or adultery, but to restrain and bridle and chastise the flesh, not for a compensation of eternal punishment, but so as not to obey the devil, or offend the Holy Ghost; likewise, to speak the truth. These fruits have God's injunction, and ought to be brought forth for the sake of God's glory and command; and they have their rewards also. But that eternal punishments are not remitted except on account of the compensation rendered by certain traditions or by purgatory, Scripture does not teach. Indulgences were formerly remission of these public observances, so that men should not be excessively burdened. But if, by human authority, satisfactions and punishments can be remitted, this compensation, therefore, is not necessary by divine Law; for a divine Law is not annulled by human authority. Furthermore, since the custom has now of itself become obsolete and the bishops have passed it by in silence, there is no necessity for these remissions. And yet the name indulgences remained. And just as satisfactions were understood not with reference to external discipline, but with reference to the compensation of punishment, so indulgences were incorrectly understood to free souls from purgatory. But the keys have not the power of binding and loosing except upon earth, according to Matt. 16, 19: Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Although, as we have said above, the keys have not the power to impose penalties, or to institute rites of worship, but only the command to remit sins to those who are converted, and to convict and excommunicate those who are unwilling to be converted. For just as to loose signifies to remit sins, so to bind signifies not to remit sins. For Christ speaks of a spiritual kingdom. And the command of God is that the ministers of the Gospel should absolve those who are converted, according to 2 Cor. 10, 8: The authority which the Lord hath given us for edification. Therefore the reservation of cases is a secular affair. For it is a reservation of canonical punishment; it is not a reservation of guilt before God in those who are truly converted. Therefore the adversaries judge aright when they confess that in the article of death the reservation of cases ought not to hinder absolution.

We have set forth the sum of our doctrine concerning repentance, which we certainly know is godly and salutary to good minds [and highly necessary]. And if good men will compare our [yea, Christ's and His apostles'] doctrine with the very confused discussions of our adversaries, they will perceive that the adversaries have omitted the doctrine [without which no one can teach or learn anything that is substantial and Chris-

Sie werden auch sehen, daß die Widersacher viel aus eigenem Hirn erdichten von Verdienst der Attrition, von der Erzählung der Sünden, von Genugthuung, welches alles in der Schrift ungegründet und weder oben noch unten anreicht, welches die Widersacher selbst nicht verstehen.

Art. XIII. (VII.)

De Numero et Usu Sacramentorum.

1) In XIII. articulo probant adversarii, quod dicimus sacramenta non esse tantum notas professionis inter homines, ut quidam fingunt, sed magis esse signa et testimonia voluntatis Dei erga nos, per quae movet Deus 2) corda ad credendum. Sed hic iubent nos etiam septem sacramenta numerare. Nos sentimus praestandum esse, ne negligantur res et ceremoniae in Scripturis institutae, quotcunque sunt. Nec multum referre putamus, etiamsi docendi causa alii numerant aliter, si tamen recte conservent res in Scriptura traditas. Nec veteres eodem modo numeraverunt.

3) Si sacramenta vocamus ritus, qui habent mandatum Dei, et quibus addita est promissio gratiae, facile est iudicare, quae sint proprie sacramenta. Nam ritus ab hominibus instituti non erunt hoc modo proprie dicta sacramenta. Non est enim auctoritatis humanae promittere gratiam. Quare signa sine mandato Dei instituta non sunt certa signa gratiae, etiamsi fortasse rudes docent aut admo- 4) nent aliquid. Vere igitur sunt sacramenta baptismus, coena Domini, absolutio, quae est sacramentum poenitentiae. Nam hi ritus habent mandatum Dei et promissionem gratiae, quae est propria novi testamenti. Certo enim debent statuere corda, quum baptizamus, quum vescimur corpore Domini, quum absolvimur, quod vere ignoret nobis Deus 5) propter Christum. Et corda simul per Verbum et ritum movet Deus, ut credant et concipiant fidem, sicut ait Paulus Rom. 10, 17: Fides ex auditu est. Sicut autem Verbum incurrit in aures, ut feriat corda, ita ritus ipse incurrit in oculos, ut moveat corda. [R. 201 Idem effectus est Verbi et ritus, sicut praclare dictum est ab Augustino sacramentum esse Verbum visibile, quia ritus oculis accipitur et est quasi pictura Verbi, idem significans, quod Verbum. Quare idem est utriusque effectus. [Augustinus, Tract. 80 in Iohannem: „Accedit Verbum ad elementum et fit sacramentum, etiam ipsum tamquam visibile Verbum.“]

6) Confirmatio et extrema unctio sunt ritus accepti a patribus, quos ne ecclesia quidem tamquam necessarios ad salutem requirit, quia

gegen so viele ungeschickte, vermorrene, kindische Disputationen und Bücher der Widersacher, so werden sie befinden, daß sie das allerhöchste, nöthigste Stück, nämlich vom Glauben an Christum, ohne welches niemand etwas Rechtshaffenes, Christliches lehren oder lernen mag, gar haben

Artikel XIII. (VII.) Von den Sacramenten und ihrem rechten Gebrauch.

Im dreizehnten Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher gefallen, daß wir sagen, die Sacramente sind nicht schlechte Zeichen, dabei die Leute untereinander sich kennen, wie Lösung im Krieg und Hoffarbe u. s. w., sondern sind fruchtige Zeichen und gewisse Zeugnisse göttlicher Gnade und Willens gegen uns, dadurch Gott unsere Herzen erinnert und stärkt, desto gewisser und fröhlicher zu glauben. Aber hier wollen sie haben, wir sollen auch bekennen, daß an der Zahl sieben Sacramente seien, nicht mehr noch weniger. Darauf sprechen wir, daß not sei, diese Ceremonien und Sacramente, die Gott eingesetzt hat durch sein Wort, wie viele und in was Zahl sie sind, zu erhalten. Aber von dieser Zahl der sieben Sacramente befindet man, daß die Väter selbst nicht gleich gezählt haben; so sind auch diese sieben Ceremonien nicht alle gleich nötig.

So wir Sacramente nennen die äußerlichen Zeichen und Ceremonien, die da haben Gottes Befehl und haben eine angeheftete göttliche Zusage der Gnade, so kann man bald schließen, was Sacramente seien. Denn Ceremonien und andere äußerliche Dinge, von Menschen eingesetzt, sind auf die Weise nicht Sacramente. Denn Menschen ohne Befehl haben nicht Gottes Gnade zu verheißen. Darum Zeichen, so ohne Gottes Befehl sind eingesetzt, die sind nicht Zeichen der Gnade, wiewohl sie den Kindern und groben Leuten sonst mögen eine Erinnerung bringen, als ein gemalt Kreuz. So sind nun rechte Sacramente die Taufe und das Nachtmahl des Herrn, die Absolution. Denn diese haben Gottes Befehl, haben auch Verheißung der Gnade, welche denn eigentlich gehört zum Neuen Testament und ist das Neue Testament. Denn dazu sind die äußerlichen Zeichen eingesetzt, daß dadurch bewegt werden die Herzen, nämlich durchs Wort und äußerliche Zeichen zugleich, daß sie glauben, wenn wir getauft werden, wenn wir des Herrn Leib empfangen, daß Gott uns wahrlich gnädig sein will durch Christum; wie Paulus sagt: „Der Glaube ist aus dem Gehör.“ Wie aber das Wort in die Ohren geht, also ist das äußerliche Zeichen vor die Augen gestellt, als [um] inwendig das Herz zu reizen und zu bewegen zum Glauben. Denn das Wort und äußerliche Zeichen wirken einerlei im Herzen, wie Augustinus ein sein Wort geredet hat. „Das Sacrament“, sagt er, „ist ein sichtlich Wort.“ Denn das äußerliche Zeichen ist wie ein Gemälde, dadurch dasselbe bedeutet wird, das durchs Wort gepredigt wird; darum richtet beides einerlei aus.

Aber die confirmatio und die letzte Unction sind Ceremonien, welche von den alten Vätern herkommen, welche auch die Kirche nie als für nötig tian] concerning faith justifying and consoling godly hearts. They will also see that the adversaries invent many things concerning the merits of attrition, concerning the endless enumeration of offenses, concerning satisfactions; they say things [that touch neither earth nor heaven] agreeing neither with human nor divine law, and which not even the adversaries themselves can satisfactorily explain.

Article XIII (VII): Of the Number and Use of the Sacraments.

In the Thirteenth Article the adversaries approve our statement that the Sacraments are not only marks of profession among men, as some imagine, but that they are rather signs and testimonies of God's will toward us, through which God moves hearts to believe [are not mere signs whereby men may recognize each other, as the watchword in war, livery, etc., but are efficacious signs and sure testimonies, etc.]. But here they bid us also count seven sacraments. We hold that it should be maintained that the matters and ceremonies instituted in the Scriptures, whatever the number, be not neglected. Neither do we believe it to be of any consequence, though, for the purpose of teaching, different people reckon differently, provided they still preserve aright the matters handed down in Scripture. Neither have the ancients reckoned in the same manner. [But concerning this number of seven sacraments, the fact is that the Fathers have not been uniform in their enumeration; thus also these seven ceremonies are not equally necessary.]

If we call Sacraments rites which have the command of God, and to which the promise of grace has been added, it is easy to decide what are properly Sacraments. For rites instituted by men will not in this way be Sacraments properly so called. For it does not belong to human authority to promise grace. Therefore signs instituted without God's command are not sure signs of grace, even though they perhaps instruct the rude [children or the uncultivated], or admonish as to something [as a painted cross]. Therefore Baptism, the Lord's Supper, and Absolution, which is the Sacrament of Repentance, are truly Sacraments. For these rites have God's command and the promise of grace, which is peculiar to the New Testament. For when we are baptized, when we eat the Lord's body, when we are absolved, our hearts must be firmly assured that God truly forgives us for Christ's sake. And God, at the same time, by the Word and by the rite, moves hearts to believe and conceive faith, just as Paul says, Rom. 10, 17: Faith cometh by hearing. But just as the Word enters the ear in order to strike our heart, so the rite itself strikes the eye, in order to move the heart. The effect of the Word and of the rite is the same, as it has been well said by Augustine that a Sacrament is a visible word, because the rite is received by the eyes, and is, as it were, a picture of the Word, signifying the same thing as the Word. Therefore the effect of both is the same.

Confirmation and Extreme Unction are rites received from the Fathers which not even the Church requires as necessary to sal-non habent mandatum Dei. Propterea non est inutile hos ritus discernere a superioribus, qui habent expressum mandatum Dei et claram promissionem gratiae.

7] Sacerdotium intelligunt adversarii non de ministerio Verbi et sacramentorum aliis porrigendorum, sed intelligunt de sacrificio, quasi oporteat esse in novo testamento sacerdotium simile Levitico, quod pro populo sacrificet et mereatur aliis remissionem peccatorum. 8] rum. Nos docemus, sacrificium Christi morientis in cruce satis fuisse pro peccatis totius mundi, nec indigere praeterea aliis sacrificiis, quasi illud non satis fuerit pro peccatis nostris. Ideo iustificantur homines non propter ulla reliqua sacrificia, sed propter illud unum Christi sacrificium, si cre- 9] dant illo sacrificio se redemptos esse. Ideo sacerdotes vocantur non ad ulla sacrificia velut in lege pro populo facienda, ut per ea mereantur populo remissionem peccatorum, sed vocantur ad docendum evangelium et sa- 10] cramenta porrigenda populo. Nec habemus nos aliud sacerdotium, simile Levitico, 11] sicut satis docet epistola ad Ebraeos. Si autem ordo de ministerio Verbi intelligatur, non gravatim vocaverimus ordinem sacramentum. Nam ministerium Verbi habet mandatum Dei et habet magnificas promissiones, Rom. 1, 16: Evangelium est potentia Dei ad salutem omni credenti. Item Es. 55, 11: Verbum meum, quod egredietur de ore meo, non revertetur ad me vacuum, sed faciet, [R. 202 12] quaecunque volui etc. Si ordo hoc modo intelligatur, neque impositionem manuum vocare sacramentum gravemur. Habet enim ecclesia mandatum de constituendis ministris, quod gratissimum esse nobis debet, quod scimus Deum approbare ministerium illud et ad- 13] esse in ministerio. Ac prodest, quantum fieri potest, ornare ministerium Verbi omni genere laudis adversus fanaticos homines, qui somniant Spiritum Sanctum dari non per Verbum, sed propter suas quasdam praeparationes, si sedeant otiosi, taciti, in locis obscuris, expectantes illuminationem, quemadmodum olim ἐνθουσιασταὶ docebant et nunc docent Anabaptistae.

14] Matrimonium non est primum institutum in novo testamento, sed statim initio creato genere humano. Habet autem mandatum Dei, habet et promissiones, non quidem proprie ad novum testamentum pertinentes sed magis pertinentes ad vitam corporalem. Quare si quis volet sacramentum vocare, discernere tamen a prioribus illis debet, quae proprie sunt signa novi testamenti et sunt testimonia gratiae et remissionis peccatorum. 15] Quodsi matrimonium propterea habebit appellationem sacramenti, quia habet mandatum Dei, etiam alii status seu officia, quae habent mandatum Dei, poterunt vocari sacramenta, sicut magistratus.

16] Postremo, si omnes res annumerari sacramentis debent, quae habent mandatum Dei et quibus sunt additae promissiones, cur non addimus orationem, quae verissime potest dici sacramentum? Habet enim et mandatum Dei et promissiones plurimas, et collocata zur Seligkeit geachtet hat. Denn sie haben nicht Gottes Befehl noch Gebot. Darum ist's wohl gut, dieselben zu unterscheiden von den obangezeigten, welche durch Gottes Wort eingesetzt und befohlen sind und eine angeheftete Zusage Gottes haben.

Durch das Sakrament des Ordens oder Priesterschaft verstehen die Widersacher nicht das Predigtamt und das Amt, die Sakramente zu reichen und auszuteilen, sondern verstehen [es] von Priestern, die zu opfern geordnet seien. Gleich als müsse im Neuen Testament ein Priestertum sein, wie das levitische Priestertum gewesen, da die Priester für das Volk opfern und den andern Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Wir aber lehren, daß das einzige Opfer Christi am Kreuze genuggetan hat für aller Welt Sünden, und daß wir nicht eines andern Opfers für die Sünden bedürfen. Denn wir haben im Neuen Testament nicht ein solch Priestertum, wie das levitische Priestertum war, wie die Epistel zu den Hebräern lehrt. Wo man aber das Sakrament des Ordens wollte nennen ein Sakrament von dem Predigtamt und Evangelio, so hätte es keine Beschreibung, die Ordination ein Sakrament zu nennen. Denn das Predigtamt hat Gott eingesetzt und geboten und hat herrliche Zusage Gottes, Röm. 1: „Das Evangelium ist eine Kraft Gottes allen denjenigen, so daran glauben“ usw. Jes. 55: „Das Wort, das aus meinem Munde gehet, soll nicht wieder leer zu mir kommen, sondern tun, was mir gefällt.“ Wenn man das Sakrament des Ordens also verstehen wollte, so möchte man auch das Auflegen der Hände ein Sakrament nennen. Denn die Kirche hat Gottes Befehl, daß sie soll Prediger und Diakone bestellen. Dieweil nun solches sehr tröstlich ist, so wir wissen, daß Gott durch Menschen und diejenigen, so von Menschen gewählt sind, predigen und wirken will, so ist's gut, daß man solche Wahl hoch rühme und ehre, sonderlich wider die teuflischen Anabaptisten, welche solche Wahl samt dem Predigtamt und leiblichen Wort verachten und lästern.

Aber der eheliche Stand ist nicht erst eingesetzt im Neuen Testament, sondern bald als das menschliche Geschlecht erst geschaffen ist. Und er ist auch durch Gott befohlen und geboten. Er hat auch göttliche Zusagungen, welche wohl nicht eigentlich zum Neuen Testament gehören, sondern mehr das leibliche Leben angehen. Darum so es jemand will ein Sakrament nennen, setzen wir [dies] nicht hoch an. Es soll aber gleichwohl absondert werden von den vorigen zwei, welche eigentlich Zeichen und Siegel sind des Neuen Testaments. Denn so der Ehestand allein darum sollte ein Sakrament heißen, daß Gott denselben eingesetzt und befohlen hat, so müßten die andern Ämter und Stände auch Sakramente genannt werden, die auch in Gottes Wort und Befehl gehen, als Obrigkeit oder Magistrat usw.

Und endlich, so man alle Dinge wollte mit so herrlichem Titel Sakramente nennen, darum daß sie Gottes Wort und Befehl haben, so sollte man billig vor allen andern das Gebet ein Sakrament nennen. Denn da ist ein starker Gottesbefehl und viel herrliche göttliche Zusage. Es hätte auch vation, because they do not have God's command. Therefore it is not useless to distinguish these rites from the former, which have God's express command and a clear promise of grace.

The adversaries understand priesthood not of the ministry of the Word, and administering the Sacraments to others, but they understand it as referring to sacrifice; as though in the New Testament there ought to be a priesthood like the Levitical, to sacrifice for the people, and merit the remission of sins for others. We teach that the sacrifice of Christ dying on the cross has been sufficient for the sins of the whole world, and that there is no need, besides, of other sacrifices, as though this were not sufficient for our sins. Men, accordingly, are justified not because of any other sacrifices, but because of this one sacrifice of Christ, if they believe that they have been redeemed by this sacrifice. They are accordingly called priests, not in order to make any sacrifices for the people as in the Law, so that by these they may merit remission of sins for the people; but they are called to teach the Gospel and administer the Sacraments to the people. Nor do we have another priesthood like the Levitical, as the Epistle to the Hebrews sufficiently teaches. But if ordination be understood as applying to the ministry of the Word, we are not unwilling to call ordination a sacrament. For the ministry of the Word has God's command and glorious promises, Rom. 1, 16: The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Likewise, Is. 55, 11: So shall My Word be that goeth forth out of My mouth; it shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please. If ordination be understood in this way, neither will we refuse to call the imposition of hands a sacrament. For the Church has the command to appoint ministers, which should be most pleasing to us, because we know that God approves this ministry, and is present in the ministry [that God will preach and work through men and those who have been chosen by men]. And it is of advantage, so far as can be done, to adorn the ministry of the Word with every kind of praise against fanatical men, who dream that the Holy Ghost is given not through the Word, but because of certain preparations of their own, if they sit unoccupied and silent in obscure places, waiting for illumination, as the Enthusiasts formerly taught, and the Anabaptists now teach.

Matrimony was not first instituted in the New Testament, but in the beginning, immediately on the creation of the human race. It has, moreover, God's command; it has also promises, not indeed properly pertaining to the New Testament, but pertaining rather to the bodily life. Wherefore, if any one should wish to call it a sacrament, he ought still to distinguish it from those preceding ones [the two former ones], which are properly signs of the New Testament, and testimonies of grace and the remission of sins. But if marriage will have the name of sacrament for the reason that it has God's command, other states or offices also, which have God's command, may be called sacraments, as, for example, the magistracy.

Lastly, if among the Sacraments all things ought to be numbered which have God's command, and to which promises have been added, why do we not add prayer, which most truly can be called a sacrament? For it has both God's command and very many promises; and if placed among the Sacraments, as though in a more eminent place, it would glaube, daß ein Gott sei. Derselbe rechte Gebrauch der Sacramente tröstet recht und erquickt die Gewissen.

wohl Ursache. Denn wenn man dem Gebet so großen Titel gäbe, würden die Leute zum Gebet gereizt. Auch könnte man die Almosen unter die Sacramente rechnen; item das Kreuz und die Trübsale der Christen, denn die haben auch Gottes Zufage. Doch wird kein verständiger Mann großen Jant darüber machen, ob sieben oder mehr
Sacramente gezählt werden, doch so fern, daß
Gottes Wort und Befehl nicht abgebrochen werde.

Das ist aber mehr dennöten zu disputieren und zu wissen, was der rechte Gebrauch der Sacra-mente sei. Da müssen wir frei verdammen den ganzen Haufen der scholasticorum und ihren Irrtum strafen, da sie lehren, daß diejenigen, so die Sacramente [schlecht] [hin] gebrauchen, wenn sie nicht obicem setzen, ex opere operato Gottes Gnade erlangen, wennschon das Herz alsdann keinen guten Gedanken hat. Das ist aber stracks ein jüdischer Irrtum, so sie halten, daß wir sollten durch ein Werk und äußerliche Ceremonie gerecht und heilig werden ohne Glauben, und wenn das
Herz schon nicht dabei ist; und diese schädliche Lehre wird doch gepredigt und gelehrt weit und breit, durchaus und überall im ganzen Papstreich und [in des] Papsts Kirchen. Paulus schreit da-wider und sagt, daß Abraham sei vor Gott gerecht geworden nicht durch die Beschneidung, sondern die Beschneidung sei ein Zeichen gewesen, den Glauben zu üben und zu stärken. Darum sagen wir auch, daß zum rechten Gebrauch der Sacra-mente der Glaube gehöre, der da glaube der gött-lichen Zufage und zugesagte Gnade empfangen

boten. Und dies ist ein gewisser, rechter Gebrauch der heiligen Sacramente, da sich ein Herz und ein Gewissen aufwagen und [ver]lassen mag. Denn die göttliche Zufage kann niemand fassen denn allein durch den Glauben. Und die Sacramente sind äußerliche Zeichen und Siegel der Verheißung.
Darum zum rechten Gebrauch derselben gehört Glaube. Als wenn ich das Sacrament des Leibes und Blutes Christi empfangen, sagt Christus klar:

invite men to pray. Alms could also be reckoned here, and likewise afflictions, which are even themselves signs, to which God has added promises. But let us omit these things. For no prudent man will strive greatly concerning the number or the term, if only those objects still be retained which have God's command and promises.

It is still more needful to understand how the Sacraments are to be used. Here we condemn the whole crowd of scholastic doctors, who teach that the Sacraments confer grace ex opere operato, without a good disposition on the part of the one using them, provided he do not place a hindrance in the way. This is absolutely a Jewish opinion, to hold that we are justified by a ceremony, without a good disposition of the heart, i. e., without faith. And yet this impious and pernicious opinion is taught with great authority throughout the entire realm of the Pope. Paul contradicts this, and denies, Rom. 4, 9, that Abraham was justified by circumcision, but asserts that circumcision was a sign presented for exercising faith. Thus we teach that in the use of the Sacraments faith ought to be added, which should believe these promises, and receive the promised things, there offered in the Sacrament. And the reason is plain and thoroughly grounded. [This is a certain and true use of the holy Sacrament, on which Christian hearts and consciences may risk to rely.] The promise is useless unless it is received by faith. But the Sacraments are the signs [and seals] of the promises. Therefore, in the use of the Sacraments faith ought to be added, so that, if any one use the Lord's Supper, he use it thus. Because this is a Sacrament of the New Testament, as Christ clearly says, he ought for this very reason to be confident that what is promised in the New Testament, namely, the free remission of sins, is offered him. And let him receive this by faith, let him comfort his alarmed conscience, and know that these testimonies are not fallacious, but as sure as though [and still surer than if] God by a new miracle would declare from heaven that it was His will to grant forgiveness. But of what advantage would these miracles and promises be to an unbeliever? And here we speak of special faith which believes the present promise, not only that which in general believes that God exists, but which believes that the remission of sins is offered. This use of the Sacrament consoles godly and alarmed minds.

Moreover, no one can express in words what abuses in the Church this fanatical opinion concerning the opus operatum, without a good disposition on the part of the one using the Sacraments, has produced. Hence the infinite profanation of the Masses; but of this we shall speak below. Neither can a single letter be produced from the old writers which in this matter favors the scholastics. Yea, Augustine says the contrary, that the faith of the Sacrament, and not the Sacrament, justifies. And the declaration of Paul is well known, Rom. 10, 10: With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.

Art. XIV. De Ordine Ecclesiastico.

24] Articulum XIV., in quo dicimus nemini nisi rite vocato concedendam esse administrationem sacramentorum et Verbi in ecclesia, ita recipiunt, si tamen utamur ordinatione canonica. Hac de re in hoc conventu saepe testati sumus, nos summa voluntate cupere conservare politiam ecclesiasticam et gradus in ecclesia, factos etiam humana auctoritate. Scimus enim bono et utili consilio a patribus ecclesiasticam disciplinam hoc modo, ut veteres canones describunt, constitutam esse. Sed 25] episcopi sacerdotes nostros aut cogunt hoc doctrinae genus, quod confessi sumus, abicere ac damnare, aut nova et inaudita crudelitate miseros et innocentes occidunt. Hae causae impediunt, quominus agnoscant hos episcopos nostros sacerdotes. Ita saevitia episcoporum in causa est, quare alicubi dissolvitur illa canonica politia, quam nos magnopere cupiebamus conservare. Ipsi viderint, quomodo rationem Deo reddaturi sint, quod dissipant 26] ecclesiam. Nostrae conscientiae hac in re nihil habent periculi, quia, quum sciamus Confessionem nostram veram, piam et catholicam esse, non debemus approbare saevitiam istorum, qui hanc doctrinam persequuntur. 27] Et ecclesiam esse scimus apud hos, qui Verbum Dei recte docent et recte administrant sacramenta, non apud illos, qui Verbum Dei non solum edictis delere conantur, sed etiam recta et vera docentes trucidant, 28] erga quos, etiamsi quid contra canones faciunt, tamen ipsi canones mitiores sunt. Porro hic iterum volumus testatum, nos libenter conservaturos esse ecclesiasticam et catholicam politiam, si modo episcopi desinant in nostras ecclesias saevire. Haec nostra voluntas et coram Deo et apud omnes gentes ad omnem posteritatem excusabit nos, ne nobis [R. 205] imputari possit, quod episcoporum auctoritas labefactatur, ubi legerint atque audierint homines, nos iniustam saevitiam episcoporum deprecantes nihil aequi impetrare potuisse.

Art. XV. (VIII.)

De Traditionibus Humanis in Ecclesia.

1] In articulo XV. recipiunt primam partem, in qua dicimus observandos esse ritus ecclesiasticos, qui sine peccato observari possunt et ad tranquillitatem et bonum ordinem in ecclesia prosunt. Alteram partem omnino damnant, in qua dicimus traditiones humanas institutas ad placandum Deum, ad promerendam gratiam et satisfaciendum pro peccatis adversari evangelio. Quamquam in ipsa Confessione de discrimine ciborum satis multa diximus de traditionibus, tamen hic quaedam breviter repetenda sunt.

3] Etiamsi arbitrabamur adversarios ex aliis causis defensuros esse traditiones humanas, tamen hoc non putavimus futurum, ut hunc articulum damnarent: non mereri nos remissionem peccatorum aut gratiam observatione traditionum humanarum. Postquam igitur hic articulus damnatus est, facilem et 4] planam causam habemus. Nunc aperte iudaizant adversarii, aperte obruunt evangelium doctrinis daemoniorum. Tunc enim Scriptura, 1 Tim. 4, 1—3, vocat traditiones doctrinas daemoniorum, quando docetur, quod sint cultus utiles ad promerendam remissionem peccatorum et gratiam. Tunc enim obscurant evangelium, beneficium Christi et

Artikel XIV. Vom Kirchenregiment.

Im vierzehnten Artikel, da wir sagen, daß man niemand gestatte zu predigen oder die Sacramente zu reichen in der Kirche denn allein denjenigen, so recht gebühlich berufen sind, das nehmen sie an, wenn wir den Beruf also verstehen von Priestern, welche nach Inhalt der Canones ordiniert oder geweiht sind. Von der Sache haben wir uns etlichmal auf diesem Reichstage hören lassen, daß wir zum höchsten geneigt sind, alte Kirchenordnungen und der Bischöfe Regiment, das man nennt canonicam politiam, helfen zu erhalten, so die Bischöfe unsere Lehre dulden und unsere Priester annehmen wollten. Nun haben die Bischöfe bisanher die Unfern verfolgt und wider ihre eigenen Rechte ermordet. So können wir auch noch nicht erlangen, daß sie von solcher Tyrannei ablassen. Verhalben ist die Schuld unsers Gegenteils, daß den Bischöfen der Gehorsam entzogen wird, und sind wir vor Gott und allen frommen Leuten entschuldigt. Denn die Bischöfe die Unfern nicht dulden wollen, sie verlassen denn diese Lehre, so wir bekannt haben, und doch wir vor Gott schuldig sind, diese Lehre zu bekennen und zu erhalten, müssen wir die Bischöfe fahren lassen und Gott mehr gehorsam sein und wissen, daß die christliche Kirche da ist, da Gottes Wort recht gelehrt wird. Die Bischöfe mögen zusehen, wie sie es verantworten wollen, daß sie durch solche Tyrannei die Kirche zerreißen und wüste machen.

Artikel XV. (VIII.)

Von den menschlichen Satzungen in der Kirche.

Im fünfzehnten Artikel lassen sie ihnen gefallen, da wir sagen, die Ceremonien und Satzungen soll man halten in der Kirche, die man mit gutem Gewissen ohne Sünde halten kann und die zu guter Ordnung und Frieden dienen. Das andere Stück verdammen sie, da wir sagen, daß die Satzungen, welche aufgerichtet sind, Gott zu versöhnen und Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen, stracks wider das Evangelium sind. Wiewohl wir in der Konfession vom Unterschied der Speisen und von Satzungen viel gesagt haben, so müssen wir es doch kurz hier wiederholen.

Wiewohl wir gedacht, daß die Widersacher andere Ursachen suchen würden, die menschlichen Satzungen zu schliessen, so hätten wir doch nicht gemeint, daß sie diesen Artikel, nämlich: durch Menschen traditionen verdient niemand Vergebung der Sünden, verdammen sollten. Wieweil aber derselbe ganze Artikel underschämt verdammt ist, so haben wir eine leichte, schlechte Sache. Denn das ist öffentlich jüdisch, das heißt öffentlich mit des Teufels Lehren das Evangelium unterdrücken. Denn die heilige Schrift und Paulus nennen solche Satzungen dann erst rechte Teufelslehre, wenn man sie dafür rühmt, daß sie sollen dienen, dadurch Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen. Denn da sind sie stracks wider Christum, wider Article XIV: Of Ecclesiastical Order.

The Fourteenth Article, in which we say that in the Church the administration of the Sacraments and Word ought to be allowed no one unless he be rightly called, they receive, but with the proviso that we employ canonical ordination. Concerning this subject we have frequently testified in this assembly that it is our greatest wish to maintain church-polity and the grades in the Church [old church-regulations and the government of bishops], even though they have been made by human authority [provided the bishops allow our doctrine and receive our priests]. For we know that church-discipline was instituted by the Fathers, in the manner laid down in the ancient canons, with a good and useful intention. But the bishops either compel our priests to reject and condemn this kind of doctrine which we have confessed, or, by a new and unheard-of cruelty, they put to death the poor innocent men. These causes hinder our priests from acknowledging such bishops. Thus the cruelty of the bishops is the reason why the canonical government, which we greatly desired to maintain, is in some places dissolved. Let them see to it how they will give an account to God for dispersing the Church. In this matter our consciences are not in danger, because since we know that our Confession is true, godly, and catholic, we ought not to approve the cruelty of those who persecute this doctrine. And we know that the Church is among those who teach the Word of God aright, and administer the Sacraments aright, and not with those who not only by their edicts endeavor to efface God's Word, but also put to death those who teach what is right and true; towards whom, even though they do something contrary to the canons, yet the very canons are milder. Furthermore, we wish here again to testify that we will gladly maintain ecclesiastical and canonical government, provided the bishops only cease to rage against our Churches. This our desire will clear us both before God and among all nations to all posterity from the imputation against us that the authority of the bishops is being undermined, when men read and hear that, although protesting against the unrighteous cruelty of the bishops, we could not obtain justice.

Article XV (VIII):

Of Human Traditions in the Church.

In the Fifteenth Article they receive the first part, in which we say that such ecclesiastical rites are to be observed as can be observed without sin, and are of profit in the Church for tranquillity and good order. They altogether condemn the second part, in which we say that human traditions instituted to appease God, to merit grace, and make satisfactions for sins are contrary to the Gospel. Although in the Confession itself, when treating of the distinction of meats, we have spoken at sufficient length concerning traditions, yet certain things should be briefly recounted here.

Although we supposed that the adversaries would defend human traditions on other grounds, yet we did not think that this would come to pass, namely, that they would condemn this article: that we do not merit the remission of sins or grace by the observance of human traditions. Since, therefore, this article has been condemned, we have an easy and plain case. The adversaries are now openly Judaizing, are openly suppressing the Gospel by the doctrines of demons. For Scripture calls traditions doctrines of demons, when it is taught that religious rites are serviceable to merit the remission of sins and grace. For they are then obscuring the Gospel, the benefit of Christ, and the righteousness of faith. [For they are just as directly contrary to Christ and to the Gospel as are

5] iustitiam fidel. Evangelium docet nos fide propter Christum gratis accipere remissionem peccatorum et reconciliari Deo. Adversarii contra alium mediatorem constituunt, scilicet has traditiones. Propter has volunt consequi remissionem peccatorum, per has volunt placare iram Dei. At Christus aperte [R. 206 dicit Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me mandatis hominum.

6] Supra copiose disputavimus homines iustificari fide, quum credunt se habere Deum placatum non propter nostra opera, sed gratis, propter Christum. Hanc certum est evangelii doctrinam esse, quia Paulus clare dicit ad Ephesios, 2, 8. 9: Gratis salvati estis per fidem, et hoc non ex vobis; Dei donum est, 7] non ex hominibus. Nunc isti dicunt, promereri homines remissionem peccatorum per has observationes humanas. Quid hoc est aliud, quam praeter Christum alium iustificatorem, alium mediatorem constituere? Paulus inquit ad Galatas, 5, 4: Evacuati estis a Christo, qui lege iustificamini; id est, si sentitis vos mereri observatione legis, ut iusti coram Deo reputemini, nihil proderit vobis Christus, quia quorsum opus est Christo istis, qui sentiunt se iustos esse sua observatione 9] legis? Deus proposuit Christum, quod propter hunc mediatorem, non propter nostras iustitias velit nobis esse propitius. At isti sentiunt Deum esse placatum, propitium propter traditiones et non propter Christum. Adimunt igitur Christo honorem mediatoris. 10] Nec interest inter nostras traditiones et Mosaicas ceremonias, quod ad hanc rem attinet. Paulus ideo damnat Mosaicas ceremonias, sicut traditiones damnat, quia existimabantur esse opera, quae mererentur iustitiam coram Deo. Ita obscurabatur officium Christi et iustitia fidei. Quare remota lege, remotis traditionibus contendit, quod non propter ista opera, sed propter Christum gratis promissa sit remissio peccatorum, modo ut fide accipiamus eam. Nam promissio non accipitur 11] nisi fide. Quum igitur fide accipiamus remissionem peccatorum, quum fide habeamus propitium Deum propter Christum, error et impietas est constituere, quod per has observationes mereamur remissionem peccatorum. 12] Si quis hic dicat non mereri nos [R. 207 remissionem peccatorum, sed iam iustificatos per has traditiones mereri gratiam: hic iterum reclamat Paulus, Gal. 2, 17, Christum peccati ministrum fore, si post iustificationem sentiendum sit, quod deinde non propter Christum iusti reputemur, sed primum mereri debeamus per alias observationes, ut iusti reputemur. Item Gal. 3, 15: Homini testamento nihil addi debet. Ergo nec Dei Testamento, qui promittit, quod propter Christum propitius nobis esse velit, addi debet, quod primum per has observationes debeamus mereri, ut accepti et iusti reputemur.

Wer Sünder erfunden werden, so wäre Christus ein Sündendiener; item: „Zu eines Menschen Testament soll niemand einen Zusatz machen.“ Darum soll man auch zu dem Testament Gottes, da er uns verheißt, er will uns gnädig sein um Christus' willen, nichts zutun oder dieses anfügen, als verdienten wir erst, daß uns Gott um solcher Werke willen gnädig sein müsse.

das Evangelium, wie Feuer und Wasser wider einander sind. Das Evangelium lehrt, daß wir durch den Glauben an Christum ohne Verdienst Vergebung der Sünden erlangen und Gott versöhnt werden. Die Widersacher aber setzen einen andern Mittler, nämlich Menschengesetze, durch die wollen sie Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, durch die wollen sie den Zorn Gottes versöhnen. Aber Christus sagt klar: „Sie dienen mir vergeblich durch Menschengesetze.“

Doben haben wir reichlich angezeigt, daß wir durch den Glauben vor Gott gerecht werden, wenn wir glauben, daß wir einen gnädigen Gott haben, nicht durch unsere Werke, sondern durch Christum. Nun ist's gar gewiß, daß solches das reine Evangelium sei. Denn Paulus sagt klar zu den Ephesern am 2. Kapitel: „Ohne Verdienst seid ihr selig worden, und das nicht aus euch, denn Gottes Gabe ist es; nicht aus den Werken.“ Nun sagen die Widersacher, die Leute verdienen Vergebung der Sünden durch solche menschliche Satzungen und Werke. Was ist das anders, denn über Christum einen andern Mittler, einen andern Versöhner stellen und setzen? Paulus sagt zu den Galatern: „Ihr seid von Christo abgefallen, so ihr durchs Gesetz wollt gerecht werden“, das ist, so ihr haltet, daß ihr durchs Gesetz vor Gott gerecht werdet, so ist euch Christus nichts nütze. Denn was bedürften diejenigen des Mittlers Christi, die durch die Werke des Gesetzes vertrauen, Gott zu versöhnen? Gott hat Christum dargestellt, daß er um desselben Mittlers willen, nicht um unserer Gerechtigkeit willen, uns will gnädig sein. Aber sie halten, daß Gott um ihrer Werke willen und um solcher Traditionen willen uns gnädig sei. So nehmen sie nun und rauben Christo seine Ehre, und ist kein Unterschied zwischen den Ceremonien des Gesetzes Moses und solchen Satzungen, soviel es diese Sache belangt. Paulus verwirft Moses Ceremonien eben darum, darum er auch Menschengesetze verwirft, nämlich daß es die Juden für solche Werke hielten, dadurch man Vergebung der Sünden verdiente. Denn dadurch ward Christus untergebrückt. Darum verwirft er die Werke des Gesetzes und Menschengesetze zugleich und streitet dieses [bringt darauf], daß nicht um unserer Werke, sondern um Christus' willen, ohne Verdienst, verheißen sei Vergebung der Sünden, doch also, daß wir sie durch den Glauben fassen. Denn die Verheißung kann man nicht anders denn durch den Glauben fassen. So wir nun durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, so wir durch den Glauben einen gnädigen Gott haben um Christus' willen, so ist es ein großer Irrtum und Gotteslästerung, daß wir durch solche Satzungen sollten Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Wenn sie hier nun sagen wollten, daß wir nicht durch solche Werke Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, sondern wenn wir durch den Glauben jeund Vergebung haben, so sollen wir danach durch solche Werke verdienen, daß uns Gott gnädig sei: da streitet aber Paulus wider zu den Galatern am 2. Kapitel, da er sagt: „Sollten wir aber, die da suchen durch Christum gerecht zu werden, auch noch selbsten Sündendiener?“ item: „Zu eines Menschen Testament soll niemand einen Zusatz machen.“ Darum soll man auch zu dem Testament Gottes, da er uns verheißt, er will uns gnädig sein um Christus' willen, nichts zutun oder dieses anfügen, als verdienten wir erst, daß uns Gott um solcher Werke willen gnädig sein müsse.

fire and water to one another.] The Gospel teaches that by faith we receive freely, for Christ's sake, the remission of sins and are reconciled to God. The adversaries, on the other hand, appoint another mediator, namely, these traditions. On account of these they wish to acquire remission of sins; on account of these they wish to appease God's wrath. But Christ clearly says, Matt. 15, 9: In vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

We have above discussed at length that men are justified by faith when they believe that they have a reconciled God, not because of our works, but gratuitously, for Christ's sake. It is certain that this is the doctrine of the Gospel, because Paul clearly teaches, Eph. 2, 8, 9: By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works. Now these men say that men merit the remission of sins by these human observances. What else is this than to appoint another justifier, a mediator other than Christ? Paul says to the Galatians, 5, 4: Christ has become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the Law; i. e., if you hold that by the observance of the Law you merit to be accounted righteous before God, Christ will profit you nothing; for what need of Christ have those who hold that they are righteous by their own observance of the Law? God has set forth Christ with the promise that on account of this Mediator, and not on account of our righteousness, He wishes to be propitious to us. But these men hold that God is reconciled and propitious because of the traditions, and not because of Christ. Therefore they take away from Christ the honor of Mediator. Neither, so far as this matter is concerned, is there any difference between our traditions and the ceremonies of Moses. Paul condemns the ceremonies of Moses, just as he condemns traditions, for the reason that they were regarded as works which merit righteousness before God. Thus the office of Christ and the righteousness of faith were obscured. Therefore, the Law being removed, and traditions being removed, he contends that the remission of sins has been promised not because of our works, but freely, because of Christ, if only by faith we receive it. For the promise is not received except by faith. Since, therefore, by faith we receive the remission of sins, since by faith we have a propitious God for Christ's sake, it is an error and impiety to declare that because of these observances we merit the remission of sins. If any one should say here that we do not merit the remission of sins, but that those who have already been justified by these traditions merit grace, Paul again replies, Gal. 2, 17, that Christ would be the minister of sin if after justification we must hold that henceforth we are not accounted righteous for Christ's sake, but we ought first, by other observances, to merit that we be accounted righteous. Likewise Gal. 3, 15: Though it be but a man's covenant, no man addeth thereto. Therefore, neither to God's covenant, who promises that for Christ's sake He will be propitious to us, ought we to add that we must first through these observances attain such merit as to be regarded as accepted and righteous.

13] Quamquam quid opus est longa disputatione? Nulla traditio a sanctis patribus hoc consilio instituta est, ut mereatur remissionem peccatorum aut iustitiam, sed sunt institutae propter bonum ordinem in ecclesia 14] et propter tranquillitatem. Et ut velit aliquis instituere certa opera ad promerendam remissionem peccatorum aut iustitiam, quomodo sciet illa opera Deo placere, quum non habeat testimonium Verbi Dei? Quomodo de voluntate Dei certos reddet homines sine mandato et Verbo Dei? Nonne ubique in prophetis prohibet instituere peculiares cultus sine suo mandato? Ezech. 20, 18. 19 scriptum est: In praeceptis patrum vestrorum nolite incedere, nec iudicia eorum custodiat, nec in idolis eorum polluamini. Ego Dominus Deus vester. In praeceptis meis ambulate, et iudicia mea custodite et facite ea.

15] Si licet hominibus instituere cultus, et per hos cultus merentur gratiam, iam omnium gentium cultus erunt approbandi, cultus instituti a Ieroboam, 1 Reg. 12, 26 sqq., et aliis extra legem erunt approbandi. Quid enim interest, si nobis licuit instituere cultus utiles ad promerendam gratiam aut iustitiam, cur non licuit idem gentibus et Israelitis? Ideo 16] gentium et Israelitarum cultus improbi sunt, quod sentiebant sese per illos mereri remissionem peccatorum et iustitiam, et [R. 208 17] iustitiam fidei non norant. Postremo, unde reddimur certi, quod cultus ab hominibus instituti sine mandato Dei iustificent, siquidem de voluntate Dei nihil affirmari potest sine Verbo Dei? Quid si hos cultus non approbat Deus? Quomodo igitur affirmant adversarii, quod iustificent? Sine Verbo ac testimonio Dei hoc non potest affirmari. Et Paulus ait Rom. 14, 23, omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum esse. Quum autem hi cultus nullum habeant testimonium Verbi Dei, dubitare conscientiam necesse est, utrum placeant Deo.

18] Et quid in re manifesta verbis opus est? Si hos humanos cultus defendunt adversarii nostri, tamquam promerentes iustificationem, gratiam, remissionem peccatorum, simpliciter constituunt regnum antichristi. Nam regnum antichristi est novus cultus Dei, excogitatus humana auctoritate, reiiciens Christum, sicut regnum Mahometi habet cultus, habet opera, per quae vult iustificari coram Deo, nec sentit homines coram Deo gratis iustificari fide propter Christum. Ita et papatus erit pars regni antichristi, si sic defendit humanos cultus, quod iustificent. Detrahitur enim honos Christo, quum docent, quod non propter Christum gratis iustificemur per fidem, sed per tales cultus, maximeque quum docent tales cultus non solum utiles esse ad iustificationem, sed necessarios etiam, sicut supra in articulo octavo [Art. VII.] sentiunt, ubi damnant nos, quod diximus, quod non sit necessarium ad veram unitatem ecclesiae ubique similes esse ritus ab hominibus institutos. 19] Daniel capite undecimo, v. 38, significat novos cultus humanos ipsam formam et πολιτείας regni antichristi fore. Sic enim inquit: Deum Maosim in loco suo colet, et deum, quem

Unde wenngleich noch jemand wollte solche Werke aufrichten oder erwählen, damit Gott zu versöhnen, Vergebung der Sünden zu verdienen, wie wollte der gewiß werden, daß die Werke Gott gefallen, so er keinen Gottesbefehl noch -wort davon hat? Wie wollte er die Gewissen und Herzen versichern, wie sie mit Gott stehen; item, daß die Werke Gott gefallen, wenn kein Gotteswort noch -befehl da ist? Es verbieten die Propheten allenthalben, eigenerwählte, sonderliche Gottesdienste anzurichten ohne Gottes Wort und Befehl, Hesek. am 20.: „Wandelst nicht in Geboten eurer Väter und haltet ihre Sitten nicht und werdet nicht unrein von ihren Gözen. Ich bin der Herr, euer Gott. In meinen Geboten wandelt und haltet meine Rechte und Sitten und tut dieselbigen.“ So die Menschen Macht haben, Gottesdienste anzurichten, daß wir dadurch Sünden bezahlen und fromm werden vor Gott, so müssen aller Heiden Gottesdienste, alle Abgötterei aller gottlosen Könige in Israel, Jerobeams und anderer, auch gut sein; denn es ist kein Unterschied. Steht bei Menschen die Macht, Gottesdienste aufzurichten, dadurch man möge Seligkeit verdienen, warum sollten der Heiden und Israeliten selberwählte Gottesdienste unrecht sein? Denn darum sind der Heiden und Israeliten Dienste verworfen, daß sie wähnen wollten, solche Dienste gefallen Gott, und wußten nichts vom höchsten Gottesdienst, der da heißt Glaube. Item, woher sind wir gewiß, daß solche Gottesdienste und Werke ohne Gottes Wort vor Gott gerecht machen, so kein Mensch Gottes Willen anders erfahren oder wissen kann denn allein durch sein Wort? Wie, wenn solche Gottesdienste Gott der Herr nicht allein verachtet, sondern auch für einen Greuel hält? Wie dürfen denn die Widersacher sagen, daß sie vor Gott gerecht machen? Ohne Gottes Wort kann je niemand das sagen. Paulus sagt zu den Römern: „Alles, was nicht aus dem Glauben geschieht, das ist Sünde.“ So nun dieselben Gottesdienste keinen göttlichen Befehl haben, so müssen die Herzen im Zweifel stehen, ob sie Gott gefallen.

Und was bedarf diese öffentliche Sache vieler Worte? Wenn die Widersacher diese Gottesdienste also verteidigen, als seien es Werke, dadurch man Vergebung der Sünden und Seligkeit verdient, so richten sie öffentliche antichristliche Lehre und Reich an. Denn das Reich Antichristi ist eigentlich ein solch neuer Gottesdienst, durch Menschen erdichtet, dadurch Christus verworfen wird, wie Mahomet's Reich selberwählte Gottesdienste hat, eigene Werke, dadurch sie vor Gott vermerinen heilig und fromm zu werden, und halten nicht, daß man allein durch den Glauben an Christum gerecht werde. Also wird das Papsttum auch ein Stück vom Reich Antichristi, so es lehrt, durch Menschengebote Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen und Gott [zu] versöhnen. Denn da wird Christo seine Ehre genommen, wenn sie lehren, daß wir nicht durch Christum, ohne Verdienst gerecht werden, durch den Glauben, sondern durch solche Gottesdienste, sonderlich wenn sie lehren, daß solch selberwählter Gottesdienst nicht allein nütze sei, sondern auch nötig. Wie sie denn oben im achten Artikel halten, da sie das verdammen, daß wir gesagt, zu rechter Einigkeit der Kirche sei nicht not, daß allenthalben gleichförmige Menschengesungen seien. Daniel, im 11. Kapitel, malt das

However, what need is there of a long discussion? No tradition was instituted by the holy Fathers with the design that it should merit the remission of sins, or righteousness, but they have been instituted for the sake of good order in the Church and for the sake of tranquillity. And when any one wishes to institute certain works to merit the remission of sins, or righteousness, how will he know that these works please God since he has not the testimony of God's Word? How, without God's command and Word, will he render men certain of God's will? Does He not everywhere in the prophets prohibit men from instituting, without His commandment, peculiar rites of worship? In Ezek. 20, 18, 19 it is written: Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord, your God. Walk in My statutes, and keep My judgments, and do them. If men are allowed to institute religious rites, and through these rites merit grace, the religious rites of all the heathen will have to be approved, and the rites instituted by Jeroboam, 1 Kings 12, 26 f., and by others, outside of the Law, will have to be approved. For what difference does it make? If we have been allowed to institute religious rites that are profitable for meriting grace, or righteousness, why was the same not allowed the heathen and the Israelites? But the religious rites of the heathen and the Israelites were rejected for the very reason that they held that by these they merited remission of sins and righteousness, and yet did not know [the highest service of God] the righteousness of faith. Lastly, whence are we rendered certain that rites instituted by men without God's command justify, inasmuch as nothing can be affirmed of God's will without God's Word? What if God does not approve these services? How, therefore, do the adversaries affirm that they justify? Without God's Word and testimony this cannot be affirmed. And Paul says, Rom. 14, 23: Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. But as these services have no testimony of God's Word, conscience must doubt as to whether they please God.

And what need is there of words on a subject so manifest? If the adversaries defend these human services as meriting justification, grace, and the remission of sins, they simply establish the kingdom of Antichrist. For the kingdom of Antichrist is a new service of God, devised by human authority rejecting Christ, just as the kingdom of Mahomet has services and works through which it wishes to be justified before God; nor does it hold that men are gratuitously justified before God by faith, for Christ's sake. Thus the Papacy also will be a part of the kingdom of Antichrist if it thus defends human services as justifying. For the honor is taken away from Christ when they teach that we are not justified gratuitously by faith, for Christ's sake, but by such services; especially when they teach that such services are not only useful for justification, but are also necessary, as they hold above in Art. VII, where they condemn us for saying that unto true unity of the Church it is not necessary that rites instituted by men should everywhere be alike. Daniel, 11, 38, indicates that new human services will be the very form and constitution of the kingdom of Antichrist. For he says thus: But in his estate shall he honor the god of forces; and a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honor with gold and silver and precious stones. Here he describes new services, because he says that non noverunt patres eius, colet auro et argento et lapidibus pretiosis. Hic describit novos cultus, quia inquit talem deum coli, qualem 20] patres ignoraverint. Nam sancti [R. 209 patres, etsi habuerunt et ipsi ritus et traditiones, tamen non sentiebant has res utiles aut necessarias esse ad iustificationem, non obscurabant gloriam et officium Christi, sed docebant nos iustificari fide propter Christum, non propter illos humanos cultus. Ceterum ritus humanos observabant propter utilitatem corporalem, ut sciret populus, quo tempore conveniendum esset, ut ordine et graviter in templis exempli causa fierent omnia, denique ut vulgus etiam haberet quandam paedagogiam. Nam discrimina temporum et varietas rituum valet ad admonendum vulgus. Has 21] causas habebant patres rituum servandorum, et propter has causas nos quoque recte servari traditiones posse iudicamus. Et valde miramur adversarios alium finem traditionum defendere, quod videlicet mereantur remissionem peccatorum, gratiam aut iustificationem. Quid hoc aliud est, quam colere Deum auro et argento et rebus pretiosis, id est, sentire, quod Deus fiat placatus varietate vestitus, ornamentorum et similibus ritibus, quales sunt infiniti in traditionibus humanis?

wir können uns nicht genugsam wundern, daß die das Alte und Neue Testament lehren dürfen, daß wir durch solche Gottesdienste sollen ewiges Heil und Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Denn was ist das anders, denn, wie Daniel sagt, „Gott ehren mit Gold, Silber und Edelsteinen“, das ist, halten, daß Gott uns gnädig werde durch mancherlei Kirchenschemud, durch Fahnen, Kerzen, wie denn unzählig sind bei solchen Menschenfahrungen.

22] Paulus ad Colossenses, 2, 23, scribit traditiones habere speciem sapientiae. Et habent profecto. Nam εὐραζία illa valde decet in ecclesia, eamque ob causam necessaria est. Sed humana ratio, quia non intelligit iustitiam fidei, naturaliter affingit, quod talia opera iustificent homines, quod 23] reconcilient Deum etc. Sic sentiebat vulgus inter Israelitas, et hac opinione augebant tales ceremonias, sicut apud nos in monasteriis 24] riis creverunt. Sic iudicat humana ratio etiam de exercitiis corporis, de ieiuniis, quorum finis quum sit coercere carnem, ratio affingit finem, quod sint cultus, qui iustificent. Sicut Thomas scribit, ieiunium valere ad deletionem et prohibitionem culpae. Haec sunt verba Thomae. Ita sapientiae ac iustitiae species in talibus operibus decipit homines. Et accedunt exempla sanctorum, [R. 210 quos dum student imitari homines, imitantur plerumque externa exercitia, non imitantur fidem eorum.

Also dieselben Gottesdienste, welche sehr gleichen, haben einen großen Schein und ein groß Ansehen der Heiligkeit vor den Leuten. Und dazu helfen nun die Exempel der Heiligen, da sie sprechen, St. Franziskus hat eine Kappe getragen und dergleichen. Hier sehen sie allein die äußerliche Übung an, nicht das Herz und Glauben.

25] Postquam fecerit homines haec species sapientiae ac iustitiae, deinde sequuntur infinita incommoda, obscuratur evangelium de iustitia fidei in Christum, et succedit vana fiducia talium operum. Deinde obscurantur praecepta Dei, haec opera arrogant sibi titulum perfectae et spiritualis vitae et longe praeferuntur operibus praeceptorum Dei, ut

Reich Antichristi also ab, daß er anzeigt, daß solche neue Gottesdienste, von Menschen erfunden, werden die Politik und das rechte Wesen des antichristlichen Reichs sein. Denn also sagt er: „Den Gott Maosim wird er ehren, und dem Gott, den seine Väter nicht erkannt haben, wird er mit Gold, Silber und Edelsteinen dienen.“ Da beschreibt er solche neue Gottesdienste. Denn er sagt von einem solchen Gott, davon die Väter nichts gewußt haben. Denn die heiligen Väter, wiewohl sie auch Ceremonien und Saktionen gehabt, so haben sie doch nicht dafürgehalten, daß solche Ceremonien nützlich und nötig wären zur Seligkeit, so haben sie doch damit Christum nicht unterdrückt, sondern haben gelehrt, daß uns Gott um Christus' willen gnädig sei, nicht um solcher Gottesdienste willen. Aber dieselben Saktionen haben sie gehalten von wegen leiblicher Übung, als die Feste, daß das Volk wüßte, wann es sollte zusammenkommen, daß in den Kirchen alles ordentlich und züchtiglich um guter Exempel willen zugehe, daß auch das gemeine, grobe Volk in einer feinen Kinderzucht gehalten würde. Denn solche Unterschiede der Zeit und solche mancherlei Gottesdienste dienen, das Volk in Zucht zu behalten und zu erinnern der Historien. Diese Ursachen haben die Väter gehabt, menschliche Ordnung zu erhalten. Und auf die Weise sechten wir's auch nicht an, daß man gute Gewohnheit halte. Und Widerfacher wider alle Schrift der Apostel, wider das Alte und Neue Testament sollen ewiges Heil und Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Denn was ist das anders, denn, wie Daniel sagt, „Gott ehren mit Gold, Silber und Edelsteinen“, das ist, halten, daß Gott uns gnädig werde durch mancherlei Kirchenschemud, durch Fahnen, Kerzen, wie denn unzählig sind bei solchen Menschenfahrungen.

Paulus zu den Kolossern schreibt, daß solche Saktionen haben einen Schein der Weisheit. Und [es] hat auch einen großen Schein, als sei es fast heilig; denn Unordnung steht übel, und solche ordentliche Kinderzucht ist nützlich in der Kirche usw. Dieweil aber menschliche Vernunft nicht versteht, was Glaube ist, so fallen diejenigen, so nach der Vernunft richten, von Stund' an darauf und machen ein solch Werk daraus, daß uns gen Himmel helfen solle und Gott versöhnen. Also haben [sind] die Irrthümer und schädliche Abgötterei eingerissen bei den Israeliten. Darum machten sie auch einen Gottesdienst über den andern, wie bei unserer Zeit ein Altar über den andern, eine Kirche über die andere gekistet ist. Also richtet auch die menschliche Vernunft von andern leiblichen Übungen, als von Fasten usw. Denn Fasten dient dazu, den alten Adam zu zähmen; da fällt bald die Vernunft drauf und macht ein Werk daraus, das Gott verführe; wie Thomas schreibt, „Fasten sei ein Werk, das da tauge, Schuld gegen Gott auszulösen und ferner zu verhüten“. Das sind die klaren Worte Thomä.

Und wenn nun die Leute also durch so großen und prächtigen Schein der Heiligkeit betrogen werden, so folgt dann unzählige Fahr [Gefahr] und Unrat daraus, nämlich daß Christi Erkenntnis und das Evangelium vergessen wird, und daß man alles Vertrauen auf solche Werke setzt. Darüber so werden durch solche heuchlerische Werke die rechten guten Werke, die Gott in [den] zehn Ge-such a god shall be worshiped as the fathers were ignorant of. For although the holy Fathers themselves had both rites and traditions, yet they did not hold that these matters are useful or necessary for justification; they did not obscure the glory and office of Christ, but taught that we are justified by faith for Christ's sake, and not for the sake of these human services. But they observed human rites for the sake of bodily advantage, that the people might know at what time they should assemble; that, for the sake of example, all things in the churches might be done in order and becomingly; lastly, that the common people might receive a sort of training. For the distinctions of times and the variety of rites are of service in admonishing the common people. The Fathers had these reasons for maintaining the rites, and for these reasons we also judge it to be right that traditions [good customs] be maintained. And we are greatly surprised that the adversaries [contrary to the entire Scriptures of the Apostles, contrary to the Old and New Testaments] contend for another design of traditions, namely, that they may merit the remission of sins, grace, or justification. What else is this than to honor God with gold and silver and precious stones [as Daniel says], i. e., to hold that God becomes reconciled by a variety in clothing, ornaments, and by similar rites [many kinds of church decorations, banners, tapers], as are infinite in human traditions?

Paul writes to the Colossians, 2, 23, that traditions have a show of wisdom. And they indeed have. For this good order is very becoming in the Church, and for this reason is necessary. But human reason, because it does not understand the righteousness of faith, naturally imagines that such works justify men because they reconcile God, etc. Thus the common people among the Israelites thought, and by this opinion increased such ceremonies, just as among us they have grown in the monasteries [as in our time one altar after another and one church after another is founded]. Thus human reason judges also of bodily exercises, of fasts; although the end of these is to restrain the flesh, reason falsely adds that they are services which justify. As Thomas writes: Fasting avails for the extinguishing and the prevention of guilt. These are the words of Thomas. Thus the semblance of wisdom and righteousness in such works deceives men. And the examples of the saints are added [when they say: St. Francis wore a cap, etc.]; and when men desire to imitate these, they imitate, for the most part, the outward exercises; their faith they do not imitate.

After this semblance of wisdom and righteousness has deceived men, then infinite evils follow; the Gospel concerning the righteousness of faith in Christ is obscured, and vain confidence in such works succeeds. Then the commandments of God are obscured; these works arrogate to themselves the title of a perfect and spiritual life, and are far preoperibus suae cuiusque vocationis, administrationi reipublicae, administrationi oeconomiae, vitae coniugali, educationi liberorum. 26] Haec prae illis ceremoniis iudicantur esse profana, ita ut cum quadam dubitatione conscientiae a multis exercentur. Constat enim multos deserta administratione reipublicae, deserto coniugio illas observationes amplexos esse tamquam meliores et sanctiores.

Dieselben Werke hält man nicht für göttlich, sondern ihnen [sich] ein schwer Gewissen gemacht. Denn man weiß je, daß etliche ihren Fürstenstand verlassen, etliche den Ehestand, und sind in Klöster gegangen, heilig und geistlich zu werden.

27] Neque hoc satis est. Ubi occupavit animos persuasio, quod tales observationes ad iustificationem necessariae sint, misere vexantur conscientiae, quia non possunt omnes observationes exacte praestare. Nam quotusquisque numerare omnes potuit? Exstant immensi libri, imo bibliothecae totae, nullam syllabam de Christo, de fide in Christum, de bonis operibus suae cuiusque vocationis continentes, sed tantum colligentes traditiones et harum interpretationes, quibus interdum 28] exacerbantur, interdum relaxantur. Quomodo torquetur vir optimus Gerson, dum quaerit gradus et latitudines praeceptorum. Nec tamen potest constituere ἐπισκευα in gradu certo; interim graviter deplorat periculum piarum conscientiarum, quae parit haec acerba interpretatio traditionum.

er gradus und latitudines sucht praeceptorum, wiefern dieselben Gebote binden, und kann doch nicht finden einen gewissen Grad, da er darf dem Herzen Sicherheit und Frieden gewiß zusagen. Darum klagt er auch ganz heftig, wie in großer Gefahr die Gewissen und Konscienzen dadurch stehen, daß man solche Satzungen also bei einer Tobjünde fordert und will gehalten haben.

29] Nos igitur contra illam speciem sapientiae et iustitiae in humanis ritibus, quae fallit homines, muniamus nos Verbo Dei, et primum sciamus eas neque remissionem peccatorum, neque iustificationem mereri coram Deo, neque ad iustificationem necessarias esse. 30] Testimonia quaedam supra citavimus. Et plenus est Paulus. Ad Colossenses 2, 16. 17 clare dicit: Nemo vos iudicet in cibo, [R. 211] potu aut stato festo aut novilunio aut sabbatis, quae sunt umbrae futurorum; corpus autem Christi. Atque hic simul et legem Moysis et traditiones humanas complectitur, ne adversarii eludant haec testimonia, ut solent, quod Paulus tantum de lege Moysis loquatur. Ille vero hic clare testatur se loqui de traditionibus humanis. Quamquam, quid dicant, adversarii non videt; si evangelium negat ceremonias Moysis, quae erant divinitus institutae, iustificare, quanto minus iustificant traditiones humanae?

31] Nec habent episcopi potestatem instituendi cultus tamquam iustificantes aut necessarios ad iustificationem. Imo apostoli Act. 15, 10 dicunt: Quid tentatis Deum, imponentes iugum? etc., ubi velut magnum peccatum accusat Petrus hoc consilium onerandae ecclesiae. Et ad Galatas 5, 1 vetat Paulus 32] iterum servituti subiaci. Volunt igitur apostoli in ecclesia manere hanc libertatem, ne iudicentur ulli cultus legis aut traditionum necessarii esse, sicut in lege fuerunt ne-

Und ist über den [außer dem] Irrtum noch der Jammer dabei, daß, wenn die Leute in dem Wahn sind, daß solche Satzungen nötig seien zur Seligkeit, die Gewissen ohne Unterlaß in Unruhe und Qual sind, daß sie ihren Orden, ihre Möncherei, ihre aufgelegten Werke nicht so gestrenge gehalten haben. Denn wer könnte die Satzungen alle erzählen? Es sind unzählig viel Bücher, in welchen nicht ein Tüttel, nicht eine Silbe von Christo, vom Glauben geschrieben oder von den rechten guten Werken, die Gott gebietet, welche jeder nach seinem Beruf zu tun schuldig ist; sondern allein von solchen Satzungen schreiben sie, als von den vierzig Tagen zu fasten, von Messehören, von vier Gezeiten beten usw.: da ist des Deutens und Zuspensierens kein Ende. Wie jämmerlich martert sich, wie ringt und windet sich über den Dingen der gute, fromme Mann Gerson, da er gern den Gewissen mit dem rechten Trost helfen wollte, da

Wir aber sollen uns wider solch heuchlerische, gleichende Satzungen, dadurch viele verführt und jämmerlich die Gewissen ohne Ursache geplagt werden, rüsten und stärken mit Gottes Wort und sollen erstlich das [für] gewiß halten, daß Vergebung der Sünden nicht durch solche Satzungen verdient wird. Wir haben den Apostel droben angezogen zu den Kolossern: „Laßt euch niemand Gewissen machen über Speise, Trank, Neumonden, Sabbater.“ Und der Apostel will das ganze Gesez Moses und solche Traditionen zugleich begriffen haben, damit die Widersacher hier nicht entschließen [entschlüpfen], wie sie pflegen, als rede Paulus allein vom Gesez Moses. Er zeigt aber klar genug an, daß er von menschlichen Satzungen auch rede, wiewohl die Widersacher selbst nicht wissen, was sie sagen. Denn so das Evangelium und Paulus klar melden, daß auch die Ceremonien und Werke des Gesezes Moses vor Gott nicht helfen, so werden's viel weniger menschliche Satzungen tun.

Verhalben haben die Bischöfe nicht Macht noch Gewalt, eigenerwählte Gottesdienste aufzurichten, welche sollen die Leute vor Gott heilig und fromm machen. Denn es sagen auch die Apostel Act. 15: „Was versucht ihr Gott und legt eine Bürde auf die Jünger?“ usw. Da schilt es Petrus als eine große Sünde, damit man Gott verlässere und versuche. Darum ist es der Apostel Meinung, daß diese Freiheit in der Kirche bleiben soll, daß keine Ceremonien, weder das Gesez Moses noch andere Satzungen, sollen als nötige Gottesdienste geschätzt ferred to the works of God's commandments [the true, holy, good works], as, the works of one's own calling, the administration of the state, the management of a family, married life, the bringing up of children. Compared with those ceremonies, the latter are judged to be profane, so that they are exercised by many with some doubt of conscience. For it is known that many have abandoned the administration of the state and married life, in order to embrace these observances as better and holier [have gone into cloisters in order to become holy and spiritual].

Nor is this enough. When the persuasion has taken possession of minds that such observances are necessary to justification, consciences are in miserable anxiety because they cannot exactly fulfil all observances. For how many are there who could enumerate all these observances? There are immense books, yea, whole libraries, containing not a syllable concerning Christ, concerning faith in Christ, concerning the good works of one's own calling, but which only collect the traditions and interpretations by which they are sometimes rendered quite rigorous and sometimes relaxed. [They write of such precepts as of fasting for forty days, the four canonical hours for prayer, etc.] How that most excellent man, Gerson, is tortured while he searches for the grades and extent of the precepts! Nevertheless, he is not able to fix ἐπιείκεια [mitigation] in a definite grade [and yet cannot find any sure grade where he could confidently promise the heart assurance and peace]. Meanwhile, he deeply deplores the dangers to godly consciences which this rigid interpretation of the traditions produces.

Against this semblance of wisdom and righteousness in human rites, which deceives men, let us therefore fortify ourselves by the Word of God, and let us know, first of all, that these neither merit before God the remission of sins or justification, nor are necessary for justification. We have above cited some testimonies. And Paul is full of them. To the Colossians, 2, 16, 17, he clearly says: Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy-day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath-days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ. Here now he embraces at the same time both the Law of Moses and human traditions, in order that the adversaries may not elude these testimonies, according to their custom, upon the ground that Paul is speaking only of the Law of Moses. But he clearly testifies here that he is speaking of human traditions. However, the adversaries do not see what they are saying; if the Gospel says that the ceremonies of Moses, which were divinely instituted, do not justify, how much less do human traditions justify!

Neither have the bishops the power to institute services, as though they justified, or were necessary for justification. Yea, the apostles, Acts 15, 10, say: Why tempt ye God to put a yoke, etc., where Peter declares this purpose to burden the Church a great sin.

And Paul forbids the Galatians, 5, 1, to be entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Therefore, it is the will of the apostles that this liberty remain in the Church, that no services of the Law or of traditions be judged as necessary (just as in the Law ceremonies cessariae ceremoniae ad tempus, ne obscuretur iustitia fidei, si iudicent homines cultus illos mereri iustificationem, aut ad iustificationem 33) necessariae esse. Multi varias ἐπιεικείας quaerunt in traditionibus, ut conscientias medeantur, neque tamen certos gradus reperiunt, per quos explicent conscientias ex his vinculis. 34) Verum sicut Alexander solvit Gordium nodum, quem, quum explicare non posset, gladio semel diasecut, ita apostoli semel liberant conscientias traditionibus, praesertim si tradantur ad promerendam iustificationem. Huic doctrinae cogunt nos apostoli adversari docendo et exemplis. Cogunt nos docere, quod traditiones non iustificent, quod non sint necessariae ad iustificationem, quod nemo debeat 35) condere aut recipere traditiones hac opinione, quod mereantur iustificationem. [R. 212 Tunc etiamsi quis observat, observet sine superstitione tamquam politicos mores, sicut sine superstitione aliter vestiuntur milites, 36) aliter scholastici. Apostoli violant traditiones et excusantur a Christo. Erat enim exemplum ostendendum Pharisaeis, quod illi 37) cultus essent inutiles. Et si quas traditiones parum commodas omittunt nostri, satis nunc excusati sunt, quum requiruntur, tamquam promereantur iustificationem. Talis enim opinio in traditionibus est impia.]

aber halten will, der halte sie, wie ich einen andern alles Vertrauen, dadurch gerecht zu werden vor Gott. Als, daß ich bei den Deutschen deutsche Kleidung trage, bei den Walen welsche, halte ich als einen Landbrauch, nicht dadurch selig zu werden. Die Apostel, wie das Evangelium anzeigt, brechen frisch solche Sagen und werden von Christo derhalben gelobt. Denn man muß es nicht allein mit Lehren, Predigen, sondern auch mit der That den Pharisäern anzeigen und beweisen, daß solche Gottesdienste nichts nütze sind zur Seligkeit. Und darum, ob die Unsern gleich etliche Traditionen und Ceremonien nachlassen, so sind sie doch genugsam entschuldigt. Denn die Bischöfe fordern solches als nötig zur Seligkeit; das ist ein Irrtum, der nicht zu leiden ist.

38) Ceterum traditiones veteres factas in ecclesia utilitatis et tranquillitatis causa libenter servamus easque interpretamur πρὸς τὸ εὐφημότερον, exclusa opinione, quae sentit, 39) quod iustificent. Ac falso nos accusant inimici nostri, quod bonas ordinationes, quod disciplinam ecclesiae aboleamus. Vere enim praedicare possumus publicam formam ecclesiarum apud nos honestiorem esse quam apud adversarios. Et si quis recte expendere velit, verius servamus canones quam adversarii. 40) Apud adversarios missas faciunt sacrificuli inviti et mercede conducti et plerumque tantum mercedis causa. Canunt Psalmos, non ut discant aut orent, sed cultus causa, quasi illud opus sit cultus, aut certe mercedis causa. Apud nos utuntur coena Domini multi singulis Dominicis, sed prius instituti, explorati et absoluti. Pueri canunt Psalmos, ut discant; canit et populus, ut vel discat vel oret. Apud 41) adversarios nulla prorsus est κατήχησις puerorum, de qua quidem praecipiant canones. Apud nos coguntur pastores et ministri ecclesiarum publice instituere et audire pueritiam; et haec ceremonia optimos fructus 42) parit. Apud adversarios in multis regionibus toto anno nullae habentur conciones, praeterquam in Quadragesima. Atqui praecipuus cultus Dei est docere evangelium. Et quum concionantur adversarii, dicunt de traditionibus humanis, de cultu sanctorum et werden; wie etliche Ceremonien im Gesetz Moßs als nötig mußten im Alten Testament eine Zeitlang gehalten werden. Darum müssen wir auch wehren, daß die Predigt von der Gnade und von Christo, von Vergebung der Sünden aus lauter Gnade nicht unterdrückt werde, und der schädliche Irrtum [nicht] einreize, als sind [sein] die Sagenen nötig, fromm vor Gott zu sein. Es haben Gerson und viel andere treue, fromme Leute, welche über die großen Fäählichkeiten der Gewissen Mitleid getragen, ἐπιεικείας und Vinderung gesucht, wie man doch darin den Gewissen helfen möchte [könnte], daß sie durch die Traditionen nicht in so mannigfaltige Wege gemartert würden, und haben nichts Gewisses finden können, den Gewissen aus den Banden zu helfen. Die Heilige Schrift und die Apostel aber sind kurz hindurchgegangen und [haben] schlecht mit einem Striche alles quitiert und klar dürr herausgesagt, daß wir in Christo frei, ledig seien von allen Traditionen, sonderlich wenn man dadurch Seligkeit und Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen sucht. Darum lehren auch die Apostel, daß man der schädlichen pharisäischen Lehre soll widerstreben mit Lehren und mit dem Gegengegempel. Darum lehren wir, daß solche Sagenen nicht gerecht machen vor Gott, daß sie auch nicht not seien zur Seligkeit, daß auch niemand solche Sagenen machen oder annehmen soll der Meinung, daß er wolle vor Gott dadurch gerecht werden. Wer sie Stadtgebrauch möchte halten, da ich wohne, ohne Aß, daß ich bei den Deutschen deutsche Kleidung trage, bei den Walen welsche, halte ich als einen Landbrauch, nicht dadurch selig zu werden. Die Apostel, wie das Evangelium anzeigt, brechen frisch solche Sagenen und werden von Christo derhalben gelobt. Denn man muß es nicht allein mit Lehren, Predigen, sondern auch mit der That den Pharisäern anzeigen und beweisen, daß solche Gottesdienste nichts nütze sind zur Seligkeit. Und darum, ob die Unsern gleich etliche Traditionen und Ceremonien nachlassen, so sind sie doch genugsam entschuldigt. Denn die Bischöfe fordern solches als nötig zur Seligkeit; das ist ein Irrtum, der nicht zu leiden ist.

Weiter, die ältesten Sagenen aber in der Kirche, als die drei hohen Feste usw., die Sonntagsfeier und dergleichen, welche um guter Ordnung, Einigkeit und Friedens willen erkunden usw., die halten wir gerne. Auch so predigen die Unsern aufs glimpflichste gegen [vor] dem Volk davon; allein, daneben sagen sie, daß sie vor Gott nicht gerecht machen. Darum reden die Widersacher ihre Gewalt und tun uns ganz vor Gott unrecht, wenn sie uns schuld geben, daß wir alle guten Ceremonien, alle Ordnungen in der Kirche abbringen und niederlegen. Denn wir mögen es mit der Wahrheit sagen, daß es christlicher, ehrlicher in unsern Kirchen mit rechten Gottesdiensten gehalten wird denn bei den Widersachern. Und wo gottesfürchtige, ehrbare, verständige, unparteiische Leute sind, die diese Sache recht genau wollen bedenken und ansehen, so halten wir die alten Canones und mentem legis mehr, reiner und fleißiger denn die Widersacher. Denn die Widersacher treten unerschämte die allerehrlichsten Canones mit Füßen, wie sie denn Christo und dem Evangelio auch tun. Die Pfaffen und Mönche in Stiften mißbrauchen der Messe aufs schrecklichste und greulichste, halten Messen täglich in großer Anzahl allein um der Zinse [Abgaben] willen, um des Geldes, um des schändlichen Rauchs willen. So singen sie die Psalmen in Stiften, nicht daß sie studieren oder ernstlich beten (denn das mehrere Teil versteht nicht einen Vers in [den] Psalmen), sondern halten ihre Metten und were for a time necessary), lest the righteousness of faith be obscured, if men judge that these services merit justification, or are necessary for justification. Many seek in traditions various ἐπιμεινίας [mitigations] in order to heal consciences; and yet they do not find any sure grades by which to free consciences from these chains. But just as Alexander once for all solved the Gordian knot by cutting it with his sword when he could not disentangle it, so the apostles once for all free consciences from traditions, especially if they are taught to merit justification. The apostles compel us to oppose this doctrine by teaching and examples. They compel us to teach that traditions do not justify; that they are not necessary for justification; that no one ought to frame or receive traditions with the opinion that they merit justification. Then, even though any one should observe them, let him observe them without superstition as civil customs, just as without superstition soldiers are clothed in one way and scholars in another [as I regard my wearing of a German costume among the Germans and a French costume among the French as an observance of the usage of the land, and not for the purpose of being saved thereby]. The apostles violate traditions and are excused by Christ; for the example was to be shown the Pharisees that these services are unprofitable. And if our people neglect some traditions that are of little advantage, they are now sufficiently excused, when these are required as though they merit justification. For such an opinion with regard to traditions is impious [an error not to be endured].

But we cheerfully maintain the old traditions [as, the three high festivals, the observance of Sunday, and the like] made in the Church for the sake of usefulness and tranquillity; and we interpret them in a more moderate way, to the exclusion of the opinion which holds that they justify. And our enemies falsely accuse us of abolishing good ordinances and church-discipline. For we can truly declare that the public form of the churches is more becoming with us than with the adversaries [that the true worship of God is observed in our churches in a more Christian, honorable way]. And if any one will consider it aright, we conform to the canons more truly than do the adversaries. [For the adversaries, without shame, tread under foot the most honorable canons, just as they do Christ and the Gospel.] With the adversaries, unwilling celebrants, and those hired for pay, and very frequently only for pay, celebrate the Masses. They sing psalms, not that they may learn or pray [for the greater part do not understand a verse in the psalms], but for the sake of the service, as though this work were a service, or, at least, for the sake of reward. [All this they cannot deny. Some who are upright among them are even ashamed of this traffic, and declare that the clergy is in need of reformation.] With us many use the Lord's Supper [willingly and without constraint] every Lord's Day, but after having been first instructed, examined [whether they know and understand anything of the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments], and absolved. The children sing psalms in order that they may learn [become familiar with passages of Scripture]; the people also sing [Latin and German psalms], in order that they may either learn or pray. With the adversaries there is no catechization of the children whatever, concerning which even the canons give commands. With us the pastors and ministers of the churches are compelled publicly [and privately] to instruct and hear the youth; and this ceremony produces the best fruits. [And the Catechism is not a mere childish thing, as is the bearing of banners and tapers, but a very profitable instruction.] Among the adversaries, in many regions [as in Italy and Spain], during the entire year no sermons are delivered, except in Lent. [Here they ought to cry out and justly make

Also ist unsere Kirche mit Lehre und Wandel bestellt, daraus unparteiische Leute wohl merken und abnehmen können, daß wir christliche, rechte Ceremonien nicht abtun, sondern mit Fleiß aufs treulichste erhalten.

45] Ac de mortificatione carnis et disciplina corporis ita docemus, sicut narrat Confessio, quod vera et non simulata mortificatio fiat per crucem et afflictiones, quibus Deus exerceat nos. In his obediendum est voluntati Dei, sicut ait Paulus Rom. 12, 1: Exhibete corpora vestra hostiam etc. Et haec sunt spiritualia exercitia timoris et fidei. Verum 46] praeter hanc mortificationem, quae fit per crucem, est et voluntarium quoddam exercitium genus necessarium, de quo Christus ait Luc. 21, 34: Cavete, ne corda vestra graventur crapula. Et Paulus 1 Cor. 9, 27: Castigo corpus meum et in servitutem redigo etc. 47] Et haec exercitia suscipienda sunt, non quod sint cultus iustificantes, sed ut coerceant carnem, ne saturatis obruat nos et reddat securos et otiosos, quae ex re fit, ut affectibus carnis indulgeant et obtemperant homines. Es schämen sich auch selbst etliche Redliche unter ihnen denselben Jahrmarkts und sagen, clerus bedürfe einer Reformation. Item, die Jugend und das Volk singt ordentlich lateinische und deutsche Psalmen, daß sie der Sprüche der Schrift gewöhnen und beten lernen. Bei den Widerjähern ist kein Katechismus, da doch die Canones von reden. Bei uns werden die Canones gehalten, daß die Pfarrer und Kirchendiener öffentlich und daheim die Kinder und Jugend in Gottes Wort unterweisen. Und der Katechismus ist nicht ein Kinderwerk, wie Jähren-, Kerzentragen, sondern eine fast [sehr] nützliche Unterweisung. Bei den Widerjähern wird in vielen Ländern, als in Italien und Hispanien usw., das ganze Jahr durch nicht gepredigt denn allein in der Fasten. Da sollten sie schreien und billig hoch klagen; denn das heißt auf einmal alle Gottesdienste recht umgestoßen. Denn der welcher Gott im ersten und andern Gebot als das Größte hat gebordert, ist Gottes Wort predigen: denn das Predigtamt ist das höchste Amt in der Kirche. Wo nun der Gottesdienst ausgelassen wird, wie kann da Erkenntnis Gottes, die Lehre Christi oder das Evangelium sein? Also ist unsere Kirche mit Lehre und Wandel bestellt, daraus unparteiische Leute wohl merken und abnehmen können, daß wir christliche, rechte Ceremonien nicht abtun, sondern mit Fleiß aufs treulichste erhalten.

Und die Kasteiung des Fleisches oder alten Adams lehren wir also, wie unsere Confessio meldet, daß die rechte Kasteiung dann geschieht, wenn uns Gott den Willen bricht, Kreuz und Trübsal zuschickt, daß wir lernen seinem Willen gehorsam sein, wie Paulus zu den Römern am 12. sagt: „Begebet eure eigenen Leiber zu einem heiligen Opfer.“ Und das sind rechte heilige Kasteiungen, also in Anfechtungen lernen Gott kennen, ihn fürchten, lieben usw. über dieselben Trübsale, welche nicht in unserm Willen stehen, sind auch noch die leiblichen Übungen, da Christus von sagt: „Hütet euch, daß eure Leiber nicht beschweret werden mit Stressen und Saufen!“ Und Paulus zu den Korinthern: „Ich zähme meinen Leib“ usw. Die Übungen sollen darum geschehen, nicht daß es nötige Gottesdienste seien, dadurch man vor Gott fromm werde, sondern daß wir unser Fleisch im Zaum halten, damit wir durch Böllerei und Beschwerung des Leibes nicht sicher und müßig werden, des Teufels Reizungen und grievous complaint; for this means at one blow to overthrow completely all worship. For of all acts of worship that is the greatest, most holy, most necessary, and highest, which God has required as the highest in the First and the Second Commandment, namely, to preach the Word of God. For the ministry is the highest office in the Church. Now, if this worship is omitted, how can there be knowledge of God, the doctrine of Christ, or the Gospel? But the chief service of God is to teach the Gospel. And when the adversaries do preach, they speak of human traditions, of the worship of saints [of consecrated water], and similar trifles, which the people justly loathe; therefore they are deserted immediately in the beginning, after the text of the Gospel has been recited. [This practise may have started because the people did not wish to hear the other lies.] A few better ones begin now to speak of good works; but of the righteousness of faith, of faith in Christ, of the consolation of consciences, they say nothing; yea, this most wholesome part of the Gospel they rail at with their reproaches. [This blessed doctrine, the precious holy Gospel, they call Lutheran.] On the contrary, in our churches all the sermons are occupied with such topics as these: of repentance; of the fear of God; of faith in Christ, of the righteousness of faith, of the consolation of consciences by faith, of the exercises of faith; of prayer, what its nature should be, and that we should be fully confident that it is efficacious, that it is heard; of the cross; of the authority of magistrates and all civil ordinances [likewise, how each one in his station should live in a Christian manner, and, out of obedience to the command of the Lord God, should conduct himself in reference to every worldly ordinance and law]; of the distinction between the kingdom of Christ, or the spiritual kingdom, and political affairs; of marriage; of the education and instruction of children; of chastity; of all the offices of love. From this condition of the churches it may be judged that we diligently maintain church-discipline and godly ceremonies and good church-customs.

And of the mortification of the flesh and discipline of the body we thus teach, just as the Confession states, that a true and not a feigned mortification occurs through the cross and afflictions by which God exercises us [when God breaks our will, inflicts the cross and trouble]. In these we must obey God's will, as Paul says, Rom. 12, 1: Present your bodies a living sacrifice. And these are the spiritual exercises of fear and faith. But in addition to this mortification which occurs through the cross [which does not depend upon our will] there is also a voluntary kind of exercise necessary, of which Christ says, Luke 21, 34: Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting. And Paul, 1 Cor. 9, 27: I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, etc. And these exercises are to be undertaken not because they are services that justify, but in order to curb the flesh, lest satiety may overpower us, and render us secure and indifferent, the result of which is that men indulge and obey the dispositions of the flesh. This diligence ought to be perpetual, because it has the perpetual command of God. And this prescribed form of certain illa praescripta forma certorum ciborum ac temporum nihil facit ad coercendam carnem. Est enim delicatior et sumptuosior quam reliqua convivia; et ne adversarii quidem observant formam in canonibus traditam.

49) Multas et difficiles disputationes habet hic locus de traditionibus, ac nos re ipsa experti sumus traditiones vere esse laqueos conscientiarum. Quum exiguntur tamquam necessariae, miris modis cruciant conscientias praetermittentes aliquam observationem. Rursus abrogatio sua habet incommoda, suas 50] quaestiones. Sed nos facilem et planam causam habemus, quia adversarii damnant nos, quod docemus traditiones humanas non mereri remissionem peccatorum. Item requirunt universales traditiones, quas sic vocant, tamquam necessariae ad iustificationem. Hic habemus patronum constantem Paulum, qui ubique contendit has observationes neque iustificare, neque necessariae esse supra iustitiam fidei. Et tamen usum libertatis in his rebus ita moderandum esse docemus, ne imperiti offendantur et propter abusum libertatis fiant iniquiores verae doctrinae evangelii, neve sine probabili causa mutetur aliquid in usitatis ritibus, sed ut propter alendam concordiam serventur veteres mores, qui sine peccato aut sine magno incommodo 52] vari possunt. Et in hoc ipso conventu satis ostendimus nos propter caritatem adiaphora non gravatim observatos esse cum aliis, etiamsi quid incommodi haberent, sed publicam concordiam, quae quidem sine offensione conscientiarum fieri posset, iudicavimus omnibus aliis commodis antefereendam esse. Sed de hac tota re paulo post etiam dicemus, quum de votis et de potestate ecclesiastica disputabimus.

soll werden, sondern um Friedens und Einigkeit willen soll man diejenigen Gewohnheiten halten, so man ohne Sünde und ohne Beschwerung der Gewissen halten kann. Und auf diesem Augsburger Reichstag haben wir uns gleich genug finden und vernehmen lassen, daß wir um Liebe willen unbeschwert sein wollten, etliche adiaphora mit den andern zu halten. Denn wir haben auch bei uns wohl bedacht, daß gemeine Einigkeit und Friede, soviel derselben ohne Beschwerung der Gewissen zu erhalten wäre, billig allen andern, geringen Sachen würde vorgezogen. Aber von dem allem wollen wir hernach weiter reden, wenn wir von Klostergeleibden und von der potestate ecclesiastica handeln werden.

Art. XVI. De Ordine Politico.

53) Articulus XVI. recipiunt adversarii sine ulla exceptione, in quo confessi sumus, quod liceat Christiano gerere magistratus, exercere iudicia ex imperatoris legibus seu aliis praesentibus legibus, supplicia [R. 215 iure constituere, iure bella gerere, militare, iure contrahere, tenere proprium, iusiurandum postulandibus magistratibus dare, contrahere matrimonium, denique quod legitimae ordinationes civiles sint bonae creaturae Dei et ordinationes divinae, quibus tuto Christiani 54] nus uti potest. des Fleisches Rükten folgen. Dasselbe Fasten und Rasteten sollte nicht allein auf gewisse Zeit, sondern allezeit geschehen. Denn Gott will, daß wir allezeit mäßig und nüchtern leben, und wie die Erfahrung gibt, so helfen dazu nicht viel bestimmte Fastentage. Denn man hat mit Fischen und allerlei Fastenspeise mehr Unkost und Quasterei [Schwelgerei] getrieben denn außer der Fasten; und die Widersacher selbst haben die Fasten nie gehalten dergestalt, wie sie in canonibus angezeigt ist.

Dieser Artikel von den menschlichen Traditionen oder Sazungen hat ganz viel schwere Disputationen und Fragen hinter sich, und die Erfahrung hat's allzuflar gegeben, daß solche Sazungen rechte schwere Ketten und Stride sind, die Gewissen jämmerlich zu quälen. Denn wenn dieser Wahn da ist, daß sie nötig seien zur Seligkeit, so plagen sie über alle Maßen ein arm Gewissen. Wie denn fromme Herzen wohl erfahren, wenn sie in horis canonicis eine Complete ausgelassen usw. oder dergleichen dawider getan. Wiederum schlechthin die Freiheit lehren, hat auch seine Bedenken und seine Fragen, nachdem das gemeine Volk äußerlicher Zucht und Anleitung bedarf. Aber die Widersacher machen diese Sache selbst gewiß und schlecht. Denn sie verdammen uns darum, daß wir lehren, daß wir durch menschliche Sazungen nicht verdienen Vergebung der Sünden vor Gott. Item, sie wollen ihre Sazungen durch die ganze Kirche universaliter durchaus gehalten haben, schlechts als nötig, und setzen sie an Christus' Statt. Da haben wir einen starken Patron für uns, den Apostel Paulum, welcher an allen Orten das freitret, daß solche Sazungen vor Gott nicht gerecht machen und nicht nötig seien zur Seligkeit. Auch lehren die Unfern deutlich und klar, daß man der christlichen Freiheit in den Dingen also gebrauchen soll, daß man vor den Schwachen, so solches nicht unterrichtet sind, nicht Argernis anrichte, und daß nicht etwa diejenigen, so der Freiheit mißbrauchen, die Schwachen von der Lehre des Evangelii abschreden. Darum lehren auch unsere Prediger, daß ohne [be]sondere und ohne bewegende Ursachen an den Kirchenbräuchen nichts geändert

Artikel XVI. Vom weltlichen Regiment.

Den XVI. Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher gefallen ohne alle weiteren Fragen, da wir in der Confession sagen und lehren, daß ein Christ mit Gott und Gewissen in der Obrigkeit sein mag, Vond und Leute regieren, Urteil und Recht sprechen aus kaiserlichen und andern landläufigen Rechten, die Übeltäter mit dem Schwert und sonst nach der Schärfe strafen, Kriege führen, laufen und verkaufen, Haus, Hof und sonst Eigens haben und behalten, aufgelegte Eide in Gerichten schwören; in Summa, da wir lehren, daß Obrigkeit und Regiment, item ihr Recht und Strafe und alles, was dazu gehört, seien gute Creaturen meats and times does nothing [as experience shows] towards curbing the flesh. For it is more luxurious and sumptuous than other feasts [for they were at greater expense, and practised greater gluttony with fish and various Lenten meats than when the fasts were not observed], and not even the adversaries observe the form given in the canons.

This topic concerning traditions contains many and difficult questions of controversy, and we have actually experienced that traditions are truly snares of consciences. When they are exacted as necessary, they torture in wonderful ways the conscience omitting any observance [as godly hearts, indeed, experience when in the canonical hours they have omitted a compline, or offended against them in a similar way]. Again their abrogation has its own evils and its own questions. [On the other hand, to teach absolute freedom has also its doubts and questions, because the common people need outward discipline and instruction.] But we have an easy and plain case, because the adversaries condemn us for teaching that human traditions do not merit the remission of sins. Likewise they require universal traditions, as they call them, as necessary for justification [and place them in Christ's stead]. Here we have Paul as a constant champion, who everywhere contends that these observances neither justify nor are necessary in addition to the righteousness of faith. And nevertheless we teach that in these matters the use of liberty is to be so controlled that the inexperienced may not be offended, and, on account of the abuse of liberty, may not become more hostile to the true doctrine of the Gospel, or that without a reasonable cause nothing in customary rites be changed, but that, in order to cherish harmony, such old customs be observed as can be observed without sin or without great inconvenience. And in this very assembly we have shown sufficiently that for love's sake we do not refuse to observe adiaphora with others, even though they should have some disadvantage; but we have judged that such public harmony as could indeed be produced without offense to consciences ought to be preferred to all other advantages [all other less important matters]. But concerning this entire subject we shall speak after a while, when we shall treat of vows and ecclesiastical power.

Article XVI: Of Political Order.

The Sixteenth Article the adversaries receive without any exception, in which we have confessed that it is lawful for the Christian to bear civil office, sit in judgment, determine matters by the imperial laws, and other laws in present force, appoint just punishments, engage in just wars, act as a soldier, make legal contracts, hold property, take an oath when magistrates require it, contract marriage; finally, that legitimate civil ordinances are good creatures of God and divine ordinances, which a Christian can use with safety. This entire topic concerning the distinction between the kingdom of Christ and a political strorum utiliter illustratus est, quod regnum Christi sit spirituale, hoc est, in corde notitiam Dei, timorem Dei et fidem, iustitiam aeternam et vitam aeternam inchoans, interim foris sinat nos uti politicis ordinationibus legitimis quarumcunque gentium, inter quas vivimus, sicut sinit nos uti medicina aut 55) architectonica aut cibo, potu, aëre. Nec fert evangelium novas leges de statu civili, sed praecipit, ut praesentibus legibus obtemperemus, sive ab ethnicis, sive ab aliis conditae sint, et hac obedientia caritatem iubet exercere. Insaniebat enim Carolostadius, qui nobis imponebat leges iudiciales Mosis. De 56) his rebus ideo copiosius scripserunt nostri, quia monachi multas perniciosas opiniones sparserunt in ecclesiam. Vocaverunt politiam evangelicam communionem rerum, dixerunt esse consilia, non tenere proprium, non ulcisci. Hae opiniones valde obscurant evangelium et regnum spirituale, et sunt pericul- 57) losae rebus publicis. Nam evangelium non dissipat politiam aut oeconomiam, sed multo magis approbat, et non solum propter poenam, sed etiam propter conscientiam iubet illis parere tamquam divinae ordinationi.

man sollte nach dem Gesetz Moses die Stadt- und Landregimente bestellen. Von diesem Stücke haben die Unsern darum desto fleißiger geschrieben, denn die Mönche hatten viel und ganz schädliche Irrtümer gelehrt in der Kirche. Denn sie haben dieses ein evangelisch Leben genannt, daß man nichts Eigenes hätte, daß man nicht Strafe und Rache übte, daß man nicht Weib und Kind hätte. Solche Lehren haben die reine evangelische Lehre ganz unterdrückt, daß man gar nicht verstanden hat, was christlich oder das geistliche Reich Christi sei, und haben weltlich und geistlich Reich ineinandergeflocht, daraus viel Unrat und aufrührerische, schädliche Lehre erfolgt uvm. Denn das Evangelium zerreiht nicht weltlich Regiment, Haushaltung, Kaufen, Verkaufen und andere weltliche Polizei, sondern bestätigt Obrigkeit und Regiment und befiehlt, denselben gehorjam zu sein als Gottes Ordnung, nicht allein um der Strafe willen, sondern auch um des Gewissens willen.

58) Iulianus Apostata, Celsus et plerique alii obiecerunt Christianis, quod evangelium dissiparet respublicas, quia prohiberet vindictam, et alia quaedam traderet parum apta civili societati. Et hae quaestiones mire excrucierunt Origenem, Nazianzenum et alios, quum quidem facillime explicari possint, si sciamus evangelium non ferre leges de [R. 216] statu civili, sed esse remissionem peccatorum et inchoationem vitae aeternae in cordibus credentium; ceterum non solum externas politias approbare, sed nos etiam subiacere illis, Rom. 13, 1, sicut necessario subditi sumus legibus temporum, vicibus hiemis et aestatis tam- 59) quam divinis ordinationibus. Evangelium prohibet vindictam privatam, idque hoc consilio Christus toties inculcat, ne apostoli putarent se imperia debere istis eripere, qui alioqui tenebant, sicut Iudaei de regno Messiae somniabant, sed ut scirent se de regno spirituali docere oportere, non mutare civilem statum. Itaque privata vindicta non consilio, sed praecepto prohibetur Matth. 5, 39 et Rom. 12, 19. Publica, quae sit ex officio magistratus, non dissuadetur, sed praecipitur et est opus Dei iuxta Paulum, Rom. 13, 1 sqq. Iam publicae vindictae species sunt iudicia, 60) supplicia, bella, militia. De his rebus quam male iudicaverint multi scriptores, constat, quia in hoc errore fuerunt evangelium externam quandam, novam et monasticam politiam esse, nec videntur evangelium cor-

Gottes und Gottes Ordnungen, deren ein Christ mit gutem Gewissen brauchen mag [darf]. Dieser Artikel gefällt ihnen wohl. Dieser ganz wichtige, nötige Artikel vom Unterschied des geistlichen Reiches Christi und weltlichen Reiches, welcher fast [sehr] nötig ist zu wissen, ist durch die Unsern ganz eigentlich, richtig und klar gegeben, vielen Gewissen zu merlichem, großem Trost. Denn wir haben klar gelehrt, daß Christi Reich geistlich ist, da er regiert durch das Wort und die Predigt, wirkt durch den heiligen Geist und mehrt in uns den Glauben, Gottesfurcht, Liebe, Geduld inwendig im Herzen und fängt hier auf Erden in uns Gottes Reich und das ewige Leben an. Solange aber dies Leben währt, läßt er uns nichtsdestoweniger brauchen der Gesetze, der Ordnungen und Stände, so in der Welt gehen, danach eines jeden Beruf ist, gleichwie er uns läßt brauchen der Arznei, item Bauens und Pflanzens, der Luft, des Wassers. Und das Evangelium bringt nicht neue Gesetze im Weltregiment, sondern gebietet und will haben, daß wir den Gesetzen sollen gehorjam sein und der Obrigkeit, darunter wir wohnen, es seien Heiden oder Christen, und daß wir in solchem Gehorsam unsere Liebe erzeigen sollen. Denn Carlstadt war in diesem Fall gar toll und töricht, daß er lehrte, von diesem Stücke haben die Unsern darum desto fleißiger geschrieben, denn die Mönche hatten viel und ganz schädliche Irrtümer gelehrt in der Kirche. Denn sie haben dieses ein evangelisch Leben genannt, daß man nichts Eigenes hätte, daß man nicht Strafe und Rache übte, daß man nicht Weib und Kind hätte. Solche Lehren haben die reine evangelische Lehre ganz unterdrückt, daß man gar nicht verstanden hat, was christlich oder das geistliche Reich Christi sei, und haben weltlich und geistlich Reich ineinandergeflocht, daraus viel Unrat und aufrührerische, schädliche Lehre erfolgt uvm. Denn das Evangelium zerreiht nicht weltlich Regiment, Haushaltung, Kaufen, Verkaufen und andere weltliche Polizei, sondern bestätigt Obrigkeit und Regiment und befiehlt, denselben gehorjam zu sein als Gottes Ordnung, nicht allein um der Strafe willen, sondern auch um des Gewissens willen.

Iulianus Apostata, Celsus und etliche andere, die haben den Christen vorgeworfen, daß ihr Evangelium die Weltregimente und Polizeien zerriße und zerrüttete, diemeil es verbiete, man solle sich nicht rächen und dergleichen. Und dieselben Fragen haben Trigeni und Nazianzeno und etlichen andern viel zu tun gemacht, so man doch leichtlich darauf antworten kann, wenn wir allein wissen, daß die evangelische Lehre nicht neue Gesetze macht von Weltregimenten, sondern predigt Vergebung der Sünden, und daß das geistliche Reich und ewige Leben in [den] Herzen der Gläubigen anfängt. Das Evangelium aber läßt nicht allein bleiben dieselben äußerlichen Polizeien, Weltregimente und Ordnungen, sondern will auch, daß wir solchen sollen gehorjam sein, gleichwie wir in diesem zeitlichen Leben gehorjam und unterworfen sein sollen und müssen gemeinem Lauf der Natur als Gottes Ordnung (wir lassen es Winter und Sommer werden uvm.); das hindert nichts am geistlichen Reich. Das Evangelium verbietet allein privatam vindictam, daß niemand der Obrigkeit in ihr Amt greife. Und das zeigt Christus darum so oft an, daß die Apostel nicht dächten, sie sollten Weltherren werden und die Könige und Obrigkeit denjenigen nehmen, die die [zu der] Zeit in Herrschaften waren, wie denn die Juden vom Reich des Messias gedachten, sondern daß sie wüßten, daß ihr Amt wäre, zu predigen vom geistlichen Reich, nicht einiges Weltregiment zu verändern. Deshalb ist das Gebot, da Christus verbietet, sich kingdom has been explained to advantage [to the remarkably great consolation of many consciences] in the literature of our writers, [namely] that the kingdom of Christ is spiritual [inasmuch as Christ governs by the Word and by preaching], to wit, beginning in the heart the knowledge of God, the fear of God and faith, eternal righteousness, and eternal life; meanwhile it permits us outwardly to use legitimate political ordinances of every nation in which we live, just as it permits us to use medicine or the art of building, or food, drink, air. Neither does the Gospel bring new laws concerning the civil state, but commands that we obey present laws, whether they have been framed by heathen or by others, and that in this obedience we should exercise love. For Carlstadt was insane in imposing upon us the judicial laws of Moses. Concerning these subjects, our theologians have written more fully, because the monks diffused many pernicious opinions in the Church. They called a community of property the polity of the Gospel; they said that not to hold property, not to vindicate one's self at law [not to have wife and child], were evangelical counsels. These opinions greatly obscure the Gospel and the spiritual kingdom [so that it was not understood at all what the Christian or spiritual kingdom of Christ is; they concocted the secular kingdom with the spiritual, whence much trouble and seditions, harmful teaching resulted], and are dangerous to the commonwealth. For the Gospel does not destroy the State or the family [buying, selling, and other civil regulations], but much rather approves them, and bids us obey them as a divine ordinance, not only on account of punishment, but also on account of conscience.

Julian the Apostate, Celsus, and very many others made the objection to Christians that the Gospel would rend asunder states, because it prohibited legal redress, and taught certain other things not at all suited to political association. And these questions wonderfully exercised Origen, Nazianzen, and others, although, indeed, they can be most readily explained, if we keep in mind the fact that the Gospel does not introduce laws concerning the civil state, but is the remission of sins and the beginning of a new life in the hearts of believers; besides, it not only approves outward governments, but subjects us to them, Rom. 13, 1, just as we have been necessarily placed under the laws of seasons, the changes of winter and summer, as divine ordinances. [This is no obstacle to the spiritual kingdom.] The Gospel forbids private redress [in order that no one should interfere with the office of the magistrate], and Christ inculcates this so frequently with the design that the apostles should not think that they ought to seize the governments from those who held otherwise, just as the Jews dreamed concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, but that they might know they ought to teach concerning the spiritual kingdom that it does not change the civil state. Therefore private redress is prohibited not by advice, but by a command,

Matt. 5, 39; Rom. 12, 19. Public redress, which is made through the office of the magistrate, is not advised against, but is commanded, and is a work of God, according to Paul, Rom. 13, 1 sqq. Now the different kinds of public redress are legal decisions, capital punishment, wars, military service. It is manifest how incorrectly many writers have judged concerning these matters [some teachers have taught such pernicious errors that dibus afferre iustitiam aeternam, foris autem probare statum civilem.

Zeit geschieht, ist damit nicht verboten, sondern vielmehr geboten. Denn es ist „Gottes Wort“, wie Paulus Röm. 13 sagt. Dieselbe Rache geschieht, wenn man Übeltäter straft, Krieg führt um gemeinen Friedens willen, des Schwerts, der Pfluge und Harnische gebraucht usw. Von den Dingen haben eiliche Lehrer solche schädliche Irrtümer gelehrt, daß gar nahe [schier] alle Fürsten, Herren, Ritter, Knechte ihren rechten Stand für weltlich, ungöttlich und verdammt gehalten usw. Und ist nicht wohl mit Worten auszureden, was [für] unsägliche Gefahr und Schaden der Seelen und Gewissen daraus verursacht. Denn man hat gelehrt, als sei das Evangelium und die christliche Lehre eitel Mönchsleben, und haben nicht gesehen, daß das Evangelium lehrt, wie man vor Gott und im Gewissen von der Sünde, Hölle, dem Teufel erlöst wird und läßt auswendig der Welt ihr Regiment in äußerlichen Dingen.

61] Vanissimum et hoc est, quod sit perfectio Christiana non tenere proprium. Nam perfectio Christiana est sita non in contemptu civilium ordinationum, sed in motibus cordis, in magno timore Dei, in magna fide, sicut Abraham, David, Daniel etiam in magnis opibus atque in imperiis non minus 62] perfecti erant quam ulli eremitae. Sed monachi illam externam hypocrisin offuderunt oculis hominum, ne videri posset, in quibus rebus sit vera perfectio. Quibus laudibus vexerunt communionem rerum quasi 63] evangelicam! At hae laudes plurimum habent periculi, praesertim quum longe dissentiant a Scripturis. Scriptura enim non praecipit, ut res sint communes, sed lex Decalogi, cum inquit Exod. 20, 15: Non furtum facies, dominia distinguit, et suum quemque tenere iubet. Plane furebat Vuiglesus, (R. 217 qui negabat licere sacerdotibus tenere proprium). Sunt infinitae disputationes de contractibus, de quibus nunquam satisfieri bonis conscientias potest, nisi sciant hanc regulam, quod Christiano liceat uti civilibus ordinationibus ac legibus. Haec regula tuetur conscientias, quum docet eatenus licitos esse contractus coram Deo, quatenus eos magistratus seu leges approbant.

liche Gewissen nimmermehr können gestillt werden, sie sind denn dieses nötigen Stüdes unterrichtet, daß ein Christ mit gutem Gewissen sich halten mag nach Landrecht und Gebrauch. Denn dieser Unterricht errettet viele Gewissen, da wir lehren, daß die Kontrakte sofern vor Gott ohne Gefahr seien, sofern sie in gemeinen Rechten und Landgebräuchen (welche den Rechten gleich gelten) angenommen sind.

65] Hic totus locus rerum politicarum a nostris ita patefactus est, ut plurimi boni viri, qui versantur in republica et in negotiis, praedicaverint se magnopere adiutos esse, qui antea monachorum opinionibus vexati dubitabant, utrum illa civilia officia et negotia evangelium permitteret. Haec ideo recitavimus, ut etiam exteri intelligant hoc doctrinae genere, quod nos sequimur, non labefactari, sed multo magis muniri auctoritatem magistratuum et dignitatem omnium ordinationum civilium, quarum rerum magnitudo fatuis illis opinionibus monasticis mirifice antea fuit obscurata, quae longe praeferebant hypocrisin paupertatis et humilitatis politicae et oeconomiae, quum hae mandatum Dei habeant, illa communio Platonica non habeat mandatum Dei.

sündliche, weltliche Stände, Leben und Wesen zu unsäglicher Fährlichkeit [Gefahr] des Gewissens gehalten ist worden. Denn die Mönche haben solche Heuchelei erichtet, ihre Demut und Armut viel höher gerühmt und gehalten denn Fürsten- und Herren-, Vaters-, Mütter-, Hausvaterstand; so doch diese Stände Gottes Wort und Befehl haben, die Möncherei aber keinen Befehl Gottes hat.

selbst zu rächen, nicht allein ein Rat, sondern ein ernst Gebot, Matth. 5 und Röm. 12. Die Rache aber und Strafe des Argen, so von der Obrigkeit zu rächen, nicht allein ein Rat, sondern ein ernst Gebot, Matth. 5 und Röm. 12. Die Rache aber und Strafe des Argen, so von der Obrigkeit zu rächen, nicht allein ein Rat, sondern ein ernst Gebot, Matth. 5 und Röm. 12.

So ist das auch eine lautere Lüge und Betrug gewesen, daß sie gelehrt haben unterschämt, daß die christliche Vollkommenheit [be]stehe darin, daß man nichts Eigenes habe. Denn christliche Vollkommenheit [be]steht nicht darin, daß ich mich äußerlich fromm stelle und von dem Weltwesen mich absondere, sondern der Glaube und rechte Gottesfurcht im Herzen ist die Vollkommenheit. Denn Abraham, David, Daniel sind in königlichem Stande, in großen Fürstenräten und Ämtern gewesen, haben auch große Reichtümer gehabt und sind doch heiliger, vollkommener gewesen, denn je ein Mönch oder Kartäuser ist auf Erden gekommen. Aber die Mönche, sonderlich Barsfüßer, haben den Leuten einen Schein vor den Augen gemacht; darüber hat niemand gewußt, worin die rechte Heiligkeit [be]stehe. Denn wie hoch evangelisch, wie für große Heiligkeit haben die Mönche allein dieses gerühmt, daß man nicht Eigenes haben sollte, daß man sollte willig arm sein! Aber dasselbe sind gar schädliche Lehren, nachdem die Schrift nichts davon meldet, sondern stracks dawider lehrt. Die zehn Gebote Gottes sagen klar: „Du sollst nicht stehlen.“ Da läßt ja Gott nach, daß ein jeder das Seine habe. In diesem Stüde hat Willseus gar gewütet, da er hat darauf gedungen, kein Bischof noch Pfaff sollte Eigenes haben. So sind unzählige verworrene Disputationen von Kontrakten, da christ-

Dieser hohe, nötige Artikel, nämlich von Obrigkeit, von Weltgelesen, ist von den Unsern ganz klar und richtig gegeben, also daß viel große, hohe, ehrbare Leute, die nach ihrem Stand mit Regimenten müssen umgehen und in großen Händeln sein, bekennen, daß ihre Gewissen merkllichen Trost empfangen haben, welche zuvor durch solche Irrtümer der Mönche unsägliche Qual erlitten und in Zweifel standen, ob ihre Stände auch christlich wären, und ob das Evangelium solches nachließe. Dieses haben wir darum erzählt, daß auch die Fremden, Feind und Freund, verstehen mögen, daß durch diese Lehre die Obrigkeit, Landregiment, kaiserlich Recht und andere nicht niedergestoßen, sondern vielmehr hoch gehoben und geschützt werden, daß auch diese Lehre erst recht Unterricht gibt, wie ein herrlich, groß Amt, voll christlicher, guter Werke, das Amt der Regimente ist usw.; welches alles zuvor durch die heuchlerische Mönchslehre für nearly all princes, lords, knights, servants regarded their proper estate as secular, ungodly, and damnable, etc. Nor can it be fully expressed in words what an unspeakable peril and damage has resulted from this to souls and consciences], because they were in the error that the Gospel is an external, new, and monastic form of government, and did not see that the Gospel brings eternal righteousness to hearts [teaches how a person is redeemed, before God and in his conscience, from sin, hell, and the devil], while it outwardly approves the civil state.

It is also a most vain delusion that it is Christian perfection not to hold property. For Christian perfection consists not in the contempt of civil ordinances, but in dispositions of the heart, in great fear of God, in great faith, just as Abraham, David, Daniel, even in great wealth and while exercising civil power, were no less perfect than any hermits. But the monks [especially the Barefoot monks] have spread this outward hypocrisy before the eyes of men, so that it could not be seen in what things true perfection exists. With what praises have they brought forward this communion of property, as though it were evangelical! But these praises have the greatest danger, especially since they differ much from the Scriptures. For Scripture does not command that property be common, but the Law of the Decalog, when it says, Ex. 20, 15: Thou shalt not steal, distinguishes rights of ownership, and commands each one to hold what is his own. Wyclif manifestly was raging when he said that priests were not allowed to hold property. There are infinite discussions concerning contracts, in reference to which good consciences can never be satisfied unless they know the rule that it is lawful for a Christian to make use of civil ordinances and laws. This rule protects consciences when it teaches that contracts are lawful before God just to the extent that the magistrates or laws approve them.

This entire topic concerning civil affairs has been so clearly set forth by our theologians that very many good men occupied in the state and in business have declared that they have been greatly benefited, who before, troubled by the opinion of the monks, were in doubt as to whether the Gospel allowed these civil offices and business. Accordingly, we have recounted these things in order that those without also may understand that by the kind of doctrine which we follow, the authority of magistrates and the dignity of all civil ordinances are not undermined, but are all the more strengthened [and that it is only this doctrine which gives true instruction as to how eminently glorious an office, full of good Christian works, the office of rulers is]. The importance of these matters was greatly obscured previously by those silly monastic opinions, which far preferred the hypocrisy of poverty and humility to the state and the family, although these have God's command, while this Platonic communion [monasticism] has not God's command.

Art. XVII.

De Christi Reditu ad Iudicium.

Art. XVIII. De Libero Arbitrio.

67] Articulus XVIII. recipiunt adversarii de libero arbitrio, etsi quaedam addunt testimonia parum apta ad eam causam. Addunt et declamationem, quod non sit nimiumtribuendum libero arbitrio cum Pelagianis, neque omnem ei libertatem adimendam esse cum 68] Manichaeis. Praeclare sane; sed quid interest inter Pelagianos et adversarios [R. 218] nostros, quum utrique sentiant homines sine Spiritu Sancto posse Deum diligere et praecepta Dei facere quoad substantiam actuum, mereri gratiam ac iustificationem operibus, quae ratio per se efficit sine Spiritu Sancto? 69] Quam multa absurda sequuntur ex his Pelagianis opinionibus, quae in scholis magna auctoritate docentur! Has Augustinus sequens Paulum magna contentione refutat, cuius sententiam supra in articulo De Iustificatione [vid. p. 118 et 152] recitavimus. Ne 70] que vero adimimus humanae voluntati libertatem. Habet humana voluntas libertatem in operibus et rebus deligendis, quas ratio per se comprehendit. Potest aliquo modo efficere iustitiam civilem seu iustitiam operum, potest loqui de Deo, exhibere Deo certum cultum externo opere, obedire magistratibus, parentibus, in opere externo eligendo potest continere manus a caede, ab adulterio, a furto. Quum reliqua sit in natura hominis ratio et iudicium de rebus sensui subiectis, reliquus est etiam delectus earum rerum et libertas et facultas efficiendae iustitiae civilis. Id enim vocat Scriptura iustitiam carnis, quam natura carnalis, hoc est, ratio per se, 71] efficit sine Spiritu Sancto. Quamquam tanta est vis concupiscentiae, ut malis affectibus saepius obtemperant homines quam recto iudicio. Et diabolus, qui est efficax in impiis, ut ait Paulus Eph. 2, 2, non desinit incitare hanc imbecilem naturam ad varia delicta. Hae causae sunt, quare et civilis iustitia rara sit inter homines, sicut videmus ne ipsos quidem philosophos eam consecutos 72] esse, qui videntur eam expetivisse. Illud autem falsum est, non peccare hominem, qui facit opera praeceptorum extra gratiam. Et addunt amplius talia opera etiam de congruo mereri remissionem peccatorum ac iustificationem. Nam humana corda sine Spiritu Sancto sunt sine timore Dei, sine fiducia erga Deum, non credunt se exaudiri, sibi ignosci, se iuvare et servare a Deo. Igitur sunt impia. Artikel XVII.

Von der Wiederkunft Christi zum Gericht.

Den XVII. Artikel nehmen die Widersacher an, da wir bekennen, daß Christus am jüngsten Tage kommen werde, die Toten auferwecken, den Frommen das ewige Leben und Freude geben, die Gottlosen zu ewiger Pein mit dem Teufel verdammen.

Artikel XVIII. Vom freien Willen.

Den XVIII. Artikel nehmen die Widersacher an vom freien Willen, wiewohl sie etliche Sprüche der Schrift anziehen, die sich zu der Sache nicht reimen. Auch machen sie ein groß Geschrei davon, daß, [wie] man den freien Willen nicht solle zu hoch heben wie die Pelagianer, so soll man ihm nicht zu viel nehmen mit den Manichäern. Ja alles wohl geredet. Was ist aber für Unterschied zwischen den Pelagianern und unsern Widersachern, so sie beide lehren, daß die Menschen ohne den Heiligen Geist können Gott lieben, Gottes Gebote halten quoad substantiam actuum, das ist, die Werke können sie tun durch natürliche Vernunft, ohne den Heiligen Geist, dadurch sie die Gnade Gottes verdienen? Wie viele, unzählige Irrtümer erfolgen aus dieser pelagianischen Lehre, die sie gleichwohl in ihren Schulen gar stark treiben und predigen! Dieselben Irrtümer widersticht Augustinus aus Paulo aufs heftigste, welches [dessen] Meinung wir oben De Iustificatione gesetzt. Und wir sagen auch, daß die Vernunft etlichermaßen einen freien Willen hat. Denn in den Dingen, welche mit der Vernunft zu fassen, zu begreifen sind, haben wir einen freien Willen. Es ist etlichermaßen in uns ein Vermögen, äußerlich ehrbar zu leben, von Gott zu reden, einen äußerlichen Gottesdienst oder heilige Gebärde zu erzeigen, Obrigkeit und Eltern zu gehorchen, nicht [zu] stehlen, nicht [zu] töten. Denn dieweil nach Adams Fall gleichwohl bleibt die natürliche Vernunft, daß ich Böses und Gutes kenne in den Dingen, die mit Sinnen und Vernunft zu begreifen sind, so ist auch etlichermaßen unsers freien Willens Vermögen, ehrbar oder unehrbar zu leben. Das nennt die Heilige Schrift die Gerechtigkeit des Gesetzes oder Fleisches, welche die Vernunft etlichermaßen vermag ohne den Heiligen Geist, wiewohl die angeborne böse Lust so gewaltig ist, daß die Menschen öfter derselben folgen denn der Vernunft, und der Teufel, welcher, wie Paulus sagt, kräftiglich wirkt in den Gottlosen, reizt ohne Unterlaß die arme, schwache Natur zu allen Sünden. Und das ist die Ursache, warum auch wenig der natürlichen Vernunft nach ein ehrbar Leben führen, wie wir sehen, daß auch wenig Philosophi, welche doch danach bestig sich bemüht, ein ehrbar äußerlich Leben recht geführt haben. Das ist aber falsch und erdichtet, daß diejenigen sollten ohne Sünde sein, die solche Werke tun außerhalb der Gnade, oder daß solche gute Werke de congruo Vergabung der Sünden und Gnade verdienen sollten. Denn solche Herzen, die ohne den Heiligen Geist sind, die sind ohne Gottesfurcht, ohne Glauben, Vertrauen, glauben nicht, daß Gott sie erhöhe, daß er ihre Sünden vergebe, daß er ihnen in Nöten helfe. Darum sind sie gottlos. Nun kann „ein böser Baum nicht gute Frucht tragen“, und „ohne Glauben kann niemand Gott gefallen“.

Article XVII:

Of Christ's Return to Judgment.

The Seventeenth Article the adversaries receive without exception, in which we confess that at the consummation of the world Christ shall appear, and shall raise up all the dead, and shall give to the godly eternal life and eternal joys, but shall condemn the ungodly to be punished with the devil without end.

they are godless. For neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit, Matt. 7, 18. And without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11, 6.

Article XVIII: Of Free Will.

The Eighteenth Article, Of Free Will, the adversaries receive, although they add some testimonies not at all adapted to this case. They add also a declamation that neither, with the Pelagians, is too much to be granted to the free will, nor, with the Manicheans, is all freedom to be denied it. Very well; but what difference is there between the Pelagians and our adversaries, since both hold that without the Holy Ghost men can love God and perform God's commandments with respect to the substance of the acts, and can merit grace and justification by works which reason performs by itself, without the Holy Ghost? How many absurdities follow from these Pelagian opinions, which are taught with great authority in the schools! These Augustine, following Paul, refutes with great emphasis, whose judgment we have recounted above in the article Of Justification. (See p. 119 and 153.) Nor, indeed, do we deny liberty to the human will. The human will has liberty in the choice of works and things which reason comprehends by itself. It can to a certain extent render civil righteousness or the righteousness of works; it can speak of God, offer to God a certain service by an outward work, obey magistrates, parents; in the choice of an outward work it can restrain the hands from murder, from adultery, from theft. Since there is left in human nature reason and judgment concerning objects subjected to the senses, choice between these things, and the liberty and power to render civil righteousness, are also left. For Scripture calls this the righteousness of the flesh which the carnal nature, i. e., reason, renders by itself, without the Holy Ghost. Although the power of concupiscence is such that men more frequently obey evil dispositions than sound judgment. And the devil, who is efficacious in the godless, as Paul says, Eph. 2, 2, does not cease to incite this feeble nature to various offenses. These are the reasons why even civil righteousness is rare among men, as we see that not even the philosophers themselves, who seem to have aspired after this righteousness, attained it. But it is false to say that he who performs the works of the commandments without grace does not sin. And they add further that such works also merit de congruo the remission of sins and justification. For human hearts without the Holy Ghost are without the fear of God; without trust toward God, they do not believe that they are heard, forgiven, helped, and preserved by God. Therefore glauben und also auf einen unsichtbaren Gott sich ganz [zu]wagen und [zu] verlassen und, wie Petrus sagt, 1. Ep. 1, 8, den Christum, den wir nicht sehen, [zu] lieben und groß[zuschätzen], das kommt auch die Heiligen schwer an; wie sollte es denn in [den] Gottlosen leicht sein? Dann heben wir an recht zu glauben, wenn unsere Herzen erst erschreckt werden und durch Christum wieder aufgerichtet, da wir durch den Heiligen Geist neugeboren werden, wie oben gesagt.

75) Prodest igitur ista distributio, in qua tribuitur libero arbitrio iustitia civilis, et iustitia spiritualis gubernationi Spiritus Sancti in renatis. Ita enim retinetur paedagogia, quia omnes homines pariter debent scire, et quod Deus illam civilem iustitiam requirat, et quod aliquo modo praestare eam possimus. Et tamen ostenditur discrimen inter iustitiam humanam et spiritualem, inter philosophicam et doctrinam Spiritus Sancti, et intelligi potest, ad quid opus sit Spiritu Sancto. 76) Neque haec distributio a nobis inventa est, sed Scriptura clarissime tradit eam. Tractat eam et Augustinus, et est recens egregie tractata a Guilielmo Parisiensi, sed scelestè obrita est ab istis, qui somniaverunt homines legi Dei obedire posse sine Spiritu Sancto, dari autem Spiritum Sanctum, ut accedat respectus meritorii.

Art. XIX. De Causa Peccati.

77) Articulus XIX. recipiunt adversarii, in quo confitemur, quod, etsi unus ac solus Deus considerit universam naturam et [R. 220] conservet omnia, quae existunt, tamen causa peccati sit voluntas in diabolo et hominibus avertens se a Deo, iuxta dictum Christi de diabolo, Ioh. 8, 44: Quum loquitur mendacium, ex propriis loquitur.

Art. XX. De Bonis Operibus.

78) In articulo XX. diserte ponunt haec verba, quod reiiciant et improbant hoc, quod dicimus, quod non mereantur homines remissionem peccatorum bonis operibus. Hunc articulum clare praedicant se reiicere et improbare. Quid in re tam manifesta dicendum 79) est? Hic aperte ostendunt architecti Con-

Darum, ob wir gleich nachgeben, daß in unserm Vermögen sei, solch äußerlich Werk zu tun, so sagen wir doch, daß der freie Wille und Vernunft in geistlichen Sachen nichts vermag, nämlich Gott wahrlich [wahrhaft] glauben, gewiß sich zu verlassen, daß Gott bei uns sei, uns erhöere, unsere Sünden vergebe usw. Denn das sind die rechten, hohen, edelsten guten Werke der ersten Tafel in [den] zehn Geboten; die vermag kein Menschenherz ohne des Heiligen Geistes Licht und Gnade [zu tun], wie Paulus sagt zu den Korinthern: „Der natürliche Mensch vernimmt nichts vom Geist Gottes.“ Das ist, ein Mensch, der nicht erleuchtet ist durch Gottes Geist, vernimmt gar nichts aus natürlicher Vernunft von Gottes Willen oder göttlichen Sachen. Und das empfinden die Menschen, wenn sie ihr Herz fragen, wie sie gegen Gottes Willen gesinnt seien, ob sie auch gewiß dafürhalten, daß Gott ihrer wahrnehme und sie erhöere. Denn solches gewiß zu Darum ist's gut, daß man dieses klar unterscheidet, nämlich, daß die Vernunft und freier Wille vermag, etlichermaßen äußerlich ehrbar zu leben; aber neugeboren werden, inwendig ander Herz, Sinn und Mut kriegen, das wirkt allein der Heilige Geist. Also bleibt weltliche, äußerliche Zucht; denn Gott will ungeschicktes, wildes, freches Wesen und Leben nicht haben, und wird doch ein rechter Unterschied gemacht unter äußerlichem Weltleben und Frömmigkeit und der Frömmigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, die nicht philosophisch äußerlich ist, sondern inwendig im Herzen. Und diesen Unterschied haben wir nicht erdichtet, sondern die Heilige Schrift setzt solches klar. So handelt's auch Augustinus, und ist neulich von Guilielmo Parisienf auch fleißig geschrieben und gehandelt. Aber diejenigen, die ihnen [sich] selbst erdichten und erträumen, als vermöchten die Menschen Gottes Gesetz zu halten ohne den Heiligen Geist, und als werde der Heilige Geist uns Gnade geben in Ansehung unser Verdienstes, haben diese nötige Lehre schändlich unterdrückt.

Artikel XIX. Von der Ursache der Sünde.

Den XIX. Artikel lassen ihnen die Widersacher gefallen, da wir lehren, daß, wiewohl der einige Gott die ganze Welt und ganze Natur geschaffen hat und alle Stunde alle Creaturen erhält, so ist er doch nicht eine Ursache der Sünde, sondern der böse Wille in Teufeln und Menschen, der sich von Gott abkehrt, der ist eine Ursache der Sünde, wie Christus sagt von dem Teufel: „Wenn er Lügen redet, so redet er aus seinem Eigenn.“

Artikel XX. Von guten Werken.

Im XX. Artikel setzen sie klar diese Worte, daß sie unsere Lehre verwerfen und verdammen, da wir sagen, daß die Leute durch gute Werke nicht verdienen Vergebung der Sünden. Das merke jedermann wohl: eben den Artikel verdammen und verwerfen sie mit klaren Worten. Was ist nun not, in dieser öffentlichen Sache viel Worte

Therefore, although we concede to free will the liberty and power to perform the outward works of the Law, yet we do not ascribe to free will these spiritual matters, namely, truly to fear God, truly to believe God, truly to be confident and hold that God regards us, hears us, forgives us, etc. These are the true works of the First Table, which the heart cannot render without the Holy Ghost, as Paul says, 1 Cor. 2, 14: The natural man, i. e., man using only natural strength, receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. [That is, a person who is not enlightened by the Spirit of God does not, by his natural reason, receive anything of God's will and divine matters.] And this can be decided if men consider what their hearts believe concerning God's will, whether they are truly confident that they are regarded and heard by God. Even for saints to retain this faith [and, as Peter says (1. Ep. 1, 8), to risk and commit himself entirely to God, whom he does not see, to love Christ, and esteem Him highly, whom he does not see] is difficult, so far is it from existing in the godless. But it is conceived, as we have said above, when terrified hearts hear the Gospel and receive consolation [when we are born anew of the Holy Ghost].

Therefore such a distribution is of advantage in which civil righteousness is ascribed to the free will and spiritual righteousness to the governing of the Holy Ghost in the regenerate. For thus the outward discipline is retained, because all men ought to know equally, both that God requires this civil righteousness [God will not tolerate indecent, wild, reckless conduct], and that, in a measure, we can afford it. And yet a distinction is shown between human and spiritual righteousness, between philosophical doctrine and the doctrine of the Holy Ghost, and it can be understood for what there is need of the Holy Ghost. Nor has this distribution been invented by us, but Scripture most clearly teaches it. Augustine also treats of it, and recently it has been well treated of by William of Paris, but it has been wickedly suppressed by those who have dreamt that men can obey God's Law without the Holy Ghost, but that the Holy Ghost is given in order that, in addition, it may be considered meritorious.

Article XIX: Of the Cause of Sin.

The Nineteenth Article the adversaries receive, in which we confess that, although God only and alone has framed all nature, and preserves all things which exist, yet [He is not the cause of sin, but] the cause of sin is the will in the devil and men turning itself away from God, according to the saying of Christ concerning the devil, John 8, 44: When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own.

Article XX: Of Good Works.

In the Twentieth Article they distinctly lay down these words, namely, that they reject and condemn our statement that men do not merit the remission of sins by good works. [Mark this well!] They clearly declare that they reject and condemn this article. What is to be said on a subject so manifest? Here the framers of the Confufutationis, quo spiritu agantur. Quid est enim certius in ecclesia, quam quod remissio peccatorum contingat gratis propter Christum, quod Christus sit propitiatus pro peccatis, non nostra opera, sicut Petrus inquit Act. 10, 43: Huic omnes prophetae perhibent testimonium, in nomine ipsius accipere remissionem peccatorum omnes, qui credunt in eum. Huic ecclesiae prophetarum assentiamur potius quam istis perditis scriptoribus Confutationis, qui tam impudenter blasphemant Christum. Nam etiamsi qui fuerunt scriptores, qui senserunt post remissionem peccatorum homines iustos esse coram Deo, non fide, sed ipsis operibus, tamen hoc non senserunt, quod ipsa remissio peccatorum contingat propter opera nostra, non gratis propter Christum.

Christum so unerschäm't lästern. Denn niemwohl etliche Lehrer also auch davon geschrieben, daß wir hernach, wenn uns die Sünde vergeben ist, nicht durch den Glauben, sondern durch unsere eigenen Werke Gnade erlangen, so haben sie doch das nicht gehalten, daß die Vergebung der Sünden an ihr [sich] selbst um unserer Werke willen uns widerfahre, und nicht um Christus' willen.

81] Non ferenda est igitur blasphemiam tribuere honorem Christi nostris operibus. Nihil pudet iam istos theologos, si talem sententiam in ecclesia audent ferre. Neque dubitamus, quin optimus Imperator ac plerique Principum hunc locum nullo modo fuerint in Confutatione relicturi, si essent admoniti. 82] Infinita hoc loco testimonia ex Scriptura, ex patribus citare possemus. Verum et supra satis multa de hac re diximus. Et nihil opus est pluribus testimoniis illi, qui scit, quare Christus nobis donatus sit, qui scit Christum esse propitiationem pro peccatis nostris. Esaias inquit 53, 6: Posuit Dominus in eo [R. 221] iniquitates omnium nostrum. Adversarii contra docent Deum ponere iniquitates nostras non in Christo, sed in nostris operibus. Neque hic dicere libet, qualia opera doceant. 83] Videmus horribile decretum contra nos compositum esse, quod magis terreret nos, si de ambiguis aut levibus rebus contenderemus. Nunc quum conscientiae nostrae intelligant damari ab adversariis manifestam veritatem, cuius propugnatio ecclesiae necessaria est et amplificat gloriam Christi, facile terrores mundi contemnimus, et ingenti animo, si quid erit patiendum, propter gloriam Christi, pro- 84] pter utilitatem ecclesiae feremus. Quis non gaudeat mori in confessione horum articulorum, quod remissionem peccatorum fide consequamur gratis propter Christum, quod operibus nostris non mereamur remissionem 85] peccatorum? Nullam habebunt satis firmam consolationem conscientiae piorum adversus terrores peccati et mortis et adversus diabolum sollicitantem ad desperationem, si non scient, se debere statuere, quod gratis propter Christum habeant remissionem peccatorum. Haec fides sustentat et vivificat corda in illo asperissimo certamine desperationis.

Zweifel vor Gott gewiß sind, daß die Widersacher verdammen die öffentliche göttliche Wahrheit und die rechte, christliche, selige, heilige Lehre, ohne welche keine christliche Kirche irgend sein kann, welche ein jeder Christ, sofern sein Leib und Leben reicht, schuldig ist, zu der Ehre Gottes zu bekennen, zu retten und zu schützen: so lassen wir uns von solcher heilsamen Lehre nicht abschrecken. Denn wer wollte ihm [sich] doch nicht wünschen an seinem letzten Ende, daß er im Bekenntnis des Artikels sterben möchte, zu machen? Die großen Doctores und Meister der Konfutation geben da öffentlich an Tag, was für ein Geist aus ihnen redet. Denn in der christlichen Kirche ist das kein geringer Artikel, sondern der allerhöchste und Hauptartikel, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen ohne unser Verdienst, durch Christum, und daß nicht unsere Werke, sondern Christus sei die Versöhnung für unsere Sünden, wie Petrus sagt: „Dem Jesu geben Zeugnis alle Propheten, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen, alle, die an ihn glauben.“ Solch stark Zeugnis aller heiligen Propheten mag billig ein Beschluß heißen der katholischen christlichen Kirche. Denn auch ein einiger Prophet gar groß bei Gott geachtet und ein Weltkönig ist. Derselben heiligen Kirche und dem einträchtigen Munde aller Propheten sollen wir billiger glauben denn den heillosen, gottlosen Sophisten, so die Konfutation gemacht haben und Darum ist es eine greuliche Gotteslästerung, die Ehre Christi also unsern Menschenwerken zu geben. Und wir vertrauen und versehen uns zu Kaiserlicher Majestät und auch andern Fürsten dieser kaiserlichen, fürstlichen Tugend, daß sie so öffentliche Unwahrheit und Ungrund, dadurch vor aller Welt Gott und das Evangelium gelästert wird, in keinem Wege würden in der Konfutation, wenn sie verwarnt wären, gelassen haben. Denn daß dieser Artikel gewißlich göttlich und wahr ist, und daß dies die heilige göttliche Wahrheit sei, [dafür] könnten wir hier gar nahe unzählige Sprüche der Schrift vorbringen, auch aus den Vätern. Und ist gar nahe keine Silbe, kein Blatt in der Bibel, in den vornehmsten Büchern der Heiligen Schrift, da das nicht klar gemeldet wäre. Wir haben oben auch viel von diesen Stücken gesagt, und gottesfürchtige, fromme Herzen, die da wohl wissen, warum Christus gegeben ist, die da nicht für aller Welt Güter und Königreiche entbehren wollten, daß Christus nicht unser einiger Schatz, unser einiger Mittler und Versöhner wäre, die müssen sich hier entfesen und erschrecken, daß Gottes heiliges Wort und Wahrheit so öffentlich von armen Menschen verachtet und verdammt wird. Jesaias der Prophet sagt: „Der Herr hat auf ihn gelegt unser aller Sünde.“ Die Widersacher aber lügenstrafen Jesaiam und die ganze Bibel und Schrift und sagen, er habe unsere Sünde auf uns und unsere Werke und bettelische Genußung gelegt. Ich will dennoch hier schweigen der kindischen Worte, Rosenkränze, Wallfahrten und dergleichen. Wir sehen gar wohl das ernstliche Mandat und das kaiserliche Edikt, wider uns und unsere Lehre ausgegangen [den Abschied des Augsburger Reichstags vom 19. November 1530]; des sollten wir billig erschrecken, wenn wir von leichten, geringen Sachen oder von Sachen, die in Zweifel stünden, zu handeln hätten. Nachdem wir aber, Gott Lob! durch Gottes Wort in unsern Herzen und Gewissen des ganz ohne allen tation openly show by what spirit they are led. For what in the Church is more certain than that the remission of sins occurs freely for Christ's sake, that Christ, and not our works, is the propitiation for sins, as Peter says, Acts 10, 43: To Him give all the prophets witness that through His name, whosoever believeth on Him, shall receive remission of sins? [This strong testimony of all the holy prophets may duly be called a decree of the catholic Christian Church. For even a single prophet is very highly esteemed by God and a treasure worth the whole world.] To this Church of the prophets we would rather assent than to these abandoned writers of the Confutation, who so impudently blaspheme Christ. For although there were writers who held that after the remission of sins men are just before God, not by faith, but by works themselves, yet they did not hold this, namely, that the remission of sins itself occurs on account of our works, and not freely for Christ's sake.

Therefore the blasphemy of ascribing Christ's honor to our works is not to be endured. These theologians are now entirely without shame if they dare to bring such an opinion into the Church. Nor do we doubt that His Most Excellent Imperial Majesty and very many of the princes would not have allowed this passage to remain in the Confutation if they had been admonished of it. Here we could cite infinite testimonies from Scripture and from the Fathers [that this article is certainly divine and true, and this is the sacred and divine truth. For there is hardly a syllable, hardly a leaf in the Bible, in the principal books of the Holy Scriptures, where this is not clearly stated.] But also above we have said enough on this subject. And there is no need of more testimonies for one who knows why Christ has been given to us, who knows that Christ is the propitiation for our sins. [God-fearing, pious hearts that know well why Christ has been given, who for all the possessions and kingdoms of the world would not be without Christ as our only Treasure, our only Mediator and Redeemer, must here be shocked and terrified that God's holy Word and Truth should be so openly despised and condemned by poor men.] Isaiah says, 53, 6: The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all. The adversaries, on the other hand, [accuse Isaiah and the entire Bible of lying and] teach that God lays our iniquities not on Christ, but on our [beggarly] works. Neither are we disposed to mention here the sort of works [rosaries, pilgrimages, and the like] which they teach. We see that a horrible decree has been prepared against us, which would terrify us still more if we were contending concerning doubtful or trifling subjects. Now, since our consciences understand that by the adversaries the manifest truth is condemned, whose defense is necessary for the Church and increases the glory of Christ, we easily despise the terrors of the world, and with a strong spirit will bear whatever is to be suffered for the glory of Christ and the advantage of the Church. Who would not rejoice to die in the confession of such articles as that we obtain the remission of sins by faith freely for Christ's sake, that we do not merit the remission of sins by our works? [Experience shows — and the monks themselves must admit it — that] The consciences of the pious will have no sufficiently sure con-daß wir Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben, ohne unser Verdienst und Werk, durch das Blut Christi erlangen? Es gibt die Erfahrung, wie die Mönche selbst bekennen müssen, daß sich die Gewissen nicht lassen stillen noch zufrieden bringen denn durch den Glauben an Christum. Und die Gewissen können keinen rechten, beständigen Trost haben in den großen Ängsten an [in] der Todesstunde und in Anfechtung wider das große Schrecken des Todes, der Sünde, wenn sie nicht an die Zusage der Gnade in Christo sich halten. Auch können sie keinen beständigen Trost haben wider den Teufel, welcher dann erst stark die Herzen drängt, ängstet und zur Verzweiflung reißt und alle unsere Werke in einem Augenblick wie den Staub hinwegbläst, wenn sie nicht an dem Evangelio, an dieser Lehre, festhalten, daß wir ohne unser Verdienst, durch das teure Blut Christi Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Denn der Glaube allein erquid und erhält uns in dem großen Todeskampf, in den großen Ängsten, wenn keine Creatur helfen kann, ja, wenn wir außerhalb dieser ganzen sichtlichen [sichtbaren] Creatur von dannen in ein ander Wesen und Welt sollen abscheiden und sterben.

86] Digna igitur causa est, propter quam nullum recusemus periculum. „Tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito“, quisquis assentiris Confessionis nostrae, quum adversarii terroribus, cruciatibus, suppliciis conantur excutere tibi tantam consolationem, quae universae ecclesiae in hoc nostro articulo proposita est. Non deerunt quaerenti testimonia Scripturae, quae confirmabunt animum. Nam Paulus tota voce, ut dicitur, clamat Rom. 3, 24 sq. et 4, 16, gratis remitti peccata propter Christum. Ideo inquit: Ex fide iustificamur, et gratis, ut firma sit promissio. Id est, si ex nostris operibus penderet promissio, non esset firma. Si propter nostra opera daretur remissio peccatorum, quando sciremus eam nos consecutos esse, quando [R. 222 reperiret opus conscientia territa, quod statueret ad placandam iram Dei sufficere? Sed 88] supra de tota re diximus. Inde lector sumat testimonia. Nam hanc non disputationem, sed querelam indignitas rei nobis expressit, quod hoc loco diserte posuerunt se improbare hunc nostrum articulum, quod remissionem peccatorum consequamur non propter opera nostra, sed fide et gratis propter Christum.

habon genug gesagt; da mag ein jeder Sprüche der Schrift, so diese Lehre gründend, suchen. Denn an diesem Ort hat mich bewegt, so heftig zu klagen, die greuliche, unverschämte, übermächtige [übermäßige], vorgefaßte Bosheit der Widersacher, da sie mit klaren Worten setzen, daß sie diesen Artikel verwerfen, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen nicht durch unsere Werke, sondern ohne Verdienst, durch den Glauben an Christum.

89] Adversarii etiam addunt testimonia suae condemnationi. Et operae pretium est unum atque alterum recitare. Allegant ex Petro, 2. ep. 1, 10: Studete firmam facere vocationem vestram etc. Iam vides, lector, adversarios nostros non perdidisse operam in discenda dialectica, sed habere artificium ratiocinandi ex Scripturis prorsus, quidquid libet. Facite firmam vocationem vestram per bona opera. Igitur opera merentur remissionem peccatorum. Sane concinna erit argumentatio, si quis sic ratiocinetur de reo capitalis poenae, cui poena remissa est: Magistratus praecipit, ut in posterum abstineas ab alieno. Igitur per hoc meritis es condonationem poenae, quod nunc ab alieno abstines. 90] Sic argumentari est ex non causa causam facere. Nam Petrus loquitur de operibus sequentibus remissionem peccatorum et docet, quare sint facienda, scilicet, ut ait firma vocatio, hoc est, ne vocatione sua excident, si iterum peccent. Facite bona opera, ut perseveretis in vocatione, ne amittatis dona vocationis, quae prius contigerunt, non propter

Darum ist es eine Sache, die wahrlich der Rede wert ist, um welcher willen ein jeder Christ von Herzen gern alles wagen und in [Ge]fahr setzen soll. Darum alle diejenigen, so dieser unserer Confession anhangen, dürfen sich nicht schreden oder irren [irremachen] lassen, sondern mögen in aller Freudigkeit auf Gott und den Herrn Christum es getrost und fröhlich wagen und diese öffentliche Wahrheit wider alle Welt, Tyrannie, Zorn, Drohen, Schrecken, auch wider alles tyrannische tägliche Morden und Verfolgen fröhlich bekennen. Denn wer wollte ihm [sich] doch solchen großen, ja ewigen Trost, daran der ganzen christlichen Kirche alles Heil gelegen ist, nehmen lassen? Wer die Bibel in die Hand nimmt und mit Ernst liest, der merkt bald, daß allenthalben in der Schrift diese Lehre gegründet ist. Denn Paulus sagt klar Röm. 3 und 4, daß die Sünden ohne Verdienst, um Christus' willen vergeben werden; darum sagt er: „Wir werden gerecht durch den Glauben ohne Verdienst, daß die Verheißung feststehe.“ Das ist, so die Verheißung aus unsern Werken wäre, so wäre sie nicht fest. Und wenn die Gnade oder Vergebung der Sünden gegeben würde um unserer Werke willen, wann würden wir dann gewiß, daß wir Gnade erlangt hätten? Wann wollte das Gewissen ein solch Werk finden, das genug wäre, Gottes Zorn zu versöhnen? Wir haben hier oben

Die Widersacher führen auch etliche Sprüche der Schrift ein, warum sie diesen Artikel verdammen. Nämlich bringen sie den Spruch Petri hervor: „Fleißiget euch, euren Beruf festzumachen durch gute Werke“ usw. Da sieht jedermann, daß unsere Widersacher ihr Geld nicht übel angelegt, da sie Dialecticam studiert haben. Denn sie mögen die Sprüche der Schrift gereimt, unge-reimt, schließlich, unschließlich, wie sie wollen, und wie es ihnen gefällt, einführen. Denn also schließen sie: Petrus sagt: „Fleißiget euch, durch gute Werke euren Beruf festzumachen“; darum verdienen wir durch Werke Vergebung der Sünden. Es ist wahrlich eine feine Argumentation, als wenn einer spräche von einem Beklagten im Palast-gericht, welchem das Leben gestiftet wäre: Der Richter hat geboten, daß der forthin sich solcher Übeltat soll enthalten; darum so hat er verdient mit solchem Enthalten, daß ihm das Leben gestiftet ist. Also argumentieren, das heißt, ex non causa causam machen. Denn Petrus redet von guten Werken und Früchten, die da folgen dem Glauben, und lehrt, warum man sie tun solle, nämlich, daß wir unsern Beruf festmachen, das ist, solation against the terrors of sin and of death, and against the devil soliciting to despair [and who in a moment blows away all our works like dust], if they do not know that they ought to be confident that they have the remission of sins freely for Christ's sake. This faith sustains and quickens hearts in that most violent conflict with despair [in the great agony of death, in the great anguish, when no creature can help, yea, when we must depart from this entire visible creation into another state and world, and must die].

Therefore the cause is one which is worthy that for its sake we should refuse no danger. Whosoever you are that has assented to our Confession, "do not yield to the wicked, but, on the contrary, go forward the more boldly," when the adversaries endeavor, by means of terrors and tortures and punishments, to drive away from you that consolation which has been tendered to the entire Church in this article of ours [but with all cheerfulness rely confidently and gladly on God and the Lord Jesus, and joyfully confess this manifest truth in opposition to the tyranny, wrath, threatening, and terrors of all the world, yea, in opposition to the daily murders and persecution of tyrants. For who would suffer to have taken from him this great, yea, everlasting consolation on which the entire salvation of the whole Christian Church depends? Any one who picks up the Bible and reads it earnestly will soon observe that this doctrine has its foundation everywhere in the Bible]. Testimonies of Scripture will not be wanting to one seeking them, which will establish his mind. For Paul at the top of his voice, as the saying is, cries out, Rom. 3, 24 f., and 4, 16, that sins are freely remitted for Christ's sake. It is of faith, he says, that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure. That is, if the promise would depend upon our works, it would not be sure. If remission of sins would be given on account of our works, when would we know that we had obtained it, when would a terrified conscience find a work which it would consider sufficient to appease God's wrath? But we spoke of the entire matter above. Thence let the reader derive testimonies. For the unworthy treatment of the subject has forced from us the present, not discussion, but complaint that on this topic they have distinctly recorded themselves as disapproving of this article of ours, that we obtain remission of sins not on account of our works, but by faith and freely on account of Christ.

The adversaries also add testimonies to their own condemnation, and it is worth while to recite several of them. They quote from Peter, 2. Ep. 1, 10: Give diligence to make your calling sure, etc. Now you see, reader, that our adversaries have not wasted labor in learning logic, but have the art of inferring from the Scriptures whatever pleases them [whether it is in harmony with the Scriptures or out of harmony; whether it is correctly or incorrectly concluded. For they conclude thus:] "Make your calling sure by good works." Therefore works merit the remission of sins. A very agreeable mode of reasoning, if one would argue thus concerning a person sentenced to capital punishment, whose punishment has been remitted: "The magistrate commands that hereafter you abstain from that which belongs to another. Therefore you have merited the remission of the penalty, because you are now abstaining from what belongs to another." Thus to argue is to make a cause out of that which is not a cause. For Peter speaks of works following the remission of sins, and teaches why they should be done, namely, that the calling may be sure, i. e., lest they may fall from their calling if they sin again. Do good works that you may persevere in your call-

sind, nicht um der folgenden Werke willen. Denn in dem Beruf bleibt man fest durch den Glauben, und der Glaube und [der] Heilige Geist bleibt in denjenigen nicht, die sündlich Leben führen.

91] Addunt alia testimonia non melius cohaerentia. Postremo dicunt hanc opinionem ante mille annos Augustini tempore damnatam esse. Id quoque falsissimum est. Semper enim ecclesia Christi sensit remissionem peccatorum gratis contingere. Imo Pelagiani damnati sunt, qui gratiam propter opera no- 92] stra dari contendebant. Ceterum supra satis ostendimus, quod sentiamus bona [R. 223] opera necessario sequi debere fidem. Non enim abolemus legem, inquit Paulus Rom. 3, 31, sed stabilimus. Quia quum fide accepimus Spiritum Sanctum, necessario sequitur legis impletio, qua subinde crescit dilectio, patientia, castitas et alii fructus Spiritus.

Art. XXI. (IX.)

De Invocatione Sanctorum.

1] Articulum XXI. simpliciter damnant, quod invocationem sanctorum non requirimus. Nec ullo in loco prolixius rhetoricantur. Neque tamen aliud quidquam efficiunt, quam sanctos honorandos esse, item sanctos, qui vivunt, orare pro aliis: quasi vero propterea necessaria sit invocatio mortuorum sancto- 2] rum. Allegat Cyprianum, quod vivum Cornelium rogaverit, ut discedens pro fratribus oret. [Cyprianus, Lib. 7, ep. 7 ad Cornelium papam: „Memores nostri invicem sumus, concordem atque unanimes utrobique pro nobis semper oremus. Et si quis hinc nostrum prior divina dignationis celeritate praecesserit, perseveret apud Deum nostra dilectio, pro fratribus et sororibus nostris apud misericordiam Patris non cesset oratio.“] Hoc exemplo probant mortuorum invocationem. Citant et Hieronymum contra Vigilantium: In hac arena, inquiunt, ante mille et centum annos vicit Hieronymus Vigilantium. Sic triumphant adversarii, quasi iam sit debellatum. Nec vident isti asini, apud Hieronymum contra Vigilantium nullam exstare syllabam de invocatione. Loquitur de honoribus sancto- 3] rum, non de invocatione. Neque reliqui veteres scriptores ante Gregorium fecerunt mentionem invocationis. Certe haec invocatio cum his opinionibus, quas nunc docent adversarii de applicatione meritum, non habet testimonia veterum scriptorum.

4] Confessio nostra probat honores sanctorum. Nam hic triplex honos probandus est. Primus est gratiarum actio. Debemus enim Deo gratias agere, quod ostenderit exempla misericordiae, quod significaverit se [R. 224] velle salvare homines, quod dederit doctores aut alia dona ecclesiae. Et haec dona, ut sunt maxima, amplificanda sunt, et laudandi

daß wir nicht wiederum vom Evangelio fallen, wenn wir wiederum sündigten. Will sagen: Tut gute Werke, daß ihr bei dem Evangelio, bei eurem himmlischen Beruf bleibt, daß ihr nicht wiederum abfallt, lalt werdet, verliert Geist und Gaben, die euch aus Gnaden durch Christum widerfahren

Der Sprüche und Zeugnisse setzen sie mehr, die sich ebensowohl reimen. Dazu dürfen sie sagen, daß diese Meinung vor tausend Jahren zu Augustinus' Zeiten verdammt sei. Das ist nicht wahr, sondern eine Lüge. Denn die christliche Kirche hat allezeit gehalten, daß Vergebung der Sünden ohne Verdienst uns widerfahre, und die Pelagianer sind darum verdammt, die da sagten, die Gnade würde uns gegeben um unserer Werke willen. Wir haben oben genug angezeigt, daß wir auch lehren, daß, wo Glaube ist, da sollen auch gute Früchte und gute Werke folgen. „Denn wir tun das Gesetz nicht ab, sondern richten es auf“, wie Paulus sagt. Denn wenn wir durch den Glauben den Heiligen Geist empfangen haben, so folgen gute Früchte, da nehmen wir denn zu in der Liebe, in Geduld, in Keuschheit und andern Früchten des Geistes.

Den einundzwanzigsten Artikel verdammen die Widersacher ganz, daß wir vom Anrufen der Heiligen nichts lehren, und sie handeln kein Stück so gar mit weitläufigem Geschwätze und richten doch nichts aus, denn daß sie sagen, man solle die Heiligen ehren. Item, sie probieren [beweisen], die lebendigen Heiligen beten einer für den andern; daraus schließen sie, daß man die toten Heiligen solle und müsse anrufen. Sie ziehen an Cyprianum, der habe Cornelium, da er noch gelebt, gebeten, daß er, wenn er gestorben wäre, für die Brüder bitten wolle. Damit beweisen sie, daß man die toten Heiligen müsse anrufen. Auch ziehen sie an Hieronymum wider Vigilantium und sagen: In dieser Sache hat vor tausend Jahren Hieronymus Vigilantium übermunden. Also gehen sie überhin, meinen, sie haben weit gewonnen, und sehen die groben Esel nicht, daß im Hieronymo wider Vigilantium keine Silbe steht vom Anrufen der Heiligen. Hieronymus redet nicht vom Anrufen der Heiligen, sondern von Heiligen ehren. Auch so haben die alten Lehrer vor Gregorius' Zeiten des Anrufens der Heiligen nicht gedacht. Und die Anrufung der Heiligen wie auch die applicatio des Verdienstes der Heiligen, davon die Widersacher lehren, hat gar keinen Grund in der Schrift.

Artikel XXI. (IX.)

Vom Anrufen der Heiligen.

In unserer Konfession leugnen wir nicht, daß man die Heiligen ehren soll. Denn dreierlei Ehre ist, damit man die Heiligen ehrt. Für das erste, daß wir Gott dank sagen, daß er uns an den Heiligen Exempel seiner Gnade hat dargestellt, daß er hat Lehrer in der Kirche und andere Gaben gegeben, und die Gaben, weil sie groß sind, soll man sie hoch preisen, auch die Heiligen selbst loben, ing, that you [do not fall away again, grow cold and] may not lose the gifts of your calling, which were given you before, and not on account of works that follow, and which now are retained by faith; for faith does not remain in those who lose the Holy Ghost, who reject repentance, just as we have said above (p. 253) that faith exists in repentance.

They add other testimonies cohering no better. Lastly they say that this opinion was condemned a thousand years before, in the time of Augustine. This also is quite false. For the Church of Christ always held that the remission of sins is obtained freely. Yea, the Pelagians were condemned, who contended that grace is given on account of our works. Besides, we have above shown sufficiently that we hold that good works ought necessarily to follow faith. For we do not make void the Law, says Paul, Rom. 3, 31; yea, we establish the Law, because when by faith we have received the Holy Ghost, the fulfilling of the Law necessarily follows, by which love, patience, chastity, and other fruits of the Spirit gradually grow.

Article XXI (IX):

Of the Invocation of Saints.

The Twenty-first Article they absolutely condemn, because we do not require the invocation of saints. Nor on any topic do they speak more eloquently and with more proximity. Nevertheless they do not effect anything else than that the saints should be honored; likewise, that the saints who live pray for others; as though, indeed, the invocation of dead saints were on that account necessary. They cite Cyprian, because he asked Cornelius while yet alive to pray for his brothers when departing. By this example they prove the invocation of the dead. They quote also Jerome against Vigilantius. "On this field" [in this matter], they say, "eleven hundred years ago, Jerome overcame Vigilantius." Thus the adversaries triumph, as though the war were already ended. Nor do those asses see that in Jerome, against Vigilantius, there is not a syllable concerning invocation. He speaks concerning honors for the saints, not concerning invocation. Neither have the rest of the ancient writers before Gregory made mention of invocation. Certainly this invocation, with these opinions which the adversaries now teach concerning the application of merits, has not the testimonies of the ancient writers.

Our Confession approves honors to the saints. For here a threefold honor is to be approved. The first is thanksgiving. For we ought to give thanks to God because He has shown examples of mercy; because He has shown that He wishes to save men; because He has given teachers or other gifts to the Church. And these gifts, as they are the greatest, should be amplified, and the saints themselves should be praised, who have faithfully used these gifts, just as Christ praises ipsi sancti, qui his donis fideliter usi sunt, sicut Christus laudat fideles negotiatores, 5] Matth. 25, 21. 23. Secundus cultus est confirmatio fidei nostrae; quum videmus Petro condonari negationem, erigimur et nos, ut magis credamus, quod vere gratia exuberet 6] supra peccatum, Rom. 5, 20. Tertius honos est imitatio primum fidei, deinde ceterarum virtutum, quas imitari pro sua quisque vocatione debet. Hos veros honores non requirunt adversarii. Tantum de invocatione, quae, etiamsi nihil haberet periculi, tamen non est necessaria, rixantur.

8] Praeterea et hoc largimur, quod angeli orent pro nobis. Exstat enim testimonium Zachariae 1, 12, ubi angelus orat: Domine exercituum, usque quo tu non misereberis 9] Ierusalem etc.? De sanctis etsi concedimus, quod, sicut vivi orant pro ecclesia universa in genere, ita in coelis orent pro ecclesia in genere, tametsi testimonium nullum de mortuis orantibus exstat in Scripturis, praeter illud somnium sumptum ex libro Machabaeorum posteriore, 2 Macc. 15, 14.

Porro ut maxime pro ecclesia orent sancti, 10] tamen non sequitur, quod sint invocandi. Quamquam confessio nostra hoc tantum affirmat, quod Scriptura non doceat sanctorum invocationem, seu petere a sanctis auxilium. Quum autem neque praeceptum neque promissio neque exemplum ex Scripturis de invocandis sanctis afferri possit, sequitur conscientiam nihil posse certi de illa invocatione habere. Et quum oratio debeat ex fide fieri, quomodo scimus, quod Deus approbet illam invocationem? Unde scimus sine testimonio Scripturae, quod sancti intelligant singulorum 11] preces? Quidam plane tribuunt divinitatem sanctis, videlicet quod tacitas cogitationes mentium in nobis cernant. Disputant de matutina et vespertina cognitione, [R. 225 fortassis, quia dubitant, utrum mane an vespere audiant. Haec comminiscuntur, non ut sanctos honore afficiant, sed ut quaeuosos 12] cultus defendant. Nihil afferri potest ab adversariis contra hanc rationem, quod, quum invocatio non habeat testimonium ex Verbo Dei, non possit affirmari, quod sancti intelligant invocationem nostram, aut, ut maxime intelligant, quod Deus eam approbet. Quare 13] adversarii non debebant nos ad rem incertam cogere, quia oratio sine fide non est oratio. Nam quod allegant ecclesiae exemplum, constat novum hunc in ecclesia morem esse; nam veteres orationes, etsi mentionem sanctorum faciunt, non tamen invocant sanctos. Quamquam etiam illa nova invocatio in ecclesia dissimilis est invocationi singulorum.

14] Deinde adversarii non solum invocationem in cultu sanctorum requirunt, sed etiam applicant merita sanctorum pro aliis et faciunt ex sanctis non solum deprecatores, sed etiam propitiatores. Id nullo modo ferendum est. Nam hic prorsus transfertur in sanctos die solche Gaben wohl gebraucht haben, wie Christus im Evangelio lobt die treuen Knechte. Die andere Ehre, so wir den Heiligen tun mögen, [ist,] daß wir an ihrem Exempel unsern Glauben stärken; als wenn ich sehe, daß Petro aus so reicher Gnade die Sünde vergeben ist, da er Christum verleugnet, wird mein Herz und Gewissen gestärkt, daß ich glaube, daß die Gnade mächtiger sei denn die Sünde. Für das dritte ehren wir die Heiligen, wenn wir ihres Glaubens, ihrer Liebe, ihrer Geduld Exempel nachfolgen, ein jeder nach seinem Beruf. Von dieser rechten Ehre der Heiligen reden die Widersacher gar nichts; allein von dem Anrufen der Heiligen, welches, wenn es auch ohne Fährlichkeit [Gefahr] der Gewissen wäre, doch nicht not ist, da danken sie von.

Darüber so geben wir ihnen nach, daß die Engel für uns bitten. Denn Zach. 1 steht geschrieben, daß der Engel bittet: „Herr Zebaoth, wie lange willst du dich nicht erbarmen über Jerusalem?“ Und wiederum wir nachgeben, daß, gleichwie die lebendigen Heiligen für die ganze Kirche bitten insgemein oder in genere, also mögen für die ganze Kirche die Heiligen im Himmel bitten insgemein, in genere. Doch hat solches kein Zeugnis in der Schrift denn allein den Traum, der genommen ist aus dem andern Buch Maccabaeorum.

Weiter, ob die Heiligen gleich beten für die Kirche, so folgt doch daraus nicht, daß man die Heiligen solle anrufen; wiewohl unsere Confessio allein dies setzt: In der Schrift steht nichts von dem Anrufen der Heiligen, oder daß man Hilfe suchen solle bei den Heiligen. So man nun weder Gebot noch Zusage noch Exempel aus der Schrift maq vorbringen, so folgt, daß kein Herz noch Gewissen darauf sich verlassen kann. Denn diem Weil ein jeglich Gebet soll aus dem Glauben geschehen, woher will ich denn wissen, daß Gott ihm [sich] gefallen läßt das Anrufen der Heiligen, wenn ich nicht Gottes Wort davon habe? Wodurch werde ich gewiß, daß die Heiligen mein Gebet und eines jeden besondern [insbesondere] hören? Ertliche machen schlecht [geradezu] Götter aus den Heiligen und sagen, sie können unsere Gedanken wissen und uns ins Herz sehen. Das selbe erdichten sie, nicht daß sie damit die Heiligen ehren, sondern daß sie ihre Ketzschmerei [Handel] und Jahrmarkt, welcher ihnen Geld [sein] trägt, verteidigen. Wir sagen noch wie vorhin]: In Gottes Wort, in der Schrift, steht nicht, daß die Heiligen unser Anrufen verstehen, und ob sie es verkünden, daß Gott ihm [sich] solch Anrufen gefallen lasse; so hat's je keinen Grund. Dabwider können die Widersacher nichts aufbringen; darum sollten die Widersacher uns zu ungewissen Dingen nicht zwingen oder dringen; denn ein Gebet ohne Glauben ist nicht ein Gebet. Denn daß sie sagen, die Kirche habe es im Gebrauch, so ist es doch gewiß, daß solches ein neuer Gebrauch in der Kirche ist, denn die alten Kollekten, ob sie wohl der Heiligen gedenken, so rufen sie doch die Heiligen nicht an.

Darüber reden die Widersacher nicht allein vom Anrufen der Heiligen, sondern sagen auch, daß Gott der Heiligen Verdienst annehme für unsere Sünde, und machen also aus den Heiligen nicht allein Fürbitter, sondern Mittler und Versöhner. Das ist nun gar nicht zu leiden; denn da geben faithful business-men, Matt. 25, 21, 23. The second service is the strengthening of our faith; when we see the denial forgiven Peter, we also are encouraged to believe the more that grace truly superabounds over sin, Rom. 5, 20. The third honor is the imitation, first, of faith, then of the other virtues, which every one should imitate according to his calling. These true honors the adversaries do not require. They dispute only concerning invocation, which, even though it would have no danger, nevertheless is not necessary.

Besides, we also grant that the angels pray for us. For there is a testimony in Zech. 1, 12, where an angel prays: O Lord of hosts, how long wilt Thou not have mercy on Jerusalem? Although concerning the saints we concede that, just as, when alive, they pray for the Church universal in general, so in heaven they pray for the Church in general, albeit no testimony concerning the praying of the dead is extant in the Scriptures, except the dream taken from the Second Book of Maccabees, 15, 14.

Moreover, even supposing that the saints pray for the Church ever so much, yet it does not follow that they are to be invoked; although our Confession affirms only this, that Scripture does not teach the invocation of the saints, or that we are to ask the saints for aid. But since neither a command, nor a promise, nor an example can be produced from the Scriptures concerning the invocation of saints, it follows that conscience can have nothing concerning this invocation that is certain. And since prayer ought to be made from faith, how do we know that God approves this invocation? Whence do we know without the testimony of Scripture that the saints perceive the prayers of each one? Some plainly ascribe divinity to the saints, namely, that they discern the silent thoughts of the minds in us. They dispute concerning morning and evening knowledge, perhaps because they doubt whether they hear us in the morning or the evening. They invent these things, not in order to treat the saints with honor, but to defend lucrative services. Nothing can be produced by the adversaries against this reasoning, that, since invocation does not have a testimony from God's Word, it cannot be affirmed that the saints understand our invocation, or, even if they understand it, that God approves it. Therefore the adversaries ought not to force us to an uncertain matter, because a prayer without faith is not prayer. For when they cite the example of the Church, it is evident that this is a new custom in the Church; for although the old prayers make mention of the saints, yet they do not invoke the saints. Although also this new invocation in the Church is dissimilar to the invocation of individuals.

Again, the adversaries not only require invocation in the worship of the saints, but also apply the merits of the saints to others, and make of the saints not only intercessors, but also propitiators. This is in no way to be endured. For here the honor belonging proprius honor Christi. Faciunt enim eos mediatores et propitiatores, et quamquam distinguunt de mediatoribus intercessionis et mediatoribus redemptionis, tamen plane faciunt ex sanctis mediatores redemptionis. 15] Atque etiam illud dicunt sine testimonio Scripturae, quod sint mediatores intercessionis, quod, ut verecundissime dicatur, tamen obscurat officium Christi et fiduciam misericordiae debitam Christo transfert in sanctos. Fingunt enim homines Christum duriores esse et sanctos placabiliores, et magis confidunt misericordia sanctorum quam misericordia Christi, et fugientes Christum quaerunt sanctos. Ita faciunt ex eis re ipsa mediatores redemptionis.

einem Thronen, vertrauen mehr auf die Güte der Heiligen denn auf die Güte Christi, laufen von Christo und suchen der Heiligen Hilfe. Also machen sie im Grunde doch mediatores redemptionis aus den Heiligen.

16] Itaque ostendemus, quod vere faciant ex sanctis non tantum deprecatores, sed propitiatores, hoc est, mediatores redemptionis. Nondum recitamus hic vulgi abusus. De doctorum opinionibus adhuc loquimur. [R. 226 Reliqua etiam imperiti iudicare possunt.

17] In propitiatore haec duo concurrunt. Primum oportet exstare Verbum Dei, ex quo certo sciamus, quod Deus velit misereri et exaudire invocantes per hunc propitiatorem. Talis exstat de Christo promissio, Ioh. 16, 23: Quidquid petieritis Patrem in nomine meo, dabit vobis. De sanctis nulla exstat talis promissio. Quare conscientiae non possunt certo statuere, quod per sanctorum invocationem exaudiamur. Itaque invocatio illa 18] non fit ex fide. Deinde mandatum etiam habemus, ut invocemus Christum iuxta illud Matth. 11, 28: Venite ad me, qui laboratis etc., quod certe nobis quoque dictum est. Et Esaias ait 11, 10: In die illa stabit radix Iesse, in signum populorum; ipsum gentes deprecabuntur. Et Ps. 45, 13: Vultum tuum deprecabuntur omnes divites plebis. Et Ps. 72, 11, 15: Et adorabunt eum omnes reges terrae. Et paulo post: Orabunt coram eo iugiter. Et Ioh. 5, 23 inquit Christus: Ut omnes honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem. Et Paulus 2 Thess. 2, 16, 17 orans inquit: Ipse autem Dominus noster Iesus Christus et Deus et Pater noster exhortetur corda vestra et confirmet vos etc. At de sanctorum invocatione, quod possunt adversarii praeceptum, quod exemplum ex Scripturis afferre? Alterum est in propitiatore, quod merita ipsius proposita sunt, ut quae pro aliis satisfacerent, quae aliis donentur imputatione divina, ut per ea tamquam propriis meritis iusti reputentur. Ut si quis amicus pro amico solvit aes alienum, debitor alieno merito tamquam proprio liberatur. Ita Christi merita nobis donantur, ut iusti reputemur fiducia meritum Christi, quum in eum credimus, tamquam propria merita haberemus.

sie die Ehre, so Christo allein gebührt, den Heiligen; denn sie machen aus ihnen Mittler und Verfähner. Und wiewohl sie wollen Unterschied machen unter Mittlern, die für uns bitten, und dem Mittler, der uns erlöst und Gott versöhnt hat, so machen sie doch aus den Heiligen Mittler, dadurch die Leute versöhnt werden. Und daß sie sagen, die Heiligen sind Mittler, für uns zu bitten, daß sagen sie auch ohne alle Schrift; und wenn man schon davon aufs glimpflichste reden will, so wird doch Christus und seine Wohltat durch solche Lehre unterdrückt und vertrauen [sie] da auf die Heiligen, da sie auf Christum vertrauen sollten. Denn sie erdichten ihnen [sich] selbst einen Bahn, als sei Christus ein strenger Richter und die Heiligen gnädige, gütige Mittler; fliehen also zu den Heiligen, scheuen sich vor Christo wie vor Heiligen denn auf die Güte Christi, laufen von Christo und suchen der Heiligen Hilfe. Also machen sie im Grunde doch mediatores redemptionis aus den Heiligen.

Derhalben wollen wir beweisen, daß sie aus den Heiligen machen nicht allein Fürbitter, sondern Verfähner und mediatores redemptionis. Wir reden hier noch nicht von groben Mißbräuchen, wie der gemeine Pöbel mit den Heiligen und Wallfahrten öffentlich Abgötterei treibt: wir reden, was ihre Gelehrten von diesem Stüde predigen, schreiben und in ihren Schulen lehren. Daß andere, als die groben Mißbräuche, können auch unerfahrene, grobe Leute urteilen und richten.

Es gehören zwei Süde zu einem Mittler und Verfähner. Für das erste ein gewiß, klar Gotteswort und -bezeugung, daß Gott durch den Mittler erhören will alle, die ihn anrufen. Eine solche göttliche Zusage steht in der Schrift von Christo: „Was ihr werdet bitten den Vater in meinem Namen, das wird er euch geben.“ Von den Heiligen steht nirgend in der Schrift eine solche Zusage, darum kann keiner bei sich gewiß schließen, daß er auf Anrufen der Heiligen erhört werde; darum ist solch Anrufen nicht aus dem Glauben. Darüber haben wir Gottes Wort und Gebot, daß wir sollen Christum anrufen, da er sagt: „Kommt zu mir alle, die ihr mühselig und beladen seid, und ich will euch erquicken.“ Ps. 45: „Vor deinem Angesicht werden anbeten alle Reichen im Volk.“ Und Ps. 72: „Und werden ihn anbeten alle Könige auf Erden.“ Und bald hernach: „Sie werden täglich vor ihm knien“ usw. Und Joh. 5 sagt Christus: „Damit sie alle ehren den Sohn, wie sie ehren den Vater.“ Item 2 Theß. 2 sagt Paulus, da er betet: „Unser Herr Jesus Christus und Gott, unser Vater, ermahne eure Herzen und stärke euch!“ Daß sind eitel Sprüche von Christo. Aber vom Anrufen der Heiligen können die Widerfacher kein Gottesgebot, kein Exempel der Schrift vorbringen. Zum andern gehört zu einem Verfähner, daß sein Verdienst für andere Leute bezahle, daß seines Verdienstes und Bezahlung andere theilhaftig werden, als hätten sie selbst bezahlt. Als, wenn ein guter Freund für den andern Schuld bezahlt, da wird der Schuldiger durch eines andern Bezahlung, als durch sein eigen Bezahlen, der Schuld los. Also wird uns Christi Verdienst geschenkt und zugerechnet, wenn wir an ihn glauben, gleich als wäre sein Verdienst unser, daß uns also seine Gerechtigkeit und sein Verdienst wird zugerechnet, und wird sein Verdienst unser eigen.

only to Christ is altogether transferred to the saints. For they make them mediators and propitiators, and although they make a distinction between mediators of intercession and mediators [the Mediator] of redemption, yet they plainly make of the saints mediators of redemption. But even that they are mediators of intercession they declare without the testimony of Scripture, which, be it said ever so reverently, nevertheless obscures Christ's office, and transfers the confidence of mercy due Christ to the saints. For men imagine that Christ is more severe and the saints more easily appeased, and they trust rather to the mercy of the saints than to the mercy of Christ, and fleeing from Christ [as from a tyrant], they seek the saints. Thus they actually make of them mediators of redemption.

Therefore we shall show that they truly make of the saints, not only intercessors, but propitiators, i. e., mediators of redemption. Here we do not as yet recite the abuses of the common people [how manifest idolatry is practised at pilgrimages]. We are still speaking of the opinions of the Doctors. As regards the rest, even the inexperienced [common people] can judge.

In a propitiator these two things concur. In the first place, there ought to be a word of God from which we may certainly know that God wishes to pity, and hearken to, those calling upon Him through this propitiator. There is such a promise concerning Christ, John 16, 23: Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you. Concerning the saints there is no such promise. Therefore consciences cannot be firmly confident that by the invocation of saints we are heard. This invocation, therefore, is not made from faith. Then we have also the command to call upon Christ, according to Matt. 11, 28: Come unto Me, all ye that labor, etc., which certainly is said also to us. And Isaiah says, 11, 10: In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign to the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek. And Ps. 45, 12: Even the rich among the people shall entreat Thy favor. And Ps. 72, 11, 15: Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him. And shortly after: Prayer also shall be made for Him continually. And in John 5, 23 Christ says: That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. And Paul, 2 Thess. 2, 16, 17, says, praying: Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, . . . comfort your hearts and stablish you. [All these passages refer to Christ.] But concerning the invocation of saints, what commandment, what example can the adversaries produce from the Scriptures? The second matter in a propitiator is, that his merits have been presented as those which make satisfaction for others, which are bestowed by divine imputation on others, in order that through these, just as by their own merits, they may be accounted righteous. As when any friend pays a debt for a friend, the debtor is freed by the merit of another, as though it were by his own. Thus the merits of Christ are bestowed upon us, in order that, when we believe in Him, we may be accounted righteous by our confidence in Christ's merits as though we had merits of our own.

20] Et ex utroque, nempe ex promissione et donatione meritorum, oritur fiducia misericordiae. Talis fiducia promissionis divinae, item meritorum Christi debet afferri [R. 227 ad orandum. Vere enim statuere debemus, et quod propter Christum exaudiamur, et quod ipsis meritis habeamus placatum Patrem.

21] Hic adversarii primum iubent invocare sanctos, quum neque promissionem Dei neque mandatum neque exemplum Scripturae habeant. Et tamen faciunt, ut maior fiducia misericordiae sanctorum concipiatur quam Christi, quum Christus ad se venire iusserit, 22] non ad sanctos. Secundo applicant merita sanctorum aliis, sicut merita Christi, iubent confidere meritis sanctorum, quasi reputemur iusti propter merita sanctorum, sicut iusti reputamur meritis Christi. Nihil 23] hic fingimus. In indulgentiis dicunt se applicare merita sanctorum. Et Gabriel, interpret canonis missae, confidenter pronuntiat: Nos ordine instituto a Deo debere ad auxilia sanctorum confugere, ut salvemur eorum meritis et votis. Haec sunt verba Gabrieliis. Et tamen passim in libris et concionibus adversariorum leguntur absurdiora. Quid est facere propitiatores, si hoc non est? Prorsus aequantur Christo, si confidere debemus, quod meritis eorum salvemur.

24] Ubi autem institutus est ille ordo a Deo, quem dicit iste, quod debeamus ad auxilia sanctorum confugere? Proferat exemplum ex Scripturis aut praeceptum. Fortassis ex aulis regum sumunt hunc ordinem, ubi amicis intercessoribus utendum est. At si rex constituerit certum intercessorem, non vult ad se causas per alios deferri. Ita quum Christus sit constitutus intercessor et pontifex, cur quaerimus alios?

27] Ut largiamur, quod beata Maria oret pro ecclesia, num ipsa suscipit animas in morte, num vincit mortem, num vivificat? Quid agit Christus, si haec facit beata Maria?

Auf beide Stüde, nämlich auf die göttliche Zusage und auf Christi Verdienst, muß ein christlich Gebet sich gründen. Ein solcher Glaube an die göttliche Zusage und auf das Verdienst Christi gehört zum Gebet. Denn wir sollen's gewiß darauf halten, daß wir um Christus' willen erhört werden, und daß wir um seinerwillen einen gnädigen Gott haben.

Da lehren nun die Widersacher, wir sollen die Heiligen anrufen, so wir dazu weder Gebot noch Verheißung noch Exempel in der Schrift haben, und machen doch damit, daß man größeres Vertrauen auf die Heiligen setzt denn auf Christum, so doch Christus sagt: „Kommt zu mir“, nicht zu den Heiligen. Zum andern sagen sie, daß Gott der Heiligen Verdienste annehme für unsere Sünde, und lehren also Vertrauen auf der Heiligen Verdienste, nicht auf das Verdienst Christi. Und solches lehren sie klar vom Ablass, darin sie der Heiligen Verdienst austheilen als satisfactiones für unsere Sünden. Und Gabriel [Viel], der den canonem missae auslegt, der darf frei sagen: „Wir sollen nach der Ordnung, die Gott eingesetzt hat, fliehen zu den Heiligen, daß wir durch ihre Hilfe und Verdienste selig werden.“ Dies sind die klaren Worte Gabrieliis. Und hin und wieder in der Widersacher Büchern findet man noch viel Ungeschickteres vom Verdienst der Heiligen. Heißt das nun die Heiligen nicht zu Versöhnern gemacht? Denn da werden sie doch gar Christo gleich, wenn wir vertrauen sollen, daß wir durch ihre Verdienste selig werden.

Wo ist aber die Ordnung von Gott eingesetzt, da Gabriel von redet, daß wir sollen zu den Heiligen fliehen? Er bringe doch ein Wort, ein einzig Exempel aus der Heiligen Schrift. Sie machen vielleicht die Ordnung von dem Gebrauch, der in weltlichen Fürstenthümen ist, da die Räte des Fürsten armer Leute Sachen vortragen und als Mittler fördern. Wie aber, wenn ein Fürst oder ein König einen einigen Mittler bestelle und wolte durch keinen andern die Sachen in Gnaden hören, oder alle Bitte durch den allein erhören? Darum so Christus nun allein zu einem Hohenpriester und Mittler gesetzt ist, warum suchen wir denn andere? Was können nun hier die Widersacher damider sagen?

Es ist eine gemeine Form der Absolution bis anher gebraucht, die lautet also: „Das Weiden unser Herr Jesu Christi, die Verdienste der Mutter Maria und aller Heiligen sollen sein dir zur Vergebung der Sünden.“ Da wird öffentlich die Absolution gesprochen nicht allein durch das Verdienst Christi, sondern auch durch Verdienste der andern Heiligen, daß wir durch dieselben sollen Gnade und Vergebung der Sünden erlangen. Etliche aus uns haben gesehen einen Doctor der Heiligen Schrift in agone oder an [in] seinen letzten Zügen; dem war ein Mönch beigegeben, ihn zu trösten. Nun rief und schrie er dem sterbenden Menschen nichts anderes ein denn allein dieses Gebet: „Maria, du Mutter der Güte und Gnade, behüte uns vor dem Feinde und in der Todesstunde nimm uns auf, Maria, mater gratiae“ etc.

Ob nun gleich Maria, die Mutter Gottes, für die Kirche bittet, so ist doch das zu viel, daß sie sollte den Tod überwinden, daß sie vor der großen Gewalt des Satans uns behüten sollte. Denn

And from both, namely, from the promise and the bestowment of merits, confidence in mercy arises [upon both parts must a Christian prayer be founded]. Such confidence in the divine promise, and likewise in the merits of Christ, ought to be brought forward when we pray. For we ought to be truly confident, both that for Christ's sake we are heard, and that by His merits we have a reconciled Father.

Here the adversaries first bid us invoke the saints, although they have neither God's promise, nor a command, nor an example from Scripture. And yet they cause greater confidence in the mercy of the saints to be conceived than in that of Christ, although Christ bade us come to Him and not to the saints. Secondly, they apply the merits of the saints, just as the merits of Christ, to others; they bid us trust in the merits of the saints as though we were accounted righteous on account of the merits of the saints, in like manner as we are accounted righteous by the merits of Christ. Here we fabricate nothing. In indulgences they say that they apply the merits of the saints [as satisfactions for our sins]. And Gabriel, the interpreter of the canon of the Mass, confidently declares: According to the order instituted by God, we should betake ourselves to the aid of the saints, in order that we may be saved by their merits and vows. These are the words of Gabriel. And nevertheless, in the books and sermons of the adversaries still more absurd things are read here and there. What is it to make propitiators if this is not? They are altogether made equal to Christ if we must trust that we are saved by their merits.

But where has this arrangement, to which he refers when he says that we ought to resort to the aid of the saints, been instituted by God? Let him produce an example or command from the Scriptures. Perhaps they derive this arrangement from the courts of kings, where friends must be employed as intercessors. But if a king has appointed a certain intercessor, he will not desire that cases be brought to him through others. Thus, since Christ has been appointed Intercessor and High Priest, why do we seek others? [What can the adversaries say in reply to this?]

Here and there this form of absolution is used: The passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, the merits of the most blessed Virgin Mary and of all the saints, be to thee for the remission of sins. Here the absolution is pronounced on the supposition that we are reconciled and accounted righteous not only by the merits of Christ, but also by the merits of the other saints. Some of us have seen a doctor of theology dying, for consoling whom a certain theologian, a monk, was employed. He pressed on the dying man nothing but this prayer: Mother of grace, protect us from the enemy; receive us in the hour of death.

Granting that the blessed Mary prays for the Church, does she receive souls in death, does she conquer death [the great power of Satan], does she quicken? What does Christ do if the blessed Mary does these things? Although she is most worthy of the most ample honors, nevertheless she does not wish to be made equal to Christ, but rather wishes us to consider and follow her example

Quae etsi est dignissima amplissimis honoribus, tamen non vult se aequari Christo, sed potius exempla sua nos intueri et amplecti 28] vult. At res loquitur ipsa, quod publica persuasione beata virgo prorsus in locum Christi successerit. Hanc invocaverunt homines, huius misericordia confisi sunt, per hanc voluerunt placare Christum, quasi is non esset propitiator, sed tantum horrendus iudex 29] et ultor. Nos autem sentimus, quod non sit confidendum, quod merita sanctorum nobis applicentur, quod propter illa Deus nobis reconcilietur, aut reputet nos iustos, aut salvet nos. Tantum enim Christi meritis consequimur remissionem peccatorum, quum in eum credimus. De aliis sanctis dictum est 1 Cor. 3, 8: Unusquisque recipiet mercedem secundum suum laborem, id est, ipsi inter se donare sua merita alii aliis non possunt, sicut monachi vendunt suorum ordinum merita. Et 30] Hilarius ait de fatuis virginibus: Et quia prodire obviam fatuae extinctis lampadibus non possunt, deprecantur eas, quae prudentes erant, ut oleum mutent, quibus responderunt, non posse se dare, quia non sit forte, quod omnibus satis sit, alienis scilicet operibus ac meritis neminem adiuvandum, quia unicuique lampadi suae emere oleum necesse sit.

31] Quum igitur adversarii doceant fiduciam collocare in invocationem sanctorum, quum neque Verbum Dei, neque exemplum Scripturae habeant, quum applicant merita sanctorum pro aliis, non secus ac merita Christi, et proprium Christi honorem in sanctos transferant: neque opiniones eorum de cultu sanctorum, neque consuetudinem [R. 229 invocationis recipere possumus. Scimus enim fiduciam in Christi intercessionem collocandam esse, quia haec sola habet promissionem Dei. Scimus solius Christi merita propitiationem pro nobis esse. Propter Christi merita reputamur iusti, quum credimus in eum, sicut textus ait, Rom. 9, 33; cf. 1 Petr. 2, 6 et Ies. 28, 16: Omnes, qui confidunt in eum, non confundentur. Nec est confidendum, quod iusti reputemur meritis beatae Virginis aut aliorum sanctorum.

32] Haeret et hic error apud doctos, quod singulis sanctis certae procuraciones commissae sint, ut Anna divitias largiatur, Sebastianus arceat pestilentiam, Valentinus medeatur morbo comitiali, Georgius tueatur equites. Hae persuasiones plane sunt ortae ex ethnicis exemplis. Sic enim apud Romanos putabatur Iuno ditare, Febris arcere febrem, Castor et Pollux defendere equites etc. 33] Et fingamus moderatissime tradi invocationem sanctorum, tamen, quum exemplum sit periculosissimum, quorsum opus est eam defendere, quum nullum habeat mandatum aut testimonium ex Verbo Dei? Imo nec veterum scriptorum testimonium habet. 34] mum quia, ut supra dixi, quum alii mediatores praeter Christum quaeruntur, collocatur fiducia in alios, obruitur tota notitia was wäre Christus not, wenn Maria das vermöchte? Denn wiewohl sie alles höchsten Lobes wert ist, so will sie doch nicht Christo gleich gehalten sein, sondern will vielmehr, daß wir dem Exempel ihres Glaubens und ihrer Demut folgen sollen. Nun ist dies öffentlich am Tage, daß durch solche falsche Lehre Maria an Christus' Statt ist gekommen; dieselbe haben sie angerufen, auf deren Güte haben sie vertraut, durch die haben sie gewollt [wollen] Christum versöhnen, gleich als sei er nicht ein Versöhner, sondern allein ein schredlicher, rachgieriger Richter. Wir sagen aber, daß man nicht lehren soll auf die Heiligen vertrauen, als machte uns ihr Verdienst selig, sondern allein um Christus' Verdienste willen erlangen wir Vergebung der Sünden und Seligkeit, wenn wir an ihn glauben. Von den andern Heiligen ist gesagt: „Ein jeder wird Lohn empfangen nach seiner Arbeit“ usw. Daß ist, sie untereinander können einer dem andern ihr Verdienst nicht mitteilen, wie die Mönche ihrer Orden Verdienste uns unverkämpt verkauft haben. Und Hilarius sagt von den törichten Jungfrauen: „Dieweil die tollten dem Bräutigam nicht können entgegengehen, dieweil ihre Lampen verloschen sind, so bitten sie die weisen, daß sie ihnen wollen Öl leihen; aber dieselben antworten, sie können's ihnen nicht leihen, denn es möchte beiden fehlen; es sei nicht genug für alle“ usw. Da zeigt er an, daß niemand unter uns durch fremde Werke oder Verdienste dem andern helfen kann.

So nun die Widersacher lehren, daß wir auf Anrufen der Heiligen vertrauen sollen, so sie doch des keinen Gottesbefehl haben, kein Gotteswort noch Exempel Alten oder Neuen Testaments haben, so sie auch das Verdienst der Heiligen so hoch heben als das Verdienst Christi und die Ehre, so Christo gebührt, den Heiligen geben, so können wir ihre Meinung und Gewohnheit vom Anbeten oder Anrufen der Heiligen nicht loben noch annehmen. Denn wir wissen, daß wir unser Vertrauen sollen setzen auf Christum; da haben wir Gottes Zusage, daß er soll der Mittler sein; so wissen wir, daß allein Christi Verdienst eine Versöhnung für unsere Sünde ist. Um Christus' willen werden wir versöhnt, wenn wir in [an] ihn glauben, wie der Text sagt: „Alle, die an ihn glauben, die sollen nicht zuschanden werden.“ Und man soll nicht vertrauen, daß wir von wegen des Verdienstes Mariä vor Gott gerecht find.

Auch so predigen ihre Gelehrten unverkämpt, daß jeder unter'n Heiligen eine sonderliche Gabe könne geben, als: St. Anna behüte vor Armut, St. Sebastianus vor der Pestilenz, St. Valten vor der fallenden Seuche; den heiligen Ritter St. Jörgen haben die Reiter angerufen, vor Stich und Schuß [Geschuß] und allerlei Fahr zu behüten. Und das alles im Grunde ist von Heiden hergekommen. Und ich will gleich sehen, daß die Widersacher nicht so gar unverkämpt heidnische Lügen vom Anrufen der Heiligen lehren, dennoch ist das Exempel [ge]fährlich. So sie auch des keinen Gottesbefehl noch wort haben, auch aus den alten Vätern davon nichts Gewisses können aufbringen: was ist denn not, daß man solchen Ungrund verteidigen will? Erstlich aber ist es darum ganz [ge]fährlich; denn so man andere Mittler sucht denn Christum, so setzt man Vertrauen auf

[the example of her faith and her humility]. But the subject itself declares that in public opinion the blessed Virgin has succeeded altogether to the place of Christ. Men have invoked her, have trusted in her mercy, through her have desired to appease Christ, as though He were not a Propitiator, but only a dreadful judge and avenger. We believe, however, that we must not trust that the merits of the saints are applied to us, that on account of these God is reconciled to us, or accounts us just, or saves us. For we obtain remission of sins only by the merits of Christ, when we believe in Him. Of the other saints it has been said, 1 Cor. 3, 8: Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor, i. e., they cannot mutually bestow their own merits, the one upon the other, as the monks sell the merits of their orders. Even Hilary says of the foolish virgins: And as the foolish virgins could not go forth with their lamps extinguished, they besought those who were prudent to lend them oil; to whom they replied that they could not give it because peradventure there might not be enough for all; i. e., no one can be aided by the works and merits of another, because it is necessary for every one to buy oil for his own lamp. [Here he points out that none of us can aid another by other people's works or merits.]

Since, therefore, the adversaries teach us to place confidence in the invocation of saints, although they have neither the Word of God nor the example of Scripture [of the Old or of the New Testament]; since they apply the merits of the saints on behalf of others, not otherwise than they apply the merits of Christ, and transfer the honor belonging only to Christ to the saints, we can receive neither their opinions concerning the worship of the saints, nor the practise of invocation. For we know that confidence is to be placed in the intercession of Christ, because this alone has God's promise. We know that the merits of Christ alone are a propitiation for us. On account of the merits of Christ we are accounted righteous when we believe in Him, as the text says, Rom. 9, 33 (cf. 1 Pet. 2, 6 and Is. 28, 16): Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be confounded. Neither are we to trust that we are accounted righteous by the merits of the blessed Virgin or of the other saints.

With the learned this error also prevails, namely, that to each saint a particular administration has been committed, that Anna bestows riches [protects from poverty], Sebastian keeps off pestilence, Valentine heals epilepsy, George protects horsemen. These opinions have clearly sprung from heathen examples. For thus, among the Romans, Juno was thought to enrich, Febris to keep off fever, Castor and Pollux to protect horsemen, etc. Even though we should imagine that the invocation of saints were taught with the greatest prudence, yet since the example is most dangerous, why is it necessary to defend it when it has no command or testimony from God's Word? Aye, it has not even the testimony of the ancient writers. First because, as I have said above, when other mediators are sought in addition to Christ, and confidence is put in others, the entire knowledge of Christ is suppressed. The subject shows this. In the beginning, mention of the saints seems to have been admitted with a design that is endurable, as in the ancient prayers. Afterwards invocation followed, and abuses that are prodigious and more than heathenish followed invocation. From invocation the next step was to images; these also were worshiped, and a virtue was supposed to exist in these, just as magicians imagine that a virtue exists in images of the heavenly bodies carved at a particular time. In a certain monastery we [some of us] have seen a statue of the blessed Virgin, which moved automatically by a trick [within by a string], so as to seem either to turn away from [those who did not make a large offering] or nod to those making request.

Still the fabulous stories concerning the saints, which are publicly taught with great authority, surpass the marvelous tales of the statues and pictures. Barbara, amidst her torments, asks for the reward that no one who would invoke her should die without the Eucharist. Another, standing on one foot, recited daily the whole psalter. Some wise man painted [for children] Christophorus [which in German means Bearer of Christ], in order by the allegory to signify that there ought to be great strength of mind in those who would bear Christ, i. e., who would teach or confess the Gospel, because it is necessary to undergo the greatest dangers [for they must wade by night through the great sea, i. e., endure all kinds of temptations and dangers]. Then the foolish monks taught among the people that they ought to invoke Chistophorus, as though such a Polyphemus [such a giant who bore Christ through the sea] had once existed. And although the saints performed very great deeds, either useful to the state or affording private examples, the remembrance of which would conduce much both toward strengthening faith and toward following their example in the administration of affairs, no one has searched for these from true narratives. [Although God Almighty through His saints, as a peculiar people, has wrought many great things in both realms, in the Church and in worldly transactions; although there are many great examples in the lives of the saints which would be very profitable to princes and lords, to true pastors and guardians of souls, for the government both of the world and of the Church, especially for strengthening faith in God, yet they have passed these by, and preached the most insignificant matters concerning the saints, concerning their hard beds, their hair shirts, etc., which, for the greater part, are falsehoods.] Yet indeed it is of advantage to hear how holy men administered governments [as in the Holy Scriptures it is narrated of the kings of Israel and Judah], what calamities, what dangers they underwent, how holy men were of aid to kings in great dangers, how they taught the Gospel, what encounters they had with heretics. Examples of mercy are also of service, as when we see the denial forgiven Peter, when we see Cyprian forgiven for having been a magician, when we see Augustine, having experienced the power of faith in sickness, steadily affirming that God truly hears the prayers of believers. It was profitable that such examples as these, which contain admonitions for either faith or fear or the administration of the state, be recited. But certain triflers, endowed with no knowledge either of faith or for governing states, have invented stories in imitation of poems, in which there are nothing but superstitious examples concerning certain prayers, certain fastings, and lich Gott bekennet mit diesen Worten: „Nun habe ich erst empfunden, daß Gott der Gläubigen Seuffzen und Gebet erhöhe.“ Solche Exempel des Glaubens, da man lernt Gott fürchten, Gott vertrauen, daraus man recht sieht, wie es gottesfürchtigen Leuten in der Kirche, auch in großen Sachen der hohen weltlichen Regimente ergangen, die hätte man fleißig und klar von den Heiligen schreiben und predigen sollen. Nun haben etliche müßige Mönche und löse Buben (welche nicht gewußt, wie große und schwere Sorge es ist, Kirchen oder sonst Leute regieren) Fabeln erdichtet, zum Teil aus der Heiden Büchern, da nichts denn Exempel sind, wie die Heiligen härene Hemde getragen, wie sie ihre sieben Zeiten gebetet, wie sie Wasser und Brot gegessen, und haben das alles gerichtet auf ihre Kretschmerei [Handel], aus den Wallfahrten Geld zu markten [markten, einzunehmen]; wie denn sind die Wunderzeichen, welche sie vom Rosenkranze rühmen, und wie die Barfüßermönche von ihren hölzernen Körnern rühmen. Und ist hier nicht groß Not, Exempel anzuzeigen; ihre Lügenlegenden sind noch vorhanden, daß man's nicht verneinen mag [leugnen kann].

38) His prodigiosis et impiis fabulis applaudunt episcopi, theologi, monachi, quia faciunt πρός τα ἀκριτά, nos non ferunt, qui, ut Christi honos et officium magis conspici possit, non requirimus invocationem sanctorum et abusus in cultu sanctorum taxamus. 39) Quumque omnes boni viri ubique desiderant in his abusibus corrigendis vel episcoporum auctoritatem vel diligentiam concionantium, tamen adversarii nostri in Confutatione omnino dissimulant etiam manifesta vitia, quasi recepta Confutatione velint nos cogere, ut etiam notissimos abusus approbemus.

des Wauchs und Gelds willen zu strafen übergangen, fution solcher Mißbräuche nicht mit einem Wort, wir zugleich in alle ihre öffentlichen Mißbräuche gehen.

40) Ita insidiosa scripta est Confutatio non tantum in hoc loco, sed fere ubique. Nullus est locus, in quo a dogmatibus suis discernant manifestos abusus. Et tamen apud ipsos, si qui sunt saniores, fatentur multas persuasiones haerere in doctrina scholasticorum et canonistarum, multos praeterea abusus in tanta incertia et negligentia pastorum irredigisse in ecclesiam. Neque enim primus fuit Lutherus, qui de publicis abusibus querebatur. Multi docti et praestantes viri longe ante haec tempora deploraverunt abusus missae, fiduciam observationum monasticarum, quaestuosos cultus sanctorum, confusionem doctrinae de poenitentia, quam vel maxime oportebat perspicuam et explicatam exstare in ecclesia. Ipsi audivimus excellentes theologos desiderare modum in scholastica doctrina, quae multo plus habet rixarum philosophicarum quam pietatis. Et tamen in his veteres fere propiores sunt Scripturae quam recentiores. Ita magis magisque degeneravit istorum theologia. Nec alia causa fuit multis bonis viris, qui initio amare Lutherum coeperunt, quam quod videbant eum explicare animos hominum ex illis labyrinthis confusissimarum et infinitarum disputationum, quae sunt apud scholasticos theologos et canonistas, et res utiles ad pietatem docere.

42) Quare non fecerunt candido adversarii, quod quum vellent nos assentiri Confutationi, dissimulaverunt abusus. Ac si vellet ecclesiae consultum, maxime isto in loco, in hac occasione, debebant hortari optimum Imperatorem, ut de corrigendis abusibus consilium caperet, quem quidem non obscure animadvertimus cupidissimum esse bene constituendae et sanandae ecclesiae. Sed adversarii non hoc agunt, ut honestissimam et sanctissimam voluntatem Imperatoris ad-

Und solchen Greuel wider Christum, solche Gotteslästerung, schändliche, unerschrämte Lügen und Fabeln, solche Lügenprediger können die Bischöfe und Theologen leiden und haben sie lange Zeit gelitten zu großem Schaden der Gewissen, daß es schrecklich ist zu gedenken; denn solche Lügen haben Geld und Zinse getragen. Uns aber, die wir das Evangelium rein predigen, wollten sie gern vertilgen, so wir doch darum das Anrufen der Heiligen anfechten, damit Christus allein der Mittler bleibe und der große Mißbrauch abgetan werde. So auch lange vor dieser Zeit, ehe D. Luther geschrieben, ihre Theologen selbst, auch alle frommen, gottesfürchtigen, ehrbaren Leute über die Bischöfe und Prediger geschrieben, daß sie die Mißbräuche um so gedenken doch unsere Widersacher in ihrer Konfutation, so wir die Konfutation annähmen, müßten

Also voll Hinterlist und gefährlichen Betrugs ist ihre ganze Konfutation, nicht allein an diesem Ort, sondern allenthalben. Sie stellen sich, als seien sie gar goldrein, als haben [hätten] sie nie kein Wasser getrübt. Denn an keinem Ort unterscheiden sie von ihren dogmatibus oder Lehren die öffentlichen Mißbräuche. Und doch, viele unter ihnen sind so ehrbar und redlich, befehlen selbst, daß viele Irrtümer sind in der scholasticorum und Canonisten Bücher, daß auch viele Mißbräuche durch ungelehrte Prediger und durch so großen, schändlichen Unfleiß der Bischöfe eingedrungen sind in der Kirche. Es ist auch D. Luther nicht allein noch der erste gewesen, der über solche unzählige Mißbräuche geschrieben und geklagt hat. Es sind viel gelehrte, redliche Leute vor dieser Zeit gewesen, welche erbärmlich geklagt haben über den großen Mißbrauch der Messe, über Mißbrauch der Möncherei, item, über solchen Geiz- und Geldmarkt der Wallfahrten, und sonderlich, daß der nötigste Artikel von der Buße, von Christo, ohne welchen keine christliche Kirche sein noch bleiben kann, welcher vor allen andern rein und richtig soll gelehrt werden, so jämmerlich ward unterdrückt.

Darum haben die Widersacher darin nicht treulich noch christlich gehandelt, daß sie in ihrer Konfutation die öffentlichen Mißbräuche stillschweigend übergangen [haben]. Und wenn es ihnen rechter Ernst wäre, der Kirche und den armen Gewissen zu helfen und nicht vielmehr Pracht und Geiz zu erhalten, so hätten sie hier einen rechten Zutritt und Ursache gehabt und sollten sonderlich an diesem Ort die Kaiserliche Majestät, unsern allergnädigsten Herrn, aufs untertänigste angesucht haben, solche große, öffentliche, schändliche certain additions of service for bringing in gain [where there are nothing but examples as to how the saints wore hair shirts, how they prayed at the seven canonical hours, how they lived upon bread and water]. Such are the miracles that have been invented concerning rosaries and similar ceremonies. Nor is there need here to recite examples. For the legends, as they call them, and the mirrors of examples, and the rosaries, in which there are very many things not unlike the true narratives of Lucian, are extant.

The bishops, theologians, and monks applaud these monstrous and wicked stories [this abomination set up against Christ, this blasphemy, these scandalous, shameless lies, these lying preachers; and they have permitted them so long, to the great injury of consciences, that it is terrible to think of it] because they aid them to their daily bread. They do not tolerate us, who, in order that the honor and office of Christ may be more conspicuous, do not require the invocation of saints, and censure the abuses in the worship of saints. And although [even their own theologians], all good men everywhere [a long time before Dr. Luther began to write] in the correction of these abuses, greatly longed for either the authority of the bishops or the diligence of the preachers, nevertheless our adversaries in the Confutation altogether pass over vices that are even manifest, as though they wish, by the reception of the Confutation, to compel us to approve even the most notorious abuses.

Thus the Confutation has been deceitfully written, not only on this topic, but almost everywhere. [They pretend that they are as pure as gold, that they have never muddled the water.] There is no passage in which they make a distinction between the manifest abuses and their dogmas. And nevertheless, if there are any of sounder mind among them, they confess that many false opinions inhere in the doctrine of the scholastics and canonists, and, besides, that in such ignorance and negligence of the pastors many abuses crept into the Church. For Luther was not [the only one nor] the first to complain of [innumerable] public abuses. Many learned and excellent men long before these times deplored the abuses of the Mass, confidence in monastic observances, services to the saints intended to yield a revenue, the confusion of the doctrine concerning repentance [concerning Christ], which ought to be as clear and plain in the Church as possible [without which there cannot be nor remain a Christian Church]. We ourselves have heard that excellent theologians desire moderation in the scholastic doctrine, which contains much more for philosophical quarrels than for piety. And nevertheless, among these the older ones are generally nearer Scripture than are the more recent. Thus their theology degenerated more and more. Neither had many good men, who from the very first began to be friendly to Luther, any other reason than that they saw that he was freeing the minds of men from these labyrinths of most confused and infinite discussions which exist among the scholastic theologians and canonists, and was teaching things profitable for godliness.

The adversaries, therefore, have not acted candidly in passing over the abuses when they wished us to assent to the Confutation. And if they wished to care for the interests of the Church [and of afflicted consciences, and not rather to maintain their pomp and avarice], especially on that topic, at this occasion, they ought to exhort our most excellent Emperor to take measures for the correction of abuses [which furnish grounds for derision among the Turks, the Jews, and all unbelievers], as we observe plainly enough that he is most desirous of healing and well-establishing the Church. But the adversaries iuvent, sed ut nos quoquo modo opprimant. 43] De statu ecclesiae multa signa ostendunt eos parum sollicitos esse. Non dant operam, ut exstet apud populum certa quaedam summa dogmatum ecclesiasticorum. Manifestos abusus nova et inusitata crudelitate defendunt. Nullos patiuntur in ecclesiis idoneos doctores. Haec quo spectent, boni viri facile iudicare possunt. Sed hac via neque suo regno neque ecclesiae bene consulunt. Nam interfectis bonis doctoribus, oppressa sana doctrina, postea existent fanatici spiritus, quos non poterunt reprimere adversarii, qui et ecclesiam impiis dogmatibus perturbabunt et totam ecclesiasticam politiam evertent, quam nos maxime cupimus conservare.

vergiesen noch täglich unschuldig Blut aus ungehörter Tyrannei und Mitterei, allein ihre öffentlichen Tugenden zu verteidigen. Auch so wollen sie fromme, christliche Prediger nicht dulden. Wo das endlich hinausgehen will, können verständige Leute wohl abnehmen. Denn mit eitel Gewalt und Tyrannei werden sie nicht lange [die] Kirche regieren. Und obgleich die Widersacher nichts anderes denn allein des Papsts Reich zu erhalten suchten, so wird doch das der Weg nicht dazu sein, sondern eine eitle Wüßung des Reichs und der Kirche. Denn wenn sie gleich alle frommen, christlichen Prediger also erwürgt hätten, und das Evangelium unterdrückt wäre, so würden danach Kottengeister und Schwärmergeister kommen, welche mit der Faust auch aufrührerisch sehten würden, welche die Gemeinde und Kirche mit falschen Lehren würden betrüben, alle Kirchenordnung verwüsten, welche wir gerne erhalten wollten.

und handhaben. Denn das fordert Gott der Herr von allen Königen und Fürsten, da er ihnen seinen Titel theilt und nennt sie Götter, da er sagt: „Ihr seid Götter.“ Darum nennt er sie aber Götter, daß sie göttliche Sachen, das ist, das Evangelium Christi und die reine göttliche Lehre auf Erden, soviel möglich, schützen, retten und handhaben sollen, auch rechte christliche Lehrer und Prediger an Gottes Statt wider unrechte Gewalt in Schirm und Schutz haben.

Art. XXII. (X.)

De Utraque Specie Coenae Domini.

1] Non potest dubitari, quin pium sit et consentaneum institutioni Christi et [R. 233] verbis Pauli, uti utraque parte in coena Domini. Christus enim instituit utramque partem et instituit non pro parte ecclesiae, sed pro tota ecclesia. Nam non presbyteri solum, sed tota ecclesia auctoritate Christi, non auctoritate humana utitur sacramento, idque 2] fateri adversarios existimamus. Iam si Christus instituit pro tota ecclesia, cur altera species admittit parti ecclesiae? Cur prohibetur usus alterius speciei? Cur mutatur ordinatio Christi, praesertim quum ipse vocet eam testamentum suum? Quodsi hominis testamentum rescindere non licet, multo minus Christi testamentum rescindere licebit.

Mißbräuche, welche uns Christen auch bei Türken, bei Juden und allen Ungläubigen zum Spott gereichen, abzuschaffen. Denn wir in vielen Stücken klar genug vermerkt, daß Kaiserliche Majestät, unser allergnädigster Herr, ohne Zweifel mit allem treuen Fleiß die Wahrheit forschen und nachsuchen und gern die christliche Kirche recht bestellst und geordnet sehen. Aber den Widersachern ist daran nicht viel gelegen, wie sie der kaiserlichen Majestät kaiserlichem, christlichem Gemüt, Willen und löblichem Bedenken genug tun, oder wie sie den Sachen helfen, sondern wie sie nur die Wahrheit und uns unterdrücken. Denn sie liegen darum nicht viel ungeschlafen, daß die christliche Lehre und das Evangelium rein gepredigt werde. Das Predigtamt lassen sie ganz wüste stehen, verteidigen öffentliche Mißbräuche, Tyrannie und Mitterei, allein ihre öffentlichen Tugenden zu verteidigen. Auch so wollen sie fromme, christliche Prediger nicht dulden. Wo das endlich hinausgehen will, können verständige Leute wohl abnehmen. Denn mit eitel Gewalt und Tyrannei werden sie nicht lange [die] Kirche regieren. Und obgleich die Widersacher nichts anderes denn allein des Papsts Reich zu erhalten suchten, so wird doch das der Weg nicht dazu sein, sondern eine eitle Wüßung des Reichs und der Kirche. Denn wenn sie gleich alle frommen, christlichen Prediger also erwürgt hätten, und das Evangelium unterdrückt wäre, so würden danach Kottengeister und Schwärmergeister kommen, welche mit der Faust auch aufrührerisch sehten würden, welche die Gemeinde und Kirche mit falschen Lehren würden betrüben, alle Kirchenordnung verwüsten, welche wir gerne erhalten wollten.

Verhalben, allergnädigster Herr Kaiser, nachdem wir nicht zweifeln, Euer Kaiserlicher Majestät Gemüt und Herz sei, daß die göttliche Wahrheit, die Ehre Christi und das Evangelium möge erhalten werden und allezeit reichlich zunehmen, bitten wir auß untertänigste, Eure Kaiserliche Majestät wollen dem unbilligen Vornehmen der Widersacher nicht stattgeben, sondern gnädiglich andere Wege suchen der Einigkeit, damit die christlichen Gewissen nicht also beschwert werden, damit auch die göttliche Wahrheit nicht so mit Gewalt unterdrückt oder unschuldige Leute darum durch eitel Tyrannei erwürgt, wie bis anher gesehen. Denn Eure Kaiserliche Majestät wissen sich des ohne Zweifel zu erinnern, daß solches sonderlich Euer Kaiserlicher Majestät Amt ist, die christliche Lehre, soviel menschlich oder möglich, also zu erhalten, daß sie möge auf die Nachkommen reichen, auch fromme, rechte Prediger schicken.

Artikel XXII. (X.)

Von beiderlei Gestalt im Abendmahl.

Es hat keinen Zweifel, daß es göttlich ist und recht und dem Befehl Christi und den Worten Pauli gemäß, beiderlei Gestalt im Abendmahl [zu] brauchen. Denn Christus hat beiderlei Gestalt eingesetzt, nicht allein für einen Teil der Kirche, sondern für die ganze Kirche. Denn nicht allein die Priester, sondern die ganze Kirche braucht des Sacraments auß Befehl Christi, nicht auß Menschenbefehl; und das müssen die Widersacher bekennen. So nun Christus für die ganze Kirche das ganze Sacrament hat eingesetzt, warum nehmen sie denn der Kirche die eine Gestalt? Warum ändern sie die Ordnung Christi, sonderlich so er es sein Testament nennt? Denn so man eines Menschen Testament nicht soll brechen, viel weniger soll man das Testament Christi brechen.

do not act so as to aid the most honorable and most holy will of the Emperor, but so as in every way to crush [the truth and] us. Many signs show that they have little anxiety concerning the state of the Church. [They lose little sleep from concern that Christian doctrine and the pure Gospel be preached.] They take no pains that there should be among the people a summary of the dogmas of the Church. [The office of the ministry they permit to be quite desolate.] They defend manifest abuses [they continue every day to shed innocent blood] by new and unusual cruelty. They allow no suitable teachers in the churches. Good men can easily judge whither these things tend. But in this way they have no regard to the interest either of their own authority or of the Church. For after the good teachers have been killed and sound doctrine suppressed, fanatical spirits will rise up, whom the adversaries will not be able to restrain, who both will disturb the Church with godless dogmas, and will overthrow the entire ecclesiastical government, which we are very greatly desirous of maintaining.

Therefore, most excellent Emperor Charles, for the sake of the glory of Christ, which we have no doubt that you desire to praise and magnify, we beseech you not to assent to the violent counsels of our adversaries, but to seek other honorable ways of so establishing harmony that godly consciences are not burdened, that no cruelty is exercised against innocent men, as we have hitherto seen, and that sound doctrine is not suppressed in the Church. To God most of all you owe the duty [as far as this is possible to man] to maintain sound doctrine and hand it down to posterity, and to defend those who teach what is right. For God demands this when He honors kings with His own name and calls them gods, saying, Ps. 82, 6: I have said, Ye are gods, namely, that they should attend to the preservation and propagation of divine things, i. e., the Gospel of Christ, on the earth, and, as the vicars of God, should defend the life and safety of the innocent [true Christian teachers and preachers].

allowable to annul man's testament, much less will it be allowable to annul the testament of Christ. And Paul says, 1 Cor. 11, 23 ff., that he had received of the Lord that which he delivered. But he had delivered the use of both kinds, as the text, 1 Cor. 11,

Article XXII (X):

Of Both Kinds in the Lord's Supper.

It cannot be doubted that it is godly and in accordance with the institution of Christ and the words of Paul to use both parts in the Lord's Supper. For Christ instituted both parts, and instituted them not for a part of the Church, but for the entire Church. For not only the presbyters, but the entire Church uses the Sacrament by the authority of Christ, and not by human authority; and this, we suppose, the adversaries acknowledge. Now, if Christ has instituted it for the entire Church, why is one kind denied to a part of the Church? Why is the use of the other kind prohibited? Why is the ordinance of Christ changed, especially when He Himself calls it His testament? But if it is not auch Synodus Toletana. Und es wäre fast [sehr] leicht, viele Sprüche und Zeugnisse hier einzuführen; wir wollen's aber um [der] Kürze willen unterlassen. Denn ein jeglicher christlicher Leser wird selbst bedenken können, ob sich's gebühre, [die] Ordnung und Einsetzung Christi zu verbieten und zu ändern.

3) Et Paulus inquit 1 Cor. 11, 23 sq., se a Domino accepisse, quod tradidit. Tradiderat autem usum utriusque speciei, sicut clare ostendit textus, 1 Cor. 11. Hoc facite, inquit primum de corpore; postea eadem verba de poculo repetit. Et deinde: Probet se ipsum homo, et sic de pane comedat et ex poculo bibat. Haec sunt verba disponentis. Et quidem praefatur, ut, qui sunt usuri coena Domini, simul utantur. Quare constat pro tota ecclesia sacramentum institutum esse. Et manet mos adhuc in ecclesiis Graecis et fuit quondam etiam in Latinis ecclesiis, sicut Cyprianus et Hieronymus testantur. Sic enim inquit Hieronymus in Sophoniam: Sacerdotes, qui eucharistiae serviunt et sanguinem Domini populis eius dividunt etc. Idem testatur Synodus Toletana. Nec difficile fuerit magnum acervum testimoniorum congerere. Hic nihil exaggeramus, tantum relinquimus prudenti lectori expendendum, quid sentiendum sit de divina ordinatione.

6) Adversarii in Confutatione non hoc agunt, ut excusent ecclesiam, cui adempta est altera pars sacramenti. Id decuit (R. 234) bonos et religiosos viros. Erat quaerenda firma ratio excusandae ecclesiae et docendum conscientiarum, quibus non potest contingere nisi pars sacramenti. Nunc ipsi defendunt recte prohiberi alteram partem, et vetant concedere usum utriusque partis. Prius mum fingunt initio ecclesiae alicubi morem fuisse, ut una pars tantum porrigeretur. Neque tamen exemplum huius rei vetus ullum afferre possunt. Sed allegant locos, in quibus sit mentio panis, ut apud Lucam, 24, 35, ubi scriptum est, quod discipuli agnoverint Christum in fractione panis. Citant et alios locos, Act. 2, 42, 46; 20, 7, de fractione panis. Quamquam autem non valde repugnamus, quominus aliqui de sacramento accipiantur, tamen hoc non consequitur, unam partem tantum datam esse, quia partis appellatione reliquum significatur communi consuetudine servatis monis. Addunt de laica communione, quae non erat usus alterius tantum speciei, sed utriusque; et si quando sacerdotes laica communione uti iubentur, significatur, quod a ministerio consecrationis remoti fuerint. Neque hoc ignorant adversarii, sed abutuntur inscitia imperitorum, qui, quum audiunt laicam communionem, statim somniant morem nostri temporis, quo datur laicis tantum pars sacramenti.

Unerfahrenen. Denn wenn dieselben hören das Wort communio laica, denken sie von Stund' an, es sei eine communio gewesen wie zu unserer Zeit, daß man die Laien mit einerlei Gestalt gespeist habe.

9) Ac videte impudentiam! Gabriel inter ceteras causas recitat, cur non detur utraque pars, quia fuerit discrimen inter laicos et presbyteros faciendum. Et credibile est hanc praecipuam causam esse, cur defendatur prohibitio unius partis, ut dignitas ordinis religionis quadam fiat commendatior. Hoc est consilium humanum, ut nihil dicamus incivi-

Und Paulus sagt: „Ich habe es von dem Herrn empfangen, das ich euch gegeben habe.“ Nun hat er ihnen je beide [reine] Gestalt gegeben, wie der Text klar anzeigt, 1 Kor. 11: „Das tut“, sagt er, „zu meinem Gedächtnis.“ Da redet er vom Leibe. Danach [wieder]holt er dieselben Worte vom Blut Christi und sagt bald hernach: „Es prüfe sich aber der Mensch selbst und esse also von dem Brote und trinke also vom Kelche“ usw. Da nennt er sie beide. Das sind die klaren Worte des Apostels Pauli, und er macht eine Vorrede kurz zuvor, daß diejenigen, so das Sacrament brauchen wollen, sollen es in einem Abendmahl zugleich brauchen. Darum ist's gewiß, daß [es] nicht allein für die Priester, sondern für die ganze Kirche ist eingesetzt. Und solcher Gebrauch wird auch heutigetags gehalten in der griechischen Kirche; so ist er auch in den lateinischen oder römischen Kirchen gewesen, wie Cyprianus und Hieronymus zeugen. Denn also sagt Hieronymus über den Propheten Sophonia [Jephanja]: „Die Priester, so das Sacrament reichen und das Blut Christi dem Volk austheilen“ usw. Dasselbe zeugt

Die Widersacher gedenken gar nicht in ihrer Confutation, wie derjenigen Gewissen zu trösten oder zu entschuldigen seien, denen unter dem Papsttum eine Gestalt entzogen ist. Dieses hätte gelehrten und gottesfürchtigen Doctoribus wohl angefallen, daß sie beständige Ursache hätten angezeigt, solche Gewissen zu trösten. Nun dringen sie darauf, daß es christlich und recht sei, beiderlei Gestalt zu verbieten, und wollen nicht gestatten, beiderlei Gestalt zu gebrauchen. Für das erste erdichten sie aus ihrem Kopfe, daß im Anfang der Kirche ein Gebrauch gewesen sei, daß man den Laien allein einerlei Gestalt gereicht habe, und können doch des Gebrauchs kein gewiß Exempel anzeigen. Sie ziehen etliche Sprüche aus dem Evangelisten Lukas an, von dem Brechen des Brots, da geschrieben steht, daß die Jünger den Herrn erkannt haben im Brotbrechen. Sie ziehen auch mehr Sprüche von dem Brotbrechen an. Wiewohl wir nun nicht hart darüber sind, ob etliche vom Sacrament wollten verstanden werden, so folgt doch daraus nicht, daß nur die eine Gestalt anfänglich gereicht sei. Denn es ist gemein, daß man ein Stück nennt und das Ganze meint. Sie ziehen auch an die laica communio, gleich als sei es eine Gestalt gebrauchen, welches nicht wahr ist. Denn so die Canones auflegen den Priestern, der laica communio zu gebrauchen, meinen sie, daß sie zu einer Strafe nicht selbst konsekrieren sollen, sondern von einem andern gleichwohl beiderlei Gestalt empfangen. Und die Widersacher wissen das selber wohl, aber sie machen also einen Schein den Ungelehrten und

Aber laßt sehen weiter. Wie unverschäm't Ding schreiben doch die Widersacher wider Christi Einsetzung und Ordnung! Gabriel unter andern Ursachen, warum den Laien nicht beide Gestalt gereicht werde, setzt auch diese: es habe müssen ein Unterschied sein, sagt er, unter Priestern und Laien. Und ich halte wohl, es sei die größte und vornehmste Ursache, warum sie heutigetags so clearly shows. This do [in remembrance of Me], he says first concerning His body; afterwards he repeats the same words concerning the cup [the blood of Christ]. And then: Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. [Here he names both.] These are the words of Him who has instituted the Sacrament. And, indeed, he says before that those who will use the Lord's Supper should use both. It is evident, therefore, that the Sacrament was instituted for the entire Church. And the custom still remains in the Greek churches, and also once obtained in the Latin churches, as Cyprian and Jerome testify. For thus Jerome says on Zephaniah: The priests who administer the Eucharist, and distribute the Lord's blood to the people, etc. The Council of Toledo gives the same testimony. Nor would it be difficult to accumulate a great multitude of testimonies. Here we exaggerate nothing; we but leave the prudent reader to determine what should be held concerning the divine ordinance [whether it is proper to prohibit and change an ordinance and institution of Christ].

The adversaries in the Confutation do not endeavor to [comfort the consciences or] excuse the Church, to which one part of the Sacrament has been denied. This would have been becoming to good and religious men. For a strong reason for excusing the Church, and instructing consciences to whom only a part of the Sacrament could be granted, should have been sought. Now these very men maintain that it is right to prohibit the other part, and forbid that the use of both parts be allowed. First, they imagine that, in the beginning of the Church, it was the custom at some places that only one part was administered. Nevertheless they are not able to produce any ancient example of this matter. But they cite the passages in which mention is made of bread, as in Luke 24, 35, where it is written that the disciples recognized Christ in the breaking of bread. They quote also other passages, Acts 2, 42, 46; 20, 7, concerning the breaking of bread. But although we do not greatly oppose if some receive these passages as referring to the Sacrament, yet it does not follow that one part only was given, because, according to the ordinary usage of language, by the naming of one part the other is also signified. They refer also to Lay Communion, which was not the use of only one kind, but of both; and whenever priests are commanded to use Lay Communion [for a punishment are not to consecrate themselves, but to receive Communion, however, of both kinds, from another], it is meant that they have been removed from the ministry of consecration. Neither are the adversaries ignorant of this, but they abuse the ignorance of the unlearned, who, when they hear of Lay Communion, immediately dream of the custom of our time, by which only a part of the Sacrament is given to the laymen.

And consider their impudence. Gabriel recounts among other reasons why both parts are not given that a distinction should be made between laymen and presbyters. And it is credible that the chief reason why the prohibition of the one part is defended is this, namely, that the dignity of the order may be the more highly exalted by a religious rite. To say nothing more severe, this is a human design; and whither this tends can easily be judged. In the Confutation they also quote concerning the sons of Eli that, after the loss of the high-priesthood, they were to seek the one part pertaining to the priests, 1 Sam. 2, 36 [the text reads: Every one that is left in thine house shall come lius, quod quo spectet, facile iudicari potest. 10] Et in Confutatione allegant de filiis Heli, quod amisso summo sacerdotio petiti sint unam partem sacerdotalem, 1 Sam. 2, 39. Hic dicunt usum unius speciei significatum esse. Et addunt: Sic ergo et nostri laici una parte sacerdotali, una specie contenti esse debent. Plane ludunt adversarii, quum ad sacramentum transferunt historiam de posteris [R. 235] Heli. Ibi describitur poena Heli. Num hoc quoque dicent laicos propter poenam removeri ab altera parte? Sacramentum institutum est ad consolandas et erigendas terribitas mentes, quum credunt carnem Christi datam pro vita mundi cibum esse, quum credunt se coniunctos Christo vivificari. Verum adversarii argumentantur laicos removeri ab altera parte poenae causa. Debent, inquit, esse contenti. 11] Satis pro imperio. Cur autem debent? Non est quaerenda ratio, sed lex esto, quidquid dicunt theologi. Haec est ἐκδοξαία Ecciana. Agnoscimus enim istas Thrasonicas voces, quas si exagitare vellemus, non defutura nobis esset oratio. Videtis enim, quanta sit impudentia. Imperat tamquam aliquis tyrannus in tragoediis: Quod nolunt, velint, 12] debent esse contenti. Num hae rationes, quas citat, excusabunt hos in iudicio Dei, qui prohibent partem sacramenti, qui saeviunt in homines bonos utentes integro sacramento? 13] Si hac ratione prohibent, ut sit ordinis discrimen, haec ipsa ratio movere debeat, ne assentiamur adversariis, vel si alioqui morem cum ipsis servaturi eramus. Alia sunt discrimina ordinis sacerdotum et populi, sed non est obscurum, quid habeant consilii, cur hoc discrimen tantopere defendant. Nos, ne de vera dignitate ordinis detrahere videamur, de hoc callido consilio plura non dicemus.

sagen, dadurch diejenigen entschuldigt sollen sein vor Gottes Urteil, die bisanher die Leute von beiderlei Gestalt abgedrungen und ungeschuldig die Leute darum erzwungen haben? Sollen sie sich damit trösten, daß von [den] Kindern Elis geschrieben: „Sie werden betteln“? Das wird eine faule Entschuldigung sein vor Gottes Gericht.

14] Allegant et periculum effusionis et similia quaedam, quae non habent tantam 15] vim, ut ordinationem Christi mutent. Et fingamus sane liberum esse, uti una parte aut ambabus, quomodo poterit prohibitio defendi? Quamquam ecclesia non sumit sibi hanc libertatem, ut ex ordinationibus Christi faciat res 16] indifferentes. Nos quidem ecclesiam excusamus, quae hanc iniuriam pertulit, quum utraque pars ei contingere non posset, [R. 236] sed auctores, qui defendunt recte prohiberi usum integri sacramenti, quique nunc non solum prohibent, sed etiam utentes integro sacramento excommunicant et vi persequuntur, non excusamus. Ipsi viderint, quomodo Deo rationem suorum consiliorum reddaturi 17] sint. Neque statim iudicandum est ecclesiam constituere aut probare, quidquid pontifices constituunt, praesertim quum Scriptura de episcopis et pastoribus vaticinetur in hanc sententiam, ut Ezechiel ait 7, 26: Peribit lex a sacerdote.

schaft geben ihres Vornehmens. Und es ist auch nicht so bald der Kirche Beschluß, was die Bischöfe und Pfaffen beschließen, sonderlich so die Schrift und der Prophet Ezechiel sagt: „Es werden Priester und Bischöfe kommen, die kein Gottesgebot noch Gesetz wissen.“

festhalten, damit der Pfaffenstand heiliger scheine gegen dem [den] Laienstand. Das ist nun ein Menschengebante; worauf der gebe, ist wohl abzunehmen. Und in der Konfutation ziehen sie an die Kinder Elis, 1 Sam. 2, da der Text sagt: „Wer übrig ist von deinem Hause, der wird kommen und ihn anbeten um ein Stüd Brots und wird sagen: Lieber, laß mich zu einem Priestertheil, daß ich einen Bissen Brots esse“ usw. Da, sagen sie, ist die einerlei Gestalt bedeutet, und sagen nun, also sollen auch unsere Laien mit einem Priestertheil, das ist, mit einerlei Gestalt, zufrieden sein. Die Meister der Konfutation sind recht unverschämte, grobe Esel, sie spielen und gaulen mit der Schrift, wie sie wollen, so die Historien von den Kindern Elis auf das Sakrament deuten. Denn an dem Ort wird beschrieben die ernstliche Strafe über Eli und seine Kinder. Wollen sie denn auch sagen, daß den Laien eine Gestalt werde darum gegeben zu einer Strafe? Sie sind gar töricht und toll. Das Sakrament ist von Christo eingesetzt, erschrodene Gewissen zu trösten, ihren Glauben zu stärken, wenn sie glauben, daß Christi Fleisch für der Welt Leben gegeben ist, und daß wir durch die Speise mit Christo vereinigt werden, Gnade und Leben haben. Aber die Widersacher schließen also, daß diejenigen, so solch Sakrament in einer Gestalt empfangen, damit also gestraft werden, und sprechen, es sollen und müssen die Laien ihnen [sich] genügen lassen; das heißt sie stolz genug dahergetroht. Wie, ihr Herren, dürfen wir auch Ursache fragen, warum sie ihnen [sich] sollen genügen lassen? Oder soll es eitel Wahrheit heißen, was ihr wollt und was ihr sagt? Seht aber Wunder zu, wie unverschämt und frech die Widersacher sind: sie dürfen ihr Wort als eitel Herrengebote setzen, sagen frei, die Laien müssen ihnen [sich] genügen lassen. Wie aber, wenn sie nicht müssen? Sind das nun die Gründe und Ur-

Doch ziehen sie noch mehr Ursachen an, warum beide[rei] Gestalt nicht solle gerecht werden, nämlich um Fährlichkeit willen, damit nicht etwa ein Tröpflein aus dem Kelche verschüttet werde. Dergleichen Träume bringen sie mehr vor, um welcher willen Christus' Ordnung billig nicht soll geändert werden. Ich will aber gleich sehen, daß frei wäre, einer oder beiderlei Gestalt gebrauchen. Wie wollten sie denn beweisen, daß sie Macht hätten, beiderlei Gestalt zu verbieten? Wiewohl auch den Menschen oder der Kirche nicht gebührt, die Freiheit selbst zu machen, oder daß sie aus Christi Ordnung wollten res indifferentes, das ist, frei auf beiden Seiten, machen. Die armen Gewissen, welchen die eine Gestalt mit Gewalt entzogen ist, und solch Unrecht haben leiden müssen, die wollen wir hier nicht richten. Aber diejenigen, so beiderlei Gestalt verboten haben, und doch nicht allein verbieten, sondern auch also öffentlich lehren, predigen, die Leute darum fangen, erzwängen usw., die laden auf sich Gottes schrecklich Gericht und Zorn, und die wissen wir gar nicht zu entschuldigen; sie mögen sehen, wie sie Gott wollen rechnen.

and crouch to him for a piece of silver and a morsel of bread, and shall say, Put me, I pray thee, into one of the priest's offices (German: Lieber, lass mich zu einem Priestertheil) that I may eat a piece of bread]. Here they say that the use of one kind was signified. And they add: "Thus, therefore, our laymen ought also to be content, with one part pertaining to the priests, with one kind." The adversaries [the masters of the Confutation are quite shameless, rude asses, and] are clearly trifling when they are transferring the history of the posterity of Eli to the Sacrament. The punishment of Eli is there described. Will they also say this, that as a punishment the laymen have been removed from the other part? [They are quite foolish and mad.] The Sacrament was instituted to console and comfort terrified minds, when they believe that the flesh of Christ, given for the life of the world, is food, when they believe that, being joined to Christ [through this food], they are made alive. But the adversaries argue that laymen are removed from the other part as a punishment. "They ought," they say, "to be content." This is sufficient for a despot. [That, surely, sounds proud and defiant enough.] But [my lords, may we ask the reason] why ought they? "The reason must not be asked, but let whatever the theologians say be law." [Is whatever you wish and whatever you say to be sheer truth? See now and be astonished how shameless and impudent the adversaries are: they dare to set up their own words as sheer commands of lords; they frankly say: The laymen must be content. But what if they must not?] This is a concoction of Eck. For we recognize those vain-glorious words, which if we would wish to criticize, there would be no want of language. For you see how great the impudence is. He commands, as a tyrant in the tragedies: "Whether they wish or not, they must be content." Will the reasons which he cites excuse, in the judgment of God, those who prohibit a part of the Sacrament, and rage against men using an entire Sacrament? [Are they to take comfort in the fact that it is recorded concerning the sons of Eli: They will go begging? That will be a shuffling excuse at the judgment-seat of God.] If they make the prohibition in order that there should be a distinguishing mark of the order, this very reason ought to move us not to assent to the adversaries, even though we would be disposed in other respects to comply with their custom. There are other distinguishing marks of the order of priests and of the people, but it is not obscure what design they have for defending this distinction so earnestly. That we may not seem to detract from the true worth of the order, we will not say more concerning this shrewd design.

They also allege the danger of spilling and certain similar things, which do not have force sufficient to change the ordinance of Christ. [They allege more dreams like these, for the sake of which it would be improper to change the ordinance of Christ.] And, indeed, if we assume that we are free to use either one part or both, how can the prohibition [to use both kinds] be defended? Although the Church does not assume to itself the liberty to convert the ordinances of Christ into matters of indifference. We indeed excuse the Church which has borne the injury [the poor consciences which have been deprived of one part by force], since it could not obtain both parts; but the authors who maintain that the use of the entire Sacrament is justly prohibited, and who now not only prohibit, but even excommunicate and violently persecute those using an entire Sacrament, we do not excuse. Let them see to it how they will give an account to God for their decisions. Neither is it to be judged immediately that the Church determines or approves whatever the pontiffs determine, especially since Scripture prophesies concerning the bishops and pastors to effect this as Ezekiel says, 7, 26: The Law shall perish from the priest [there will be priests or bishops who will know no command or law of God].

Art. XXIII. (XI.)

De Coniugio Sacerdotum.

1) In tanta infamia inquinati coelibatus audent adversarii non solum defendere legem pontificiam impio et falso praetextu nominis divini, sed etiam hortari Caesarem ac Principes, ne tolerant coniugia sacerdotum ad ignominiam et infamiam Romani imperii. Sic enim loquuntur.

mit falschem Schein, als sei es Heiligkeit. Darüber, wie wohl sie billig sich des überaus schändlichen, unzüchtigen, freien, losen Bubenlebens auf ihren Stiften und in Klöstern in ihr Herz schämen sollten und allein des Stücks halben nicht kühnlich die Sonne ansehen, wie wohl auch ihr böß, unruhig Herz und Gewissen ihnen billig so bange macht, sich zu entziehen und zu scheuen, vor so löblichem, ehrliebendem Kaiser ihre Augen aufzuheben, so sind sie doch hinstersüß, tun wie der Teufel selbst und alle verwegenen, berruchten Leute, gehen in ihrem blinden Trotz dahin, aller Ehre und Scham vergessend. Und die reinen, keuschen Leute dürfen kaiserliche Majestät, die Fürsürken und Fürsten vermahnen, daß sie der Priester Ehe nicht leiden sollen ad infamiam et ignominiam imperii, das ist zu deutlich, dem römischen Reich zu Schmach und Unehren. Denn dies sind ihre Worte, gleich als sei ihr schändlich Leben der Kirche sehr ehrlich und rühmlich.

2) Quae maior impudentia unquam ulla in historia lecta est, quam haec est adversariorum? Nam argumenta, quibus utuntur, postea recensebimus. Nunc hoc expendat prudens lector, quid frontis habeant isti nihili homines, qui dicunt coniugia parere infamiam et ignominiam imperio, quasi vero ecclesiam valde ornet ista publica infamia flagitiosarum ac prodigiosarum libidinum, quae flagrant apud istos sanctos patres, qui Curios simulat et bacchanalia vivunt. Ac pleraque ne verecunde quidem nominari queunt, quae isti summa licentia faciunt. Et has suas libidines castissima dextra tua, Carole Caesar, quem etiam vetera quaedam vaticinia appellant regem pudica facie, de te enim dictum apparet: Pudicus facie regnabit ubique [Oracula Sibyllina: Kai tote ayros anaß ptohs yhs oxhnpa xpatisei eis aivnas alantais], propugnari postulant. Postulant, ut contra ius divinum, contra ius gentium, contra canones conciliorum dissipet matrimonia, ut in homines innocentes tantum [R. 237] propter coniugium atrociter supplicia constituas, ut sacerdotes truces, quibus religiose parcunt etiam barbari, ut in exilium agas extorres mulieres, orbos pueros. Tales leges tibi ferunt, optime et castissime Imperator, quas nulla barbaria, quamlibet immanis ac 4) fera, posset audire. Sed quia nulla cadit in hos tuos mores vel turpitudine vel saevitia, speramus te et in hac causa clementer nobiscum acturum esse, praesertim ubi cognoveris, nos gravissimas habere causas nostrae sententiae sumptas ex Verbo Dei, cui adversarii nugacissimas et vanissimas persuasiones opponunt.

Majestät (was Gott verhüte!) solche greuliche Unzucht sollen handhaben, ihre kaiserliche Macht, welche der Allmächtige bisanher Eurer kaiserlichen Majestät sieghaftig und seliglich zu gebrauchen gnädiglich verliehen hat, darauf wenden solle, schändliche Unzucht und ungehörte Laster, welche auch bei den Heiden für greulich gehalten, zu schützen und zu verteidigen. Und wie sie in ihren blutdürstigen, verblendeten Herzen gefaßt seien, daß sie gern wollten ungeachtet aller göttlichen und natürlichen Rechte, ungeachtet der Konzilien und ihrer eigenen Canones solche Priesterehe mit Gewalt auf einmal zerreißen, viel arme, unschuldige Leute [aus] keiner andern Ursache denn allein um des Ehestandes willen tyrannisch mit Galgen und Schwert dahintrichten, die Priester selbst, welcher doch in größeren Fällen auch die Heiden verschont haben, als die großen Übeltäter um der Ehe willen erwürgen, so viel fromme, unschuldige Weiber und Kinder ins Elend vertreiben, zu armen verlassenen Witwen und Waisen machen und ihren

Wie wohl die große, ungehörte Unzucht mit Hurerei und Ehebruch unter Pfaffen und Mönchen usw. auf hohen Stiften, andern Kirchen und Klöstern in aller Welt also rüchtig ist, daß man davon singt und sagt, noch sind die Widersacher, so die Konfutation gestellt, so ganz verblendet und unerschämt, daß sie des Papstes Gesetz, dadurch die Ehe verboten, verteidigen, und dazu

Wie könnten doch die Widersacher ungeschädter; unverschämter und öffentlicher ihre eigene Schande und Schanden wirken und reden? Dergleichen unverschämte Vorbringen vor einem römischen Kaiser wird man in keiner Historie finden. Wenn sie nicht alle Welt kannte, wenn nicht viel fromme, redliche Leute, ihre eigenen Konstantiniker, unter ihnen selbst über so schändlich, unzüchtig, unehrlieh Wesen vor langer Zeit geklagt hätten, wenn ihr ehrlos, schändlich, ungöttlich, unzüchtig, heidnisch, epikurisch Leben und die Grundsuppe aller Unzucht zu Rom nicht so gar am Tage wäre, daß sich weder beden noch färben noch schmücken will lassen, so möchte man denken, ihre große Reinigkeit und ihre unberrückte jungfräuliche Keuschheit wäre eine Ursache, daß sie ein Weib oder die Ehe auch nicht mögen hören nennen, daß sie die heilige Ehe, welche der Papst selbst ein Sakrament der heiligen Ehe heißt, infamiam imperii taufen. Wohlan, ihre Argumente und Gründe wollen wir hernach erzählen. Dieses wolle aber ein jeder christlicher Leser, alle ehrbaren, ehrliebenden, frommen Leute zu Herzen nehmen und wohl bedenken, wie ganz ohne Ehre und Scheu und alle Scham die Leute sein müssen, so die heilige Ehe, welche die Heilige Schrift aufs höchste preist und lobt, einen Schandfleck, eine Infamie des römischen Reichs dürfen nennen; gleich als sei es so eine große Ehre der Kirche und des Reichs ihre lästerliche, greuliche Unzucht, wie man das römische und der Pfaffen Wesen kennt. Und, allergnädigster Herr Kaiser, bei Eurer kaiserlichen Majestät, welche in alten Schriften wird ein züchtiger Fürst und König genannt (denn freilich dieser Spruch von Eurer kaiserlichen Majestät gesagt ist: Pudicus facie regnabit ubique), ja bei Eurer Majestät und den löblichen Reichsständen dürfen solche Leute suchen und unverschämt fordern, daß Eure

Article XXIII (XI):

Of the Marriage of Priests.

Despite the great infamy of their defiled celibacy, the adversaries have the presumption not only to defend the pontifical law by the wicked and false pretext of the divine name, but even to exhort the Emperor and princes, to the disgrace and infamy of the Roman Empire, not to tolerate the marriage of priests. For thus they speak. [Although the great, unheard-of lewdness, fornication, and adultery among priests, monks, etc., at the great abbeys, in other churches and cloisters, has become so notorious throughout the world that people sing and talk about it, still the adversaries who have presented the Confutation are so blind and without shame that they defend the law of the Pope by which marriage is prohibited, and that, with the specious claim that they are defending a spiritual state. Moreover, although it would be proper for them to be heartily ashamed of the exceedingly shameful, lewd, abandoned, loose life of the wretches in their abbeys and cloisters, although on this account alone they should not have the courage to show their face in broad daylight, although their evil, restless heart and conscience ought to cause them to tremble, to stand aghast, and to be afraid to lift their eyes to our excellent Emperor, who loves uprightness, still they have the courage of the hangman, they act like the very devil and like all reckless, wanton people, proceeding in blind defiance and forgetful of all honor and decency. And these pure, chaste gentlemen dare to admonish His Imperial Majesty, the Electors and Princes not to tolerate the marriage of priests ad infamiam et ignominiam imperii, that is, to ward off shame and disgrace from the Roman Empire. For these are their words, as if their shameful life were a great honor and glory to the Church.]

What greater impudence has ever been read of in any history than this of the adversaries? [Such shameless advocates before a Roman Emperor will not easily be found. If all the world did not know them, if many godly, upright people among them, their own canonical brethren, had not complained long ago of their shameful, lewd, indecent conduct, if their vile, abominable, ungodly, lewd, heathenish, Epicurean life, and the dregs of all filthiness at Rome were not quite manifest, one might think that their great purity and their inviolate virgin chastity were the reason why they could not bear to hear the word woman or marriage pronounced, and why they baptize holy matrimony, which the Pope himself calls a sacrament, infamiam imperii.] For the arguments which they use we shall afterwards review. Now let the wise reader consider this, namely, what shame these good-for-nothing men have who say that marriages [which the Holy Scriptures praise most highly and command] produce infamy and disgrace to the government, as though, indeed, this public infamy of flagitious and unnatural lusts which glow among these very holy fathers, who feign that they are Curii and live like bacchanals, were a great ornament to the Church! And most things which these men do with the greatest license cannot even be named without a breach of modesty. And these their lusts they ask you to defend with your chaste right hand, Emperor Charles (whom even certain ancient predictions name as the king of modest face; for the saying appears concerning you: "One modest in face shall reign everywhere"). For they ask that, contrary to divine law, contrary to the law of nations, contrary to the canons of Councils, you sunder marriages, in order to impose merely for the sake of marriage atrocious punishments upon innocent men, to put to death priests, whom even barbarians reverently spare, to drive into exile banished women and fatherless children. Such laws they bring to you, most excellent and most chaste Emperor, to which no barbarity, however monstrous and cruel, could lend its ear. But because the stain of no disgrace or cruteuflischen Haß an unschuldigen Blute rächen: dazu dürfen sie Eure Kaiserliche Majestät vermahnen. Dieweil aber Gott der Allmächtige Eure Majestät mit sonderlicher angeborener Güte und Zucht begnadet, daß Eure Majestät aus hohem, adeligem, christlichem Gemüth so große Unzucht zu handhaben oder so ungehörte Tyrannei vorzunehmen, selbst Scheu haben und diese Handlung ohne Zweifel viel fürklicher und christlicher bedenten denn die losen Leute, so hoffen wir, Eure Majestät werden in diesem [hierin] ganz kaiserlich und gnädiglich sich erzeigen und bedenten, daß wir dieses guten Grund und Ursache haben aus der Heiligen Schrift, dagegen die Widersacher eitel Lügen und Irrtümer vorbringen.

5] Et tamen non tuentur serio coelibatum. Neque enim ignorant, quam pauci praestent castitatem, sed praetextunt speciem religionis regno suo, cui prodesse coelibatum putant, ut intelligamus Petrum recte monuisse 2. ep. 2, 1, futurum ut pseudoprophetae fictis verbis decipiant homines. Nihil enim vere, simpliciter et candide in hac tota causa dicunt, scribunt aut agunt adversarii, sed re ipsa dimicant de dominatione, quam falso putant periclitari et hanc impio praetextu pietatis munire conantur.

Widersacher nehmen sich der Sache der Religion, welches die Hauptsache ist, gar nicht mit Ernst an. Was sie schreiben, reden, handeln, sind eitel Worte ad hominem; da ist kein Ernst, keine Treue, kein recht Herz zu gemeinem Nutz, den armen Gewissen oder Kirchen zu helfen. Im Grund ist's ihnen um die Herrschaft zu tun, derselben haben sie Sorge und unterstützeln [stärken] sie fein mit eitel gottlosen, heuchlerischen Lügen; so wird sie auch stehen wie Butter an der Sonne.

6] Nos hanc legem de coelibatu, quam defendunt adversarii, ideo non possumus approbare, quia cum iure divino et naturali pugnat et ab ipsis canonibus conciliorum dissentit. Et constat superstitiosam et periculosam esse. Parit enim infinita scandala, peccata et corruptelam publicorum morum. Aliae controversiae nostrae aliquam disputationem doctorum desiderant: in hac ita manifesta res est in utraque parte, ut nullam requirat disputationem. Tantum requirit iudicem virum bonum et timentem Dei. Et quum defendatur a nobis manifesta veritas, tamen adversarii calumnias quasdam architectati sunt ad cavillanda argumenta nostra.

7] Primum. Gen. 1, 28 docet homines conditos esse, ut sint foecundi, et sexus recta ratione sexum appetat. Loquimur enim non de concupiscentia, quae peccatum est, [R. 238] sed de illo appetitu, qui in integra natura futurus erat, quem vocant σπογγήν φυσικήν. Et haec σπογγή est vere ordinatio divina sexus ad sexum. Quum autem haec ordinatio Dei sine singulari opere Dei tolli non possit, sequitur ius contrahendi matrimonii non posse tolli statutis aut votis.

8] Haec cavillantur adversarii, dicunt initio fuisse mandatum, ut repleretur terra, nunc repleta terra non esse mandatum coniugium. Videte, quam prudenter iudicent! Natura hominum formatur illo verbo Dei, ut sit foecunda non solum initio creationis, sed tantisper, dum haec corporum natura existet,

Auch so ist es ihnen gewiß nicht Ernst, solchen Zölibat und ehelosen Stand zu verfechten; denn sie wissen wohl, wie reine Jungfern sie sind, wie wenige unter ihnen die Keuschheit halten. Allein sie bleiben bei ihrem Trostwort, daß sie in ihrer Schrift finden: Si non caste, tamen caute, und wissen, daß keusch sich rühmen oder nennen und doch nicht sein, in der Welt einen Schein der Keuschheit hat, daß auch ihr Papstreich und Pfaffenwesen dadurch vor der Welt desto heiliger scheint. Denn Petrus der Apostel hat recht gewarnt, daß solche falsche Propheten werden die Leute betrügen mit erdichteten Worten. Die

Wir können das Gesetz vom ehelosen Stand darum nicht annehmen, denn es ist wider göttlich und natürlich Recht, wider alle Heilige Schrift, wider die Konzilien und Canones selbst. Darüber ist's lauter Heuchelei und dem Gewissen fährlich und ganz schädlich; so erfolgen auch daraus unzählige Argernisse, häßliche, schreckliche Sünden und Schanden, und wie man sieht in den rechten Pfaffenstädten und Residenzen, wie sie es nennen, Zerrüttung aller weltlichen Ehre und Zucht. Die andern Artikel unserer Konfession, wiewohl sie gewiß gegründet, sind dennoch so klar nicht, daß sie nicht mit einem Schein möchten angefochten werden. Aber dieser Artikel ist so klar, daß er auf beiden Seiten gar nahe [sicher] keiner Rede bedarf; allein wer ehrbar und gottesfürchtig ist, der kann hier bald Richter sein. Und wiewohl wir die öffentliche Wahrheit hier nun für uns haben, noch [dennoch] suchen die Widersacher Fündlein, unsere Gründe etwas anzufechten.

Erstlich ist geschrieben Gen. 1, daß Mann und Weib also geschaffen von Gott sind, daß sie sollen fruchtbar sein, Kinder zeugen usw., das Weib geneigt sein zum Mann, der Mann wieder zum Weibe. Und wir reden hier nicht von der unordentlichen Brunst, die nach Adams Fall gefolgt ist, sondern von natürlicher Neigung zwischen Mann und Weib, welche auch gewesen wäre in der Natur, wenn sie rein geblieben wäre. Und daß ist Gottes Geschöpf und Ordnung, daß der Mann zum Weib geneigt sei, das Weib zum Mann. So nun die göttliche Ordnung und die angeschaffene Art niemand ändern mag noch soll denn Gott selbst, so folgt, daß der Ehestand durch kein menschlich Statut oder Gelübde mag abgetan werden.

Wider diesen starken Grund spielen die Widersacher mit Worten; sagen: im Anfang der Schöpfung habe das Wort noch stattgehabt: „Wachset und mehret euch und erfüllet die Erde“; nun aber, so die Erde erfüllt ist, sei die Ehe nicht geboten. Seht aber, wie weise Leute sind da die Widersacher! Durch dieß göttliche Wort: „Wachset und elty falls upon your character, we hope that you will deal with us mildly in this matter, especially when you have learned that we have the weightiest reasons for our belief, derived from the Word of God, to which the adversaries oppose the most trifling and vain opinions.

And nevertheless they do not seriously defend celibacy. For they are not ignorant how few there are who practise chastity, but [they stick to that comforting saying which is found in their treatise, Si non caste, tamen caute (If not chastely, at least cautiously), and] they devise a sham of religion for their dominion, which they think that celibacy profits, in order that we may understand Peter to have been right in admonishing, 2 Ep. 2, 1, that there will be false teachers who will deceive men with feigned words. For the adversaries say, write, or do nothing truly [their words are merely an argument ad hominem], frankly, and candidly in this entire case, but they actually contend only concerning the dominion which they falsely think to be imperiled, and which they endeavor to fortify with a wicked pretense of godliness [they support their case with nothing but impious, hypocritical lies; accordingly, it will endure about as well as butter exposed to the sun].

We cannot approve this law concerning celibacy which the adversaries defend, because it conflicts with divine and natural law, and is at variance with the very canons of the Councils. And that it is superstitious and dangerous is evident. For it produces infinite scandals, sins, and corruption of public morals [as is seen in the real towns of priests, or, as they are called, their residences]. Our other controversies need some discussion by the doctors; in this the subject is so manifest to both parties that it requires no discussion. It only requires as judge a man that is honest and fears God. And although the manifest truth is defended by us, yet the adversaries have devised certain reproaches for satirizing our arguments.

First. Gen. 1, 28 teaches that men were created to be fruitful, and that one sex in a proper way should desire the other. For we are speaking not of concupiscence, which is sin, but of that appetite which was to have been in nature in its integrity [which would have existed in nature even if it had remained uncorrupted], which they call physical love. And this love of one sex for the other is truly a divine ordinance. But since this ordinance of God cannot be removed without an extraordinary work of God, it follows that the right to contract marriage cannot be removed by statutes or vows.

The adversaries cavil at these arguments; they say that in the beginning the commandment was given to replenish the earth, but that now since the earth has been replenished, marriage is not commanded. See how wisely they judge! The nature of men is so formed by the word of God that it is fruitful not only in the beginning of the creation, but as sicut hoc verbo, Gen. 1, 11, terra sit foecunda: Germinet terra herbam virentem. Propter hanc ordinationem non solum initio coepit terra producere gramina, sed quotannis vestiuntur agri, donec existet haec natura. Sicut igitur legibus humanis non potest natura terrae mutari, ita neque votis neque lege humana potest natura hominis mutari sine speciali opere Dei.

Ist auch Mann und Weib geschaffen, fruchtbar zu sein, solange diese Natur währt. Wie nun das Menschengesetz und -gesetz nicht ändern kann, daß die Erde nicht sollte grün werden usw., also kann auch kein Klostergebot, kein Menschengesetz die menschliche Natur ändern, daß ein Weib nicht sollte eines Mannes begehren, ein Mann eines Weibes, ohne ein sonderlich Gotteswerk.

9] Secundo. Et quia haec creatio seu ordinatio divina in homine est ius naturale, ideo sapienter et recte dixerunt iuriconsulti coniunctionem maris et feminae esse iuris naturalis. Quum autem ius naturale sit immutabile, necesse est semper manere ius contrahendi coniugii. Nam ubi natura non mutatur, necesse est et illam ordinationem manere, quam Deus indidit naturae, nec potest 10] est legibus humanis tolli. Ridiculum igitur est, quod adversarii nugantur, initio fuisse mandatum coniugium, nunc non esse. Hoc perinde est, ac si dicerent: Olim nascentes homines secum attulerunt sexum, nunc non afferunt. Olim secum attulerunt ius naturale nascentes, nunc non afferunt. Nullus Faber fabrilis cogitare quidquam posset, quam haec ineptiae excogitatae sunt ad eludendum ius 11] naturae. Maneat igitur hoc in causa, quod et Scriptura docet, et iuriconsultus sapienter dixit: coniunctionem maris et feminae 12] esse iuris naturalis. Porro ius [R. 230] naturale vere est ius divinum, quia est ordinatio divinitus impressa naturae. Quia autem hoc ius mutari non potest sine singulari opere Dei, necesse est manere ius contrahendi coniugii, quia ille naturalis appetitus est ordinatio Dei in natura sexus ad sexum, et propterea ius est; alioqui quare uterque sexus 13] conderetur? Et loquimur, ut supra dictum est, non de concupiscentia, quae peccatum est, sed de illo appetitu, quem vocant σφοδρὴν φυσικὴν, quem concupiscentia non sustulit ex natura, sed accendit, ut nunc remedio magis opus habeat, et coniugium non solum procreationis causa necessarium sit, sed etiam remedii causa. Haec sunt perspicua et adeo firma, ut nullo modo labefactari queant.

Natur rein geblieben wäre. Die böse Lust nach dem wir nun des Ehestandes viel mehr bedürfen, nicht verhüten. Dies ist so ein klarer Grund, daß ihn alle Welt wird ihn müssen bleiben lassen.

14] Tertio. Paulus ait 1 Cor. 7, 2: Propter fornicationem unusquisque habeat uxorem suam. Hoc iam expressum mandatum est, ad omnes pertinens, qui non sunt idonei ad coeli 15] batum. Adversarii iubent sibi ostendi praeceptum, quod praecipit sacerdotibus uxores ducere, quasi sacerdotes non sint homines. Nos, quae de natura hominum in genere disputamus, profecto etiam ad sacerdotes per 16] tinere iudicamus. An non praecipit hic mehret euch“, welches noch immer geht und nicht aufhört, ist Mann und Weib also geschaffen, daß sie sollen fruchtbar sein, nicht allein die Zeit des Anfangs, sondern solange diese Natur währt. Denn gleichwie durch das Wort Gen. am 1., da Gott sprach: „Es lasse die Erde aufgehen Gras und Kraut“ usw., die Erde also geschaffen ist, daß sie nicht allein im Anfang Frucht brachte, sondern daß sie alle Jahre Gras, Kräuter und ander Gewächs brächte, solange diese Natur währt: also ist auch Mann und Weib geschaffen, solange diese Natur währt. Wie nun das Menschengesetz und -gesetz nicht ändern kann, daß die Erde nicht sollte grün werden usw., also kann auch kein Klostergebot, kein Menschengesetz die menschliche Natur ändern, daß ein Weib nicht sollte eines Mannes begehren, ein Mann eines Weibes, ohne ein sonderlich Gotteswerk.

Zum andern, diemeil das göttliche Geschöpf und Gottes Ordnung natürlich Recht und Gesetz ist, so haben die Jurisconsulti recht gesagt, daß des Mannes und Weibes Beieinandersein und Zusammengehören ist natürlich Recht. So aber das natürliche Recht niemand verändern kann, so muß je einem jeden die Ehe frei sein. Denn wo Gott die Natur nicht verändert, da muß auch die Art bleiben, die Gott der Natur eingepflanzt hat, und sie kann mit Menschengesetz nicht verändert werden. Derhalben ist es ganz kindisch, daß die Widersacher sagen, im Anfang, da der Mensch geschaffen, sei die Ehe geboten, nun aber nicht. Denn es ist gleich, als wenn sie sprächen: Etwas [früher] zu Adams und der Patriarchen Zeiten, wenn ein Mann geboren ward, hatte er Mannesart an sich, wenn ein Weib geboren ward, hatte sie Weibesart an sich, jeztund aber ist's anders; vorzeiten brachte ein Kind aus Mutterleib natürliche Art mit sich, nun aber nicht. So bleiben wir nun billig bei dem Spruch, wie die Jurisconsulti weislich und recht gesagt haben, daß Mann und Weib beieinander sind, ist natürlich Recht. Ist's nun natürlich Recht, so ist es Gottes Ordnung, also in die Natur eingepflanzt, und ist also auch göttlich Recht. Diemeil aber das göttliche und natürliche Recht niemand zu ändern hat denn Gott allein, so muß der Ehestand jedermann frei sein. Denn die natürliche angeborene Neigung des Weibes gegen den Mann, des Mannes gegen dem [das] Weib ist Gottes Geschöpf und Ordnung. Darum ist's recht, und hat's kein Engel noch Mensch zu ändern. Gott der Herr hat nicht allein Adam geschaffen, sondern auch Eva, nicht allein einen Mann, sondern auch ein Weib, und sie gesegnet, daß sie fruchtbar seien. Und wir reden, wie ich gesagt habe, nicht von der unordentlichen Bruch, die da sündlich ist, sondern von der natürlichen Neigung, die zwischen Mann und Weib auch gewesen wäre, so die Fall hat solche Neigung noch stärker gemacht, daß allein Kinder zu zeugen, sondern auch Sünde zu niemand wird umstoßen, sondern der Teufel und Für das dritte sagt Paulus: „Zu vermeiden die Hurerei, habe ein jeglicher sein eigen Ehe-weib.“ Das ist ein gemeiner Befehl und Gebot und geht alle diejenigen an, die nicht vermögen, ohne Ehe zu bleiben. Die Widersacher fordern, wir sollen Gottes Gebot zeigen, da er gebiete, daß die Priester sollen Weiber nehmen, gleich als seien die Priester nicht Menschen. Was die Schrift insgemein vom ganzen menschlichen Geschlecht redet, das geht wahrlich die Priester mit an.

long as this nature of our bodies will exist; just as the earth becomes fruitful by the word Gen. 1, 11: Let the earth bring forth grass, yielding seed. Because of this ordinance the earth not only commenced in the beginning to bring forth plants, but the fields are clothed every year as long as this natural order will exist. Therefore, just as by human laws the nature of the earth cannot be changed, so, without a special work of God, the nature of a human being can be changed neither by vows nor by human law [that a woman should not desire a man, nor a man a woman].

Secondly. And because this creation or divine ordinance in man is a natural right, jurists have accordingly said wisely and correctly that the union of male and female belongs to natural right. But since natural right is immutable, the right to contract marriage must always remain. For where nature does not change, that ordinance also with which God has endowed nature does not change, and cannot be removed by human laws. Therefore it is ridiculous for the adversaries to prate that marriage was commanded in the beginning, but is not now. This is the same as if they would say: Formerly, when men were born, they brought with them sex; now they do not. Formerly, when they were born, they brought with them natural right; now they do not. No craftsman (Faber) could produce anything more crafty than these absurdities, which were devised to elude a right of nature. Therefore let this remain in the case which both Scripture teaches and the jurist says wisely, namely, that the union of male and female belongs to natural right. Moreover, a natural right is truly a divine right, because it is an ordinance divinely impressed upon nature. But inasmuch as this right cannot be changed without an extraordinary work of God, it is necessary that the right to contract marriage remains, because the natural desire of sex for sex is an ordinance of God in nature, and for this reason is a right; otherwise, why would both sexes have been created? And we are speaking, as it has been said above, not of concupiscence, which is sin, but of that desire which they call physical love [which would have existed between man and woman even though their nature had remained pure], which concupiscence has not removed from nature, but inflames, so that now it has greater need of a remedy, and marriage is necessary not only for the sake of procreation, but also as a remedy [to guard against sins]. These things are clear, and so well established that they can in no way be overthrown.

Thirdly. Paul says, 1 Cor. 7, 2: To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife. This now is an express command pertaining to all who are not fit for celibacy. The adversaries ask that a commandment be shown them which commands priests to marry. As though priests are not men! We judge indeed that the things which we maintain concerning human nature in general pertain also Paulus, ut ducant uxorem isti, qui non habent donum continentiae? Interpretatur enim se ipse paulo post, v. 9, quum ait: Melius est nubere, quam uri. Et Christus clare dixit Matth. 19, 11: Non omnes capiunt hoc verbum, sed quibus datum est. Quia nunc post peccatum concurrunt haec duo, naturalis appetitus et concupiscentia, quae inflamat naturalem appetitum, ut iam magis opus sit coniugio quam in natura integra: ideo Paulus de coniugio tamquam de remedio loquitur et propter illa incendia iubet nubere. Neque hanc vocem: Melius est nubere, quam uri, ulla humana auctoritas, ulla lex, ulla vota tollere possunt, quia haec non tollunt naturam aut concupiscentiam. Retinent igitur ius ducendi omnes, qui uruntur. Et tenentur hoc mandato Pauli: Propter fornicationem unusquisque habeat uxorem [R. 240] suam, omnes, qui non vere continent, de qua re iudicium ad conscientiam cuiusque pertinet.

die nicht recht rein und keusch vermögen zu bleiben, zu folgen: „Es soll ein jeglicher sein eigen Weib haben, zu vermeiden Hurerei.“ Darin hat ein jeder für sich sein Gewissen zu prüfen.

18] Nam quod hic iubent petere a Deo continentiam, iubent corpus laboribus et inedia conficere, cur sibi quoque non canunt haec magnifica praecepta? Sed ut supra diximus, tantum ludunt adversarii, nihil agunt serio.

19] Si continentia esset omnibus possibilis, non requireret peculiare donum. At Christus ostendit eam peculiari dono opus habere, quare non contingit omnibus. Reliquos vult Deus uti communi lege naturae, quam instituit. Non enim vult Deus contemni suas ordinationes, suas creaturas. Ita vult illos castos esse, ut remedio divinitus proposito utantur, sicut ita vult vitam nostram alere, 20] si cibo, si potu utamur. Et Gerson testatur multos fuisse bonos viros, qui conati domare corpus, tamen parum profecerunt. Ideo recte ait Ambrosius: Sola virginitas est, quae suaderi potest, imperari non potest; res 21] magis voti quam praecepti est. Si quis hic obiecerit Christum laudare hos, qui se castrant propter regnum coelorum, Matth. 19, 12, is hoc quoque consideret, quod tales laudat, qui donum continentiae habent, ideo enim addidit: Qui potest capere, capiat. Non 22] enim placet Christo immunda continentia. Laudamus et nos veram continentiam. Sed nunc de lege disputamus, et de his, qui non habent donum continentiae. Res debet relinqui libera, non debebant iniici laquei imbecillibus per hanc legem.

der fasse es.“ Denn dem HErrn Christo gefällt solche unreine Keuschheit nicht, wie in Eiften und Rüstern ist. Wir lassen auch rechte Keuschheit eine feine, edle Gottesgabe sein. Wir reden aber hier davon, daß solch Gesetz und Verbot der Ehe unrecht ist, und von denen, die Gottes Gabe nicht haben. Darum soll es frei sein, und sollen nicht solche Stride den armen Gewissen angeworfen werden.

23] Quarto. Dissentit lex pontificia et a canonibus conciliorum. Nam veteres canones non prohibent coniugium, nec contracta coniugia dissolvunt, etsi hos, qui in ministerio contraxerunt, remouent ab administratione. Haec missio istis temporibus beneficii loco erat. Sed novi canones, qui non sunt in Paulus gebietet da, daß diejenigen sollen Weiber nehmen, so nicht haben die Gabe der Jungfrauschaft; denn er legt sich bald hernach selbst aus, da er sagt: „Es ist besser ehelich werden, denn brennen.“ Und Christus sagt klar: „Sie fassen nicht alle das Wort, sondern denen es gegeben ist.“ Diemeil nun nach Adams Fall in uns allen die beiden beieinander sind, die natürliche Reigung und angeborene böse Lust, welche die natürliche Reigung noch stärker macht, also daß des Ehestandes mehr vorzuziehen ist, denn da die Natur unverderbt war: darum redet Paulus also von der Ehe, daß damit unserer Schwachheit geholfen werde, und solch Brennen zu vermeiden, gebietet er, daß diejenigen, so es bedürfen, sollen ehelich werden. Und dies Wort: „Es ist besser, ehelich zu werden, denn brennen“, mag [kann] durch kein Menschengesetz, durch kein Klostergeklübbe weggetan werden. Denn kein Gesetz kann die Natur anders machen, denn sie geschaffen oder geartet ist. Darum haben wir Freiheit und Macht, ehelich zu werden, alle, so das Brennen fühlen; und alle, die sind schuldig, diesem Gebot und Wort Pauli für sich sein Gewissen zu prüfen.

Denn daß die Widersacher sagen, man solle Gott um Keuschheit bitten und anrufen, man solle den Leib mit Fasten und Arbeit kasteien, sollten sie billig solch Kasteien anfangen. Aber wie ich hier oben gesagt, die Widersacher meinen diese Sache nicht mit Ernst; sie spielen und scherzen ihres Gefallens. Wenn Jungfrauschaft einem jeden möglich wäre, so bedürfte es keiner [besonderen] Gottesgabe. Nun sagt der HErr Christus Matth. 19, es sei eine besondere hohe Gottesgabe, und nicht jedermann fasse das Wort“. Die andern nun, will Gott, daß sie sollen gebrauchen des Ehestandes, den Gott eingesezt. Denn Gott will nicht, daß man sein Geschöpf und Ordination verachten soll; so will er dennoch, daß dieselben auch sollen keusch sein, nämlich, daß sie des Ehestandes gebrauchen, welchen er eheliche Reinigkeit und Keuschheit zu erhalten hat eingesezt; wie er auch will, daß wir sollen der Speise und des Tranks gebrauchen, die er uns zur Lebenserhaltung geschaffen hat. Und Gerson, der zeigt an, daß viel fromme, große Leute gewesen sind, die durch Leibeskafeien haben wollen Keuschheit halten und haben dennoch nichts geschafft. Darum sagt auch St. Ambrosius recht: „Allein die Jungfrauschaft ist ein solch Ding, die man raten mag und nicht gebieten.“ Ob jemand hier nun sagen wollte, der HErr Christus lobt diejenigen, die sich selbst verschnitten haben um des Himmelreichs willen, der soll auch bedenken, daß Christus von denjenigen redet, welche die Gabe der Jungfrauschaft haben; denn darum sezt er dazu: „Wer es fassen kann, Zum vierten, so ist auch dasselbe Papstgesetz wider die Canones und alten Konzilien. Denn die alten Canones verbieten nicht die Ehe, sie zerreißen auch nicht den Ehestand; wiewohl sie diejenigen, so sich zum Ehestand begeben, ihres geistlichen Amtes entsezen. Das war die Zeit nach Gelegenheit mehr eine Gnade denn eine to priests. Does not Paul here command those who have not the gift of continence to marry? For he interprets himself a little after when he says, v. 9: It is better to marry than to burn. And Christ has clearly said, Matt. 19, 11: All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. Because now, since sin [since the fall of Adam], these two things concur, namely, natural appetite and concupiscence, which inflames the natural appetite, so that now there is more need of marriage than in nature in its integrity, Paul accordingly speaks of marriage as a remedy, and on account of these flames commands to marry. Neither can any human authority, any law, any vows remove this declaration: It is better to marry than to burn, because they do not remove the nature or concupiscence. Therefore all who burn, retain the right to marry. By this commandment of Paul: To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, all are held bound who do not truly keep themselves continent; the decision concerning which pertains to the conscience of each one.

For as they here give the command to seek continence of God, and to weaken the body by labors and hunger, why do they not proclaim these magnificent commandments to themselves? But, as we have said above, the adversaries are only playing; they are doing nothing seriously. If continence were possible to all, it would not require a peculiar gift. But Christ shows that it has need of a peculiar gift; therefore it does not belong to all. God wishes the rest to use the common law of nature which He has instituted. For God does not wish His ordinances, His creations to be despised. He wishes men to be chaste in this way, that they use the remedy divinely presented, just as He wishes to nourish our life in this way, that we use food and drink. Gerson also testifies that there have been many good men who endeavored to subdue the body, and yet made little progress. Accordingly, Ambrose is right in saying: Virginity is only a thing that can be recommended, but not commanded; it is a matter of vow rather than of precept. If any one here would raise the objection that Christ praises those which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake, Matt. 19, 12, let him also consider this, that He is praising such as have the gift of continence; for on this account He adds: He that is able to receive it, let him receive it. For an impure continence [such as there is in monasteries and cloisters] does not please Christ. We also praise true continence. But now we are disputing concerning the law, and concerning those who do not have the gift of continence. The matter ought to be left free, and snares ought not to be cast upon the weak through this law.

Fourthly. The pontifical law differs also from the canons of the Councils. For the ancient canons do not prohibit marriage, neither do they dissolve marriages that have been contracted, even if they remove from the administration of their office those who have contracted them in the ministry. At those times this dismissal was an act of kindness [rather than a punishment]. But the new canons, which have not been framed in the Synods, but have been made according to the private judgment of the Popes, both prosynodis conditi, sed privato consilio pontificum facti, et prohibent contrahere matrimonia, et contracta dissolvunt; idque [R.241] palam est fieri contra mandatum Christi, Matth. 19, 6: Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non 24] separat. Adversarii vociferantur in Confutatione coelibatum praeceptum esse a conciliis. Nos non accusamus decreta conciliorum, nam haec certa conditione permittunt coniugium, sed accusamus leges, quas post veteres synodos Romani pontifices contra auctoritatem synodorum condiderunt. Adeo pontifices contemnunt auctoritatem synodorum, quam alii volunt videri sacrosanctam. 25] Propria igitur est haec lex de perpetuo coelibatu huius novae pontificiae dominationis. Neque id abs re. Daniel, 11, 37, enim tribuit hanc notam regno antichristi, videlicet contemptum mulierum.

26] Quinto. Etsi adversarii non defendunt legem superstitionis causa, quum videant non solere observari, tamen superstitiones opiniones serunt, dum praetexunt religionem. Coelibatum ideo praedicant se requirere, quod sit mundities, quasi coniugium sit immundities ac peccatum, aut quasi coelibatus magis mereatur iustificationem quam coniugium. Et 27] huc allegant ceremonias legis Mosaicae, quod quum in lege tempore ministerii sacerdotes separati fuerint ab uxoribus, in novo testamento sacerdos, quum semper orare debeat, semper debeat continere. Haec inepta similitudo allegatur tamquam demonstratio, quae cogat sacerdotes ad perpetuum coelibatum, quum quidem in ipsa similitudine coniugium concedatur, tantum ministerii tempore consuetudo interdicitur. Et aliud est orare, aliud ministrare. Orabant sancti tunc quoque, quum non exercebant publicum ministerium, nec consuetudo cum coniuge prohibebat, ne orarent.

enthalten sollten, nämlich wenn sie Kirchendienst vorhätten. Auch so ist ein ander Ding beten, ein ander Ding, in der Kirche priesterlich Amt tun. Denn viel Heilige haben wohl gebetet, wenn sie gleich nicht im Tempel dienten, und hat sie eheliche Beiwohnung daran nichts gehindert.

28] Sed respondebimus ordine ad haec fragmenta. Primum hoc fateri necesse est adversarios, quod coniugium sit mundum in credentibus, quia est sanctificatum Verbo Dei, hoc est, est res licita et approbata Verbo Dei, sicut copiose testatur Scriptura. [R.242] 29] Christus enim vocat coniugium coniunctionem divinam, quum ait Matth. 19, 6: Quos 30] Deus coniunxit. Et Paulus de coniugio, de cibis et similibus rebus inquit 1 Tim. 4, 5: Sanctificantur per Verbum et orationem, hoc est, per verbum, quo conscientia fit certa, quod Deus approbet, et per orationem, hoc est, per fidem, quae cum gratiarum 31] actione tamquam dono Dei utitur. Item 1 Cor. 7, 14: Sanctificatur vir infidelis per uxorem fidelem etc., id est, usus coniugalitatis licitus et sanctus est propter fidem in Christum; sicut licitum est uti cibo etc. Item 32] 1 Tim. 2, 15: Salvatur mulier per filiorum generationem etc. Si talem locum adversarii

Strafe. Aber die neuen Canones, die nicht in den Conciliis, sondern durch die Päpste gemacht sind, die verbieten die Ehe und zerreißen die iam contracta matrimonia usw. So ist's nun am Tage, daß solches wider die Schrift, auch wider Christi Gebot ist, da er sagt: „Die Gott zusammengefügt hat, soll der Mensch nicht scheiden.“ Die Widersacher schreien fast [sehr], daß der Zölibat oder Keuschheit der Priester geboten sei in den Conciliis. Wir setzen die Concilia des Teils nicht an, denn sie verbieten die Ehe nicht; sondern das neue Gesetz setzen wir an, welches die Päpste wider die Concilia gemacht haben. Also gar verachten die Päpste selbst die Concilia, so sie doch andern bei Gottes Zorn und ewiger Verdammnis dürfen gebieten, die Konzilien zu halten. Darum ist das Gesetz, dadurch die Priesterzucht verboten, ein recht Papstgesetz der römischen Tyrannei. Denn der Prophet Daniel hat das antichristische Reich also abgemalt, daß es solle Ehestand und Eheweiber, ja das weibliche Geschlecht verachten lehren.

Zum fünften, wiewohl sie das ungöttliche Gesetz nicht Heiligkeit haben oder aus Unwissenheit verteidigen (denn sie wissen wohl, daß sie Keuschheit nicht halten), so geben sie doch Ursache zu unzähliger Heuchelei, dieviel sie einen Schein der Heiligkeit vorwenden. Sie sagen, daß darum die Priester sollen Keuschheit halten, denn sie müssen heilig und rein sein; gleich als sei der Ehestand eine Unreinigkeit, gleich als werde man eher heilig und gerecht vor Gott durch den Zölibat denn durch den Ehestand. Und dazu ziehen sie an die Priester im Gesetz Moses. Denn sie sagen, wenn die Priester haben im Tempel gedient, haben sie sich ihrer Weiber müssen enthalten: darum, so im Neuen Testament die Priester allezeit beten sollen, sollen sie sich auch allezeit keusch halten. Solch ungeschickt, närrisch Gleichnis ziehen sie an als einen ganz klaren, gewissen Grund, dadurch schon erstritten sei, daß die Priester schuldig seien, ewige Keuschheit zu halten, so sie doch, wenn auch das Gleichnis hier töchte [taugte] oder sich reimte, nichts mehr damit erhalten [beweisen], denn daß die Priester sich ihrer Weiber allein eine Zeitlang

Wir wollen aber ordentlich nacheinander auf solche Träume antworten. Für das erste müssen je die Widersacher bekennen und können's nicht leugnen, daß der Ehestand an Christgläubigen ein reiner, heiliger Stand sei; denn er ist je geheiligt durch das Wort Gottes. Denn von Gott ist er eingesetzt, durch Gottes Wort ist er bestätigt, wie da die Schrift reichlich zeugt. Denn Christus sagt: „Was Gott hat zusammengefügt, das soll kein Mensch scheiden.“ Da sagt Christus, Eheleute und Ehestand füge Gott zusammen; so ist es ein rein, heilig, edel, löblich Gotteswerk. Und Paulus sagt von der Ehe, von Eßeßen und dergleichen, daß sie „geheiligt werden durch das Wort Gottes und durch das Gebet“. Erstlich durchs göttliche Wort, dadurch das Herz gewiß wird, daß Gott dem Herrn der Ehestand gefällt. Zum andern durch das Gebet, das ist, durch Dankagung, welche im Glauben geschieht, da wir des Ehestands, Speise, Trank mit Dankagung gebrauchen. 1 Kor. 7: „Der ungläubige Mann wird

hibit the contraction of marriages, and dissolve them when contracted; and this is to be done openly, contrary to the command of Christ, Matt. 19, 6: What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. In the Confutation the adversaries exclaim that celibacy has been commanded by the Councils. We do not find fault with the decrees of the Councils; for under a certain condition these allow marriage; but we find fault with the laws which, since the ancient Synods, the Popes of Rome have framed contrary to the authority of the Synods. The Popes despise the authority of the Synods, just as much as they wish it to appear holy to others [under peril of God's wrath and eternal damnation]. Therefore this law concerning perpetual celibacy is peculiar to this new pontifical despotism. Nor is it without a reason. For Daniel, 11, 37, ascribes to the kingdom of Antichrist this mark, namely, the contempt of women.

Fifthly. Although the adversaries do not defend the law because of superstition, [not because of its sanctity, as from ignorance], since they see that it is not generally observed, nevertheless they diffuse superstitious opinions, while they give a pretext of religion. They proclaim that they require celibacy because it is purity. As though marriage were impurity and a sin, or as though celibacy merited justification more than does marriage! And to this end they cite the ceremonies of the Mosaic Law, because, since, under the Law, the priests, at the time of ministering, were separated from their wives, the priest in the New Testament, inasmuch as he ought always to pray, ought always to practise continence. This silly comparison is presented as a proof which should compel priests to perpetual celibacy, although, indeed, in this very comparison marriage is allowed, only in the time of ministering its use is interdicted. And it is one thing to pray: another, to minister. The saints prayed even when they did not exercise the public ministry; nor did conjugal intercourse hinder them from praying.

But we shall reply in order to these figments. In the first place, it is necessary for the adversaries to acknowledge this, namely, that in believers marriage is pure because it has been sanctified by the Word of God, i. e., it is a matter that is permitted and approved by the Word of God, as Scripture abundantly testifies. For Christ calls marriage a divine union, when He says, Matt. 19, 6: What God hath joined together [let not man put asunder]. Here Christ says that married people are joined together by God. Accordingly, it is a pure, holy, noble, praiseworthy work of God]. And Paul says of marriage, of meats and similar things, 1 Tim. 4, 5: It is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer, i. e., by the Word, by which consciences become certain that God approves; and by prayer, i. e., by faith, which uses it with thanksgiving as a gift of God. Likewise, 1 Cor. 7, 14: The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, etc., i. e., the use of marriage is per-de coelibatu proferre possent, tum vero miros triumphos agerent. Paulus dicit salvari mulierem per filiorum generationem. Quid potuit dici contra hypocrisin coelibatus honorificentius, quam mulierem salvari ipsius coniugalibus operibus, usu coniugali, pariendo et reliquis oeconomicis officiis? Quid autem sentit Paulus? Lector observet addi fidem, nec laudari officia oeconomica sine fide: Si manserint, inquit, in fide. Loquitur enim de toto genere matrum. Requirit igitur praecipue fidem, qua mulier accipit remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem. Deinde addit certum opus vocationis, sicut in singulis hominibus fidem sequi debet bonum opus certae vocationis. Id opus placet Deo propter fidem. Ita mulieris officia placent Deo propter fidem, et salvatur mulier fidelis, quae in talibus officiis vocationis suae pie servit.

So will er nun vor allen Dingen, daß sie Gottes Wort haben und gläubig seien, durch welchen Glauben (wie er denn allenthalben sagt) sie empfangen Vergebung der Sünden und Gott verhöhet werden. Danach gedenkt er des Werkes ihres weiblichen Amtes und Berufs, gleichwie in allen Christen aus dem Glauben sollen gute Werke folgen, daß ein jeder nach seinem Beruf etwas tue, damit er seinem Nächsten nütz werde; und wie dieselben guten Werke Gott gefallen, also gefallen auch Gott solche Werke, die ein gläubig Weib tut ihrem Beruf nach; und ein solch Weib wird selig, die also ihrem Beruf nach im ehelichen Stand ihr weiblich Amt tut.

33] Haec testimonia docent coniugium rem licitam esse. Si igitur mundities significat id, quod coram Deo licitum et approbatum est, coniugia sunt munda, quia sunt appro-
34] bata Verbo Dei. Et Paulus ait de rebus licitis Tit. 1, 15: Omnia munda mundis, hoc est, his, qui credunt Christo et fide iusti sunt. Itaque ut virginitas in impiis est immunda, ita coniugium in piis est mundum propter Verbum Dei et fidem.

35] Deinde. Si mundities proprie opponitur concupiscentiae, significat munditiam [R. 248 cordis, hoc est, mortificatam concupiscentiam, quia lex non prohibet coniugium, sed concupiscentiam, adulterium, scortationem. Quare coelibatus non est mundities. Potest enim esse maior mundities cordis in coniuge, velut in Abraham aut Iacob, quam in plerisque etiam vere continentibus.

36] Postremo. Si ita intelligunt coelibatum munditiam esse, quod mereatur iustificationem magis quam coniugium, maxime reclamamus. Iustificamur enim neque propter virginitatem neque propter coniugium, sed gratis propter Christum, quum credimus nos propter

geheiligt durch das gläubige Weib“, das ist, der Ehestand ist rein, gut, christlich und heilig um des Glaubens willen in [an] Christum, des wir brauchen mögen mit Dankagung, wie wir Speise und Trank usw. brauchen. Item 1 Tim. 2: „Das Weib aber wird selig durch Kindergebären, so sie bleibt im Glauben“ usw. Wenn die Widersacher von ihrer Pfaffenkeuschheit einen solchen Spruch könnten vorbringen, wie sollten sie triumphieren! Paulus sagt, das Weib werde selig durch Kindergebären. Was hätte doch der heilige Apostel wider die schändliche Heuchelei der unfähigen, erlogenen Keuschheit Trefflicheres reden können, denn daß er sagt, sie werden selig durch die ehelichen Werke, durch Gebären, durch Kinderzähnen und -ziehen, durch Haushalten usw.? Ja, wie meint das Paulus? Er setzt dazu mit klaren Worten: „So sie bleibt im Glauben“ usw. Denn die Werke und Arbeit im Ehestand für sich selbst ohne den Glauben werden hier allein nicht gelobt.

Diese Sprüche zeigen an, daß der Ehestand ein heilig und christlich Ding sei. So nun Reinigkeit auch das heißt, daß vor Gott heilig und angenehm ist, so ist der Ehestand heilig und angenehm, denn er ist bestätigt durch das Wort Gottes. Und wie Paulus sagt: „Den Keinen ist alles rein“, das ist, denen, die da glauben in [an] Christum. Derhalben wie die Jungfrauschaft in den Gottlosen unrein ist, also ist der Ehestand heilig in den Gläubigen um des göttlichen Wortes und Glaubens willen.

So aber die Widersacher das Reinigkeit heißen, da keine Unzucht ist, so heißt Reinigkeit des Herzens, da die böse Lust getödtet ist. Denn Gottes Gesetz verbietet nicht die Ehe, sondern die Unzucht, Ehebruch, Hurerei. Darum, äußerlich ohne Weib sein, ist nicht die rechte Reinigkeit, sondern es kann eine größere Reinigkeit des Herzens sein in einem Ehemann (als in Abraham und Jakob) denn in vielen, die gleich nach leiblicher Reinigkeit ihre Keuschheit recht halten.

Endlich, so sie die Keuschheit derhalben Reinigkeit nennen, daß man dadurch eher sollte vor Gott gerecht werden denn durch den Ehestand, so ist es ein Irrtum. Denn ohne Verdienst, um Christus' willen allein, erlangen wir Vergebung der Sünden, wenn wir glauben, daß wir durch Christus' Blut und Sterben einen gnädigen Gott haben. Hier aber werden die Widersacher schreien, daß wir wie Iovinianus den Ehestand der Jungfrauschaft gleichachten. Aber um ihres Geschreies willen werden wir die göttliche Wahrheit und die Lehre von Christo, von Gerechtigkeit des Glaubens, die wir oben angezeigt, nicht verleugnen. Doch lassen wir dennoch der Jungfrauschaft ihren Preis und Lob und sagen auch, daß eine Gabe sei höher denn die andern. Denn gleichwie Weisheit zu regieren eine höhere Gabe ist denn andere Künste, also ist die Jungfrauschaft oder Keuschheit eine höhere Gabe denn der Ehestand. Und doch wiederum, wie der Regent nicht von wegen seiner Gabe und Klugheit vor Gott mehr gerecht mitted and holy on account of faith in Christ, just as it is permitted to use meat, etc. Likewise, 1 Tim. 2, 15: She shall be saved in child-bearing [if they continue in faith], etc. If the adversaries could produce such a passage concerning celibacy, then indeed they would celebrate a wonderful triumph. Paul says that woman is saved by child-bearing. What more honorable could be said against the hypocrisy of celibacy than that woman is saved by the conjugal works themselves, by conjugal intercourse, by bearing children and the other duties? But what does St. Paul mean? Let the reader observe that faith is added, and that domestic duties without faith are not praised. If they continue, he says, in faith. For he speaks of the whole class of mothers. Therefore he requires especially faith [that they should have God's Word and be believing], by which woman receives the remission of sins and justification. Then he adds a particular work of the calling, just as in every man a good work of a particular calling ought to follow faith. This work pleases God on account of faith. Thus the duties of the woman please God on account of faith, and the believing woman is saved who in such duties devoutly serves her calling.

These testimonies teach that marriage is a lawful [a holy and Christian] thing. If therefore purity signifies that which is allowed and approved before God, marriages are pure, because they have been approved by the Word of God. And Paul says of lawful things, Titus 1, 15: Unto the pure all things are pure, i. e., to those who believe in Christ and are righteous by faith. Therefore, as virginity is impure in the godless, so in the godly marriage is pure on account of the Word of God and faith.

Again, if purity is properly opposed to concupiscence, it signifies purity of heart, i. e., mortified concupiscence, because the Law does not prohibit marriage, but concupiscence, adultery, fornication. Therefore celibacy is not purity. For there may be greater purity of heart in a married man, as in Abraham or Jacob, than in most of those who are even truly continent [who even, according to bodily purity, really maintain their chastity].

Lastly, if they understand that celibacy is purity in the sense that it merits justification more than does marriage, we most emphatically contradict it. For we are justified neither on account of virginity nor on account of marriage, but freely for Christ's sake, when we believe that for His sake God is propitious to us. Here perhaps they will exclaim that, according to the manner of Jovinian, marriage is made equal to virginity. But, on account of such clamors we shall not reject the truth concerning the righteousness of faith, which we have explained above. Nevertheless we do not make virginity and marriage equal. For just as one gift surpasses another, as prophecy surpasses eloquence, the science of military affairs surpasses agriculture, and eloquence surpasses architecture, so virginity is a more excellent gift than marriage. And sed unusquisque in suo dono fideliter servire debet ac sentire, quod propter Christum fide consequatur remissionem peccatorum, et fide iustus coram Deo reputetur.

40] Nec Christus aut Paulus laudant virginitatem ideo, quod iustificet, sed quia sit expeditior, et minus distrahatur domesticis occupationibus in orando, docendo, serviendo. Ideo Paulus ait 1 Cor. 7, 32: Virgo curat ea, quae sunt Domini. Laudatur igitur virginitas propter meditationem et studium. Sic Christus non simpliciter laudat hos, qui se castrant, sed addit: propter regnum [R. 244 coelorum, hoc est, ut discere aut docere evangelium vacet. Non enim dicit virginitatem mereri remissionem peccatorum aut salutem.

41] Ad exempla sacerdotum Leviticorum respondimus, quod non efficiunt oportere perpetuum coelibatum imponi sacerdotibus. Deinde immunditiae Leviticae non sunt ad nos transferendae. Consuetudo contra legem tunc erat immunditia. Nunc non est immunditia, quia Paulus dicit Tit. 1, 15: Omnia munda mundis. Liberat enim nos evangelium ab illis 42] immunditiis Leviticis. Ac si quis hoc consilio legem coelibatus defendit, ut illis observationibus Leviticis gravet conscientias, huic perinde adversandum est, ut apostoli in Actis, cap. 15, 10 sq., adversantur his, qui circumcisionem requirebant et legem Moysi Christianis imponere conabantur.

43] Interim tamen boni scient moderari usum conjugalem, praesertim quum sunt occupati publicis ministeriis, quae quidem saepe tantum faciunt negotii bonis viris, ut omnes domesticas cogitationes animis excutiant. Sciunt boni et hoc, quod Paulus 1 Thess. 4, 4 iubet, vasa possidere in sanctificatione. Sciunt item, quod interdum secedendum sit, ut vacent orationi, sed Paulus hoc ipsum non 44] vult esse perpetuum, 1 Cor. 7, 5. Iam talis continentia facilis est bonis et occupatis. Sed illa magna turba otiosorum sacerdotum, quae in collegiis est, in his deliciis ne quidem hanc Leviticam continentiam praestare potest, ut res ostendit. Et nota sunt poemata: Desidiam puer ille sequi solet, odit agentes etc.

45] Multi haeretici male intellecta lege Moysi contumeliose de coniugio senserunt, quibus tamen peperit singularem admirationem coelibatus. Et Epiphanius queritur Enkratitas hac commendatione praecipue cepisse imperitorum animos. Hi abstinebant a vino, etiam in coena Domini, abstinebant a carnibus omnium animalium, quae in re superabant fratres Dominici, qui piscibus vescuntur.

Ist denn ein anderer von wegen seiner Kunst, also ist der Keusche nicht mehr gerecht vor Gott von wegen seiner Gaben denn die Eheleichen von wegen ihres Standes, sondern ein jeder soll treulich dienen mit seiner Gabe und dabei wissen, daß er um Christus' willen, durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden habe und gerecht vor Gott geschätzt werde.

Der Herr Christus und Paulus auch loben die Jungfrauschaft nicht darum, daß sie vor Gott gerecht mache, sondern daß diejenigen, so ledig, ohne Weib oder ohne Mann, sind, desto freier, unversehrt mit Haushalten, Kinderziehen usw., lesen, beten, schreiben, dienen können. Darum sagt Paulus zu den Korinthern: „Aus der Ursache wird die Jungfrauschaft gelobt, daß man in dem Stand mehr Raum hat, Gottes Wort zu lernen und andere zu lehren.“ So lobt auch Christus nicht schlechtbin diejenigen, so sich verschneiden, sondern setzt dazu: „um des Himmelreichs willen“, das ist, daß sie desto leichter lernen und lehren können das Evangelium. Er sagt nicht, daß Jungfrauschaft Vergebung der Sünden verdiene.

Auf das Exempel von den lebitischen Priestern haben wir geantwortet, daß damit gar nicht bewiesen ist, daß die Priester sollen ohne Ehestand sein. Auch so geht uns Christus das Gesetz Moses mit den Ceremonien der Reinigkeit oder Unreinigkeit nichts an. Im Gesetz Moses, wenn ein Mann sein Weib berührte, ward er etliche Zeit unrein; jeztund ist ein Christenehemann nicht unrein. Denn das Neue Testament sagt: „Den Keinen ist alles rein.“ Denn durch das Evangelium sind wir gereit von allen Ceremonien Moses, nicht allein von den Gesetzen der Unreinigkeit. Wo aber den Jölibat jemand aus dem Grunde wollte verfechten, daß er die Gewissen wollte verpflichten zu solchen levitischen Reinigkeiten, dem müßten wir ebenso heftig widerstehen, als die Apostel den Juden widerstanden haben, Act. 15, da sie zu dem Gesetz Moses und zu der Beschneidung die Christen verpflichten wollten.

Hier aber werden christliche, gottesfürchtige Eheleute wohl in ehelicher Pflicht Maß zu halten wissen. Denn diejenigen, so in Regimenten oder der Kirchen Ämtern sind und zu schaffen haben, die werden auch im Ehestand wohl keusch müssen sein. Denn mit großen Sachen und Händeln beladen sein, da Landen und Leuten, Regimenten und Kirchen an gelegen ist, ist ein gut remedium, daß der alte Adam nicht geiz werde. So wissen auch die Gottesfürchtigen, daß Paulus 1 Thess. 4 sagt: „Ein jeglicher unter euch wisse sein Maß zu behalten in Heiligung und Ehren, nicht in der Lustheuche.“ Dagegen aber, was kann für eine Keuschheit bei so viel tausend Mönchen und Pfaffen sein, die ohne Sorge in aller Lust leben müßig und voll, haben dazu kein Gotteswort, lernen's nicht und achten's nicht? Da muß alle Unzucht folgen. Solche Leute können weder levitische noch ewige Keuschheit halten.

Viele Ketzer, welche das Gesetz Moses, oder wie es zu gebrauchen sei, nicht verstanden, reden schmählich von dem Ehestand, welche doch um solches heuchlerischen Scheines willen für heilig gehalten sind. Und Epiphanius klagt heftig, daß die Enkratiten mit dem heuchlerischen Schein, sonderlich der Keuschheit, bei den Unerfahrenen ein Ansehen gewonnen haben. Sie tranken keinen Wein, auch nicht im Abendmahl des Herrn, und nevertheless, just as an orator is not more righteous before God because of his eloquence than an architect because of his skill in architecture, so a virgin does not merit justification by virginity more than a married person merits it by conjugal duties, but each one ought faithfully to serve in his own gift, and to believe that for Christ's sake he receives the remission of sins and by faith is accounted righteous before God.

Neither does Christ or Paul praise virginity because it justifies, but because it is freer and less distracted with domestic occupations, in praying, teaching, [writing,] serving. For this reason Paul says, 1 Cor. 7, 32: He that is unmarried careth for the things which belong to the Lord. Virginity, therefore, is praised on account of meditation and study. Thus Christ does not simply praise those who make themselves eunuchs, but adds, for the kingdom of heaven's sake, i. e., that they may have leisure to learn or teach the Gospel; for He does not say that virginity merits the remission of sins or salvation.

To the examples of the Levitical priests we have replied that they do not establish the duty of imposing perpetual celibacy upon the priests. Furthermore, the Levitical impurities are not to be transferred to us. [The law of Moses, with the ceremonial statutes concerning what is clean or unclean, do not at all concern us Christians.] Then intercourse contrary to the Law was an impurity. Now it is not impurity, because Paul says, Titus 1, 15: Unto the pure all things are pure. For the Gospel frees us from these Levitical impurities [from all the ceremonies of Moses, and not alone from the laws concerning uncleanness]. And if any one defends the law of celibacy with the design to burden consciences by these Levitical observances, we must strive against this, just as the apostles in Acts 15, 10 sqq. strove against those who required circumcision and endeavored to impose the Law of Moses upon Christians.

Yet, in the mean while, good men will know how to control the use of marriage, especially when they are occupied with public offices, which often, indeed, give good men so much labor as to expel all domestic thoughts from their minds. [For to be burdened with great affairs and transactions, which concern commonwealths and nations, governments and churches, is a good remedy to keep the old Adam from lustfulness.] Good men know also this, that Paul, 1 Thess. 4, 4, commands that every one possess his vessel in sanctification [and honor, not in the lust of concupiscence]. They know likewise that they must sometimes retire, in order that there may be leisure for prayer; but Paul does not wish this to be perpetual, 1 Cor. 7, 5. Now such continence is easy to those who are good and occupied. But this great crowd of unemployed priests which is in the fraternities cannot afford, in this voluptuousness, even this Levitical continence, as the facts show. [On the other hand, what sort of chastity can there be among so many thousands of monks and priests who live without worry in all manner of delights, being idle and full, and, moreover, have not the Word of God, do not learn it, and have no regard for it. Such conditions bring on all manner of in chastity. Such people can observe neither Levitical nor perpetual chastity.] And the lines are well known: The boy accustomed to pursue a slothful life hates those who are busy.

Many heretics understanding the Law of Moses incorrectly have treated marriage with contempt, for whom, nevertheless, celibacy has gained extraordinary admiration. And Epiphanius complains that, by this commendation especially, the Encratites captured the minds of the unwary. They abstained from wine even in the Lord's Supper; they abstained from the flesh of all animals, in which they surpassed the Dominican brethren, who live upon fish. They abstained also from Abstinebant et a coniugio, sed haec res praecipuam admirationem habuit. Haec [R. 245] opera, hos cultus sentiebant magis mereri gratiam, quam usum vini et carnum, et quam coniugium, quod videbatur res esse profana et immunda, et quae vix posset placere Deo, etiamsi non in totum damnaretur.

46] Has religiones angelorum Paulus ad Colossenses, 2, 18, valde improbat. Opprimunt enim cognitionem Christi, quum sentiant homines se mundos ac iustos esse propter talem hypocrisis, opprimunt et cognitionem donorum et praeceptorum Dei. Neque tamen temperantiam aut continentiam vituperamus, sed supra diximus, exercitia et castigationes corporis necessarias esse. Fiduciam vero iustitiae detrahimus certis observationibus. 49] bus. Et eleganter dixit Epiphanius, observationes illas laudandas esse διὰ τὴν ἐγκράτειαν καὶ διὰ τὴν πολιτείαν, hoc est, ad coercendum corpus aut propter publicos mores; sicut sunt instituti quidam ritus ad commonefaciendos imperitos, non quod sint cultus iustificantes.

enthielten sich gar beides, Fische und Fleisch zu essen, waren noch heiliger denn die Mönche, welche Fische essen! Auch enthielten sie sich des Ehestandes; das hatte erst einen großen Schein, und hielten also, daß sie durch diese Werke und erdichtete Heiligkeit Gott versöhnten, wie unsere Widersacher lehren.

Wider solche Heuchelei und Engelsheiligkeit streitet Paulus heftig zu den Koloßern. Denn dadurch wird Christus gar unterdrückt, wenn die Leute in solchen Irrtum kommen, daß sie versprechen, rein und heilig zu sein vor Gott durch solche Heuchelei. So kennen auch solche Heuchler Gottes Gabe noch Gebote nicht; denn Gott will haben, daß wir mit Dankagung seiner Gaben gebrauchen sollen. Und ich wüßte wohl Exempel vorzubringen, wie manch fromm Herz und armes Gewissen dadurch betrübt worden und in Gefahr gekommen ist, daß es nicht unterrichtet, daß der Ehestand, die Ehepflicht und was an der Ehe ist, heilig und christlich wäre. Der große Jammer ist erfolgt aus der Mönche ungeschicktem Prebigen, welche ohne Maß den Zölibat, die Keuschheit lobten und den ehelichen Stand für ein unrein Leben ausschrien, daß er sehr hinderlich wäre zu der Seligkeit und voll Sünden.

Aber unsere Widersacher halten nicht so hart über dem ehelosen Stand um des Scheins willen der Heiligkeit; denn sie wissen, daß zu Rom, auch in allen ihren Stiften, ohne Heuchelei, ohne Schein eitel Unzucht ist. So ist es auch ihr Ernst nicht, leusch zu leben, sondern wirklich machen sie die Heuchelei vor den Leuten. Deshalb sind sie ärger und ihre Heuchelei ist häßlicher denn der Reiz der Entzätten; denen war's doch mehr Ernst, aber diesen Epicureis ist's nicht Ernst, sondern sie spotten Gott und der Welt und wenden allein diesen Schein vor, damit ihr frei Leben zu erhalten.

Zum sechsten, so wir so viele Ursachen haben, warum wir des Papsts Gesetz vom Zölibat nicht können annehmen, so sind doch darüber unzählige Fährlichkeiten der Gewissen, unsäglich viel Ärgernisse. Darum ob solch Papstgesetz gleich nicht unrecht wäre, so sollte doch billig alle ehrbaren Leute abschrecken solche Beschwerung der Gewissen, daß so unzählige Seelen dadurch verderben.

Es haben lange vor dieser Zeit viel ehrbare Leute auch unter ihnen, ihre eigenen Bischöfe, Canonici usw., gellagt über die große, schwere Last des Zölibats und befunden, daß sie selbst und andere Leute in große Gefahr ihrer Gewissen darüber gekommen; aber der Klage hat sich niemand angenommen. Darüber ist es am Tage, wie an vielen Orten, wo Pfaffenstifte sind, gemeine Zucht dadurch zerrüttet wird, was greuliche Unzucht, Sünde und Schande, was große ungehörte Laster dadurch geursacht. Es sind der Poeten Schriften und satyrae vorhanden; darin mag sich Roma spiegeln.

Also rächt Gott der Allmächtige die Verachtung seiner Gabe und seiner Gebote in denjenigen, die den Ehestand verbieten. So man nun oft etliche nötige Gesetze aus Ursache geändert hat, wenn es der gemeine Ruß erfordert, warum sollte denn marriage; and just this gained the chief admiration. These works, these services, they thought, merited grace more than the use of wine and flesh, and than marriage, which seemed to be a profane and unclean matter, and which scarcely could please God, even though it were not altogether condemned.

Paul to the Colossians, 2, 18, greatly disapproves these angelic forms of worship. For when men believe that they are pure and righteous on account of such hypocrisy, they suppress the knowledge of Christ, and suppress also the knowledge of God's gifts and commandments. For God wishes us to use His gifts in a godly way. And we might mention examples where certain godly consciences were greatly disturbed on account of the lawful use of marriage. This evil was derived from the opinions of monks superstitiously praising celibacy [and proclaiming the married estate as a life that would be a great obstacle to salvation, and full of sins]. Nevertheless we do not find fault with temperance or continence, but we have said above that exercises and mortifications of the body are necessary. We indeed deny that confidence should be placed in certain observances, as though they made righteous. And Epiphanius has elegantly said that these observances ought to be praised διὰ τὴν ἐγκράτειαν καὶ διὰ τὴν πολιτείαν, i. e., for restraining the body or on account of public morals; just as certain rites were instituted for instructing the ignorant, and not as services that justify.

But it is not through superstition that our adversaries require celibacy, for they know that chastity is not ordinarily rendered [that at Rome, also in all their monasteries, there is nothing but undisguised, unconcealed in-chastity. Nor do they seriously intend to lead chaste lives, but knowingly practise hypocrisy before the people]. But they feign superstitious opinions, so as to delude the ignorant. They are therefore more worthy of hatred than the Encratites, who seem to have erred by show of religion; these Sardanapali [Epicureans] designedly misuse the pretext of religion.

Sixthly. Although we have so many reasons for disapproving the law of perpetual celibacy, yet, besides these, dangers to souls and public scandals also are added, which even, though the law were not unjust, ought to deter good men from approving such a burden as has destroyed innumerable souls.

For a long time all good men [their own bishops and canons] have complained of this burden, either on their own account, or on account of others whom they saw to be in danger. But no Popes give ear to these complaints. Neither is it doubtful how greatly injurious to public morals this law is, and what vices and shameful lusts it has produced. The Roman satires are extant. In these Rome still recognizes and reads its own morals.

Thus God avenges the contempt of His own gift and ordinance in those who prohibit marriage. But since the custom in regard to other laws was that they should be changed if manifest utility would advise it, why is the hac lege, in qua tot graves causae concurrunt, praesertim his postremis temporibus, cur mutari debeat? Videmus, quod vitium accuset Deus ante diluvium, quod accuset ante conflagrationem quinque urbium. Similia vitia praecesserunt excidia aliarum urbium multarum, ut Sybaris, Romae. denn je leider eingerissen, sollten treue Bischöfe und Obrigkeit vielmehr Gesetze und Gebote machen, die Ehe zu gebieten, denn zu verbieten, auch mit Worten, Werken und Exempeln die Leute zu dem Ehestande vermählen; das wäre der Obrigkeit Amt; denn dieselben sollen Fleiß haben, daß Ehre und Zucht erhalten wird. Nun hat Gott die Welt also geblendet, daß man Ehebruch und Hurerei gar nahe ohne Strafe duldet, dagegen straft man um des Ehestands willen. Ist das nicht schrecklich zu hören? Dabei sollten die Prediger beiderlei unterrichten: mahnen, daß sie dieselbe nicht verachteten, sondern zu Gottes Ehre brauchten, die andern, welchen der eheliche Stand bonnöten ist, dazu auch vermählen.

56] Pontifices quotidie dispensant, quotidie mutant alias leges optimas, in hac una lege coelibatus ferrei et inexorabiles sunt, quum quidem constet eam simpliciter humani iuris 57] esse. Et hanc ipsam legem nunc exacerbant multis modis. Canon iubet suspendere sacerdotes, isti parum commodi interpretes suspendunt non ab officio, sed ab arboribus. Multos bonos viros crudeliter occidunt, tan- 58] tum propter coniugium. Atque haec ipsa parricidia ostendunt hanc legem doctrinam esse daemoniorum. Nam diabolus, quum sit homicida, legem suam defendit his [R. 247] parricidiis.

60] Exposuimus causas, quare non possimus bona conscientia assentiri adversariis, legem pontificiam de perpetuo coelibatu defendentibus, quia pugnet cum iure divino et naturali ac dissentiat ab ipsis canonibus, et dies Gesetz nicht geändert werden, da so viel treffliche Ursachen sind, so viel unzählige Beschwerden der Gewissen, darum es billig geändert werde? Wir sehen, daß dies die letzten Zeiten sind, und wie ein alter Mensch schwächer ist denn ein junger, so ist auch die ganze Welt und ganze Natur in ihrem letzten Alter und im Abnehmen. Der Sünden und Laster wird nicht weniger, sondern täglich mehr. Deshalb sollte man wider die Unzucht und Laster desto eher der Hilfe brauchen, die Gott gegeben hat, als des Ehestands. Wir sehen in dem ersten Buch Moses, daß solche Laster der Hurerei auch hatten überhandgenommen vor der Sintflut. Item, zu Sodoma, zu Sybaris, zu Rom und andern Städten ist greuliche Unzucht eingerissen, ehe sie zerstört wurden. In diesen Exempeln ist abgemalt, wie es zu den letzten Zeiten gehen werde, kurz vor der Welt Ende. Deshalb, so es auch die Erfahrung gibt, daß jezt in diesen letzten Zeiten Unzucht stärker Obrigkeit vielmehr Gesetze und Gebote machen, die Ehe zu gebieten, denn zu verbieten, auch mit Worten, Werken und Exempeln die Leute zu dem Ehestande vermählen; das wäre der Obrigkeit Amt; denn dieselben sollen Fleiß haben, daß Ehre und Zucht erhalten wird. Nun hat Gott die Welt also geblendet, daß man Ehebruch und Hurerei gar nahe ohne Strafe duldet, dagegen straft man um des Ehestands willen. Ist das nicht schrecklich zu hören? Dabei sollten die Prediger beiderlei unterrichten: mahnen, daß sie dieselbe nicht verachteten, sondern zu Gottes Ehre brauchten, die andern, welchen der eheliche Stand bonnöten ist, dazu auch vermählen.

Der Papst dispensiert sonst täglich in vielen nötigen Gesetzen, daran gemeinem Nutz viel gelegen, da er billig sollte fest sein. Allein in diesem Gesetz vom Zölibat erzeigt er sich also hart als Stein und Eisen, so man doch weiß, daß nichts denn ein Menschen Gesetz ist. Sie haben viel fromme, redliche, gottesfürchtige Leute, welche niemand kein Leid getan, widerlich und tyrannisch erwürgt allein um des Ehestands willen, daß sie aus Notdurft ihrer Gewissen sind ehelich geworden. Deshalb zu besorgen, daß des Abels Blut so stark gen Himmel schreit, daß sie es nimmer werden verwinden, sondern wie Rain zittern müssen. Und dieselbe lateinische Morderei des unschuldigen Bluts zeigt an, daß diese Lehre vom Zölibat Teufelslehre sei. Denn der Herr Christus nennt den Teufel einen Mörder, welcher solch tyrannisch Gesetz mit eitel Blut und Morden auch gern wollte verteidigen.

Wir wissen fast [sehr] wohl, daß etliche sehr schreien, wir machten Schismata. Aber unsere Gewissen sind ganz sicher, nachdem wir mit allem treuen Fleiß Frieden und Einigkeit gesucht haben, und die Widersacher ihnen [sich] nicht wollen genügen lassen, wir verleugnen denn (daß Gott verhüte!) die öffentliche göttliche Wahrheit, wir willigen denn mit ihnen, das häßliche Papstgesetz anzunehmen, fromme, unschuldige Eheleute voneinander zu reißen, die ehelichen Priester zu erwürgen, unschuldige Weiber und Kinder ins Elend zu vertreiben, ohne alle Ursache unschuldig Blut zu vergießen. Denn nachdem es gewiß ist, daß solches Gott nicht gefällt, so sollen wir uns lassen lieb sein, daß wir keine Einigkeit noch Gemeinschaft, auch keine Schuld an so viel unschuldigem Blut mit den Widersachern haben.

Wir haben Ursache angezeigt, warum wir es mit gutem Gewissen mit den Widersachern nicht halten können, die den Zölibat verteidigen. Denn es ist wider alle göttlichen und natürlichen Rechte, wider die Canones selbst, dazu ist's eitel Heuchelei und same not done with respect to this law, in which so many weighty reasons concur, especially in these last times, why a change ought to be made? Nature is growing old and is gradually becoming weaker, and vices are increasing; wherefore the remedies divinely given should have been employed. We see what vice it was which God denounced before the Flood, what He denounced before the burning of the five cities. Similar vices have preceded the destruction of many other cities, as of Sybaris and Rome. And in these there has been presented an image of the times which will be next to the end of things. Accordingly, at this time, marriage ought to have been especially defended by the most severe laws and warning examples, and men ought to have been invited to marriage. This duty pertains to the magistrates, who ought to maintain public discipline. [God has now so blinded the world that adultery and fornication are permitted almost without punishment; on the contrary, punishment is inflicted on account of marriage. Is not this terrible to hear?] Meanwhile the teachers of the Gospel should do both; they should exhort incontinent men to marriage, and should exhort others not to despise the gift of continence.

The Popes daily dispense and daily change other laws which are most excellent, yet, in regard to this one law of celibacy, they are as iron and inexorable, although, indeed, it is manifest that this is simply of human right. And they are now making this law more grievous in many ways. The canon bids them suspend priests; these rather unfriendly interpreters suspend them not from office, but from trees. They cruelly kill many men for nothing but marriage. [It is to be feared, therefore, that the blood of Abel will cry to heaven so loudly as not to be endured, and that we shall have to tremble like Cain.] And these very parricides show that this law is a doctrine of demons. For since the devil is a murderer, he defends his law by these parricides.

We know that there is some offense in regard to schism, because we seem to have separated from those who are thought to be regular bishops. But our consciences are very secure, since we know that, though we most earnestly desire to establish harmony, we cannot please the adversaries unless we cast away manifest truth, and then agree with these very men in being willing to defend this unjust law, to dissolve marriages that have been contracted, to put to death priests if they do not obey, to drive poor women and fatherless children into exile. But since it is well established that these conditions are displeasing to God, we can in no way grieve that we have no alliance with the multitude of murderers among the adversaries.

We have explained the reasons why we cannot assent with a good conscience to the adversaries when they defend the pontifical law concerning perpetual celibacy, because it conflicts with divine and natural law and is at variance with the canons themselves, and is sit superstitiosa et plena periculi, postremo, quia tota res sit simulata. Non enim imperatrix lex religionis causa, sed dominationis causa, et huic impie praetextitur religio. Neque quidquam a sanis hominibus contra has 61] firmissimas rationes afferri potest. Evangelium permittit coniugium his, quibus opus est. Neque tamen hos cogit ad coniugium, qui continere volunt, modo ut vere contineant. Hanc libertatem et sacerdotibus concedendam esse sentimus, nec volumus quemquam vi cogere ad coelibatum, nec contracta matrimonia dissolvere.

62] Obiter etiam, dum recensuimus argumenta nostra, indicavimus, quomodo adversarii unum atque alterum cavillentur, et calumnias illas diluimus. Nunc brevissime commemorabimus, quam gravibus rationibus 63] defendant legem. Primum dicunt a Deo revelatam esse. Videtis extremam impudentiam istorum nebulonum. Audent affirmare, quod divinitus revelata sit lex de perpetuo coelibatu, quum adversetur manifestis [k. 248] Scripturae testimoniis, quae iubent, ut unusquisque habeat uxorem suam propter fornicationem, 1 Cor. 7, 2; item, quae vetant dissolvere contracta matrimonia, Matth. 5, 32; 19, 6; 1 Cor. 7, 27. Paulus admonet, quem auctorem habitura fuerit ista lex, quum vocat eam doctrinam daemoniorum, 1 Tim. 4, 1. Et fructus indicant auctorem, tot monstrosae libidines, tot parricidia, quae nunc suscipiuntur praetextu illius legis.

Baum kennen, so wir sehen, daß so viel schreckliche, Rom zu sehen; item, daß auch über diesem Gesetz Ende macht.

64] Secundum argumentum adversariorum est, quod sacerdotes debeant esse mundi, iuxta illud Es. 52, 11: Mundamini, qui fertis vasa Domini. Et citant in hanc sententiam multa. Hanc rationem, quam ostendant velut maxime ἐνδοξασπον, supra diluimus. Diximus enim virginitatem sine fide non esse munditiam coram Deo, et coniugium propter fidem mundum esse, iuxta illud Tit. 1, 15: Omnia munda mundi. Diximus et hoc externas munditias et ceremonias legis non esse huc transferendas, quia evangelium requirit munditiam cordis, non requirit ceremonias legis. Et fieri potest, ut cor mariti, velut Abrahae aut Iacobi, qui fuerunt πολύγαμοι, mundius sit et minus ardeat cupiditatibus quam multarum virginum, etiam vere continentium. Quod vero Esaias ait: Mundamini, qui fertis vasa Domini, intelligi debet de munditie cordis, de 65] tota poenitentia. Ceterum sancti in externo usu scient, quatenus conducant moderari usum coniugalem et, ut Paulus ait 1 Thess. 66] 4, 4, possidere vasa in sanctificatione. Postremo, quum coniugium sit mundum, recte dicitur his, qui in coelibatu non continent, ut ducant uxores, ut sint mundi. Ita eadem lex: Mundamini, qui fertis vasa Domini, praecipit, ut immundi coelibes fiant mundi coniuges.

Gefahr. Denn sie halten über denselben erdichteten Keuschheit nicht so hart Heiligkeit halben, oder daß sie es nicht anders verflünden; sie wissen wohl, daß jedermann der hohen Stifte Wesen, welche wir wohl zu nennen wüßten, kennt, sondern allein ihre Tyrannie und Herrschaft zu erhalten. Und es wird kein ehrbarer Mensch wider obenangezeigte starke, klare Gründe etwas mögen [können] aufbringen. Das Evangelium läßt allen denjenigen den Ehestand frei, denen er vonnöten ist; so zwingt es die zum Ehestand nicht, so die Gabe der Keuschheit haben, wenn es allein rechte Keuschheit und nicht Heuchelei ist. Die Freiheit, halten wir, sei den Priestern auch zu vergönnen, und wir wollen niemand mit Gewalt zum Zölibat zwingen, wollen auch fromme Eheleute nicht voneinander treiben oder die Ehe zerreißen.

Wir haben nun etliche unserer Gründe auf diesmal kurz angezeigt; auch haben wir vermeldet, wie die Widersacher so ungeschickten Behef und Träume dawider aufbringen. Nun wollen wir anzeigen, mit was starken Gründen sie ihr Papstgesetz verteidigen. Erklieh sagen sie, solch Gesetz sei von Gott offenbart. Da sieht man, wie ganz unverschämte die heillosen Leute sind. Sie dürfen sagen, daß ihr Eheverbieten von Gott offenbart sei, so es doch öffentlich ist wider die Schrift, wider Paulum, da er sagt: „Hurerei zu vermeiden, habe ein jeglicher sein eigen Eheweib.“ Item, so die Schrift und Canones klar verbieten, daß man die Ehe, so schon vollzogen, in keinem Wege zerreißen soll, was dürfen die Mucken sagen und den hohen, allerheiligsten Namen der göttlichen Majestät so frech und unverschämte mißbrauchen? Paulus der Apostel sagt recht, wer der Gott sei, der solch Gesetz erst eingeführt, nämlich der leidige Satan; denn er nennt's „Teufelslehre“. Und wahrlich, die Frucht lehrt uns den greuliche Laster dadurch verursacht werden, wie an des Würgens und Blutvergießens der Teufel kein superstitious and full of danger, and, lastly, because the whole affair is insincere. For the law is enacted not for the sake of religion [not for holiness' sake, or because they do not know better; they know very well that everybody is well acquainted with the condition of the great cloisters, which we are able to name], but for the sake of dominion, and this is wickedly given the pretext of religion. Neither can anything be produced by sane men against these most firmly established reasons. The Gospel allows marriage to those to whom it is necessary. Nevertheless, it does not compel those to marry who can be continent, provided they be truly continent. We hold that this liberty should also be conceded to the priests, nor do we wish to compel any one by force to celibacy, nor to dissolve marriages that have been contracted.

Der andere Grund der Widersacher ist, daß die Priester sollen rein sein, wie die Schrift sagt: „Ihr sollt rein sein, die ihr traget die Gefäße des Herrn.“ Das Argument haben wir hier oben verlegt [widerlegt]; denn wir haben genug angezeigt, daß Keuschheit ohne Glauben keine Reinigkeit vor Gott sei, und der Ehestand ist Heiligkeit und Reinigkeit um des Glaubens willen, wie Paulus sagt: „Den Reinen ist alles rein.“ So haben wir klar genug gesagt, daß Mosis Ceremonien von Reinigkeit und Unreinigkeit dahin nicht zu ziehen seien. Denn das Evangelium will haben Reinigkeit des Herzens. Und hat keinen Zweifel, daß Abrahams, Isaaks, Iacobs, der Erzväter Herzen, welche doch viele Weiber gehabt, reiner gewesen seien denn vieler Jungfrauen, die gleich nach Reinigkeit des Leibes rechte, reine Jungfrauen gewesen. Daß aber Jesaias sagt: „Ihr sollt rein sein, die ihr das Gefäß des Herrn tragt“, daß ist zu verstehen von ganzer christlicher Heiligkeit und nicht von Jungfrauschaft, und eben dieser Spruch gebietet den unreinen, ehelosen Priestern, daß sie reine, eheliche Priester werden. Denn wie zuvor gesagt ist, die Ehe ist Reinigkeit bei den Christen.

We have also indicated incidentally, while we have recounted our arguments, how the adversaries cavil at several of these; and we have explained away these false accusations. Now we shall relate as briefly as possible with what important reasons they defend the law. First, they say that it has been revealed by God. You see the extreme impudence of these sorry fellows. They dare to affirm that the law of perpetual celibacy has been divinely revealed, although it is contrary to manifest testimonies of Scripture, which command that to avoid fornication each one should have his own wife, 1 Cor. 7, 2; which likewise forbid to dissolve marriages that have been contracted; cf. Matt. 5, 32; 19, 6; 1 Cor. 7, 27. [What can the knaves say in reply? and how dare they wantonly and shamelessly misapply the great, most holy name of the divine Majesty?] Paul reminds us what an author such a law was to have when he calls it a doctrine of demons, 1 Tim. 4, 1. And the fruits show their author, namely, so many monstrous lusts and so many murders which are now committed under the pretext of that law [as can be seen at Rome].

The second argument of the adversaries is that the priests ought to be pure, according to Is. 52, 11: Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. And they cite many things to this effect. This reason which they display we have above removed as especially specious. For we have said that virginity without faith is not purity before God, and marriage, on account of faith, is pure, according to Titus 1, 15: Unto the pure all things are pure. We have said also this, that outward purity and the ceremonies of the Law are not to be transferred hither, because the Gospel requires purity of heart, and does not require the ceremonies of the Law. And it may occur that the heart of a husband, as of Abraham or Jacob, who were polygamists, is purer and burns less with lusts than that of many virgins who are even truly continent. But what Isaiah says: Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord, ought to be understood as referring to cleanness of heart and to the entire repentance. Besides, the saints will know in the exercise of marriage how far it is profitable to restrain its use, and as Paul says, 1 Thess. 4, 4, to possess his vessel in sanctification. Lastly, since marriage is pure, it is rightly said to those who are not continent in celibacy that they should marry wives in order to be pure. Thus the same law: Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord, commands that impure celibates become pure husbands [impure unmarried priests become pure married priests].

Tertium argumentum horribile est, quod sit 67] haeresis Ioviniani coniugium sacerdotum. Bona verba! Novum hoc crimen est, coniugium esse haeresin. Ioviniani tempore nondum norat mundus legem de perpetuo coelibatu. Impudens igitur mendacium est, [R. 249] coniugium sacerdotum Ioviniani haeresin esse, aut ab ecclesia tunc id coniugium damnatum 68] esse. In huiusmodi locis est videre, quid consilii habuerint adversarii in scribenda Confutatione. Iudicaverunt ita facillime moveri imperitos, si crebro audiant convicium haeresis, si fingant nostram causam multis ante iudiciis ecclesiae confossam et damnatam esse. Itaque saepe falso allegant ecclesiae iudicium. Id quia non ignorant, exhibere nobis exemplum apologiae noluerunt, ne haec vanitas, ne hae calumniae coargui possent. Quod vero ad Ioviniani causam attinet, de collatione vir- 69] ginitatis et coniugii supra diximus, quid sentiamus. Non enim aequamus coniugium et virginitatem, etsi neque virginitas neque coniugium meretur iustificationem.

aber Ioviniani Lehre belangt, haben wir hier oben gesagt, was wir von Keuschheit und was wir vom Ehestand halten. Denn wir sagen nicht, daß der Ehestand gleich sei der Jungfrauschaft, wiewohl weder Jungfrauschaft noch Ehestand gerecht macht vor Gott.

70] Talibus argumentis tam vanis defendunt legem impiam et perniciosam bonis moribus. Talibus rationibus muniunt Principum animos adversus iudicium Dei, in quo Deus reposcet rationem, cur dissipaverint coniugia, cur cruciaverint, cur interfecerint sacerdotes. Nolite enim dubitare, quin, ut sanguis Abel mortui clamabat, Gen. 4, 10, ita clamet etiam sanguis multorum bonorum virorum, in quos iniuste saevitum est. Et ulciscetur hanc saevitiam Deus; ibi comperietis, quam sint inanes hae rationes adversariorum, et intelligetis in iudicio Dei nullas calumnias adversus Verbum Dei consistere, ut ait Esaias 49, 6: Omnis caro foenum, et omnis gloria eius quasi flos foeni.

ligen, unschuldigen Abels Blut über sie in hohen Himmel schreien und vor Gott, dem rechten Richter, rufen. Wenn nun Gott solche Tyrannei richten wird, werden sie erfahren, daß ihre Argumente Stroh und Heu sind und Gott „ein verzehrend Feuer“, vor dem nichts bleiben kann außer göttliches Wort, 1 Petr. 1, 24. 25.

71] Nostri Principes, quicquid acciderit, consolari se conscientia rectorum consiliorum poterunt, quia, etiamsi quid sacerdotes in contrahendis coniugiis mali fecissent, tamen illa dissipatio coniugiorum, illae proscriptiones, illa saevitia manifeste adversatur voluntati et Verbo Dei. Nec delectat nostros Principes novitas aut dissidium, sed magis fuit habenda ratio Verbi Dei, praesertim in causa non dubia, quam aliarum rerum omnium.

Das dritte ist erstlich ein schrecklich Argument, daß der Priester Ehe solle heerei sein. Gnabet unserer armen Seele, liebe Herren; fahrt schön! Das ist gar ein Neues, daß der heilige Ehestand, den Gott im Paradies geschaffen hat, soll heerei sein worden. Mit der Weise würde die ganze Welt eitel heerelinder sein. Es ist eine große, unverschämte Lüge, daß der Priester Ehe solle Ioviniani heerei sein, oder daß solche Priesterehe zu der Zeit von der Kirche solle verdammt sein. Denn zu Iovinianus' Zeiten hat die Kirche von diesem Papstgelehr, dadurch den Priestern die Ehe ganz verboten ist, noch nicht gewußt. Und solches wissen unsere Widersacher wohl. Aber sie ziehen oft alte heereien an und reimen unsere Lehre dazu wider ihr eigen Gewissen, allein den Ungelehrten einzubilden, als sei unsere Lehre vor alters von der Kirche verdammt, und also mahniglich [jedermann] wider uns zu bewegen. Mit solchen Griffen gehen sie um; und darum haben sie uns die Confutation nicht wollen zustellen. Sie haben besorgt, man möchte ihre öffentlichen Lügen verantworten, welches ihnen eine ewige Schande bei allen Nachkommen sein wird. Was

Mit solchen schwachen, losen Gründen schützen und verteidigen sie des Papstes Gesetz vom Zölibat, das so zu großen Lasten und Unzucht hat Ursache gegeben. Die Fürsten und Bischöfe, so diesen Lehrern glauben, werden wohl sehen, ob solche Gründe den Stich halten, wenn es zu der Todesstunde kommt, daß man vor Gott soll Rechenschaft geben, warum sie frommer Leute Ehe zerrissen haben, warum sie diese geködert und gepöködt [ins Gefängnis geworfen] haben, warum sie so viele Priester ermüdet und unschuldig Blut über alles Klagen, Heulen und Weinen so vieler Wittwen und Waisen vergossen haben. Denn das dürfen sie ihnen [sich] nicht in Sinn nehmen: die Zähren und Tränen der armen Wittwen, das Blut der Unschuldigen ist im Himmel unvergessen, es wird zu seiner Stunde als stark als des heiz-

Unsere Fürsten und Herren, es gehe, wie es wolle, haben sich des zu trösten, daß sie mit gutem Gewissen gehandelt haben. Denn ich will gleich sehen, daß der Priester Ehe etwa anzusehen sei, als nicht ist, doch ist das stracks wider Gottes Wort und Willen, daß die Widersacher die vollen Ehen also zerteilen, arme, unschuldige Leute ins Elend jagen und ermüden. Es haben unsere Fürsten und Herren ja nicht Lust an Neuerung und Zwiespalt, dennoch sind sie schuldig, daß sie göttlich Wort und Wahrheit in so gerechter und gewisser Sache mehr lassen gelten denn alle andern Sachen. Da verleihe Gott Gnade zu! Amen.

Art. XXIV. (XII.) De Missa.

Initio hoc iterum praefandum est nos [R. 250] 1] non abolere missam, sed religiose retinere ac defendere. Fiunt enim apud nos missae singulis dominicis et aliis festis, in quibus

Artikel XXIV. (XII.) Von der Messe.

Erstlich müssen wir aber [abermals] dies hier zum Eingange sagen, daß wir die Messe nicht abtun. Denn alle Sonntage und Feste werden in unsern Kirchen Messen gehalten, dabei das

The third argument is horrible, namely, that the marriage of priests is the heresy of Jovinian. Fine-sounding words! [Pity on our poor souls, dear sirs; proceed gently!] This is a new crime, that marriage [which God instituted in Paradise] is a heresy! [In that case all the world would be children of heretics.] In the time of Jovinian the world did not as yet know the law concerning perpetual celibacy. [This our adversaries know very well.] Therefore it is an impudent falsehood that the marriage of priests is the heresy of Jovinian, or that such marriage was then condemned by the Church. In such passages we can see what design the adversaries had in writing the Confutation. They judged that the ignorant would be thus most easily excited, if they would frequently hear the reproach of heresy, if they pretend that our cause had been dispatched and condemned by many previous decisions of the Church. Thus they frequently cite falsely the judgment of the Church. Because they are not ignorant of this, they were unwilling to exhibit to us a copy of their Apology, lest this falsehood and these reproaches might be exposed. Our opinion, however, as regards the case of Jovinian, concerning the comparison of virginity and marriage, we have expressed above. For we do not make marriage and virginity equal, although neither virginity nor marriage merits justification.

By such false arguments they defend a law that is godless and destructive to good morals. By such reasons they set the minds of princes firmly against God's judgment [the princes and bishops who believe this teaching will see whether their reasons will endure the test, when the hour of death arrives], in which God will call them to account as to why they have dissolved marriages, and why they have tortured [flogged and impaled] and killed priests [regardless of the cries, wails, and tears of so many widows and orphans]. For do not doubt but that, as the blood of dead Abel cried out, Gen. 4, 10, so the blood of many good men, against whom they have unjustly raged, will also cry out. And God will avenge this cruelty; there you will discover how empty are these reasons of the adversaries, and you will perceive that in God's judgment no calumnies against God's Word remain standing, as Isaiah says, 40, 6: All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field [that their arguments are straw and hay, and God a consuming fire, before whom nothing but God's Word can abide, 1 Pet. 1, 24].

Whatever may happen, our princes will be able to console themselves with the consciousness of right counsels, because even though the priests would have done wrong in contracting marriages, yet this disruption of marriages, these proscriptions, and this cruelty are manifestly contrary to the will and Word of God. Neither does novelty or dissent delight our princes, but especially in a matter that is not doubtful more regard had to be paid to the Word of God than to all other things.

Article XXIV (XII): Of the Mass.

At the outset we must again make the preliminary statement that we do not abolish the Mass, but religiously maintain and defend it. For among us masses are celebrated every Lord's Day and on the other festivals, porrigitur sacramentum his, qui uti volunt, postquam sunt explorati atque absoluti. Et servantur usitatae caeremoniae publicae, ordo lectionum, orationum, vestitus et alia similia.

2] Adversarii longam declamationem habent de usu Latinae linguae in missa, in qua suaviter ineptiunt, quomodo prosit auditori indocto in fide ecclesiae missam non intellectam audire. Videlicet fingunt ipsum opus audiendi cultum esse et prodesse sine intellectu. Haec 3] nolumus odiose exagitare, sed iudicio lectorum relinquimus. Nosque ideo commemoramus, ut obiter admoneamus, et apud nos retineri Latinas lectiones atque orationes.

Quum autem caeremoniae debeant observari, tum ut discant homines Scripturam, tum ut Verbo admoniti concipiant fidem, timorem, atque ita orent etiam, nam hi sunt fines caeremoniarum: Latinam linguam retinemus propter hos, qui Latine discunt atque intelligunt, et admiscemus Germanicas cantiones, ut habeat et populus, quod discat, et quo excitet 4] fidem et timorem. Hic mos semper in ecclesiis fuit. Nam etsi aliae frequentius, aliae rarius admiscuerunt Germanicas cantiones, tamen fere ubique aliquid canebat populus sua 5] lingua. Illud vero nusquam scriptum aut pictum est hominibus prodesse opus audiendi lectiones non intellectas, prodesse caeremonias, non quia doceant vel admoneant, sed ex opere operato, quia sic fiant, quia spectentur. Male valeant istae pharisaicae opiniones!

6] Quod vero tantum sit apud nos publica missa seu communis, nihil sit contra catholicam ecclesiam. Nam in Graecis parochiis ne hodie quidem fiunt privatae missae, (R. 251 sed sit una publica missa, idque tantum dominicis diebus et festis. In monasteriis sit quotidie missa, sed tantum publica. Haec sunt vestigia morum veterum. Nusquam enim veteres scriptores ante Gregorium mentionem 7] faciunt privatarum missarum. Qualia fuerint initia, nunc omittimus; hoc constat, quod, postquam monachi mendicantes regnare coeperunt, ex falsissimis persuasionibus et propter quaestum ita auctae sunt, ut omnes boni viri diu iam eius rei modum desideraverint. Quamquam S. Franciscus recte voluit ei rei prospicere, qui constituit, ut singula collegia quotidie unica communi missa contenta essent. Hoc postea mutatum est sive per superstitionem, sive quaestus causa. Ita, 8] ubi commodum est, instituta maiorum mutant ipsi, postea nobis elegant auctoritatem maiorum. Epiphanius scribit in Asia synaxin ter celebratam esse singulis septimanis, nec quotidianas fuisse missas. Et quidem ait hunc morem ab apostolis traditum esse. Sic enim inquit: Συνάξεις δὲ ἐπιτελούμεναι ταχθεῖσαι εἰς αὐτὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων, τετραδί καὶ προσβατῶν καὶ κυριακῇ. [Franciscus, Ep. 12 ad sacerdotes totius ordinis: „Moneo praeterea et exhortor in Domino, ut in locis, in quibus morantur fratres, una tantum celebratur

Sacrament gereicht wird denjenigen, die es begehren, doch also, daß sie erst verhört und absolviert werden. So werden auch christliche Jeremonien gehalten mit Lesen, mit Gesängen, Gebeten und dergleichen usw.

Die Widerfacher machen ein groß Geschwätz von der lateinischen Messe und reden ganz ungeschickt und kindisch davon, wie auch ein Ungelehrter, der Latein nicht versteht, groß verbiene mit Messehören im Glauben der Kirche. Da erdachten sie ihnen selbst, daß das schlechte Werk des Messehörens ein Gottesdienst sei, welcher auch dann nütze sei, wenn ich kein Wort höre oder verstehe. Das will ich nicht hier dermaßen [her]ausstreichen, wie es wert wäre. Wir wollen verständige Leute hier richten lassen. Wir gebeten des darum, daß wir anzeigen, daß bei uns die lateinische Messe, Lectionen und Gebete auch gehalten werden.

So aber die Jeremonien sollen darum gehalten werden, daß die Leute die Schrift und Gottes Wort lernen und dadurch zu Gottesfurcht kommen und Trost erlangen und also recht beten, denn darum sind Jeremonien eingeführt: so behalten wir das Latein um derer willen, die Lateinisch können, und lassen daneben deutsche christliche Gesänge gehen, damit das gemeine Volk auch etwas lerne und zu Gottesfurcht und Erkenntnis unterrichtet werde. Der Brauch ist allezeit für löblich gehalten in der Kirche. Denn wiewohl an etlichen Orten mehr, an etlichen Orten weniger deutsche Gesänge gesungen werden, so hat doch in allen Kirchen je etwas das Volk deutsch gesungen; darum ist's so neu nicht. Wo steht aber diese pharisaische Lehre geschrieben, daß Messehören ohne Verstand, ex opere operato, verdienstlich und seliglich sei? Schämt euch ins Herz, ihr Sophisten, mit solchen Träumen!

Daß wir aber nicht Privatmessen, sondern allein eine öffentliche Messe, wenn das Volk mit kommuniziert, halten, das ist nichts wider die gemeine christliche Kirche. Denn in der griechischen Kirche werden auf diesen Tag keine Privatmessen gehalten, sondern allein eine Messe, und das selbe auf die Sonntage und hohen Feste. Das ist alles eine Anzeigung des alten Brauchs der Kirche. Denn die Lehrer, so vor der Zeit St. Gregorius' gewesen, gebeten an keinem Ort der Privatmessen. Wie aber die einzelnen Messen oder Privatmessen einen Anfang gehabt, lassen wir jetzt und anstehen. Das ist gewiß, da die Bettelorden und Mönche also überhandgenommen, sind die Messen aus den falschen Lehren derselben also täglich mehr und mehr gestiftet und eingerissen um Geldes und Geizes willen, also daß die Theologen selbst darüber allezeit geklagt haben. Und wiewohl St. Franziskus aus rechter, guter Meinung hat dem Dinge wollen [zu]vorkommen und hat geordnet den Seinen, daß ein jeglich Kloster täglich mit einer gemeinen Messe sollte zufriednen sein, das selbe nützliche Statut ist hernach durch Heuchelei oder um Geldes willen geändert. Also verändern sie die Ordnung der alten Väter, wann und wo [es] sie gelüftet, wenn es ihnen in die Kirche trägt, und sagen uns danach, man müsse der alten Väter Ordnung heiliglich halten. Epiphanius schreibt, daß in Asia alle Wochen communio dreimal gehalten sei, und man habe nicht täglich Messe gehalten, und sagt, der Brauch sei von den Aposteln also hergekommen.

in which the Sacrament is offered to those who wish to use it, after they have been examined and absolved. And the usual public ceremonies are observed, the series of lessons, of prayers, vestments, and other like things.

The adversaries have a long declamation concerning the use of the Latin language in the Mass, in which they absurdly trifle as to how it profits [what a great merit is achieved by] an unlearned hearer to hear in the faith of the Church a Mass which he does not understand. They evidently imagine that the mere work of hearing is a service, that it profits without being understood. We are unwilling to malignantly pursue these things, but we leave them to the judgment of the reader. We mention them only for the purpose of stating, in passing, that also among us the Latin lessons and prayers are retained.

Since ceremonies, however, ought to be observed both to teach men Scripture, and that those admonished by the Word may conceive faith and fear [of God, and obtain comfort], and thus also may pray (for these are the designs of ceremonies), we retain the Latin language on account of those who are learning and understand Latin, and we mingle with it German hymns, in order that the people also may have something to learn, and by which faith and fear may be called forth. This custom has always existed in the churches. For although some more frequently, and others more rarely, introduced German hymns, nevertheless the people almost everywhere sang something in their own tongue. [Therefore, this is not such a new departure.] It has, however, nowhere been written or represented that the act of hearing lessons not understood profits men, or that ceremonies profit, not because they teach or admonish, but ex opere operato, because they are thus performed or are looked upon. Away with such pharisaic opinions! [Ye sophists ought to be heartily ashamed of such dreams!]

The fact that we hold only Public or Common Mass [at which the people also commune, not Private Mass] is no offense against the Church catholic. For in the Greek churches even to-day private Masses are not held, but there is only a public Mass, and that on the Lord's Day and festivals. In the monasteries daily Mass is held, but this is only public. These are the traces of former customs. For nowhere do the ancient writers before Gregory make mention of private Masses. We now omit noticing the nature of their origin. It is evident that after the mendicant monks began to prevail, from most false opinions and on account of gain they were so increased that all good men for a long time desired some limit to this thing. Although St. Francis wished to provide aright for this matter, as he decided that each fraternity should be content with a single common Mass daily, afterwards this was changed, either by superstition or for the sake of gain. Thus, where it is of advantage, they themselves change the institutions of the Fathers; and afterwards they cite against us the authority of the Fathers. Epiphanius writes that in Asia the Communion was celebrated three times a week, and that there were no daily Masses. And indeed he says that this custom was handed down from the apostles. For he speaks thus: Assemblies for Communion were appointed by the apostles to be held on the fourth day, on Sabbath eve, and the Lord's Day.

Missae in die, secundum formam s. Rom. ecclesiae. Si vero in loco plures fuerint sacerdotes, sic fit per amorem charitatis, alter contentus celebratione sacerdotis alterius.“]

10] Et hic causae status est, de quo ita nobis admonendi sunt lectores, ut Aeschines admonebat iudices, ut, perinde ac pugiles de statu inter se certant, ita cum adversario dimicarent ipsi de statu controversiae, nec sinerent eum extra causam egredi. Ad [R. 252 eundem modum hic adversarii nostri cogendi sunt, ut de re proposita dicant. Et cognito controversiae statu facillima erit diiudicatio de argumentis in utraque parte.

12] pae aut poenae. Et huius status clara et firma probatio est haec, quia impossibile est consequi remissionem peccatorum propter opus nostrum ex opere operato, sed fide oportet vinci terrores peccati et mortis, quum erigimus corda cognitione Christi, et sentimus nobis ignosci propter Christum ac donari merita et iustitiam Christi, Rom. 5. 1: Iustificati ex fide pacem habemus. Haec tam certa, tam firma sunt, ut adversus omnes portas inferorum consistere queant.

willen einen gnädigen Gott haben, also daß uns Röm. am 5. Kap.: „So wir denn gerecht sind worden durch den Glauben, so haben wir Frieden mit Gott“ usw. Dies ist ein solch starker, gewisser Grund, daß alle Pforten der Hölle dawider nichts werden können aufbringen; des sind wir gewiß.

13] Si, quantum opus est, dicendum fuit, iam causa dicta est. Nemo enim sanus illam pharisaicam et ethnicam persuasionem de opere operato probare potest. Et tamen haec persuasio haeret in populo, haec auxit in infinitum missarum numerum. Conducuntur enim missae ad iram Dei placandam, et hoc opere remissionem culpa et poenae consequi volunt, volunt impetrare, quidquid in omni vita opus est; volunt etiam mortuos liberare. Hanc pharisaicam opinionem docuerunt in ecclesia monachi et sophistae.

Wiewohl nun die Widersacher an diesem Ort viele Worte und Sprüche ineinandergefocht haben, da sie mit beweisen wollen, daß die Messe ein Opfer sei, so ist doch das große Geschrei mit dieser einzigen Antwort bald gestillt, und ist ihnen das Maul bald geklopft, wenn wir sagen: die Sprüche, die Argumente, Gründe und alles, was vorgebracht [ist], beweisen nicht, daß die Messen ex opere operato dem Priester oder andern, für die, so sie appliziert werden, verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, Erlassung der Pein und Schuld. Diese einzige, klare Antwort stößt über einen Haufen zu Boden alles, was die Widersacher vordringen nicht allein in der Confutation, sondern in allen ihren Büchern und Schriften, welche sie von der Messe geschrieben [haben].

Und das ist die Hauptfrage in dieser ganzen Sache, davon wollen wir einen jeden christlichen Leser verwarnen haben, daß er den Widersachern genau darauf sehe, ob sie auch bei der Hauptfrage bleiben. Denn sie pflegen aus der Hauptsache viel vergebliche, ungereimte Umschweife zu machen. Denn wenn man gleich und ungewandt bei der Hauptfrage bleibt und nichts Fremdes einmengt, da ist desto leichter zu urteilen auf beiden Seiten.

Wir haben in unserer Konfession angezeigt, daß wir halten, daß das Abendmahl oder die Messe niemand fromm mache ex opere operato, und daß die Messe, so für andere gehalten wird, ihnen nicht verdiene Vergebung der Sünden, Erlassung [von] Pein und Schuld. Und des Hauptstücks haben wir ganz starken, gewissen Grund, nämlich diesen: Es ist unmöglich, daß wir sollten Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch unsere Werke, ex opere operato, das ist, durch das getane Werk an ihm selbst, sine bono motu utentis, wenn schon das Herz keinen guten Gedanken hat, sondern durch den Glauben an Christum muß das Schrecken der Sünde, des Todes überwunden werden, wenn unsere Herzen aufgerichtet und getröstet werden durch die Erkenntnis Christi, wie oben gesagt, wenn wir empfinden, daß wir um Christus' sein Verdienst und Gerechtigkeit geschenkt wird, Und dieses wäre eben genug von der ganzen Sache. Denn kein Vernünftiger oder Verständiger wird die pharisäische oder heidnische Heuchelei und den großen Mißbrauch vom opere operato loben mögen. Und ist doch derselbe Irrtum in aller Welt eingedrungen. Daher hat man so viele, unzählige Messen in aller Welt, in allen Stiften, Klöstern, Kirchen, Kläusen, in allen Winkeln gestiftet. Denn dazu werden Messen um Geld gehalten, Gottes Zorn zu verjähren, durch das Werk Vergebung der Sünden, Erlösung von Pein und Schuld zu erlangen, die Toten aus dem Fegefeuer zu erlösen, Gesundheit, Reichtum, Glück und Wohlfahrt in Santierung zu erlangen usw. Die heuchlerische, pharisäische Opinion haben die Mönche und Sophisten in die Kirche gepflanzt.

Wiewohl nun der Irrtum vom Mißbrauch der Messe genugsam verlegt [widerlegt] ist dadurch, daß man nicht durch unser Werk, sondern durch den Glauben an Christum Vergebung der Sün-

Moreover, although the adversaries collect many testimonies on this topic to prove that the Mass is a sacrifice, yet this great tumult of words will be quieted when the single reply is advanced that this line of authorities, reasons and testimonies, however long, does not prove that the Mass confers grace ex opere operato, or that, when applied on behalf of others, it merits for them the remission of venial and mortal sins, of guilt and punishment. This one reply overthrows all objections of the adversaries, not only in this Confutation, but in all writings which they have published concerning the Mass.

And this is the issue [the principal question] of the case of which our readers are to be admonished, as Aeschines admonished the judges that just as boxers contend with one another for their position, so they should strive with their adversary concerning the controverted point, and not permit him to wander beyond the case. In the same manner our adversaries ought to be here compelled to speak on the subject presented. And when the controverted point has been thoroughly understood, a decision concerning the arguments on both sides will be very easy.

For in our Confession we have shown that we hold that the Lord's Supper does not confer grace ex opere operato, and that, when applied on behalf of others, alive or dead, it does not merit for them ex opere operato the remission of sins, of guilt or of punishment. And of this position a clear and firm proof exists in that it is impossible to obtain the remission of our sins on account of our own work ex opere operato [even when there is not a good thought in the heart], but the terrors of sin and death must be overcome by faith when we comfort our hearts with the knowledge of Christ, and believe that for Christ's sake we are forgiven, and that the merits and righteousness of Christ are granted us, Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace. These things are so sure and so firm that they can stand against all the gates of hell.

If we are to say only as much as is necessary, the case has already been stated. For no sane man can approve that pharisaic and heathen opinion concerning the opus operatum. And nevertheless this opinion inheres in the people, and has increased infinitely the number of masses. For masses are purchased to appease God's wrath, and by this work they wish to obtain the remission of guilt and of punishment; they wish to procure whatever is necessary in every kind of life [health, riches, prosperity, and success in business]; they wish even to liberate the dead. Monks and sophists have taught this pharisaic opinion in the Church.

But although our case has already been stated, yet, because the adversaries foolishly pervert many passages of Scripture to the defense of their errors, we shall add a few things on this topic. In the Confutation they have said many things concerning "sacrifice," de sacrificio in Confutatione dixerunt, quum nos in Confessione nostra consulto id nomen propter ambiguitatem vitaverimus. Rem exposuimus, quid sacrificium isti nunc intelligant, quorum improbum abusus. Nunc ut male detortas scripturas explicemus, necesse est initio, quid sit sacrificium, exponere. Toto 15] iam decennio infinita paene volumina ediderunt adversarii de sacrificio, neque [R. 253] quisquam eorum definitionem sacrificii hactenus posuit. Tantum arripiunt nomen sacrificii vel ex Scripturis, vel ex patribus. Postea affingunt sua somnia, quasi vero sacrificium significet, quidquid ipsis libet.

hat noch nie definiert, was Opfer sei oder nicht sei. Sie suchen allein das [die] Wortel oder Wort sacrificium, wo sie es finden in concordantiis der Biblien, und dehnern es hierher, es reimt sich oder nicht. Also tun sie auch in der alten Väter Büchern; danach erdichten sie ihre Träume dazu, gleich als müsse sacrificium heißen, was sie wollen.

Quid Sit Sacrificium, et Quae Sint Sacrificii Species.

16] Socrates in Phaedro Platonis ait se maxime cupidum esse divisionum, quod sine his nihil neque explicari dicendo, neque intelligi possit, ac si quem deprehenderit peritum dividendi, hunc inquit se assectari, eiusque tamquam Dei vestigia sequi. Et iubet dividendum in ipsis articulis membra secare, ne quod membrum mali coqui more quassatum frangat. Sed haec praecepta adversarii magnifice contemnunt, ac vere sunt iuxta Platonem κακοὶ μάγειροι, sacrificii membra corumpentes, quemadmodum intelligi poterit, quum species sacrificii recensuerimus. Theo- 17] logi recte solent distinguere sacramentum et sacrificium. Sit igitur genus horum vel 18] ceremonia vel opus sacrum. Sacramentum est ceremonia vel opus, in quo Deus nobis exhibet hoc, quod offert annexa ceremoniae promissio, ut baptimus est opus, non quod nos Deo offerimus, sed in quo Deus nos baptizat, videlicet minister vice Dei, et hic offert et exhibet Deus remissionem peccatorum etc., iuxta promissionem Marc. 16, 16: Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit, salvus erit. Econtra sacrificium est ceremonia vel opus, quod nos Deo reddimus, ut eum honore afficiamus.

20] Has duas species sacrificii magnopere oportet et in hac controversia et in aliis multis disputationibus in conspectu et ob oculos positae habere, et singulari diligentia cavendum est, ne confundantur. Quod si modus huius libri pateretur, rationes huius divisionis adderemus. Habet enim satis multa testimonia in Epistola ad Ebraeos et alibi. Et 21] omnia sacrificia Levitica ad haec membra den erlangt, doch, diemeist die Widersacher viele Sprüche der Schrift ganz ungeschickt einführen, ihren Irrtum zu verteidigen, wollen wir etwas mehr hier noch dazu setzen. Die Widersacher reden in ihrer Confutation viel vom Opfer, so wir doch in unserer Confession das Wort sacrificium mit Fleiß gemieden haben um ungewissen Verstandes willen, sondern haben ihren höchsten Mißbrauch mit klaren Worten ausgebrüht, den sie unter dem Namen sacrificium meinen und treiben. Daß wir nun die Sprüche, so sie unrecht und fälschlich eingeführt, verlegen mögen, müssen wir erst sagen, was das Wort sacrificium oder Opfer heißt. Sie haben zehn ganze Jahre viele Bücher geschrieben, daß die Messe ein Opfer sei, und ihrer keiner. Sie suchen allein das [die] Wortel oder Wort sacrificium, und dehnern es hierher, es reimt sich oder nicht. Also tun sie auch in der alten Väter Büchern; danach erdichten sie ihre Träume dazu, gleich als müsse sacrificium heißen, was sie wollen.

Und damit man nicht blind in die Sache falle, müssen wir erstlich Unterschied anzeigen, was Opfer und was nicht Opfer sei, und dies ist nützlich und gut allen Christen zu wissen. Die Theologen pflegen recht zu unterscheiden sacrificium und sacramentum, Opfer und Sakrament. Nun, das genus wollen wir lassen sein ceremonia oder heilig Werk. Sacramentum ist eine ceremonia oder äußerlich Zeichen oder ein Werk, dadurch uns Gott gibt dasjenige, so die göttliche Verheißung, welche derselben Ceremonien angeheftet ist, anbietet. Als, die Taufe ist eine Ceremonie und ein Werk, nicht das wir Gott geben oder anbieten, sondern in welchem uns Gott gibt und anbietet, in welchem uns Gott tauft oder der Diener an Gottes Statt. Da bietet uns Gott an und gibt uns Vergebung der Sünden nach seiner Verheißung: „Wer da glaubet und getauft wird, der soll selig werden.“ Wiederum, sacrificium oder Opfer ist eine ceremonia oder ein Werk, das wir Gott geben, damit wir ihn ehren.

Es ist aber vornehmlich zweierlei Opfer und nicht mehr, darunter alle andern Opfer begriffen sind. Für eins ist ein Verßöhnopfer, dadurch genuggetan wird für Pein und Schuld, Gottes Zorn gestillt und verßöhnt und Vergebung der Sünden für andere erlangt. Zum andern ist ein Dankopfer, dadurch nicht Vergebung der Sünden oder Verßöhnung erlangt wird, sondern [es] geschieht von denjenigen, welche schon verßöhnt sind, daß sie für die erlangte Vergebung der Sünden und andere Gnaden und Gaben Dank sagen.

Dieser zweierlei Opfer muß man mit Fleiß wahrnehmen in diesem Handel und in vielen andern Disputationen gar wohl darauf sehen, daß man diese zwei nicht ineinandermenge. Und diese unterschiedliche Teilung hat wohl starke Beweisung aus der Epistel zu den Hebräern und an vielen Orten in der Schrift. Und alle Opfer im Gesetz Mosis, wie mancherlei die sind, können unter diese zweierlei Opfer als unter ihre genera beschloffen although in our Confession we purposely avoided this term on account of its ambiguity. We have set forth what those persons whose abuses we condemn now understand as a sacrifice. Now, in order to explain the passages of Scripture that have been wickedly perverted, it is necessary in the beginning to set forth what a sacrifice is. Already for an entire period of ten years the adversaries have published almost infinite volumes concerning sacrifice, and yet not one of them thus far has given a definition of sacrifice. They only seize upon the name "sacrifices" either from the Scriptures or the Fathers [and where they find it in the Concordances of the Bible, apply it here, whether it fits or not]. Afterward they append their own dreams, as though indeed a sacrifice signifies whatever pleases them.

What a Sacrifice Is, and What Are the Species of Sacrifice.

[Now, lest we plunge blindly into this business, we must indicate, in the first place, a distinction as to what is, and what is not, a sacrifice. To know this is expedient and good for all Christians.] Socrates, in the Phaedrus of Plato, says that he is especially fond of divisions, because without these nothing can either be explained or understood in speaking, and if he discovers any one skilful in making divisions, he says that he attends and follows his footsteps as those of a god. And he instructs the one dividing to separate the members in their very joints, lest, like an unskilful cook, he break to pieces some member. But the adversaries wonderfully despise these precepts, and, according to Plato, are truly naxoi μάγειροι (poor butchers), since they break the members of "sacrifice," as can be understood when we have enumerated the species of sacrifice. Theologians are rightly accustomed to distinguish between a Sacrament and a sacrifice. Therefore let the genus comprehending both of these be either a ceremony or a sacred work. A Sacrament is a ceremony or work in which God presents to us that which the promise annexed to the ceremony offers; as, Baptism is a work, not which we offer to God, but in which God baptizes us, i. e., a minister in the place of God; and God here offers and presents the remission of sins, etc., according to the promise, Mark 16, 16: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. A sacrifice, on the contrary, is a ceremony or work which we render God in order to afford Him honor.

Moreover, the proximate species of sacrifice are two, and there are no more. One is the propitiatory sacrifice, i. e., a work which makes satisfaction for guilt and punishment, i. e., one that reconciles God, or appeases God's wrath, or which merits the remission of sins for others. The other species is the eucharistic sacrifice, which does not merit the remission of sins or reconciliation, but is rendered by those who have been reconciled, in order that we may give thanks or return gratitude for the remission of sins that has been received, or for other benefits received.

These two species of sacrifice we ought especially to have in view and placed before the eyes in this controversy, as well as in many other discussions; and especial care must be taken lest they be confounded. But if the limits of this book would suffer it, we would add the reasons for this division. For it has many testimonies in the Epistle to the Hebrews and elsewhere. And all Levitical sacrifices can be referred to these members as to their own homes [genera]. For in the Law certain sacrifices were named propitiatory on account of their signification or similitude;

referri tamquam ad sua domicilia possunt. Dicebantur enim in lege quaedam propitiatoria sacrificia propter significationem seu similitudinem, non quod mererentur remissionem peccatorum coram Deo, sed quia merebantur remissionem peccatorum secundum iustitiam legis, ne illi, pro quibus fiebant, excluderentur ab ista politia. Dicebantur itaque propitiatoria pro peccato, pro delicto holocaustum. Illa vero erant εὐχαριστία, oblatio, libatio, retributiones, primitiae, decimae.

22) Sed revera unicum tantum in mundo fuit sacrificium propitiatorium, videlicet mors Christi, ut docet Epistola ad Ebraeos, quae ait 10, 4: Impossibile est sanguine taurorum et hircorum auferri peccata. Et paulo post, v. 10, de voluntate Christi: In qua voluntate sanctificati sumus per oblationem corporis 23) Iesu Christi semel. Et Esaias interpretatur legem, ut sciamus mortem Christi vere esse satisfactionem pro peccatis nostris seu expiationem, non ceremonias legis, quare ait 53, 10: Postquam posuerit animam suam hostiam pro delictis, videbit semen longævum etc. Nam vocabulum זֶבֶח, quo hic usus est, significat hostiam pro delicto, [R. 255] quae in lege significavit, quod ventura esset hostia quaedam satisfactura pro peccatis nostris et reconciliatura Deum, ut scirent homines, quod non propter nostras iustitias, sed propter aliena merita, videlicet Christi, velit Deus nobis reconciliari. Paulus idem nomen זֶבֶח interpretatur peccatum, Rom. 8, 3: De peccato damnavit peccatum, id est, peccatum punivit de peccato, id est, per hostiam pro peccato. Significantia verbi facilius intelligi potest ex moribus gentium, quos videmus ex patrum sermonibus male intellectis acceptos esse. Latini vocabant piaculum hostiam, quae in magnis calamitatibus, ubi insigniter videbatur Deus irasci, offerebatur ad placandam iram Dei, et litaverunt aliquando humanis hostiis, fortassis quia audierant, quandam humanam hostiam placaturam esse Deum toti generi humano. Graeci alibi καθάρματα, alibi περινήματα appellaverunt. Intelligunt igitur Esaias et Paulus, Christum factum esse hostiam, 24) hoc est, piaculum, ut ipsis meritis, non nostris, reconciliaretur Deus. Maneat ergo hoc in causa, quod sola mors Christi est vere propitiatorium sacrificium. Nam Levitica illa sacrificia propitiatoria tantum sic appellabantur ad significandum futurum piaculum. Propterea similitudine quadam erant satisfactiones redimentes iustitiam legis, ne ex politia excluderentur isti, qui peccaverant. Debeant autem cessare post revelationem evangelium; et quia cessare in evangelii revelatione debebant, non erant vere propitiationes, quum evangelium ideo promissum sit, ut exhibeat propitiationem.

25) Nunc reliqua sunt sacrificia εὐχαριστία, quae vocantur sacrificia laudis (cf. Lev. 3, 1 sq.; 7, 11 sq.; Ps. 56, 13 et infr.), praedicatio evangelii, fides, invocatio, gratiarum actio, confessio, afflictiones sanctorum, imo omnia bona opera sanctorum. Haec sacrificia non sunt satisfactiones pro facientibus, [R. 258] vel applicabiles pro aliis, quae mereantur eis ex opere operato remissionem peccatorum seu reconciliationem. Fiunt enim a reconciliatis. 26) Et talia sunt sacrificia novi testamenti, sicut docet Petrus 1 Pet. 2, 5: Sacerdotium sanctum, ut offeratis hostias spirituales. Opponuntur autem hostiae spirituales non tantum peccudibus, sed etiam humanis operibus, ex opere operato oblati, quia spirituale significat motus Spiritus Sancti in nobis. Idem docet Paulus Rom. 12, 1: Exhibete corpora vestra hostiam viventem, sanctam, cultum rationalem.

und begriffen werden. Denn etliche Opfer im Gesetz Moses werden genannt Sühnopfer oder Opfer für die Sünden um der Bedeutung willen, nicht daß Vergebung der Sünden dadurch verdient wird vor Gott, sondern daß es äußerliche Veröhnungen waren um der Bedeutung willen: denn diejenigen, für welche sie geschahen, wurden durch solche Opfer versöhnt, daß sie nicht aus dem Volk Israel verstoßen würden. Darum waren es genannt Sühnopfer; die andern Opfer aber waren Dankopfer.

Also sind im Gesetz wohl Bedeutungen gewesen des rechten Opfers, aber es ist allein ein einziges wahrhaftiges Sühnopfer, Opfer für die Sünden, in der Welt gewesen, nämlich der Tod Christi, wie die Epistel zu den Hebräern sagt: „Es ist unmöglich gewesen, daß der Lohsen und Böde Blut sollte Sünden wegnehmen.“ Und bald hernach steht von dem Gehorsam und Willen Christi: „In welchem Willen wir geheiligt sind durch das Opfern des Leibes Jesu Christi einmal“ uim. Und Jesaias der Prophet hat auch zuvor das Gesetz Moses ausgelegt und zeigt an, daß der Tod Christi die Bezahlung für die Sünden ist und nicht die Opfer im Gesetz, da er von Christo sagt: „Wenn er sein Leben zum Schuldopfer gegeben hat, so wird er Samen haben und in die Länge leben.“ Denn der Prophet hat das Wort „Schuldopfer“ auf Christus' Tod gezogen, anzuzeigen, daß die Schuldopfer im Gesetz nicht das rechte Opfer wären, die Sünden zu bezahlen, sondern es mühte ein ander Opfer kommen, nämlich Christus' Tod, dadurch Gottes Zorn sollte versöhnt werden. Item, die Schuldopfer im Gesetz mußten aufhören, da das Evangelium geoffenbart und das rechte Opfer ausgerichtet ward. Darum sind es nicht rechte Veröhnungen vor Gott gewesen, denn sie haben fallen müssen, und hat ein anderes müssen kommen. Derhalben sind es allein Bedeutungen und Vorbilder der rechten Veröhnung gewesen. Darum bleibt dieses feststehen, daß nur ein einzig Opfer gewesen ist, nämlich der Tod Christi, das für andere sollte appliziert werden, Gottes Zorn zu versöhnen.

Über dieses einige Sühnopfer, nämlich den Tod Christi, sind nun andere Opfer, die sind alle Dankopfer, als alles Leiden, Predigen, gute Werke der Heiligen. Dasselbe sind nicht solche Opfer, dadurch wir versöhnt werden, die man für andere tun könne, oder die da verdienen ex opere operato Vergebung der Sünden oder Veröhnung. Denn sie geschehen von denjenigen, so schon durch Christum versöhnt sind. Und solche Opfer sind unsere Opfer im Neuen Testament, wie Petrus der Apostel 1 Petr. 2 sagt: „Ihr seid ein heiliges Priestertum, daß ihr opfert geistliche Opfer.“

not because they merited the remission of sins before God, but because they merited the remission of sins according to the righteousness of the Law, in order that those for whom they were made might not be excluded from that commonwealth [from the people of Israel]. Therefore they were called sin-offerings and burnt offerings for a trespass. Whereas the eucharistic sacrifices were the oblation, the drink-offering, thank-offerings, first-fruits, tithes.

[Thus there have been in the Law emblems of the true sacrifice.] But in fact there has been only one propitiatory sacrifice in the world, namely, the death of Christ, as the Epistle to the Hebrews teaches, which says, 10, 4: It is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. And a little after, of the [obedience and] will of Christ, v. 10: By the which will we are sanctified by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And Isaiah interprets the Law, in order that we may know that the death of Christ is truly a satisfaction for our sins, or expiation, and that the ceremonies of the Law are not; wherefore he says, 53, 10: When Thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin, He will see His seed, etc. For the word employed here, זֶבֶחַ, signifies a victim for transgression; which signified in the Law that a certain Victim was to come to make satisfaction for our sins and reconcile God, in order that men might know that God wishes to be reconciled to us, not on account of our own righteousnesses, but on account of the merits of another, namely, of Christ. Paul interprets the same word זֶבֶחַ as sin, Rom. 8, 3: For sin (God) condemned sin, i. e., He punished sin for sin, i. e., by a Victim for sin. The significance of the word can be the more easily understood from the customs of the heathen, which, we see, have been received from the misunderstood expressions of the Fathers. The Latins called a victim that which in great calamities, where God seemed to be especially enraged, was offered to appease God's wrath, a piaculum; and they sometimes sacrificed human victims, perhaps because they had heard that a human victim would appease God for the entire human race. The Greeks sometimes called them καθάρματα and sometimes περινήματα. Isaiah and Paul, therefore, mean that Christ became a victim, i. e., an expiation, that by His merits, and not by our own, God might be reconciled. Therefore let this remain established in the case, namely, that the death of Christ alone is truly a propitiatory sacrifice. For the Levitical propitiatory sacrifices were so called only to signify a future expiation. On account of a certain resemblance, therefore, they were satisfactions redeeming the righteousness of the Law, lest those persons who sinned should be excluded from the commonwealth. But after the revelation of the Gospel [and after the true sacrifice has been accomplished] they had to cease; and because they had to cease in the revelation of the Gospel, they were not truly propitiations, since the Gospel was promised for this very reason, namely, to set forth a propitiation.

Now the rest are eucharistic sacrifices, which are called sacrifices of praise, Lev. 3, 1 f.; 7, 11 f.; Ps. 56, 12 f., namely, the preaching of the Gospel, faith, prayer, thanksgiving, confession, the afflictions of saints, yea, all good works of saints. These sacrifices are not satisfactions for those making them, or applicable on behalf of others, so as to merit for these, ex opere operato, the remission of sins or reconciliation. For they are made by those who have been reconciled. And such are the sacrifices of the New Testament, as Peter teaches, 1. Ep. 2, 5: An holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices. Spiritual sacrifices, however, are contrasted not only with those of cattle, but even with human works offered ex opere operato, because spiritual refers to the movements of the Holy Ghost in us. Paul teaches the same thing Rom. 12, 1: Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable, which is your reasonable service. Reasonable service signifies, however, a service in which God is known, and apprehended by the mind, as happens in the movements of fear and trust towards God. Therefore it is opposed not only to the Levitical service, in which cattle are slain, but also to a service in which a work is imagined to be offered ex opere operato. The Epistle to the Hebrews, 13, 15, teaches the same thing: By Him, therefore, let us offer

Significat autem cultus rationalis cultum, in quo Deus intelligitur, mente apprehenditur, ut sit in motibus timoris et fiducia erga Deum. Opponitur igitur non solum cultui Levitico, in quo pecudes mactabantur, sed etiam cultui, in quo fingitur opus ex opere operato offerri. Idem docet epistola ad Ebraeos, cap. 13, 15: Per ipsum offeramus hostiam laudis semper Deo, et addit interpretationem, id est, fructum laborum confitentium nomini eius. Iubet offerre laudes, hoc est, invocationem, gratiarum actionem, confessionem et similia. Haec valent non ex opere operato, sed propter fidem. Id monet particula: per ipsum offeramus, hoc est, fide in Christum.

27] In summa, cultus novi testamenti est spiritualis, hoc est, est iustitia fidei in corde et fructus fidei. Ideoque abrogat Leviticus cultus. Et Christus ait Joh. 4, 23, 24: Veri adoratores adorabunt Patrem in spiritu et veritate. Nam et Pater tales quaerit, qui adorent eum. Deus est spiritus, et eos, qui adorant eum, in spiritu et veritate oportet adorare. Haec sententia clare damnat opiniones de sacrificiis, quae fingunt ex opere operato valere, et docet, quod oporteat spiritu, id est, motibus cordis et fide, adorare. Ideo 28] et prophetae damnant in veteri testamento opinionem populi de opere operato et docent iustitiam et sacrificia spiritus. [R. 257 Jeremiae 7, 22. 23: Non sum locutus cum patribus vestris et non praecepi eis in die, qua educaui eos de terra Aegypti, de holocaustis et victimis, sed hoc verbum praecepi eis dicens: Audite vocem meam, et ero vobis Deus etc. Quomodo existimemus Iudaeos hanc concionem excepiisse, quae videtur palam pugnare cum Mose? Constat enim Deum praecepisse patribus de holocaustis ac victimis, sed Jeremias opinionem de sacrificiis damnat, hanc non tradiderat Deus, videlicet, quod illi cultus ex opere operato placarent eum. Addit autem de fide, quod hoc praeceperit Deus: Audite me, hoc est, credite mihi, quod ego sim Deus vester, quod velim sic innotescere, quum misereor et adiuvo, nec habeam opus vestris victimis; confidite, quod ego velim esse Deus iustificator, salvator, non propter opera, sed propter verbum et promissionem meam; a me vere et ex corde petite et exspectate auxilium.

daß ich euer Gott bin, der euch gerecht macht und heilig, nicht um eures Verdienstes willen, sondern um meiner Zusage willen; darum sollt ihr von mir allen Trost und Hilfe [er]warten.

29] Damnat opinionem de opere operato et Psalmus 50, 13. 15, qui repudiatis victimis requirit invocationem: Numquid manducabo carnes taurorum? etc. Invoca me in die tribulationis tuae, et eripiam te, et honorificabis me. Testatur hanc esse veram latgelav, hunc esse verum honorem, si ex corde invocemus ipsum.

Item Ps. 40, 7: Sacrificium et oblationem noluisti, aures autem aperuisti mihi, id est, verbum mihi proposuisti, quod audirem, et requiris, ut credam Verbo tuo et promissionibus tuis, quod vere velis misereri, opitulari etc. Item Ps. 51, 18. 19: Holocaustis non delectaberis. Sacrificium Deo spiritus contribulatus; cor contritum et humiliatum Deus non despicies. Item Ps. 4, 6: Sacrificio sacrificium iustitiae et sperate in Domino. Iubet sperare, et dicit id esse iustum sacrificium, significans cetera sacrificia non esse vera et iusta sacrificia. Et Ps. 116, 17: Sacrificabo hostiam laudis et nomen Domini invocabo. Vocat [R. 258 invocationem hostiam laudis.

Und im Neuen Testament gilt kein Opfer ex opere operato sine bono motu utentis, daß ist, daß Werf ohne einen guten Gedanken im Herzen. Denn Christus spricht Joh. am 4.: „Die rechten Anbeter werden den Vater anbeten im Geist und in der Wahrheit“, daß ist, mit Herzen, mit herzlichster Furcht und herzlichem Glauben. Darum ist's eitel teuffliche, pharisäische und antichristliche Lehre und Gottesdienst, daß unsere Widersacher lehren, ihre Messe verdiene Vergebung der Schuld und Pein ex opere operato. Die Juden verstanden ihre Ceremonien auch nicht recht und meinten, sie wären vor Gott fromm, wenn sie die Werke getan hätten, ex opere operato. Damider schreien die Propheten aufs allerernstlichste, damit sie die Leute von eigenen Werken auf die Zusage Gottes wiesen und sie zum Glauben und rechten Gottesdienst brächten. Also steht Jer. am 7.: „Ich habe nicht mit euren Vätern von Opfern ge-redet oder Brandopfern, da ich sie aus Egypten-land führte, sondern dies Wort habe ich ihnen ge-boten: Höret meine Stimme, und ich will euer Gott sein“ usw. Was werden wohl die haßstärkigen Juden zu dieser Predigt und Lehre gesagt haben, die da ganz öffentlich wider das Gesetz und Mose scheint? Denn es war je öffentlich, daß Gott den Vätern von Opfern geboten hatte, das konnte Jeremias nicht leugnen. Jeremias aber verdammt ihren Irrtum von den Opfern, von welchen kein Gottesbefehl war, nämlich daß die [sie] meinten, daß die Opfer ex opere operato Gott versöhnten und gefielen. Darum setzt Jeremias das dazu vom Glauben, daß Gott geboten hat: Hört mich, daß ist, glaubt mir, daß ich euer Gott bin, daß ich euch erhalte, mich euer erbarme, euch alle Stun-den helfe, und [be]darf eurer Opfer nicht; glaubt,

Auch so verwirft die heidnische Opinion vom opere operato der 50. Psalm, da er sagt: „Mei-nest du, daß ich Ochsenfleisch essen wolle oder

Blut trinken? Rufe mich an in der Zeit der Not“ usw. Da wird das opus operatum ver-worfen und sagt: „Rufe mich an!“ Da zeigt er den höchsten Gottesdienst an, wenn wir ihn von Herzen anrufen.

Item im 40. Psalm: „Du hast keine Lust am Opfer und Speisopfer; aber die Ohren hast du mir aufgetan“, daß ist, du hast mir ein Wort ge-gaben, daß ich hören soll, und forderst, daß ich dei-nem Wort glauben soll und deinen Zusagen, daß du mir helfen willst. Item Ps. 51: „Du hast nicht Lust zum Opfer, ich gäbe dir es sonst“ usw. „Die Opfer Gottes sind ein zerbrochener Geist“ usw. Item im 4. Psalm: „Opfert Opfer der Gerech-tigkeit und hoffet auf den HErrn.“ Da befiehlt er, daß wir sollen auf den HErrn hoffen, und nennt das ein recht Opfer. Da zeigt er an, daß die andern nicht rechte Opfer seien usw. Item Ps. 116: „Dir will ich Dankopfer opfern und des HErrn Namen anrufen“ usw.

the sacrifice of praise to God continually; and he adds the interpretation, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to His name. He bids us offer praises, i. e., prayer, thanksgiving, confession, and the like. These avail not ex opere operato, but on account of faith. This is taught by the clause: By Him let us offer, i. e., by faith in Christ.

In short, the worship of the New Testament is spiritual, i. e., it is the righteousness of faith in the heart and the fruits of faith. It accordingly abolishes the Levitical services. [In the New Testament no offering avails ex opere operato, sine bono motu utentis, i. e., on account of the work, without a good thought in the heart.] And Christ says, John 4, 23. 24: True worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship Him. God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth [that is, from the heart, with heartfelt fear and cordial faith]. This passage clearly condemns [as absolutely devilish, pharisaical, and antichristian] opinions concerning sacrifices which, they imagine, avail ex opere operato, and teaches that men ought to worship in spirit, i. e., with the dispositions of the heart and by faith. [The Jews also did not understand their ceremonies aright, and imagined that they were righteous before God when they had wrought works ex opere operato. Against this the prophets contend with the greatest earnestness.] Accordingly, the prophets also in the Old Testament condemn the opinion of the people concerning the opus operatum, and teach the righteousness and sacrifices of the Spirit. Jer. 7, 22. 23: For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them, in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices; but this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey My voice, and I will be your God, etc. How do we suppose that the Jews received this arraignment, which seems to conflict openly with Moses? For it was evident that God had given the fathers commands concerning burnt offerings and victims. But Jeremiah condemns the opinion concerning sacrifices which God had not delivered, namely, that these services should please Him ex opere operato. But he adds concerning faith that God had commanded this: Hear Me, i. e., believe Me that I am your God; that I wish to become thus known when I pity and aid; neither have I need of your victims; believe that I wish to be God the Justifier and Savior, not on account of works, but on account of My word and promise; truly and from the heart seek and expect aid from Me.

Ps. 50, 13. 15, which rejects the victims and requires prayer, also condemns the opinion concerning the opus operatum: Will I eat the flesh of bulls? etc. Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me. The Psalmist testifies that this is true service, that this is true honor, if we call upon Him from the heart.

Likewise Ps. 40, 6: Sacrifice and offering Thou didst not desire; mine ears hast Thou opened, i. e., Thou hast offered to me Thy Word that I might hear it, and Thou dost require that I believe Thy Word and Thy promises, that Thou truly desirest to pity, to bring aid, etc. Likewise Ps. 51, 16. 17: Thou delightest not in burnt offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise. Likewise Ps. 4, 5: Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust [hope, V.] in the Lord. He bids us hope, and says that this is a righteous sacrifice, signifying that other sacrifices are not true and righteous sacrifices. And Ps. 116, 17: I will offer to Thee the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord. They call invocation a sacrifice of thanksgiving.

31] Et de his sacrificiis loquitur Malachias, 1, 11: Ab ortu solis usque ad occasum magnum est nomen meum in gentibus, et in omni loco incensum offertur nomini meo et oblatio munda. Hunc locum detorquent adversarii ad missam et allegant auctoritatem patrum. Facilis est autem responsio, quod, ut maxime loqueretur de missa, non sequatur missam ex opere operato iustificare, aut applicatam aliis mereri remissionem peccatorum etc. Nihil horum dicit propheta, quae monachi et sophistae impudenter affingunt. Ceterum ipsa prophetae verba offerunt sententiam. Primum enim hoc proponunt, magnum fore nomen Domini. Id fit per praedicationem evangelii. Per hanc enim innoscit nomen Christi, et misericordia Patris in Christo promissa cognoscitur. Praedicatio evangelii parit fidem in his, qui recipiunt evangelium. Hi invocant Deum, hi agunt Deo gratias, hi tolerant afflictiones in confessione, hi bene operantur propter gloriam Christi. Ita fit magnum nomen Domini in gentibus. Incensum igitur et oblatio munda significant non ceremoniam ex opere operato, sed omnia illa sacrificia, per quae fit magnum nomen Domini, scilicet fidem, invocationem, praedicationem 33] evangelii, confessionem etc. Et facile patitur, si quis hic velit complecti ceremoniam, modo neque intelligat solam ceremoniam, neque doceat ceremoniam ex opere operato prodesset. Sicut enim inter sacrificia laudis, hoc est, inter laudes Dei, complectimur praedicationem Verbi: ita laus (R. 250) esse potest seu gratiarum actio ipsa sumptio coenae Domini, sed non ex opere operato iustificans aut applicanda aliis, ut mereatur eis remissionem peccatorum. Sed paulo post exponemus, quomodo et ceremonia sacrificium sit. Verum quia Malachias de omnibus cultibus novi testamenti, non solum de coena Domini loquitur, item, quia non patrocinator pharisaicae opinioni de opere operato, ideo nihil contra nos facit, sed magis adjuvat nos. Requirit enim cultus cordis, per quos vere fit magnum nomen Domini.

Widerredet demselben pharisäischen Irrtum vom opere operato, so tut der Spruch nichts wider uns, sondern vielmehr für uns, denn er fordert inwendig das Herz, Gott Dankopfer zu tun, durch welches der Name des Herrn recht groß werde.

34] Citatur ex Malachia et alius locus, 3, 3: Aur purgabit filios Levi, et colabit eos quasi argentum et quasi argentum, et erunt Domino offerentes sacrificia in iustitia. Hic locus aperte requirit sacrificia iustorum, quare non patrocinator opinioni de opere operato. Sunt autem sacrificia filiorum Levi, hoc est, docentium in novo testamento, praedicatio evangelii et boni fructus praedicationis, sicut Paulus ait Rom. 15, 16: Sacrificio evangelium Dei, ut oblatio gentium fiat accepta, sanctificata Spi-

Und die ganze Schrift ist voll solcher Sprüche, die da anzeigen, daß kein Opfer, kein Werk ex opere operato Gott versöhnt. Darum lehrt sie, daß im Neuen Testament die Opfer des Geistes Moses abgetan seien, und seien eitel reine Opfer, ohne Mafel, nämlich der Glaube gegen Gott, Dankagung, Gottes Lob, Predigt des Evangelii, Kreuz und Leiden der Heiligen und dergleichen.

Und von diesen Opfern redet Maleachi, da er sagt: „Vom Aufgang der Sonne bis zu ihrem Niedergang ist mein Name groß unter den Heiden, und an allen Orten soll meinem Namen geopfert werden ein rein Opfer.“ Denselben Spruch deuten die Widersacher fälschlich und nützlich, von der Messe zu verstehen, und ziehen die alten Väter an. Es ist aber da bald geantwortet: Wenngleich Maleachi von der Messe redet, als er nicht tut, so folgt doch daraus nicht, daß die Messe ex opere operato uns vor Gott fromm mache, oder daß man Messe könne halten für andere, denselben Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen. Der seines jagt der Prophet, sondern die Sophisten und Mönche erdichten's unverschämt aus ihrem eigenen Hirn. Die Worte aber des Propheten bringen selbst den rechten Verstand mit. Denn erst jagt der Prophet, es solle der Name des Herrn groß werden; das geschieht durch die Predigt des Evangelii. Denn durch dieselbe wird der Name Christi bekannt, und wird bekannt die Gnade, in Christo verheißen. Durch die Predigt aber des Evangelii kommen die Leute zum Glauben; die rufen dann Gott recht an, die danken Gott, die leiden um Gottes willen Verfolgung, die tun gute Werke. Darum nennt's der Prophet das reine Opfer, nicht die Ceremonie der Messe allein ex opere operato, sondern alle geistlichen Opfer, durch welche Gottes Name groß wird. Nämlich ein rein, heilig Opfer ist die Predigt des Evangelii, der Glaube, Anrufen, Gebet, das Evangelium und Christum vor der Welt bekennen uhn. Und wir setzen nicht groß an, ob es jemand je auch auf die Ceremonie der Messe deuten wollte, wenn er nur nicht sagt, daß die schlechte Ceremonia ex opere operato Gott versöhne. Denn wie wir die Predigt heißen ein Lobopfer, so mag die Ceremonia des Abendmahls an ihm selbst ein Lobopfer sein, aber nicht ein solch Opfer, das ex opere operato vor Gott gerecht mache, oder das man für andere tun könne, ihnen Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen. Aber bald hernach wollen wir auch sagen, wie die Ceremonia ein Opfer sei. Dieweil aber Maleachi redet von allen Gottesdiensten und Opfern des Neuen Testaments, so redet er nicht allein von der Messe oder Abendmahl. Item, dieweil er klar

Es wird auch aus dem Maleachi noch ein Spruch angezogen: „Und er wird seigern [sehen, läutern] die Söhne Levi wie Gold und wie Silber, und sie werden Gott opfern Opfer der Gerechtigkeit.“ Da sagt er von Opfern der Gerechtigkeit; darum ist der Text wider das opus operatum. Die Opfer aber der Söhne Levi, das ist, derjenigen, die da predigen im Neuen Testament, ist die Predigt des Evangelii und die guten Früchte der Predigt, wie Paulus Röm. 15 sagt: Ich soll sein ein Diener Christi unter den Heiden, zu opfern

But Scripture is full of such testimonies as teach that sacrifices ex opere operato do not reconcile God. Accordingly the New Testament, since Levitical services have been abrogated, teaches that new and pure sacrifices will be made, namely, faith, prayer, thanksgiving, confession, and the preaching of the Gospel, afflictions on account of the Gospel, and the like.

And of these sacrifices Malachi speaks, 1, 11: From the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same My name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto My name and a pure offering. The adversaries perversely apply this passage to the Mass, and quote the authority of the Fathers. A reply, however, is easy, for even if it spoke most particularly of the Mass, it would not follow that the Mass justifies ex opere operato, or that, when applied to others, it merits the remission of sins, etc. The prophet says nothing of those things which the monks and sophists impudently fabricate. Besides, the very words of the prophet express his meaning. For they first say this, namely, that the name of the Lord will be great. This is accomplished by the preaching of the Gospel. For through this the name of Christ is made known, and the mercy of the Father, promised in Christ, is recognized. The preaching of the Gospel produces faith in those who receive the Gospel. They call upon God, they give thanks to God, they bear afflictions for their confession, they produce good works for the glory of Christ. Thus the name of the Lord becomes great among the Gentiles. Therefore incense and a pure offering signify not a ceremony ex opere operato [not the ceremony of the Mass alone], but all those sacrifices through which the name of the Lord becomes great, namely, faith, invocation, the preaching of the Gospel, confession, etc. And if any one would have this term embrace the ceremony [of the Mass], we readily concede it, provided he neither understands the ceremony alone, nor teaches that the ceremony profits ex opere operato. For just as among the sacrifices of praise, i. e., among the praises of God, we include the preaching of the Word, so the reception itself of the Lord's Supper can be praise or thanksgiving; but it does not justify ex opere operato; neither is it to be applied to others so as to merit for them the remission of sins. But after a while we shall explain how even a ceremony is a sacrifice. Yet, as Malachi speaks of all the services of the New Testament, and not only of the Lord's Supper; likewise, as he does not favor the pharisaic opinion of the opus operatum, he is not against us, but rather aids us. For he requires services of the heart, through which the name of the Lord becomes truly great.

Another passage also is cited from Malachi 3, 3: And He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering of righteousness. This passage clearly requires the sacrifices of the righteous, and hence does not favor the opinion concerning the opus operatum. But the sacrifices of the sons of Levi, i. e., of those teaching in the New Testament, are the preaching of the Gospel, and the good fruits of preaching, as Paul says, Rom. 15, 16: Ministering the Gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, i. e., that ritu Sancto, id est, ut gentes fiant hostiae acceptae Deo per fidem etc. Nam illa mactatio in lege significabat et mortem Christi et praedicationem evangelii, qua hanc vetustatem carnis mortificari oportet, et inchoari novam et aeternam vitam in nobis.

Sed adversarii ubique sacrificii nomen ad solam ceremoniam detorqueant. Praedicationem evangelii, fidem, invocationem et similia omittunt, quum ceremonia propter haec instituta sit, et novum testamentum debeat habere sacrificia cordis, non ceremonialia pro peccatis facienda more Levitici sacerdotii.

35] Allegant et iuge sacrificium (cf. Ex. 29, 39 sq.; Dan. 8, 11 sq.; 12, 11), quod, sicut in lege fuit iuge sacrificium, ita missa debeat esse iuge sacrificium novi testamenti. Bene cum adversariis agitur, si patimur nos vinci allegoriis. Constat autem, quod allegoriae non pariunt firmas probationes. Quamquam nos quidem facile patimur missam intelligi iuge sacrificium, modo ut tota missa [R. 260] intelligatur, hoc est, ceremonia cum praedicatione evangelii, fide, invocatione et gratiarum actione. Nam haec simul coniuncta sunt iuge sacrificium novi testamenti, quia ceremonia propter haec instituta est, nec ab his dividenda est. Ideo Paulus ait 1 Cor. 11, 26: Quoties comedetis panem hunc et poculum Domini bibetis, annuntiate mortem Domini. Illud vero nullo modo sequitur ex hoc typo Levitico, quod ceremonia sit opus ex opere operato iustificans aut applicandum pro aliis, ut mereatur eis remissionem peccatorum etc.

ſie iſt um des Predigens willen eingefezt, wie Paulus ſagt: „Sooft ihr das Brod eſſet und den Kelch trinlet, ſoſt ihr den Tod des Herrn verkündigen.“ ſichen Opfers, daß die Meſſe ſei ein ſolch Opfer, daß ex opere operato Gott verſöhne, oder daß man für andere halten oder tun könne, ihnen Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen.

36] Et typus apte pingit non ceremoniam solam, sed etiam praedicationem evangelii. In Num. cap. 28, 4 sq. tres ponuntur partes istius quotidiani sacrificii: crematio agni, libatio et oblatio similiae. Lex habebat picturas seu umbras rerum futurarum. Ideo in hoc spectaculo Christus et totus cultus novi testamenti pingitur. Crematio agni significat mortem Christi. Libatio significat, ubique in toto mundo credentes illius agni sanguine aspergi per evangelii praedicationem, hoc est, sanctificari, sicut Petrus loquitur, 1 ep. 1, 2: In sanctificationem Spiritus, in obedientiam et asperionem sanguinis Iesu Christi. Oblatio similiae significat fidem, invocationem et gratiarum actionem in cordibus. Ut igitur in veteri testamento umbra cernitur, ita in novo res significata quaerenda est, non alius typus tamquam ad sacrificium sufficiens.

Herzen. Wie nun im Alten Testament der Schatten iſt und die Bedeutung Chriſti oder des Evangelii, alſo iſt im Neuen Testament dasſelbe Evangelium und die Wahrheit, welche durch die Figur bedeutet iſt, zu ſuchen, und iſt nicht erſt ein neuer typus oder Figur zu ſuchen, daß ſie möchten oder wollten ſacrificium nennen.

38] Quare etiamsi ceremonia est memoriale mortis Christi, tamen sola non est iuge sacrificium, sed ipsa memoria est iuge sacrificium, daß Evangelium Gottes, auf daß die Heiden ein Opfer werden, Gott angenehm durch den Glauben.“ Denn das Opfern- und Schaffſchlachten im Geſez hat bedeutet den Tod Chriſti und das Predigtamt des Evangelii, dadurch der alte Adam täglich getödtet werde, und daß neue und ewige Leben ſich anfängt.

Aber die Widerſacher deuten allenthalben das Wort Opfer oder ſacrificium allein auf die Ceremonien der Meſſe. Von dem Predigtamt des Evangelii, vom Glauben, vom Danken und Anrufen göttlichen Namens reden ſie gar nichts, ſo doch die Ceremonia darum iſt eingefezt, ſo doch das Neue Testament eitel geiſtliche Opfer hat inwendig des Herzens und nicht ſolche Opfer wie das levitiſche Priſterthum.

Auch ſo ziehen die Widerſacher an das iuge ſacrificium, das iſt, das tägliche Opfer, und ſagen, wie im Geſez Moſis ſei gemeſen ein täglich Opfer, alſo ſei die Meſſe iuge ſacrificium des Neuen Testaments. Wenn die Sache mit Allegorien auszurichten wäre, ſo würde jebermann Allegorien finden, ihm dienlich. Aber alle Verſtändigen wiſſen, daß man in ſolchen hochwichtigen Sachen vor Gott gewiß und klar Gottes Wort haben muß und nicht dunkle und fremde Sprüche herzu ziehen mit Gewalt. Solche ungewiſſe Deutungen halten den Sich nicht vor Gottes Gericht. Wiewohl wir wollten den Widerſachern zu Gefallen noch die Meſſe wohl iuge ſacrificium oder täglich Opfer nennen laſſen, wenn ſie die ganze Meſſe, das iſt, die Ceremonien mit der Dankſagung, mit dem Glauben im Herzen, mit dem herzlichlichen Anrufen göttlicher Gnade, iuge ſacrificium nannten; denn daß alles zuſammen möchte iuge ſacrificium des Neuen Testaments heißen. Denn die Ceremonia der Meſſe oder des Abendmahls iſt um des alles willen ausgerichtet; denn

Und wenn man iuge ſacrificium oder das tägliche Opfer recht anſieht, ſo malet's ab und bedeutet nicht allein die Ceremonien, ſondern auch die Predigt des Evangelii. Denn im 4. Buch Moſis am 28. werden geſezt drei Stücke, die zu demſelben täglichen Opfer gehörten. Erſtlich ward geopfert ein Lamm zu einem Brandopfer, und ward Wein darauf geſoſſen. Danach ward auch geopfert ein Ruchen, mit Semmelmehl und Öl gemenget. Das ganze Geſez Moſis iſt ein Schatten und Figur Chriſti und des Neuen Testaments, darum ſo wird Chriſtus darin abgemalt. Das Lamm bedeutet den Tod Chriſti. Wein darauf gießen bedeutet, daß in aller Welt alle Gläubigen von des Lammes Blut beſprengt werden durch das Evangelium, das iſt, daß ſie geheiligt werden; wie Petrus ſagt 1 Petr. 1: „durch Heiligung des Geiſtes im Gehorſam und Beſprengung des Blutes Jeſu Chriſti“. Der Ruchen bedeutet das Anrufen und die Dankſagung in aller Gläubigen

the Gentiles might be offerings acceptable to God by faith, etc. For in the Law the slaying of victims signified both the death of Christ and the preaching of the Gospel, by which this oldness of flesh should be mortified, and the new and eternal life be begun in us.

But the adversaries everywhere perversely apply the name sacrifice to the ceremony alone. They omit the preaching of the Gospel, faith, prayer, and similar things, although the ceremony has been established on account of these, and the New Testament ought to have sacrifices of the heart, and not ceremonials for sin that are to be performed after the manner of the Levitical priesthood.

They cite also the daily sacrifice (cf. Ex. 29, 38 f.; Dan. 8, 11 f.; 12, 11), that, just as in the Law there was a daily sacrifice, so the Mass ought to be a daily sacrifice of the New Testament. The adversaries have managed well if we permit ourselves to be overcome by allegories. It is evident, however, that allegories do not produce firm proofs [that in matters so highly important before God we must have a sure and clear word of God, and not introduce by force obscure and foreign passages; such uncertain explanations do not stand the test of God's judgment]. Although we indeed readily suffer the Mass to be understood as a daily sacrifice, provided that the entire Mass be understood, i. e., the ceremony with the preaching of the Gospel, faith, invocation, and thanksgiving. For these joined together are a daily sacrifice of the New Testament, because the ceremony [of the Mass, or the Lord's Supper] was instituted on account of these things; neither is it to be separated from these. Paul says accordingly, 1 Cor. 11, 26: As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till He come. But it in no way follows from this Levitical type that a ceremony justifying ex opere operato is necessary, or ought to be applied on behalf of others, that it may merit for them the remission of sins.

And the type aptly represents not only the ceremony, but also the preaching of the Gospel. In Num. 28, 4 f. three parts of that daily sacrifice are represented, the burning of the lamb, the libation, and the oblation of wheat flour. The Law had pictures or shadows of future things. Accordingly, in this spectacle Christ and the entire worship of the New Testament are portrayed. The burning of the lamb signifies the death of Christ. The libation signifies that everywhere in the entire world, by the preaching of the Gospel, believers are sprinkled with the blood of that Lamb, i. e., sanctified, as Peter says, 1. Ep. 1, 2: Through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. The oblation of wheat flour signifies faith, prayer, and thanksgiving in hearts. As, therefore, in the Old Testament, the shadow is perceived, so in the New the thing signified should be sought, and not another type, as sufficient for a sacrifice.

Therefore, although a ceremony is a memorial of Christ's death, nevertheless it alone hoc est, praedicatio et fides, quae vere credit, Deum morte Christi reconciliatum esse. Requiritur libatio, hoc est, effectus praedicationis, ut per evangelium aspersi sanguine Christi sanctificemur, mortificati ac vivificati. Requiritur et oblationes, hoc est, gratiarum actiones, confessiones et afflictiones.

daß der alte Adam getödtet [werde] und der Geist zunehme; das ist das Gießen. Danach sollen wir auch danken und Gott loben und den Glauben mit Leiden und guten Werken bekennen; das ist durch Rehl und Öl bedeutet.

Sic abiecta pharisaica opinione de [R. 261 39] opere operato intelligamus, significari cultum spiritualem et iuge sacrificium cordis, quia in novo testamento corpus bonorum, hoc est, Spiritus Sanctus, mortificatio et vivificatio requiri debent. Ex his satis apparet typum de iugi sacrificio nihil contra nos facere, sed magis pro nobis, quia nos omnes partes significatas iugi sacrificio requiramus. Adversarii falso somniant solam ceremoniam significari, non etiam praedicationem evangelii, mortificationem et vivificationem cordis etc.

Gesetz Moßs gehört hat, muß ein wahr, herzlich Opfer, nicht opus operatum bedeuten. Der Widersacher Traum ist falsch, da sie wähnen wollen, es werde allein das schlechte, äußerliche Werk und Ceremonien bedeutet, so doch der Glaube im Herzen, das Predigen, Bekennen, Danksagen und herzliches Anrufen die rechten täglichen Opfer sind und das Beste an der Messe, sie nennen's gleich Opfer oder anders.

41] Nunc igitur boni viri facile iudicare poterunt falsissimam hanc criminationem esse, quod iuge sacrificium aboleamus. Res ostendit, qui sint Antiochi illi, qui regnum tenent in ecclesia, qui praetextu religionis trahunt ad se regnum mundi, et abiecta cura religionis et decendi evangelii dominantur, belligerantur velut reges mundi, qui novos cultus 42] instituerunt in ecclesia. Nam adversarii in missa solam retinent ceremoniam, eamque conferunt publice ad sacrilegum quaestum. Postea fingunt hoc opus applicatum pro aliis 43] mereri eis gratiam et omnia bona. In concionibus non docent evangelium, non consolantur conscientias, non ostendunt gratis remitti peccata propter Christum, sed proponunt cultus sanctorum, satisfactiones humanas, traditiones humanas, per has affirmant homines coram Deo iustificari. Et harum quaedam quum sint manifeste impiae, tamen vi defenduntur. Si qui concionatores volunt perhiberi doctiores, tradunt quaestiones philosophicas, quas neque populus, neque ipsi, qui proponunt, intelligunt. Postremo, qui sunt tolerabiliores, legem docent; de iustitia fidei nihil dicunt.

sacrificium oder tägliche Opfer, sondern das Gedächtnis des Todes Christi zusamt der Ceremonia ist das tägliche Opfer, das ist, die Predigt vom Glauben und Christo, welcher Glaube wahrlich glaubt, daß Gott durch den Tod Christi versöhnt sei. Zu demselben iuge sacrificio gehört auch die Frucht der Predigt, daß wir mit dem Blut Christi besprengt, das ist, geheiligt werden, daß der alte Adam getödtet [werde] und der Geist zunehme; das ist das Gießen. Danach sollen wir auch danken und Gott loben und den Glauben mit Leiden und guten Werken bekennen; das ist durch Rehl und Öl bedeutet.

Also wenn der grobe pharisäische Irrtum von dem opere operato weggetan ist, findet sich, daß durch das iuge sacrificium bedeutet ist das geistliche Opfer und tägliche Opfer der Herzen; denn Paulus sagt: Im Alten Testament ist „der Schatz der künftigen Güter“, „der Leib aber“ und die Wahrheit „ist in Christo“, Kol. 2, 17. Das ist nun das Erkenntnis Christi und der Heilige Geist im Herzen, welcher eitel Danksagung und täglich geistliche Opfer im Herzen wirkt. Aus dem erscheint nun genug, daß das Gleichnis vom iuge sacrificio oder täglichen Opfer nichts wider uns ist, sondern vielmehr für uns. Denn wir haben klar angezeigt, daß alles, was zum täglichen Opfer im

Nun können alle gottesfürchtigen, frommen, ehrbaren, christlichen Leute leichtlich merken, daß der Widersacher Beschuldigung unrecht ist, da sie sagen, wir tun das iuge sacrificium ab. Die Erfahrung aber gibt's, daß sie die rechten Antiochi sind, die als die wütenden Tyrannen mit eitel Durt [Küßheit] und Gewalt sich erzeigen in der Kirche, die unter einem Schein der Geistlichkeit zu sich ziehen alle Gewalt der Welt und fragen doch nichts nach dem Predigamt, nach Christo oder dem Evangelio. Darüber [außerdem] unterstehen sie sich, neue Gottesdienste ihres Gefallens in der Kirche anzurichten und mit eitel Gewalt zu versehen. Denn die Widersacher behalten allein die Ceremonie der Messe, den rechten Gebrauch aber der Messe lassen sie fahren und brauchen die Messe allein zum Geiz und schändlichen Jahrmarkt und erdichten danach, es sei ein Werk, das andern zugute komme, das andern Vergebung der Sünden, [der] Pein und Schuld verdiene. In ihren Predigten aber lehren sie nicht das Evangelium, sie trösten auch nicht die Gewissen, sie predigen auch nicht, daß die Sünden ohne Verdienst vergeben werden um Christus' willen, sondern predigen vom Anrufen der Heiligen, von satisfactionibus, von Genußungen, von Menschenfahrungen und sagen, daß dadurch die

is not the daily sacrifice; but the memory itself is the daily sacrifice, i. e., preaching and faith, which truly believes that, by the death of Christ, God has been reconciled. A libation is required, i. e., the effect of preaching, in order that, being sprinkled by the Gospel with the blood of Christ, we may be sanctified, as those put to death and made alive. Oblations also are required, i. e., thanksgiving, confessions, and afflictions.

Thus the pharisaic opinion of the opus operatum being cast aside, let us understand that spiritual worship and a daily sacrifice of the heart are signified, because in the New Testament the substance of good things should be sought for [as Paul says: In the Old Testament is the shadow of things to come, but the body and the truth is in Christ], i. e., the Holy Ghost, mortification, and quickening. From these things it is sufficiently apparent that the type of the daily sacrifice testifies nothing against us, but rather for us, because we seek for all the parts signified by the daily sacrifice. [We have clearly shown all the parts that belonged to the daily sacrifice in the law of Moses, that it must mean a true cordial offering, not an opus operatum.] The adversaries falsely imagine that the ceremony alone is signified, and not also the preaching of the Gospel, mortification, and quickening of heart, etc. [which is the best part of the Mass, whether they call it a sacrifice or anything else].

Now, therefore, good men will be able to judge readily that the complaint against us that we abolish the daily sacrifice is most false. Experience shows what sort of Antiochi they are who hold power in the Church; who under the pretext of religion assume to themselves the kingdom of the world, and who rule without concern for religion and the teaching of the Gospel; who wage war like kings of the world, and have instituted new services in the Church. For in the Mass the adversaries retain only the ceremony, and publicly apply this to sacrilegious gain. Afterward they feign that this work, as applied on behalf of others, merits for them grace and all good things. In their sermons they do not teach the Gospel, they do not console consciences, they do not show that sins are freely remitted for Christ's sake; but they set forth the worship of saints, human satisfactions, human traditions, and by these they affirm that men are justified before God. And although some of these traditions are manifestly godless, nevertheless they defend them by violence. If any preachers wish to be regarded more learned, they treat of philosophical questions, which neither the people nor even those who propose them understand. Lastly, those who are more tolerable teach the Law, and say nothing concerning the righteousness of faith.

The adversaries in the Confutation make a great ado concerning the desolation of churches, namely, that the altars stand unadorned, without candles and without images. These trifles they regard as ornaments to churches. [Although it is not true that we abolish all such outward ornaments; yet, even if it were so, Daniel is not speaking of such things as are altogether external and do not belong to the Christian Church.] It is a far different desolation which Daniel means, 11, 31; 12, 11, namely, ignorance of licet ignorationem evangelii. Nam populus obrutus multitudine et varietate traditionum atque opinionum nullo modo potuit complecti 46] summam doctrinae Christianae. Vexabantur conscientiae enumeratione delictorum et satisfactionibus. De fide, qua gratis consequimur remissionem peccatorum, nulla prorsus fiebat ab adversariis mentio. De exercitiis fidei luctantis cum desperatione, de gratuita remissione peccatorum propter Christum omnes libri, omnes conciones adversariorum mutae erant. Ad haec accessit horribilis profanatio missarum et alii multi impii cultus in templis. Haec est desolatio, quam Daniel describit.

49] Quodsi iuge sacrificium esset usus sacramenti, tamen nos magis retineremus quam adversarii, quia apud illos sacerdotes mercede conducti utuntur sacramento. Apud nos crebrior et religiosior usus est. Nam populus utitur, sed prius institutus atque exploratus. Docentur enim homines de vero usu sacramenti, quod ad hoc institutum sit, ut sit sigillum et testimonium gratuita remissionis peccatorum, ideoque debeat pavidas conscientias admonere, ut vere statuunt et credant, sibi gratis remitti peccata. Quum igitur et praedicationem evangelii et legitimum usum sacramentorum retineamus, manet apud nos iuge sacrificium.

50] Et, si de externa specie dicendum est, frequentia in templis apud nos maior est quam apud adversarios. Tenentur enim auditoria utilibus et perspicuis concionibus. (R. 263) Verum adversariorum doctrinam nunquam neque populus neque doctores intellexerunt. Et 51] verus ornatus est ecclesiarum doctrina pia, utilis et perspicua, usus pius sacramentorum, oratio ardens et similia. Candelae, vasa aurea et similes ornatus decent, sed non sunt proprius ornatus ecclesiae. Quodsi adversarii in talibus rebus collocant cultus, non siche Ornamente alle wegtun, dennoch, so es schon also wäre, redet Daniel nicht von solchen Dingen, die gar äußerlich sind und zur christlichen Kirche nicht gehören, sondern meint viel eine andere, greulichere Verwüstung, welche im Papsttum stark geht, nämlich von Verwüstung des nötigsten, größten Gottesdienstes, des Predigtamts und Unterbrechung des Evangelii. Denn bei den Widersachern predigt man das mehrere Teil von Menschen eigene Werke und Vertrauen geführt werden; so der Buße oder de poenitentia, wie die Widersacher doch das nötigste Stück der ganzen christlichen Lehre.

Die Widersacher haben die armen Gewissen gequält und geplagt mit Sündenerzählen; vom Glauben an Christum, wodurch man erlangt Vergebung der Sünden, vom rechten Kampf und Anfechtung, welche sind Übungen des Glaubens, haben sie gar nichts Rechtes gelehrt, dadurch die Gewissen hätten mögen Trost haben. Alle ihre Bücher, alle ihre Predigten sind in dem Stücke als nütze gewesen als nichts und haben dazu unsäglichen Schaden getan. Darüber [überdies] ist bei den Widersachern der schreckliche, greuliche Mißbrauch der Messe, desgleichen kaum je auf Erden gewesen, und sonst unzählig viel unchristliche, närrische Gottesdienste. Das ist die rechte Verwüstung, davon Daniel sagt.

Dagegen in unsern Kirchen warten die Priester recht ihres Amts, lehren und predigen das Evangelium, predigen Christum, daß wir nicht um unserer Werke willen, sondern um Christus' willen Vergebung der Sünden und einen gnädigen Gott haben. Diese Lehre gibt den Herzen einen rechten, gewissen, beständigen Trost. Auch so lehren sie die zehn Gebote und von rechtschaffenen guten Werken, welche Gott geboten hat, darüber auch von rechtem christlichen Gebrauch der heiligen Sacramente.

Und wenn ja das Abendmahl oder die Messe sollte das tägliche Opfer genannt werden, so möchte billiger die Messe bei uns also heißen. Denn bei ihnen halten ihre Pfaffen das mehrere Teil alle um ihre Präbenden und um Geldes willen Messe. In unsern Kirchen wird der heiligen Sacramente also nicht mißbraucht. Denn da wird niemand mit Geld dazu getrieben, sondern man läßt die Gewissen sich prüfen, Trost da zu suchen; dazu werden die Leute unterrichtet von rechtem christlichen Gebrauch des Sacraments, daß es nämlich dazu eingesetzt ist, daß es sei ein Siegel und gewiß Zeichen der Vergebung der Sünden, dadurch die Herzen erinnert und der Glaube gestärkt wird, daß sie gewiß glauben, daß ihnen die Sünden vergeben sind. So wir nun die Predigt des Evangelii und den rechten Gebrauch des Sacraments bei uns behalten, so haben wir ohne Zweifel das tägliche Opfer.

Und wenn man gleich von äußerlichem Wohlsehen sagen sollte, so sind unsere Kirchen besser geziert denn des Gegenteils. Denn der rechte äußerliche Kirchenschmuck ist auch rechte Predigt, rechter Gebrauch der Sacramente, und daß das Volk mit Ernst dazu gewöhnt sei und mit Fleiß und züchtig zusammenkomme, lerne und bete. Dieweil man nun durch Gottes Gnade in unsern Kirchen christlich und heilsam Ding lehrt von Trost in allem Anfechten, bleiben die Leute gern bei guter Predigt. Denn es ist kein Ding, das die Leute mehr bei der Kirche behält denn die the Gospel. For the people, overwhelmed by the multitude and variety of traditions and opinions, were in no way able to embrace the sum of Christian doctrine. [For the adversaries preach mostly of human ordinances, whereby consciences are led from Christ to confidence in their own works.] For who of the people ever understood the doctrine of repentance of which the adversaries treat? And yet this is the chief topic of Christian doctrine.

Consciences were tormented by the enumeration of offenses and by satisfactions. Of faith, by which we freely receive the remission of sins, no mention whatever was made by the adversaries. Concerning the exercises of faith, struggling with despair, and the free remission of sins for Christ's sake, all the books and all the sermons of the adversaries were silent [worse than worthless, and, moreover, caused untold damage]. To these, the horrible profanation of the masses and many other godless services in the churches were added. This is the desolation which Daniel describes.

On the contrary, by the favor of God, the priests among us attend to the ministry of the Word, teach the Gospel concerning the blessings of Christ, and show that the remission of sins occurs freely for Christ's sake. This doctrine brings sure consolation to consciences. The doctrine of [the Ten Commandments and] good works which God commands is also added. The worth and use of the Sacraments are declared.

But if the use of the Sacrament would be the daily sacrifice, nevertheless we would retain it rather than the adversaries, because with them priests hired for pay use the Sacrament. With us there is a more frequent and more conscientious use. For the people use it, but after having first been instructed and examined. For men are taught concerning the true use of the Sacrament that it was instituted for the purpose of being a seal and testimony of the free remission of sins, and that, accordingly, it ought to admonish alarmed consciences to be truly confident and believe that their sins are freely remitted. Since, therefore, we retain both the preaching of the Gospel and the lawful use of the Sacrament, the daily sacrifice remains with us.

And if we must speak of the outward appearance, attendance upon church is better among us than among the adversaries. For the audiences are held by useful and clear sermons. But neither the people nor the teachers have ever understood the doctrine of the adversaries. [There is nothing that so attaches people to the church as good preaching. But our adversaries preach their people out of the churches; for they teach nothing of the necessary parts of Christian doctrine; they narrate the legends of saints and other fables.] And the true adornment of the churches is godly, useful, and clear doctrine, the devout use of the Sacraments, ardent prayer, and the like. Candles, golden vessels [tapers, altar-cloths, images], and similar adornments in praedicatione evangelii, in fide, in certaminibus fidei, sunt in istis numerandi, quos Daniel describit colere Deum suum auro et argento.

Hic locus vel maxime movet indoctos, praesertim quum illa pompa sacerdotil et sacrificiorum veteris testamenti offunditur oculis. Haec similitudo decipit imperitos, ut iudicent oportere ad eundem modum apud nos existere aliquod ceremoniale sacrificium, applicandum pro peccatis aliorum, sicut in veteri testamento. Neque aliud est ille cultus missarum et reliqua politia papae, quam κακο-ζηλία Leviticae politiae male intellectae.

kommen, denn daß sie haben wollen den Moses Jeremonien nachfolgen und haben es nicht verstanden, daß das Neue Testament mit andern Sachen umgeht, und daß solche äußerliche Jeremonien, ob man sie zur Kinderzucht braucht, sollen ihr Maß haben.

53) Et quum sententia nostra habeat praecipua testimonia in epistola ad Ebraeos, tamen adversarii locos ex illa epistola truncatos contra nos detorquent, ut in hoc ipso loco, ubi dicitur, pontificem constitui, ut offerat sacrificia pro peccatis. Scriptura ipsa statim attestat Christum pontificem, Ebr. 5, 5. 6. 10. Verba praecedentia de Levitico sacerdotio loquuntur et significant Leviticum pontificatum fuisse imaginem pontificatus Christi. Nam sacrificia Levitica pro peccatis non merebantur remissionem peccatorum coram [R. 264] Deo; tantum erant imago sacrificii Christi, quod unum futurum erat propitiatorium sacrificium, ut supra diximus. Itaque epistola magna ex parte consumitur in hoc loco, quod vetus pontificatus et vetera sacrificia non fuerint ad hoc instituta, ut mererentur remissionem peccatorum coram Deo seu reconciliationem, sed tantum ad significandum futurum sacrificium unius Christi. Oportuit 55) enim sanctos in veteri testamento iustificari fide ex promissione remissionis peccatorum donandae propter Christum, sicut et sancti in novo testamento iustificantur. Omnes sanctos ab initio mundi sentire oportuit, hostiam et satisfactionem fore pro peccato Christum, qui promissus erat, sicut Esaias docet cap. 53, 10: Quum posuerit animam suam hostiam pro peccato etc.

56) Quum igitur in veteri testamento sacrificia non mererentur reconciliationem nisi similitudine quadam (merebantur enim reconciliationem politicam), sed significarent venturum sacrificium, sequitur unicum esse sacrificium Christi, applicatum pro aliorum pecgute Predigt. Aber unsere Widersacher predigen ihre Leute aus der Kirche; denn sie lehren nichts von den nötigen Sünden christlicher Lehre, sagen Heiligenlegenden und andere Fabeln. Überdies, wo unsere Widersacher ihre Kerzen, Altartücher, und damit Gottesdienste anrichten, sind sie des Antichrists Gefinde.

Auch so ziehen sie an aus der Epistel Hebr. 5: „Ein jeglicher Hoherpriester, der aus den Menschen genommen wird, der wird gesetzt für die Menschen gegen Gott, auf daß er opfere Gaben und opfere [Opfer] für die Sünde.“ Da schließen sie: Nachdem [da] im Neuen Testament Bischöfe sind und Priester, so folgt, daß auch ein Opfer müsse sein für die Sünden. Dieses nun möchte am meisten die Ungelehrten und Unerfahrenen bewegen, sonderlich wenn sie ansehen das herrliche Gepränge im Tempel und Kirchen, item die Kleidung Aarons; da im Alten Testament auch viel Schmutz von Gold, Silber und Purpur gewesen, denken sie, es müsse im Neuen Testament gleich also ein Gottesdienst, solche Jeremonien und Opfer sein, da man für anderer Leute Sünden opfere wie im Alten Testament. Denn der ganze Mißbrauch der Messen und päpstlichen Gottesdienste ist nirgend herge-

Und wiewohl unsere Sache sonderlich wohl gegründet ist in der Epistel zu den Hebräern, so ziehen doch die Widersacher aus derselben Epistel etliche Sprüche verstimelt an, als eben an dem obangezeigten Ort, da der Text sagt: „Ein jeglicher Hoherpriester usw. wird gesetzt zu opfern“ usw. Der Text führt das bald auf Christum. Die Worte, so vorhergehen, reden vom levitischen Priesterthum und sagen, daß levitisches Priesterthum sei eine Deutung des Priesterthums Christi. Denn die levitischen Opfer für die Sünden, die verdienten nicht Vergebung der Sünden vor Gott, sondern waren allein ein Bild Christi, welcher war das rechte, einige, wahre Opfer für die Sünden, wie ich oben gesagt habe. Und gar nahe die ganze Epistel zu den Hebräern handelt das mehrere Teil davon, daß das levitische Priesterthum und die Opfer im Gesetz dazu nicht eingesetzt [sind], daß man Vergebung der Sünden oder Versöhnung vor Gott damit verdienen solle, sondern allein zu bedeuten das künftige rechte Opfer, Christum. Denn die Patriarchen und Heiligen im Alten Testament sind auch gerecht geworden und Gott versöhnt durch den Glauben an die Verheißung von dem künftigen Christo, durch welchen Heil und Gnade verhessen ward, gleichwie wir im Neuen Testament durch den Glauben an Christum, der da offenbart ist, Gnade erlangen. Denn alle Gläubigen von Anbeginn haben geglaubt, daß ein Opfer und Bezahlung für die Sünde geschehen würde, nämlich Christus, welcher künftiglich und verhessen war, wie Jesaja am 53. sagt: „Wenn er seine Seele wird geben ein Schuldopfer für die Sünde“ usw.

So nun im Alten Testament durch die Opfer niemand hat erlangt Vergebung der Sünden (denn allein sie haben bedeutet das einige Opfer Christi), so folgt, daß allein ein einiges Opfer ist, nämlich Christus, welcher für aller Welt Sünde bezahlt und genuggetan hat. Derhalben ist im are becoming, but they are not the adornment that properly belongs to the Church. But if the adversaries make worship consist in such matters, and not in the preaching of the Gospel, in faith, and the conflicts of faith, they are to be numbered among those whom Daniel describes as worshipping their God with gold and silver, Dan. 11, 38.

They quote also from the Epistle to the Hebrews, 5, 1: Every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. Hence they conclude that, since in the New Testament there are high priests and priests, it follows that there is also a sacrifice for sins. This passage particularly makes an impression on the unlearned, especially when the pomp of the priesthood [the garments of Aaron, since in the Old Testament there were many ornaments of gold, silver, and purple] and the sacrifices of the Old Testament are spread before the eyes. This resemblance deceives the ignorant, so that they judge that, according to the same manner, a ceremonial sacrifice ought to exist among us, which should be applied on behalf of the sins of others, just as in the Old Testament. Neither is the service of the masses and the rest of the polity of the Pope anything else than false zeal in behalf of the misunderstood Levitical polity. [They have not understood that the New Testament is occupied with other matters, and that, if such ceremonies are used for the training of the young, a limit must be fixed for them.]

And although our belief has its chief testimonies in the Epistle to the Hebrews, nevertheless the adversaries distort against us mutilated passages from this Epistle, as in this very passage, where it is said that every high priest is ordained to offer sacrifices for sins. Scripture itself immediately adds that Christ is High Priest, Heb. 5, 5. 6. 10. The preceding words speak of the Levitical priesthood, and signify that the Levitical priesthood was an image of the priesthood of Christ. For the Levitical sacrifices for sins did not merit the remission of sins before God; they were only an image of the sacrifice of Christ, which was to be the one propitiatory sacrifice, as we have said above. Therefore the Epistle is occupied to a great extent with the topic that the ancient priesthood and the ancient sacrifices were instituted not for the purpose of meriting the remission of sins before God or reconciliation, but only to signify the future sacrifice of Christ alone. For in the Old Testament it was necessary for saints to be justified by faith derived from the promise of the remission of sins that was to be granted for Christ's sake, just as saints are also justified in the New Testament. From the beginning of the world it was necessary for all saints to believe that Christ would be the promised offering and satisfaction for sins, as Isaiah teaches, 53, 10: When Thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin.

Since, therefore, in the Old Testament, sacrifices did not merit reconciliation, unless by a figure (for they merited civil reconciliation), but signified the coming sacrifice, it follows that Christ is the only sacrifice applied on behalf of the sins of others. There-catis. Nullum igitur reliquum est in novo testamento sacrificium applicandum pro peccatis aliorum praeter unum Christi sacrificium in cruce.

57] Tota via errant, qui fingunt sacrificia Levitica coram Deo meruisse remissionem peccatorum, et hoc exemplo sacrificia applicanda pro aliis in novo testamento requirunt praeter mortem Christi. Haec imaginatio simpliciter obruit meritum passionis Christi et iustitiam fidei et corrumpit veteris et novi testamenti doctrinam et pro Christo alios mediatores et propitiatores nobis efficit pontifices et sacrificulos, qui quotidie vendunt operam suam in templis.

58] Quare si quis ita argumentatur, oportere in novo testamento pontificem esse, qui pro peccatis offerat, tantum de Christo concedendum est. Et hanc solutionem confirmat tota epistola ad Ebraeos. Et id prorsus esset alios mediatores constituere praeter [R. 265] Christum, si aliam satisfactionem applicandam pro peccatis aliorum et reconciliantem Deum praeter mortem Christi requireremus. 59] Deinde quia sacerdotium novi testamenti est ministerium Spiritus, ut docet Paulus 2 Cor. 3, 6, ideo unicum habet sacrificium Christi satisfactorium et applicatum pro peccatis aliorum. Ceterum nulla habet sacrificia similia Leviticis, quae ex opere operato applicari pro aliis possint, sed exhibet aliis evangelium et sacramenta, ut per haec concipiant fidem et Spiritum Sanctum, et mortificentur et vivificentur, quia ministerium Spiritus pugnat cum applicatione operis operati. Est enim ministerium Spiritus, per quod Spiritus Sanctus efficax est in cordibus, quare habet tale ministerium, quod ita prodest aliis, quum in eis efficax est, quum regenerat et vivificat eos. Id non fit applicatione alieni operis pro aliis ex

64] Et ex his erroribus infiniti alii nati sunt, quantum missae valeant applicatae simul pro multis, quantum valeant singulae

Neuen Testament fürder auch kein ander Opfer zu machen, dadurch die Sünden bezahlt werden, denn allein der einige Tod Christi, so am Kreuz einmal geopfert ist.

Darum, wenn sie so sagen, es müsse im Neuen Testament ein Priester sein, der da opfert, so ist das allein von Christo nachzugeben und zu verstehen. Und darauf bringt und [damit] stimmt stark die ganze Epistel zu den Hebräern. Und das hieße auch gar andere Mittler darstellen und einbringen neben Christo, wenn wir eine andere Satisfaction für die Sünden zuließen und Versöhnung denn den Tod Christi. Und diemeil das Priestertum des Neuen Testaments ein Amt ist, dadurch der Heilige Geist wirkt, kann kein Opfer sein, das ex opere operato andern helfe. Denn wo nicht eigener Glaube und Leben durch den Heiligen Geist gewirkt wird, kann mich eines andern opus operatum nicht fromm und selig machen. Darum kann die Messe nicht für andere gelten: das ist ja klar und gewiß.

Wir haben nun Ursache angezeigt, warum die Messe niemand vor Gott gerecht mache ex opere operato, warum auch Messen für andere nicht können gehalten werden; denn beides ist stracks wider den Glauben und die Lehre von Christo. Denn es ist unmöglich, daß Sünden sollten vergeben werden, oder daß die Schreden des Todes, der Hölle sollten durch eines andern Werk überwunden werden denn allein durch den Glauben an Christum, wie der Spruch lautet Röm. 5: „So wir gerecht sind worden, so haben wir Frieden mit Gott“ usw.

Dazu haben wir angezeigt, daß die Sprüche der Schrift, welche man wider uns anzieht, auch nichts beweisen für die heidnische und antichristliche Lehre der Widersacher vom opere operato. Und das können nun alle gottesfürchtigen, ehrbaren Leute in aller Welt, in allen Nationen merken und urteilen. Darum ist zu verwerfen der Irrtum Thomä, der da schreibt, daß der Leib des Herrn einmal am Kreuz geopfert sei für die Erbsünde und werde täglich für die täglichen Sünden geopfert auf dem Altar, daß also die Kirche habe ein Opfer, täglich Gott zu versöhnen. Auch sind die andern Irrtümer zu verwerfen, daß die Messe zugute komme ex opere operato dem, der sie hält. Item, wenn man Messe hält für andere, die nicht obicem setzen, wenn sie gleich gottlos sind, daß dieselben Vergebung der Sünden und Erlösung von Pein und Schuld erlangen. Das alles sind eitel Irrtümer und falsch und von eitel ungelehrten, heillosen Mönchen erdichtet, die doch vom Evangelio, von Christo und dem Glauben gar nichts wissen.

fore, in the New Testament no sacrifice is left to be applied for the sins of others, except the one sacrifice of Christ upon the cross.

They altogether err who imagine that Levitical sacrifices merited the remission of sins before God, and, by this example in addition to the death of Christ, require in the New Testament sacrifices that are to be applied on behalf of others. This imagination absolutely destroys the merit of Christ's passion and the righteousness of faith, and corrupts the doctrine of the Old and New Testaments, and instead of Christ makes for us other mediators and propitiators out of the priests and sacrificers, who daily sell their work in the churches.

Therefore, if any one would thus infer that in the New Testament a priest is needed to make offering for sins, this must be conceded only of Christ. And the entire Epistle to the Hebrews confirms this explanation. And if, in addition to the death of Christ, we were to seek for any other satisfaction to be applied for the sins of others and to reconcile God, this would be nothing more than to make other mediators in addition to Christ. Again, as the priesthood of the New Testament is the ministry of the Spirit, as Paul teaches 2 Cor. 3, 6, it, accordingly, has but the one sacrifice of Christ, which is satisfactory and applied for the sins of others. Besides, it has no sacrifices like the Levitical, which could be applied ex opere operato on behalf of others; but it tenders to others the Gospel and the Sacraments, that by means of these they may conceive faith and the Holy Ghost, and be mortified and quickened, because the ministry of the Spirit conflicts with the application of an opus operatum. [For, unless there is personal faith and a life wrought by the Holy Spirit, the opus operatum of another cannot render me godly nor save me.] For the ministry of the Spirit is that through which the Holy Ghost is efficacious in hearts; and therefore this ministry is profitable to others, when it is efficacious in them, and regenerates and quickens them. This does not occur by the application ex opere operato of the work of another on behalf of others.

We have shown the reason why the Mass does not justify ex opere operato, and why, when applied on behalf of others, it does not merit remission, because both conflict with the righteousness of faith. For it is impossible that remission of sins should occur, and the terrors of death and sin be overcome by any work or anything, except by faith in Christ, according to Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace.

In addition, we have shown that the Scriptures, which are cited against us, in no way favor the godless opinion of the adversaries concerning the opus operatum. All good men among all nations can judge this. Therefore the error of Thomas is to be rejected, who wrote: That the body of the Lord, once offered on the cross for original debt, is continually offered for daily offenses on the altar, in order that, in this, the Church might have a service whereby to reconcile God to herself.

The other common errors are also to be rejected, as, that the Mass ex opere operato confers grace upon one employing it; likewise, that when applied for others, even for wicked persons, provided they do not interpose an obstacle, it merits for them the remission of sins, of guilt and punishment. All these things are false and godless, and lately invented by unlearned monks, and obscure the glory of Christ's passion and the righteousness of faith.

And from these errors infinite others sprang, as, that the masses avail when applied for many, just as much as when applied individually. The sophists have particular degrees of merit, just as money-changers have pro singulis. Sophistae habent descriptos gradus meritorum, sicut argentarii gradus ponderum in auro aut argento. Deinde vendunt missam tamquam pretium ad impetrandum, quod quisque expetit, mercatoribus, ut felix sit negotiatio, venatoribus, ut felix sit venatio. Et alia infinita. Postremo transferunt eam et ad mortuos, liberant animas applicatione sacramenti a poenis purgatorii, quum sine fide nec vivis missa prosit. Neque 65] ex Scripturis adversarii afferre vel unam syllabam possunt ad defensionem istarum fabularum, quas in ecclesia magna auctoritate docent, neque ecclesiae veteris, neque patrum testimonia habent.

Quid Patres de Sacrificio Senserint.

66] Et quoniam loca Scripturae, quae contra nos citantur, explicavimus, de patribus etiam respondendum est. Non ignoramus missam a patribus appellari sacrificium, sed hi non hoc volunt missam ex opere operato conferre gratiam, et applicatam pro aliis mereri eis remissionem peccatorum, culpa et poenae. Ubi leguntur haec portenta verborum apud patres? Sed aperte testantur se de gratiarum actione loqui. Ideoque vocant 67] εὐχαριστίαν. Diximus autem supra sacrificium εὐχαριστικόν non mereri reconciliationem, sed fieri a reconciliatis, sicut afflictiones non merentur reconciliationem, sed tunc sunt sacrificia εὐχαριστικά, quando reconciliati sustinent eas.

der Sünden erlangen, sondern geschehen von denjenigen, die schon versöhnt sind durch den Glauben an Christum. Gleichwie Kreuz und Trübsal nicht Versöhnung gegen Gott verdienen, sondern sind Dankopfer, wenn diejenigen, so versöhnt sind, solche Trübsale tragen und leiden.

Et hoc responsum in genere ad patrum dicta satis tuetur nos contra adversarios. Certum est enim illa signa de merito operis operati nusquam exstare apud patres. [R. 267 Sed ut tota causa magis perspicui possit, dicemus et nos de usu sacramenti ea, quae certum est consentanea esse patribus et Scripturae.

De Usu Sacramenti et de Sacrificio.

68] Quidam belli homines fingunt coenam Domini institutam esse propter duas causas. Primum, ut sit nota et testimonium professionis, sicut certa forma cuculli est signum certae professionis. Deinde cogitant praecipue talem notam Christo placuisse, videlicet convivium, ut significaret mutuam inter Christianos coniunctionem atque amicitiam, quia symposia sunt signa foederum et amicitiae. Sed haec opinio est civilis, nec ostendit praecipuum usum rerum a Deo traditarum, tantum de caritate exercenda loquitur, für viele gehalten wird, auch [so] kräftig sei, als wenn eine jede Person eine eigene Messe für sich halten läßt. Aus dieser Disputation sind die Messen gewachsen und je höher verkauft worden. Weiter, so halten sie noch Messe für die Toten, zu erlösen die Seelen aus dem Festfeuer (welches ein schändlicher Jahrmarkt ist), so doch das Sakrament weder den Lebendigen noch den Toten nütze ist ohne den Glauben. Und die Widersacher können aus der Schrift nicht einen Buchstaben, nicht eine Silbe vorbringen zur Bestätigung der Träume und Fabeln, welche sie doch ohne alle Scheu und Scham mit großem Geschrei in großem Ansehen predigen, so sie doch darüber weder der Kirche noch der Väter Zeugnis haben. Darum sind es heillosse, verblendete Leute, welche die öffentliche Wahrheit Gottes wissentlich verachten und mit Füßen treten.

Nachdem wir die Sprüche, so die Widersacher aus der Schrift angezogen, recht ausgelegt und beantwortet haben, so müssen wir auch auf der alten Väter Sprüche, welche sie anziehen, antworten. Wir wissen wohl, daß die Väter die Messe ein Opfer nennen; aber der Väter Meinung ist nicht, daß man durch Messhalten ex opere operato Vergebung der Sünden erlange, oder daß man Messe halten solle für Lebendige und Tote, ihnen Vergebung der Sünden, Ablass von Pein und Schuld zu erlangen. Denn sie werden nimmermehr beweisen, daß von solchem Greuel wider alle Schrift die Väter etwas gelehrt, sondern der Väter Bücher reden von Dankagung und Dankopfer, darum nennen sie die Messe eucharistiam. Wir haben aber hier oben angezeigt, daß die Dankopfer uns nicht Vergebung

Und diese kurzen Worte sind Antwort genug wider die Sprüche der Väter, schügen uns auch genug wider unsere Widersacher. Denn es ist gewiß, daß die Träume vom opere operato nirgend in der Väter Büchern oder Schriften gefunden werden. Aber damit diese ganze Sache und Handel von der Messe desto klarer zu verstehen sei, so wollen wir auch vom rechten Gebrauch des Sacraments reden, und also, wie es in der Heiligen Schrift und in allen Schriften der Väter auch zu finden.

Etliche vormüßige Gelehrte erdichten ihnen selbst, das Abendmahl des Herrn sei um zweierlei Ursache willen eingesetzt. Erstlich, daß es sei eine Losung und Zeichen eines Ordens, wie die Mönchsklassen ihrer Orden Unterschiede und Zeichen sind. Danach gedenken sie, Christus habe sonderlich Wohlgefallen, dieselbe Losung durch ein Essen oder Abendmahl zu geben oder anzurichten, daß er anzeigte die Freundschaft brüderlicher Verwandtnis, so unter den Christen sein soll: denn miteinander essen und trinken ist ein Zeichen der Freundschaft. Aber das ist ein menschlicher Ge-grades of weight for gold or silver. Besides, they sell the Mass, as a price for obtaining what each one seeks: to merchants, that business may be prosperous; to hunters, that hunting may be successful; and infinite other things. Lastly, they apply it also to the dead; by the application of the Sacrament they liberate souls from the pains of purgatory; although without faith the Mass is of service not even to the living. Neither are the adversaries able to produce even one syllable from the Scriptures in defense of these fables which they teach with great authority in the Church; neither do they have the testimonies of the ancient Church nor of the Fathers. [Therefore they are impious and blind people who knowingly despise and trample under foot the plain truth of God.]

What the Fathers Thought concerning Sacrifice.

And since we have explained the passages of Scripture which are cited against us, we must reply also concerning the Fathers. We are not ignorant that the Mass is called by the Fathers a sacrifice; but they do not mean that the Mass confers grace ex opere operato, and that, when applied on behalf of others, it merits for them the remission of sins, of guilt and punishment. Where are such monstrous stories to be found in the Fathers? But they openly testify that they are speaking of thanksgiving. Accordingly they call it a eucharist. We have said above, however, that a eucharistic sacrifice does not merit reconciliation, but is made by those who have been reconciled, just as afflictions do not merit reconciliation, but are eucharistic sacrifices when those who have been reconciled endure them.

And this reply, in general, to the sayings of the Fathers defends us sufficiently against the adversaries. For it is certain that these figments concerning the merit of the opus operatum are found nowhere in the Fathers. But in order that the whole case may be the better understood, we also shall state those things concerning the use of the Sacrament which actually harmonize with the Fathers and Scripture.

Of the Use of the Sacrament, and of Sacrifice.

Some clever men imagine that the Lord's Supper was instituted for two reasons. First, that it might be a mark and testimony of profession, just as a particular shape of hood is the sign of a particular profession. Then they think that such a mark was especially pleasing to Christ, namely, a feast to signify mutual union and friendship among Christians, because banquets are signs of covenant and friendship. But this is a secular view;

quam homines profani et civiles utcumque intelligunt; de fide non loquitur, quae, quid sit, pauci intelligunt.

69] Sacramenta sunt signa voluntatis Dei erga nos, non tantum signa sunt hominum inter sese, et recte definiunt sacramenta in novo testamento esse signa gratiae. Et quia in sacramento duo sunt, signum et verbum: verbum in novo testamento est promissio gratiae addita. Promissio novi testamenti est promissio remissionis peccatorum, sicut textus hic dicit, Luc. 22, 19: Hoc est corpus meum, quod pro vobis datur; hic est calix novi testamenti cum sanguine meo, qui pro multis effundetur in remissionem peccatorum. 70] Verbum igitur offert remissionem peccatorum. Et ceremonia est quasi pictura verbi seu sigillum, ut Paulus Rom. 4, 11 vocat, ostendens promissionem. Ergo sicut promissio inutilis est, nisi fide accipiatur, ita inutilis est ceremonia, nisi fides accedat, quae vere statuatur hic offerri remissionem peccatorum. Et haec fides erigit contritas [R. 268 mentes. Et sicut verbum ad hanc fidem excitandam traditum est, ita sacramentum institutum est, ut illa species incurrens in oculos moveat corda ad credendum. Per haec enim, videlicet per verbum et sacramentum, operatur Spiritus Sanctus.

also ist auch das äußerliche Zeichen daneben gegeben und vor die Augen gestellt, daß es die Herzen zu glauben bewege und den Glauben stärke. Denn durch die zwei, durchs Wort und äußerliche Zeichen, wirkt der Heilige Geist.

71] Et talis usus sacramenti, quum fides vivificat perterrefacta corda, cultus est novi testamenti, quia novum testamentum habet motus spirituales, mortificationem et vivificationem. Et ad hunc usum instituit Christus, quum iubet facere in sui commemorationem. 72] Nam meminisse Christi non est otiosa spectaculi celebratio aut exempli causa instituta, sicut in tragoediis celebratur memoria Herculis aut Ulyssis; sed est meminisse beneficia Christi, eaque fide accipere, ut per ea vivificemur. Ideo Psalmus ait, III, 4. 5: Memoriam fecit mirabilium suorum, misericors et miserator Dominus; escam dedit timentibus se. Significat enim voluntatem et misericordiam Dei agnoscendam esse in illa 73] ceremonia. Illa autem fides, quae agnoscit misericordiam, vivificat. Et hic principalis usus est sacramenti, in quo apparet, qui sint idonei ad sacramentum, videlicet perterrefactae conscientiae, et quomodo uti debeant.

erschrodnen Gewissen, welche ihre Sünden fühlen, vor Gottes Zorn und Urtheil erschrecken und sich nach Trost sehnen. Darum sagt der Psalm: „Er hat ein Gedächtnis gemacht seiner Wunder, der gnädige und barmherzige Herr; er hat Speise gegeben denen, so ihn fürchten.“ Und der Glaube, der da erkennt solche Barmherzigkeit, der macht lebendig, und das ist der rechte Gebrauch des Sacraments.

74] Accedit et sacrificium. Sunt enim unius rei plures fines. Postquam conscientia fide erecta sensit, ex qualibus terroribus liberetur, tum vero serio agit gratias pro beneficio et passione Christi, et utitur ipsa ceremonia ad laudem Dei, ut hac obedientia gratitudidanke und zeigt nicht den rechten Gebrauch des Sacraments an. Da wird allein von Liebe und Freundschaft geredet, welches weltliche Leute auch verstehen. Da ist aber vom Glauben nichts geredet oder von der Verheißung Gottes, welches das Größte ist; welcher Glaube ein viel höher, größer Ding ist, denn man gedenkt.

Die Sacramente aber sind Zeichen des göttlichen Willens gegen uns und sind nicht allein Redungen oder Zeichen, dabei sich die Leute kennen; und diejenigen sagen recht, die da sagen, die Sacramente sind signa gratiae, das ist, die Sacramente sind Zeichen der Gnade. Und deswegen im Sacrament zwei Dinge sind, das äußerliche Zeichen und das Wort, so ist im Neuen Testament das Wort die Verheißung der Gnade, welche dem Zeichen angeheftet ist. Und dieselbe Verheißung im Neuen Testament ist eine Verheißung der Vergebung der Sünden, wie der Text sagt: „Das ist mein Leib, der für euch gegeben wird; das ist der Kelch des Neuen Testaments in meinem Blut, welches vergossen wird für viele zur Vergebung der Sünden.“ Das Wort bietet uns an Vergebung der Sünden. Das äußerliche Zeichen ist wie ein Siegel und Bekräftigung der Worte und Verheißung, wie es Paulus auch nennt. Darum, wie die Verheißung vergeblich ist, wenn sie nicht durch den Glauben gefaßt wird, also ist auch die Ceremonia oder äußerliche Zeichen nicht nütze, es sei denn der Glaube da, welcher wahrhaftig dafürhält, daß uns Vergebung der Sünden widerfährt. Und derselbe Glaube tröstet die erschrodnen Gewissen. Und wie Gott die Verheißung gibt, solchen Glauben zu erwecken, und vor die Augen gestellt, daß es die Herzen zu

Und dies ist der rechte Gebrauch des heiligen Sacraments, wenn durch den Glauben an die göttliche Verheißung die erschrodnen Gewissen werden wieder aufgerichtet. Und das ist der rechte Gottesdienst im Neuen Testament; denn im Neuen Testament geht der höchste Gottesdienst inwendig im Herzen zu, daß wir nach dem alten Adam getödtet werden und durch den Heiligen Geist neu geboren werden. Und dazu hat auch Christus das Sacrament eingesetzt, da er sagt: „Solches tut zu meinem Gedächtnis!“ Denn solches zu Christi Gedächtnis tun, ist nicht ein solch Ding, das allein mit Gebärd und Werken zugeht, allein zu einer Erinnerung und zu einem Exempel, wie man in Historien Alexandri und dergleichen gedenkt ujm., sondern heißt da Christum recht erkennen, Christi Wohlthat suchen und begehren. Der Glaube nun, der da erkennt die überschwengliche Gnade Gottes, der macht lebendig. Und das ist der vornehmste Gebrauch des Sacraments, daran wohl zu merken, welche recht geschickt seien zu dem Sacrament, nämlich die erschrodnen Gewissen, welche ihre Sünden fühlen, vor Gottes Zorn und Urtheil erschrecken und sich nach Trost sehnen. Darum sagt der Psalm: „Er hat ein Gedächtnis gemacht seiner Wunder, der gnädige und barmherzige Herr; er hat Speise gegeben denen, so ihn fürchten.“ Und der Glaube, der da erkennt solche Barmherzigkeit, der macht lebendig, und das ist der rechte Gebrauch des Sacraments.

Da ist denn auch und findet sich das Dankopfer oder Dankagung. Denn wenn das Herz und Gewissen empfindet, aus was großer Noth, Angst und Schrecken es erlöst ist, so dankt es aus, Herzensgrunde für so großen, unsäglichen Schatz und braucht auch der Ceremonien oder äußerlichen neither does it show the chief use of the things delivered by God; it speaks only of the exercise of love, which men, however profane and worldly, understand; it does not speak of faith, the nature of which few understand.

The Sacraments are signs of God's will toward us, and not merely signs of men among each other; and they are right in defining that Sacraments in the New Testament are signs of grace. And because in a sacrament there are two things, a sign and the Word, the Word, in the New Testament, is the promise of grace added. The promise of the New Testament is the promise of the remission of sins, as the text, Luke 22, 19, says: This is My body, which is given for you. This cup is the New Testament in My blood, which is shed for many for the remission of sins. Therefore the Word offers the remission of sins. And a ceremony is, as it were, a picture or seal, as Paul, Rom. 4, 11, calls it, of the Word, making known the promise. Therefore, just as the promise is useless unless it is received by faith, so a ceremony is useless unless such faith is added as is truly confident that the remission of sins is here offered. And this faith encourages contrite minds. And just as the Word has been given in order to excite this faith, so the Sacrament has been instituted in order that the outward appearance meeting the eyes might move the heart to believe [and strengthen faith]. For through these, namely, through Word and Sacrament, the Holy Ghost works.

And such use of the Sacrament, in which faith quickens terrified hearts, is a service of the New Testament, because the New Testament requires spiritual dispositions, mortification and quickening. [For according to the New Testament the highest service of God is rendered inwardly in the heart.] And for this use Christ instituted it, since He commanded them thus to do in remembrance of Him. For to remember Christ is not the idle celebration of a show [not something that is accomplished only by some gestures and actions], or one instituted for the sake of example, as the memory of Hercules or Ulysses is celebrated in tragedies, but it is to remember the benefits of Christ and receive them by faith, so as to be quickened by them. Psalm 111, 4. 5 accordingly says: He hath made His wonderful works to be remembered: the Lord is gracious and full of compassion. He hath given meat unto them that fear Him. For it signifies that the will and mercy of God should be discerned in the ceremony. But that faith which apprehends mercy quickens. And this is the principal use of the Sacrament, in which it is apparent who are fit for the Sacrament, namely, terrified consciences, and how they ought to use it.

The sacrifice [thank-offering or thanksgiving] also is added. For there are several ends for one object. After conscience encouraged by faith has perceived from what terrors it is freed, then indeed it fervently gives thanks for the benefit and passion of Christ, and uses the ceremony itself to the nem ostendat, et testatur se magnificare dona Dei. Ita fit ceremonia sacrificium laudis.

75] Ac patres quidem de duplici effectu loquuntur, de consolatione conscientiarum et de gratiarum actione seu laude. Horum effectuum prior ad sacramenti rationem pertinet; posterior pertinet ad sacrificium. De consolatione ait Ambrosius: Accedite ad eum et absolvimini, quia est remissio peccatorum. Qui sit iste, quaeritis? Audite ipsum dicentem, Ioh. 6, 35: Ego sum panis vitae; [R. 269] qui venit ad me, non esuriet, et qui credit in me, non sitiet unquam. Hic testatur in sacramento offerri remissionem peccatorum, testatur et fide accipi debere. Infinita testimonia leguntur in hanc sententiam apud patres, quae omnia detorquent adversarii ad opus operatum et applicandum pro aliis, quum patres aperte requirant fidem et de propria cuiusque consolatione loquantur, non de applicatione.

76] Praeter haec leguntur et sententiae de gratiarum actione, qualis illa est suavissime dicta a Cypriano de pie communicantibus: Pietas, inquit, inter data et condonata se dividens, gratias agit tam uberis beneficiis largitori, id est, pietas intuetur data et condonata, hoc est, confert inter se magnitudinem beneficiorum Dei et magnitudinem nostrorum malorum, mortis et peccati, et agit gratias etc. Et hinc exstitit appellatio εὐχαριστίας in ecclesia. Neque vero ceremonia ipsa est gratiarum actio ex opere operato applicanda pro aliis, ut mereatur eis remissionem peccatorum etc., ut liberet animas defunctorum. Haec pugnant cum iustitia fidei, quasi ceremonia sine fide prosit aut facienti, aut aliis.

Zeichen zu Gottes Lobe und erzeugt sich, daß es solche Gottesgnade mit Dankbarkeit annehme, groß und hoch achte. Also wird die Messe ein Dankopfer oder Opfer des Lobes.

Und also reden die Väter davon von zweierlei Effect oder Nutzen des Sacraments: erstlich, daß dadurch die Gewissen getröstet werden; zum andern, daß Gott Lob und Dank gesagt werde. Das erste gehört eigentlich zum rechten Gebrauch des Sacraments, das andere zu dem Opfer. Vom Trost sagt Ambrosius: „Geht zu ihm, das ist, zu Christo, und empfangt Gnade usw.; denn er ist die Vergebung der Sünden. Fragt ihr aber, wer er sei? Hört ihn selbst reden: „Ich bin das Brot des Lebens; wer zu mir kommt, den wird nicht hungern, und wer an mich glaubet, den wird nicht dürsten.“ Da zeigt er an, daß mit dem Sacrament angeboten wird Vergebung der Sünden. Er sagt auch, man soll solches mit dem Glauben fassen. Man findet der Sprüche unzählige in der Väter Büchern, welche die Widersacher alle auf das opus operatum und auf das Messehalten, so für andere geschieht, deuten, so doch die Väter vom Glauben an die Verheißung Gottes und von dem Trost, den die Gewissen empfangen, reden, und de applicatione gar nichts sagen.

Darüber findet man Sprüche in den Vätern von Dankagung, wie denn Cyprianus fast lieblich redet vom christlichen Communizierten. „Ein christlich Herz“, sagt er, „teilt seinen Dank auf einen Teil für den geschenkten Schatz, aufs andere Teil für die vergebenen Sünden und dankt für so reiche Gnade.“ Das ist, ein christlich Herz, das sieht an, was ihm geschenkt ist in Christo und was ihm auch für große Schuld aus Gnaden erlassen ist; hält gegeneinander unsern Jammer und die große Barmherzigkeit Gottes und dankt Gott usw. Und daher ist es Eucharistia genannt in der Kirche. Darum ist die Messe nicht eine solche Dankagung, die man ex opere operato für andere tun oder halten sollte, ihnen Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen. Denn solches wäre stracks wider den Glauben, gleich als [ob] die Messe oder die äußerliche Ceremonie ohne den Glauben jemand fromm und selig machte.

De Vocabulis Missae.

78] Adversarii revocant nos etiam ad grammaticam, sumunt argumenta ex appellationibus missae, quae non habent opus longa disputatione. Non enim sequitur missam, etiamsi vocatur sacrificium, opus esse ex opere operato gratiam conferens, aut applicatum pro aliis mereri eis 79] remissionem peccatorum etc. Λειτουργία, inquiunt, significat sacrificium, et Graeci missam appellant liturgiā. Cur hic omittunt appellationem veterem synaxis, quae ostendit missam 80] olim fuisse multorum communicationem? Sed dicamus de liturgia. Ea vox non significat proprie sacrificium, sed potius publicum ministerium, et apte quadrat ad nostram [R. 270] sententiam, quod videlicet unus minister consecrans reliquo populo exhibet corpus et sanguinem Domini, sicut unus minister docens exhibet evangelium populo, sicut ait Paulus 1 Cor. 4, 1: Sic vos existimet homo tamquam ministros Christi dispensatores sacramentorum Dei, hoc est, evangelii et sacramentorum. Et 2 Cor. 5, 20: Propter causam Christi legatione fungimur tamquam Deo per nos adhortante, rogamus Christi causa: Reconciliamini etc. Ita apte quadrat nomen λειτουργία ad ministerium. Est enim vetus verbum, usurpatum in publicis ministeriis civilibus, ac significat Graecis onera publica, sicut tributum, sumptum instruendae classis aut similia, ut testatur oratio Demosthenis πρὸς Λεπτύν, quae tota consumitur in disputatione de publicis muneribus et immunitatibus: Φῶσι δὲ ἀναξίους τινὰς ἀνθρώπων εὐχομένους ἀρέλαιαν ἐκδεδυνέναι τὰς λειτουργίας, id est: Dicit indignos quosdam homines inveniunt immunitate detrectare publica onera. Et sic Romanis temporibus locuti sunt, ut ostendit rescriptum Pertinacis ff. De iure immunitatis, l. Semper: El xai μὴ πασῶν λειτουργιῶν τοὺς πατέρας ὁ τῶν τέκνων ἀριμὸς ἀνέται; etsi non liberat parentes omnibus oneribus publicis numerus natorum. Et commentarius Demosthenis scribit, λειτουργία genus esse tributorum, sumptus ludorum, sumptus instruendarum navium, curandi gymnasii et similium publicarum praise of God, in order by this obedience to show its gratitude; and testifies that it holds in high esteem the gifts of God. Thus the ceremony becomes a sacrifice of praise.

And the Fathers, indeed, speak of a two-fold effect, of the comfort of consciences, and of thanksgiving, or praise. The former of these effects pertains to the nature [the right use] of the Sacrament; the latter pertains to the sacrifice. Of consolation Ambrose says: Go to Him and be absolved, because He is the remission of sins. Do you ask who He is? Hear Him when He says, John 6, 35: I am the Bread of life; he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst. This passage testifies that in the Sacrament the remission of sins is offered; it also testifies that this ought to be received by faith. Infinite testimonies to this effect are found in the Fathers, all of which the adversaries pervert to the opus operatum, and to a work to be applied on behalf of others; although the Fathers clearly require faith, and speak of the consolation belonging to every one, and not of the application.

Besides these, expressions are also found concerning thanksgiving, such as that most beautifully said by Cyprian concerning those communing in a godly way. Piety, says he, in thanking the Bestower of such abundant blessing, makes a distinction between what has been given and what has been forgiven, i. e., piety regards both what has been given and what has been forgiven, i. e., it compares the greatness of God's blessings and the greatness of our evils, sin and death, with each other, and gives thanks, etc. And hence the term eucharist arose in the Church. Nor indeed is the ceremony itself, the giving of thanks ex opere operato, to be applied on behalf of others, in order to merit for them the remission of sins, etc., in order to liberate the souls of the dead. These things conflict with the righteousness of faith; as though, without faith, a ceremony can profit either the one performing it or others.

Of the Term Mass.

The adversaries also refer us to philology. From the names of the Mass they derive arguments which do not require a long discussion. For even though the Mass be called a sacrifice, it does not follow that it must confer grace ex opere operato, or, when applied on behalf of others, merit for them the remission of sins, etc. Λειτουργία, they say, signifies a sacrifice, and the Greeks call the Mass, liturgy. Why do they here omit the old appellation synaxis, which shows that the Mass was formerly the communion of many? But let us speak of the word liturgy. This word does not properly signify a sacrifice, but rather the public ministry, and agrees aptly with our belief, namely, that one minister who consecrates tenders the body and blood of the Lord to the rest of the people, just as one minister who preaches tenders the Gospel to the people, as Paul says, 1 Cor. 4, 1: Let

a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God, i. e., of the Gospel and the Sacraments. And 2 Cor. 5, 20: We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God. Thus the term λειτουργία agrees aptly with the ministry. For it is an old word, ordinarily employed in public civil administrations, and signified to the Greeks public burdens, as tribute, the expense of equipping a fleet, or similar things, as the oration of Demosthenes, For Leptines, testifies, all of which is occupied with the discussion of public duties and immunities: Φησὶ δὲ ἀναξίους τινὰς ἀνθρώπους εὐρομένους ἀτέλειαν ἐκδεδυνκέναι τὰς λειτουργίας, i. e.: He will say that some unworthy men, having found an immunity, have withdrawn from public burdens. And thus they spoke in the time of the Romans, as the rescript of Pertinax, De Iure Immunitatis, l. Semper, shows: Εἰ καὶ μὴ πασῶν λειτουργιῶν τοὺς πατέρας δὲ τῶν τέκνων ἀριθμὸς ἀνέεται, Even though the number of children does not liberate parents from all public burdens. And the Commentary upon Demosthenes states that λειτουργία is a kind of tribute, the expense of the games, the expense of equipping vessels, of attending to the gymnasia and similar public offices. And Paul in 2 Cor. 9, 12 employs it for a collection. The taking of the collection not only supplies those things which are wanting to the saints, but also causes them to give more thanks abundantly to God, etc. And in Phil. 2, 25 he calls Epaphroditus a λειτουργός, one who ministered to my wants, where assuredly a sacrificer cannot be understood. But there is no need of more testimonies, since 84] Illud est ridiculum, quod argumentantur altaris mentionem fieri in sacris literis, quare necesse sit missam esse sacrificium, quum parabola altaris per similitudinem a Paulo citetur. 85] Et missam fingunt dictam ab altari, מִזְבֵּחַ. Quorsum opus erat tam procul accersere etymologiam, nisi volebant ostentare scientiam Ebraicae linguae? Quorsum opus est procul quaerere etymologiam, quum exstet nomen missa Deut. 16, 10, ubi significat collationes seu munera populi, non oblationem sacerdotis? Debebant enim singuli venientes ad celebrationem 86] paschae aliquid munus quasi symbolam afferre. Hunc morem initio retinuerunt et Christiani. Convenientes afferebant panes, vinum et alia, ut testantur canones apostolorum. Inde sumebatur pars, quae consecraretur; reliquum distribuebatur pauperibus. Cum hoc more retinuerunt et nomen collationum missa. Et propter tales collationes apparet etiam alicubi missam dictam esse ἀγάπη, nisi quis mavult ita dictam esse propter commune convivium. 87] Sed omittamus has nugas. Ridiculum est enim adversarios in re tanta adeo leves coniecturas afferre. Nam etiamsi missa dicitur oblatio, quid facit vocabulum ad illa somnia de opere operato et applicatione, quam fingunt aliis mereri remissionem peccatorum? Et potest oblatio dici propterea, quia ibi offeruntur orationes, gratiarum actiones et totus ille cultus, sicut et εὐχαριστία dicitur. Verum neque ceremoniae neque orationes ex opere operato sine fide prosunt. Quamquam nos hic non de orationibus, sed proprie de coena Domini [R. 272] disputamus.

Von dem Wort Messe.

Hier ist zu sehen, welche grobe Esel unsere Widersacher sind. Sie sagen, das Wort missa komme von dem Wort misbeach, das ein Altar heißt; daraus soll folgen, daß die Messe ein Opfer sei; denn auf dem Altar opfert man. Item das Wort liturgia, wie die Gräßen [Griechen] die Messe nennen, soll auch ein Opfer heißen. Darauf wollen wir kurz antworten. Alle Welt sieht, daß aus diesen Gründen dieser heidnische und antichristliche Irrtum nicht folgen müsse, daß die Messe helfe ex opere operato sine bono motu utens. Darum sind sie Esel, daß sie in solcher grobthätigen Sache so ungereimt Ding vorbringen. Auch so wissen die Esel keine Grammatika. Denn missa und liturgia heißen nicht Opfer. Missa heißt hebräisch eine zusammengetragene Steuer. 5 Mos. 16, 10. Denn also ist etwa die Weise gewesen, daß die Christen Speise und Trank zugut den Armen in die Versammlung gebracht haben. Und solche Weise ist von [den] Juden hergekommen, die auf ihre Feste mußten solche Steuer bringen; die nannten sie missa. So heißt liturgia gräflisch [griechisch] eigentlich ein Amt, darin man der Gemeinde dient; das schickt sich wohl auf unsere Lehre, daß der Priester da als ein gemeiner Diener denjenigen, so kommunizieren wollen, dient und das heilige Sakrament reicht.

Esliche meinen, missa komme nicht aus dem Hebräischen, sondern sei als viel als remissio, Vergebung der Sünden. Denn so man kommuniziert hat, hat man gesprochen: Ite, missa est; „Zieht hin, ihr habt Vergebung der Sünden.“ Und daß dem also sei, ziehen sie an, daß man bei den Gräßen gesprochen hat: Λαὸς Ἀφθεῖς (λαὸς ἄφεσις); das ist auch so viel: Ihnen ist verziehen. Wo dem also, wäre dieses ein feiner Verstand; denn es soll allezeit bei dieser Zeremonie Vergebung der Sünden gepredigt und verkündigt werden. Doch ist diesem Handel wenig geholfen, daß Wort missa heiße, was es wolle.

88] Graecus canon etiam multa dicit de oblatione, sed palam ostendit se non loqui proprie de corpore et sanguine Domini, sed de toto cultu, de precibus et gratiarum actionibus. Sic enim ait: Καὶ ποιήσον ἡμᾶς ἀξίους γενέσθαι τοῦ προσφέρειν σοι δεήσεις καὶ ἱκεσίας καὶ θυνοίας ἀναμάρτους ὑπὲρ παντὸς λαοῦ. Nihil offendit recte intellectum. Orat enim nos dignos effici ad offerendas preces et supplicationes et hostias incruentas pro populo. Nam ipsas preces vocat hostias incruentas. Sicut et paulo post: Ἐνὶ προσφερόμεν σοι τὴν λογικὴν ταύτην καὶ ἀναίμακτον λατρείαν; offerimus, inquit, hunc rationalem et incruentum cultum. Inepte enim exponunt, qui hic rationalem hostiam malunt interpretari et transferunt ad ipsum corpus Christi, quum canon loquatur de toto cultu, et λογικὴ λατρεία a Paulo, Rom. 12, 1, dicta sit contra opus operatum, videlicet de cultu mentis, de timore, de fide, de invocatione, de gratiarum actione etc.

[De Missa pro Defunctis.]

89] Quod vero defendunt adversarii nostri applicationem ceremoniae pro liberandis animabus defunctorum, qua ex re quaeustum infinitum faciunt, nulla habent testimonia, nullo mandatum ex Scripturis. Neque vero est leve peccatum, tales cultus sine mandato Dei, sine exemplo Scripturae in ecclesia instituere, et coenam Domini institutam ad recordatio-

Von den Messen für die Toten.

Daß aber die Widersacher noch dies wollen vertheidigen, daß die Messe den Toten helfe, davon sie einen eigenen Jahrmarkt und sonderlich unfähliche Kreischerei gemacht, daß haben sie kein Zeugnis noch Befehl Gottes in der Schrift. Nun ist es je ein unfählicher, großer Greuel und nicht eine kleine Sünde, daß sie dürfen ohne Gottes Wort, ohne alle Schrift, einen Gottesdienst in der Kirche examples are everywhere obvious to those reading the Greek writers, in whom leitourgia is employed for public civil burdens or ministries. And on account of the diphthong, grammarians do not derive it from λεῖν, which signifies prayers, but from public goods, which they call λεῖτα, so that leitourgia means, I attend to, I administer public goods.

Ridiculous is their inference that, since mention is made in the Holy Scriptures of an altar, therefore the Mass must be a sacrifice; for the figure of an altar is referred to by Paul only by way of comparison. And they fabricate that the Mass has been so called from מזבח, an altar. What need is there of an etymology so far fetched, unless it be to show their knowledge of the Hebrew language? What need is there to seek the etymology from a distance, when the term Mass is found in Deut. 16, 10, where it signifies the collections or gifts of the people, not the offering of the priest? For individuals coming to the celebration of the Passover were obliged to bring some gift as a contribution. In the beginning the Christians also retained this custom. Coming together, they brought bread, wine, and other things, as the Canons of the Apostles testify. Thence a part was taken to be consecrated; the rest was distributed to the poor. With this custom they also retained Mass as the name of the contributions. And on account of such contributions it appears also that the Mass was elsewhere called ἀγάπη, unless one would prefer that it was so called on account of the common feast. But let us omit these trifles. For it is ridiculous that the adversaries should produce such trifling conjectures concerning a matter of such great importance. For although the Mass is called an offering, in what does the term favor the dreams concerning the opus operatum, and the application which, they imagine, merits for others the remission of sins? And it can be called an offering for the reason that prayers, thanksgivings, and the entire worship are there offered, as it is also called a eucharist. But neither ceremonies nor prayers profit ex opere operato, without faith. Although we are disputing here not concerning prayers, but particularly concerning the Lord's Supper.

[Here you can see what rude asses our adversaries are. They say that the term missa is derived from the term misbeach, which signifies an altar; hence we are to conclude that the Mass is a sacrifice; for sacrifices are offered on an altar. Again, the word liturgia, by which the Greeks call the Mass, is also to denote a sacrifice. This claim we shall briefly answer. All the world sees that from such reasons this heathenish and antichristian error does not follow necessarily, that the Mass benefits ex opere operato sine bono motu utentis. Therefore they are asses, because in such a highly important matter they bring forward such silly things. Nor do the asses know any grammar. For missa and liturgia do not mean sacrifice. Missa, in Hebrew, denotes a joint contribution. For this may have been a custom among Christians, that they brought meat and drink for the benefit of the poor to their assemblies. This custom was derived from the Jews, who had to bring such contributions on their festivals; these they called missa. Likewise, liturgia, in Greek, really denotes an office in which a person ministers to the congregation. This is well applied to our teaching, because with us the priest, as a common servant of those who wish to commune, ministers to them the holy Sacrament.

Some think that missa is not derived from the Hebrew, but signifies as much as remissio, the forgiveness of sin. For, the communion being ended, the announcement used to be made: Ite, missa est: Depart, you have forgiveness of sins. They cite, as proof that this is so, the fact that the Greeks used to say: Lais Aphasis (λαοὺς ἄφεσις), which also means that they had been pardoned. If this were so, it would be an excellent meaning; for in connection with this ceremony forgiveness of sins must always be preached and proclaimed. But the case before us is little aided, no matter what the meaning of the word missa is.]

The Greek canon says also many things concerning the offering, but it shows plainly that it is not speaking properly of the body and blood of the Lord, but of the whole service, of prayers and thanksgivings. For it says thus: Καὶ ποιήσον ἡμᾶς ἀξίους γενέσθαι τοῦ προσφέρειν σοι δεήσεις καὶ ἱκεσίας καὶ θυσίας ἀναιμάκτους ὑπὲρ παντός λαοῦ. When this is rightly understood, it gives no offense. For it prays that we be made worthy to offer prayers and supplications and bloodless sacrifices for the people. For he calls even prayers bloodless sacrifices. Just as also a little afterward: Ἐνι προσφερόμεν σοι τὴν λογικὴν ταύτην καὶ ἀναιμάκτον λατρείαν. We offer, he says, this reasonable and bloodless service. For they explain this inaptly who would rather interpret this of a reasonable sacrifice, and transfer it to the very body of Christ, although the canon speaks of the entire worship, and in opposition to the opus operatum Paul has spoken of λογικὴ λατρεία [reasonable service], namely, of the worship of the mind, of fear, of faith, of prayer, of thanksgiving, etc.

Of the Mass for the Dead.

Our adversaries have no testimonies and no command from Scripture for defending the application of the ceremony for liberating the souls of the dead, although from this they derive infinite revenue. Nor, indeed, is it a light sin to establish such services in the Church without the command of God and without the nem et praedicationem inter vivos transferre ad mortuos. Hoc est abuti nomine Dei contra secundum praeceptum.

Primum enim contumelia est evangelii sentire, quod ceremonia ex opere operato sine fide sit sacrificium reconcilians Deum et satisfaciens pro peccatis. Horribilis oratio est, tantundem tribuere operi sacerdotis quantum morti Christi. Deinde peccatum et mors non possunt vinci nisi fide in Christum. [R. 273 sicut Paulus docet Rom. 5, 1: Iustificati ex fide pacem habemus, quare non potest vinci poena purgatorii applicatione alieni operis.

rer, da Paulus von sagt, daß sie „schuldig seien am Leib und Blut des Herrn“, welche die Lehre von Christo, vom Glauben unterdrücken und mißbrauchen der Messe und des Abendmahls zu einem schändlichen, unerschämten öffentlichen Geiz, zu einem Jahrmarkt und Kreiskramerei [Eckentwirtschafft], und daß alles unter einem heuchlerischen Schein der Satisfaktion. Und eben um dieser großen, unsäglichsten Gotteslästerung willen werden die Bischöfe schwere Strafe von Gott erwarten müssen. Es wird einmal Gott das andere Gebot wahrlich wahr machen und einen großen, grimmigen Zorn über sie ausgießen. Darum haben wir uns und alle wohl vorzusehen, daß wir uns der Widersacher Mißbrauchs nicht theilhaftig machen.

anrichten und dürfen das Abendmahl des Herrn, welches Christus hat eingesetzt, das Wort zu predigen, dabei seines Todes zu gedenken, zu stärken den Glauben derjenigen, so die Zeremonie brauchen, unerschämt ziehen auf die Toten. Denn das heißt recht Gottes Namen mißbrauchen wider das andere Gebot.

Denn wirklich ist das die höchste Schmach und Lästerung des Evangelii und Christi, daß das schlechte Werk der Messe ex opere operato ein Opfer sei, das Gott versöhne und für die Sünden genuttue. Es ist eine recht schreckliche, häßliche Predigt und Lehre und ein großer, unsäglichster Greuel, daß das schlechte [bloße] getane Werk eines Priesters als viel gelten solle als der Tod Christi. So ist je gewiß, daß die Sünde und der Tod nicht können überwunden werden denn allein durch den Glauben an Christum, wie Paulus sagt Röm. 5. Darum so können die Messen den Toten in keinem Weg ex opere operato helfen.

Wir wollen hier nicht erzählen, wie schwache Gründe die Widersacher vom Fegfeuer haben; item, woher die Lehre von der Genuttuung und Satisfaktion erst aufgekomen; wie wir denn haben oben angezeigt, daß es eitel Träume und erdichteter Menschenstand ist. Allein das wollen wir ihnen sagen, daß gewiß ist, das Abendmahl gehöre eigentlich zur Vergebung der Schuld. Denn was Trost hätten wir, so uns da sollte Vergebung angeboten werden, und sollte doch nicht Vergebung der Schuld sein? So nun die Zeremonia Vergebung der Schuld anbietet, folgt, daß unmöglich ist, daß eine satisfactio sei ex opere operato oder den Toten helfe. Denn gehört sie zur Vergebung der Schuld, so muß sie allein dazu dienen, die Gewissen zu trösten, daß sie glauben, ihnen sei die Schuld wahrhaftig vergeben.

Und wahrlich, es wäre nicht Wunder, daß alle frommen, christlichen Leute vor Angst und Leid Blut weinten, wenn sie recht bedächten, wie unsäglich greulicher und schrecklicher Mißbrauch der Messe unter dem Papsttum ist, nämlich daß die Messe das mehrere Teil nirgend zu anders gebraucht wird, denn für die Toten und die Pein des Fegfeuers abzulösen. Sie schreien, wir tun iuge sacrificium oder das tägliche Opfer ab. Das heißt recht iuge sacrificium, das tägliche Opfer abgetan aus der Kirche, das ist eine rechte Thrannei und Wütereit des gottlosen Antiochi, also das ganze Evangelium, die ganze Lehre vom Glauben, von Christo unterdrücken und auf solche Träume von satisfactionibus, solche Lügen vom opere operato an die Statt [statt dessen] predigen. Das heißt recht das Evangelium unter die Füße treten, den Gebrauch der Sacramente schändlich verkehren. Das sind die rechten Lästerexample of Scripture, and to apply to the dead the Lord's Supper, which was instituted for commemoration and preaching among the living [for the purpose of strengthening the faith of those who use the ceremony]. This is to violate the Second Commandment, by abusing God's name.

For, in the first place, it is a dishonor to the Gospel to hold that a ceremony ex opere operato, without faith, is a sacrifice reconciling God, and making satisfaction for sins. It is a horrible saying to ascribe as much to the work of a priest as to the death of Christ. Again, sin and death cannot be overcome unless by faith in Christ, as Paul teaches, Rom. 5, 1: Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, and therefore the punishment of purgatory cannot be overcome by the application of the work of another.

Now we shall omit the sort of testimonies concerning purgatory that the adversaries have: what kinds of punishments they think there are in purgatory; what grounds the doctrine of satisfactions has, which we have shown above to be most vain. We shall only present this in opposition: It is certain that the Lord's Supper was instituted on account of the remission of guilt. For it offers the remission of sins, where it is necessary that guilt be truly understood. [For what consolation would we have if forgiveness of sin were here offered us, and yet there would be no remission of guilt?] And nevertheless it does not make satisfaction for guilt; otherwise the Mass would be equal to the death of Christ. Neither can the remission of guilt be received in any other way than by faith. Therefore the Mass is not a satisfaction, but a promise and Sacrament that require faith.

And, indeed, it is necessary that all godly persons be seized with the most bitter grief [shed tears of blood, from anguish and sorrow] if they consider that the Mass has been in great part transferred to the dead and to satisfactions for punishments. This is to banish the daily sacrifice from the Church; this is the kingdom of Antiochus, who transferred the most salutary promises concerning the remission of guilt and concerning faith to the most vain opinions concerning satisfactions; this is to defile the Gospel, to corrupt the use of the Sacraments. These are the persons [the real blasphemers] whom Paul has said, 1 Cor. 11, 27, to be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, who have suppressed the doctrine concerning faith and the remission of sins, and, under the pretext of satisfactions, have devoted the body and blood of the Lord to sacrilegious gain. And they will at some time pay the penalty for this sacrilege. [God will one day vindicate the Second Commandment, and pour out a great, horrible wrath upon them.] Therefore we and all godly consciences should be on our guard against approving the abuses of the adversaries.

But let us return to the case. Since the Mass is not a satisfaction, either for punishment or for guilt, ex opere operato, without faith, it follows that the application on be-que hic opus est longiore disputatione. Constat enim, quod illae applicationes pro mortuis nulla habeant ex Scripturis testimonia. Nec tutum est in ecclesia cultus instituere sine auctoritate Scripturae. Et si [R. 274] quando opus erit, prolixius de tota re dicemus. Quid enim nunc rixemur cum adversariis, qui neque quid sacrificium, neque quid sacramentum, neque quid remissio peccatorum, neque quid sit fides, intelligunt?

Ἐν προσφερόμεν σοι τὴν λογικὴν ταύτην λατρίαν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐν πίστει ἀναπανοσμένων προπατόρων, πατέρων, πατριαρχῶν, προφητῶν, ἀποστόλων etc. At λογικὴ λατρεία non significat ipsam 94] hostiam, sed orationes et omnia, quae ibi geruntur. Quod vero allegant adversarii patres de oblatione pro mortuis, scimus veteres loqui de oratione pro mortuis, quam nos non prohibemus, sed applicationem coenae Domini pro mortuis ex opere operato improbamus. Nec patrocinantur adversariis veteres de opere operato. Et ut maxime Gregorii aut recentiorum 95] testimonia habeant, nos opponimus clarissimas et certissimas scripturas. Et patrum magna dissimilitudo est. Homines erant et labi ac decipi poterant. Quamquam si nunc reviviscerent, ac viderent sua dicta praetexti luculentis illis mendaciis, quae docent adversarii de opere operato, longe aliter se ipsi interpretarentur.

96] Falso etiam citant adversarii contra nos damnationem Aërii, quem dicunt propterea damnatum esse, quod negaverit in missa oblationem fieri pro vivis et mortuis. [R. 275] Saepe hoc colore utuntur, allegant veteres haereses, et cum his falso comparant nostram causam, ut illa collatione praegravent nos. Epiphanius testatur Aërium sensisse, quod orationes pro mortuis sint inutiles. Id reprehendit. Neque nos Aërio patrocinaur, sed vobiscum litigamus, qui haeresin manifeste pugnantem cum prophetis, apostolis et sanctis patribus scelestè defenditis, videlicet quod missa ex opere operato iustificet, quod mereatur remissionem culpae et poenae, etiam iniustis, pro quibus applicatur, si non ponant obicem. Hos perniciosos errores improbamus, qui laedunt gloriam passionis Christi et penitus obruunt doctrinam de iustitia fidei. 97] Similis fuit persuasio impiorum in lege, quod mererentur remissionem peccatorum non gratis per fidem, sed per sacrificia ex opere operato. Itaque augebant illos cultus et sacrificia, instituebant cultum Baal in Israel, in Iuda etiam sacrificabant in lucis. Quare prophetae damnata illa persuasionem belligerantur non solum cum cultoribus Baal, sed etiam cum aliis sacerdotibus, qui sacrificia a Deo ordinata cum illa opinione impia faciebant. Verum haeret in mundo haec persuasio et haerebit semper, quod cultus et sacrificia sint propitiationes. Non ferunt homines carnales soli sacrificio Christi tribui hunc honorem, quod sit propitiatio, quia iustitiam fidei non intelligunt, sed parem honorem tribuunt re-häft, unnütz und nichts sei. Und es [be]darf nicht langer Disputation. Denn da ist gewiß, daß solches Messhalten für die Toten in der Schrift gar keinen Grund hat. Nun ist es ein Greuel in der Kirche, Gottesdienst anrichten ohne alles Gotteswort, ohne alle Schrift. Und wenn es not wird sein, so wollen wir von diesem Stüde ganz reichlich mehr und nach aller Nothdurft weiter reden. Denn was sollen wir uns jeztund hier viel mit den Widersachern zanken, so sie gar nicht verstehen, was Opfer, was Sacrament, was Vergebung der Sünden, was Glaube sei?

Und der griechische Canon appliziert auch nicht die Messe als eine Genußung für die Toten; denn er appliziert sie zugleich für alle Patriarchen, Propheten, Apostel. Daraus erscheint, daß die Kirchen [*Griechen] auch als eine Dankagung opfern, nicht aber als eine Satisfaction für die Pein des Fegfeuers. Denn es wird freilich nicht ihre Meinung sein, die Propheten und Apostel aus dem Fegfeuer zu erlösen, sondern allein Dank zu opfern neben und mit ihnen für die hohen ewigen Güter, so ihnen und uns gegeben sind.

Die Widersacher ziehen an, daß etwa für Kezerei verdammt sein soll, daß einer, genannt Aërius, soll gehalten haben, die Messe sei nicht ein Opfer für die Toten. Hier behelfen sie sich aber mit ihren gewöhnlichen Griffen, daß sie erdichten, unsere Lehre sei von alters her verworfen. Aber die Eitel schämen sich keiner Lüge. So wissen sie nicht, wer Aërius gewesen oder was er gelehrt hat. Epiphanius schreibt, daß Aërius gehalten habe, daß das Gebet für die Toten sei unnütz. Nun reden wir nicht vom Gebet, sondern vom Nachtmahl Christi, ob das ex opere operato ein Opfer sei, den Toten zu helfen. Dieser unser Handel betrifft Aërium nichts. Was auch sonst aus den Vätern für die Messe angezogen wird, belangt alles diesen Handel nicht. Denn die guten, frommen Väter haben diesen greulichen, lästerlichen, antichristlichen Irrtum nicht gelehrt, daß die Messe ex opere operato den Lebendigen und Toten Vergebung [der] Pein und Schuld verdiene. Denn dieser Irrtum vom opere operato ist eine öffentliche Kezerei wider alle Schrift, wider alle Propheten und Apostel, und alle Christen sollen lernen, daß solche papistische Messen eitel schredliche Abgötterei seien. Es bleibt aber in der Welt solche Abgötterei, solange der Antichrist regiert und bleibt. Denn wie in Israel ein falscher Gottesdienst ward angerichtet mit Baal, auch unrechte Gottesdienste waren unter dem Schein des Gottesdienstes, den Gott geordnet hat, also hat der Antichrist in der Kirche auch einen falschen Gottesdienst aus dem Nachtmahl Christi gemacht. Und doch, wie Gott unter Israel und Juda dennoch seine Kirche, das ist, etliche Heilige, gehalten hat, also hat Gott seine Kirche, das ist, etliche Heilige, unter half of the dead is useless. Nor is there need here of a longer discussion. For it is evident that these applications on behalf of the dead have no testimonies from the Scriptures. Neither is it safe, without the authority of Scripture, to institute forms of worship in the Church. And if it will at any time be necessary, we shall speak at greater length concerning this entire subject. For why should we now contend with adversaries who understand neither what a sacrifice, nor what a sacrament, nor what remission of sins, nor what faith is?

Neither does the Greek canon apply the offering as a satisfaction for the dead, because it applies it equally for all the blessed patriarchs, prophets, apostles. It appears therefore that the Greeks make an offering as thanksgiving, and do not apply it as satisfaction for punishments. [For, of course, it is not their intention to deliver the prophets and apostles from purgatory, but only to offer up thanks along and together with them for the exalted eternal blessings that have been given to them and us.] Although they speak, moreover, not of the offering alone of the body and blood of the Lord, but of the other parts of the Mass, namely, prayers and thanksgiving. For after the consecration they pray that it may profit those who partake of it; they do not speak of others. Then they add: "Ἐτι προσφερόμεν σοι τὴν λογικὴν ταύτην λατρίαν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐν πίστει ἀναπαυσμένων προπατόρων, πατέρων, πατριάρχων, προφητῶν, ἀποστόλων, etc." ["Yet we offer to you this reasonable service for those having departed in faith, forefathers, fathers, patriarchs, prophets, apostles," etc.] Reasonable service, however, does not signify the offering itself, but prayers and all things which are there transacted. Now, as regards the adversaries' citing the Fathers concerning the offering for the dead, we know that the ancients speak of prayer for the dead, which we do not prohibit; but we disapprove of the application ex opere operato of the Lord's Supper on behalf of the dead. Neither do the ancients favor the adversaries concerning the opus operatum. And even though they have the testimonies especially of Gregory or the moderns, we oppose to them the most clear and certain Scriptures. And there is a great diversity among the Fathers. They were men, and could err and be deceived. Although if they would now become alive again, and would see their sayings assigned as pretexts for the notorious falsehoods which the adversaries teach concerning the opus operatum, they would interpret themselves far differently.

The adversaries also falsely cite against us the condemnation of Acrius, who, they say, was condemned for the reason that he denied that in the Mass an offering is made for the living and the dead. They frequently use this dexterous turn, cite the ancient heresies, and falsely compare our cause with these in order by this comparison to crush us. [The asses are not ashamed of any lies. Nor do they know who Acrius was and what he taught.] Epiphanius testifies that Acrius held that prayers for the dead are useless. With this he finds fault. Neither do we favor Acrius, but we on our part are contending with you who are defending a heresy manifestly conflicting with the prophets, apostles, and holy Fathers, namely, that the Mass justifies ex opere operato, that it merits the remission of guilt and punishment even for the unjust, to whom it is applied, if they do not present an obstacle. Of these pernicious errors, which detract from the glory of Christ's passion, and entirely overthrow the doctrine concerning the righteousness of faith, we disapprove. There was a similar persuasion of the godless in the Law, namely, that they merited the remission of sins, not freely by faith, but through sacrifices ex opere operato. Therefore they increased these services and sacrifices, instituted the worship of Baal in Israel, and even sacrificed in the groves in Judah. Therefore the prophets condemn this opinion, and wage war not only with the worshipers of Baal, but also with other priests who, with this godless opinion, made sacrifices ordained by God. But this opinion inheres in the world, and always will inhere, namely, that services and sacrifices are propitiations. Carnal men cannot endure that alone to the sacrifice of Christ the honor is ascribed that it is a propitiation, because they do not understand the righteousness of faith, but ascribe equal honor to the rest of the services and sacrifices. Just as, therefore, in Judah among the godless priests a false opinion concerning sacrifices inhered; just as in Israel, Baalitic services continued, and, nevertheless, a Church of God was there which disapproved of godless services, so Baalitic worship inheres in the domain of the Pope, namely, the abuse of the Mass, which they apply, that by it they may merit for the unrighteous the remission of guilt and punishment. [And yet, as God still kept His Church,

98] liquis cultibus et sacrificiis. Sicut igitur in Iuda haesit apud impios pontifices falsa persuasio de sacrificiis, sicut in Israel baalitici cultus duraverunt, et tamen erat ibi ecclesia Dei, quae impios cultus improbabat: ita haeret in regno pontificio cultus baaliticus, hoc est, abusus missae, quam applicant, ut per eam mereantur iniustis remissionem culpae et poenae. Et videtur hic baaliticus cultus una cum regno pontificio duraturus esse, donec veniet Christus ad iudicandum, et gloria adventus sui perdet regnum antichristi. Interim omnes, qui vere credunt evangelio, debent improbare illos impios cultus [R. 276 excogitatos contra mandatum Dei ad obscurandam gloriam Christi et iustitiam fidei.

Art. XXVII. (XIII.) De Votis Monasticis.

1] Apud nos in oppido Thuringiae Isenaco Franciscanus quidam fuit ante annos triginta, Iohannes Hilten, qui a suo sodalicio coniectus est in carcerem, propterea quod quosdam notissimos abusus reprehenderat. Vidimus enim eius scripta, ex quibus satis intelligi potest, quale fuerit ipsius doctrinae genus. Et qui norunt eum, testantur fuisse senem placidum 2] et sine morositate gravem. Is multa praedixit, quae partim evererunt hactenus, partim iam videntur impendere, quae non volumus recitare, ne quis interpretetur, ea aut odio cuiusquam aut in gratiam alicuius narrari. dem Papsttum dennoch erhalten, daß die christliche Kirche nicht ganz untergegangen ist. Wiemohl nun der Antichrist mit seinem falschen Gottesdienst zum Teil bleiben wird, bis daß Christus der Herr öffentlich kommen und richten wird, so sollen doch alle Christen verwahrt sein, sich zu hüten vor solcher Abgötterei, und sollten lernen, wie man Gott recht dienen und Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen soll, daß sie Gott recht ehren und beständigen Trost wider die Sünde haben können. Denn darum hat Gott gnädiglich sein Evangelium scheinen lassen, daß wir verwahrt und selig würden.

Dieses haben wir von der Messe kurz gesagt, daß alle gottesfürchtigen, frommen, ehrbaren Leute in allen Nationen verstehen mögen, daß wir mit allem treuen Fleiß die rechte Ehre und den rechten Gebrauch der Messe erhalten haben, und daß wir des große, hochwichtige Ursachen haben, warum wir es mit den Widersachern nicht halten. Und wir wollen alle frommen, ehrbaren Leute verwarnen haben, daß sie des großen Greuels und Mißbrauchs der Messe sich mit den Widersachern nicht theilhaftig machen, damit sie sich nicht mit fremden Sünden beschweren. Es ist ein großer Handel und eine ganz wichtige Sache. Denn dieser Mißbrauch ist nicht geringer, denn zu Elias' Zeiten die Sache war mit dem falschen Gottesdienst Baal. Wir haben auf diesmal mit gelinden Worten und ohne Schmähmorte diese Sache vorgetragen; werden aber die Widersacher nicht aufhören zu lästern, so sollen sie innewerden, daß wir ihnen auch härter zusprechen wollen.

Artikel XXVII. (XIII.)

Von den Klostergelehen.

In der Stadt Eisenach im Land zu Thüringen ist etwan gewesen vor dreißig Jahren ein Barsfüßermönch, Johannes Hilten genannt, welcher von seinen Brüdern ist in einen Kelter geworfen, darum daß er eiliche öffentliche Mißbräuche im Klosterleben hatte angefochten. Wir haben auch seiner Schriften zum Teil gesehen, aus welchen wohl zu merken ist, daß er christlich und der Heiligen Schrift gemäß gepredigt; und die ihn gekannt haben, sagen heutigestags, daß es ein frommer, stiller, alter Mann gewesen ist, ganz redlichen, ehrbaren Wesens und Handels; derselbe hat viel von diesen Zeiten prophezeit und zuvor gesagt, das bereits geschehen ist, etliches auch, das noch geschehen soll, welches wir doch hier nicht erzählen wollen, damit niemand denke, daß wir aus Reid oder jemand zu Gefallen solches vorbrächten. Endlich, als er altershalber, und auch daß ihm das Gefängnis seine Gesundheit verderbet, in eine Krankheit gefallen, hat er zu sich lassen bitten den Guardian, ihm seine Schwachheit angezeigt, und als der Guardian aus pharisaischer Bitterkeit und Reid ihn mit harten Worten angefahren, darum daß solche Predigt nicht wollte in der Küche nützlich sein, hat er seines Leibes Schwachheit zu klagen unterlassen, tief erseufzt und mit ernstlichen Gebärden gesagt, er wolle solch Unrecht um Christus' willen gern tragen und leiden, wiemohl er nichts geschrieben noch gelehrt hätte, das der

i. e., some saints, in Israel and Judah, so God still preserved His Church, i. e., some saints, under the Papacy, so that the Christian Church has not entirely perished.] And it seems that this Baalitic worship will endure as long as the reign of the Pope, until Christ will come to judge, and by the glory of His advent destroy the reign of Antichrist. Meanwhile all who truly believe the Gospel [that they may truly honor God and have a constant comfort against sins; for God has graciously caused His Gospel to shine, that we might be warned and saved] ought to condemn these wicked services, devised, contrary to God's command, in order to obscure the glory of Christ and the righteousness of faith.

We have briefly said these things of the Mass in order that all good men in all parts of the world may be able to understand that with the greatest zeal we maintain the dignity of the Mass and show its true use, and that we have the most just reasons for dissenting from the adversaries. And we would have all good men admonished not to aid the adversaries in the profanation of the Mass, lest they burden themselves with other men's sin. It is a great cause and a great subject, not inferior to the transaction of the prophet Elijah, who condemned the worship of Baal. We have presented a case of such importance with the greatest moderation, and now reply without casting any reproach. But if the adversaries will compel us to collect all kinds of abuses of the Mass, the case will not be treated with such forbearance.

Article XXVII (XIII): Of Monastic Vows.

In the town of Eisenach, in Thuringia, there was, to our knowledge, a monk, John Hilten, who, thirty years ago, was cast by his fraternity into prison because he had protested against certain most notorious abuses. For we have seen his writings, from which it can be well understood what the nature of his doctrine was [that he was a Christian, and preached according to the Scriptures]. And those who knew him testify that he was a mild old man, and serious indeed, but without moroseness. He predicted many things, some of which have thus far transpired, and others still seem to impend, which we do not wish to recite, lest it may be inferred that they are narrated either from hatred toward one or from partiality to another. But finally, when, either on account of his age or the foulness of the prison, he fell into disease, he sent for the guardian in order to tell him of his sickness; and when the guardian, inflamed with pharisaic hatred, had begun to reprove the man harshly on account of his kind of doctrine, which seemed to be injurious to the kitchen, then, omitting all mention of his sickness, he said with a sigh that he was bearing these injuries patiently for Christ's sake, since he had indeed neither written nor taught anything which could overthrow the position of the monks, but had only protested against some well-known abuses. But another one, he said, will come in A. D. 1518, who will de- stroy you, neither will you be able to resist him. This very opinion concerning the downward career of the power of the monks, and this number of years, his friends afterwards found also written by him in his commentaries, which he had left, concerning certain passages of Daniel. But although the outcome will teach how much weight should be chorum et hunc annorum numerum postea etiam repererunt eius amici perscriptum ab ipso in commentariis suis inter annotationes, quas reliquerat in certos locos Danielis. 4) Quamquam autem, quantum huic voci tribuendum sit, eventus docebit, tamen exstant alia signa, quae minantur mutationem regno monachorum, non minus certa quam oracula. Constat enim, quantum sit in monasteriis hypocrisis ambitionis, avaritiae, quanta inicitia et indoctissimi cuiusque saevitia, quanta vanitas in concionibus, in excogitandis subinde novis aucupii pecuniae. Et sunt alia 5) vitia, quae non libet commemorare. Quumque fuerint olim scholae doctrinae Christianae, nunc degeneraverunt velut ab aureo genere in ferreum, seu ut cubus platonius in malas harmonias degenerat, quas Plato ait exitium asferre. Locupletissima quaeque monasteria tantum alunt otiosam turbam, quae ibi falso praetextu religionis helluatur de 6) publicis elemosynis ecclesiae. Christus autem admonet de sale insipido, quod soleat effundi et conculcari, Matth. 5, 13. Quare ipsi 7) sibi monachi his moribus fata canunt. Et accedit nunc aliud signum, quod passim auctores sunt interficiendorum bonorum virorum. Haec caedes Deus haud dubie brevi ulciscetur. 8) Neque vero accusamus omnes; arbitramur enim passim aliquos viros bonos in monasteriis esse, qui de humanis cultibus et factitiis, ut quidam scriptores vocant, moderate sentiunt, nec probant saevitiam, quam [R. 278] exercent hypocritae apud ipsos.

mit der Tat ihr eigen requiem, und wird bald mit ihnen aus sein. Darüber ist noch ein Zeichen, daß die Mönche werden untergehen, daß sie Ursacher, Stifter und Anreger sind, daß viel gelehrt, rebliche Leute unschuldig ermüdet und dahingerichtet werden. Das Abelsblut schreit über sie, und Gott wird es rächen. Wir sagen nicht von allen; es mögen etliche in Klöstern sein, die das heilige Evangelium von Christo wissen und keine Heiligkeit auf ihre Traditiones setzen, die sich auch des Blutes nicht schuldig gemacht haben, welches die Heuchler unter ihnen vergießen.

9) Sed de genere doctrinae disputamus, quod nunc defendunt architecti Confutationis, non utrum vota servanda sint. Sentimus enim licita vota servari debere, sed utrum cultus illi mereantur remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem; utrum sint satisfactiones pro peccatis; utrum sint pares baptismo; utrum sint observatio praeceptorum et consiliorum; utrum sint perfectio evangelica; utrum habeant merita supererogationis; utrum merita illa applicata aliis salvent eos; utrum sint licita vota his opinionibus facta; utrum licita sint vota, quae praetextu religionis tantum ventris et otii causa suscepta sunt; utrum vere sint vota, quae sunt extorta aut invitis aut his, qui per aetatem nondum iudicare poterant de genere vitae, quae palam vergunt ad malum exitum, vel quia propter imbecillitatem non servantur, vel quia hi, qui sunt in illis sodalitiis, coguntur abusus missarum, impios cultus sanctorum, consilia saevienti in bonos viros 10) approbare et adiuvare. De his quaestionibus disputamus. Et quum nos in Confes-

Mönche Stand nachtheilig, sondern hätte allein grobe Mißbräuche angegriffen. Zuletzt hat er gesagt: „Es wird ein anderer Mann kommen, wenn man schreibt 1516, der euch Mönche tilgen wird, und der wird vor euch wohl bleiben, dem werdet ihr nicht widerstehen können.“ Dasselbe Wort, wie die Möncherei würde ins Füllen geraten, und dieselbe Jahreszahl hat man hernach gefunden in andern seinen Büchern und sonderlich in den Commentariis über den Daniel. Was aber von dieses Mannes Rede zu halten sei, lassen wir einem jeden sein Urtheil. Doch sind sonst Zeichen, daß der Mönche Wesen nicht lange bestehen könne. Es ist am Tage, daß das Klosterwesen nichts denn eine unverschämte Heuchelei und Betrug ist, voll Geizes und Hoffarts, und je ungelhrtere Eitel die Mönche sind, je haßstarriger, grimmiger und bitterer, je giftigere Ottern sie sind, die Wahrheit und Gottes Wort zu verfolgen. So sind ihre Predigten und Schriften lauter kindisch, ungeheimt, närrisch Ding, und ist all ihr Wesen dahin gerichtet, daß sie den Bauch und ihren Geiz füllen. Anfänglich sind die Klöster nicht solche Kerker oder ewige Gefängnisse gewesen, sondern Schulen, darin man die Jugend und andere in der Heiligen Schrift hat aufgezogen. Nun ist solch edel Gold zu Rot geworden und der Wein Wasser geworden. Fast in den rechten, größten Stiften und Klöstern sind eitel faule, unnütze, müßige Mönche, die unter dem Schein der Heiligkeit von gemeinen Almosen in aller Pracht und Wohlust leben. Christus sagt aber, daß das taube Salz nichts nütze sei, denn daß man's hinwegwerfe und mit Füßen trete. Darum, so die Mönche ein solch ungöttlich Wesen führen, so sinnen sie ihnen [sich]

mit der Tat ihr eigen requiem, und wird bald mit ihnen aus sein. Darüber ist noch ein Zeichen, daß die Mönche werden untergehen, daß sie Ursacher, Stifter und Anreger sind, daß viel gelehrt, rebliche Leute unschuldig ermüdet und dahingerichtet werden. Das Abelsblut schreit über sie, und Gott wird es rächen. Wir sagen nicht von allen; es mögen etliche in Klöstern sein, die das heilige Evangelium von Christo wissen und keine Heiligkeit auf ihre Traditiones setzen, die sich auch des Blutes nicht schuldig gemacht haben, welches die Heuchler unter ihnen vergießen.

Wir reden aber hier von der Lehre, welche die Meister der Confutation loben und verteidigen. Wir disputieren nicht, ob man Gelübde Gott halten soll; denn wir halten auch, daß man rechte Gelübde zu halten schuldig sei; sondern dabon reden wir, ob man durch die Gelübde und solche Möncherei erlange Vergebung der Sünden vor Gott; ob sie Genußtuungen seien für die Sünde; ob sie der Taufe gleich seien; ob sie die Vollkommenheit seien, dadurch die praecepta und consilia, das ist, nicht allein die Gebote, sondern auch die Räte, gehalten werden; ob sie sind evangelische Vollkommenheit; ob die Mönche haben merita supererogationis, das ist, so viel übrigen Verdienstes und heiliger Werke, daß sie deren auch nicht alle [be]dürfen; ob ihre Verdienste, wenn sie die den andern mittheilen, dieselben selig machen; ob die Klostergelübde christlich seien, der Meinung also getan; item, ob die Klostergelübde, welche erzwingen sind von Unwilligen und denjenigen, welche noch jugenhalber nicht verstanden, was sie tun, welche die Eltern oder Freunde in die Klöster gestossen des Bauchs halben, allein ihr väterlich Erbe zu sparen, christlich und göttlich seien; ob die Klostergelübde christlich seien, die gewißlich zu Sünden Ursache geben, nämlich daß die Ordenspersonen den häßlichen Mißbrauch der given to this declaration, yet there are other signs which threaten a change in the power of the monks, that are no less certain than oracles. For it is evident how much hypocrisy, ambition, avarice there is in the monasteries, how much ignorance and cruelty among all the unlearned, what vanity in their sermons and in devising continually new means of gaining money. [The more stupid asses the monks are, the more stubborn, furious, bitter, the more venomous asps they are in persecuting the truth and the Word of God.] And there are other faults, which we do not care to mention. While they once were [not jails or everlasting prisons, but] schools for Christian instruction, now they have degenerated, as though from a golden to an iron age, or as the Platonic cube degenerates into bad harmonies, which, Plato says, brings destruction. [Now this precious gold is turned to dross, and the wine to water.] All the most wealthy monasteries support only an idle crowd, which gluttonizes upon the public alms of the Church. Christ, however, teaches concerning the salt that has lost its savor that it should be cast out and be trodden under foot, Matt. 5, 13. Therefore the monks by such morals are singing their own fate [requiem, and it will soon be over with them]. And now another sign is added, because they are, in many places, the instigators of the death of good men. [This blood of Abel cries against them and] These murders God undoubtedly will shortly avenge. Nor indeed do we find fault with all; for we are of the opinion that there are here and there some good men in the monasteries who judge moderately concerning human and factitious services, as some writers call them, and who do not approve of the cruelty which the hypocrites among them exercise.

But we are now discussing the kind of doctrine which the composers of the Confutation are now defending, and not the question whether vows should be observed. For we hold that lawful vows ought to be observed; but whether these services merit the remission of sins and justification; whether they are satisfactions for sins; whether they are equal to Baptism; whether they are the observance of precepts and counsels; whether they are evangelical perfection; whether they have the merits of supererogation; whether these merits, when applied on behalf of others, save them; whether vows made with these opinions are lawful; whether vows are lawful that are undertaken under the pretext of religion, merely for the sake of the belly and idleness; whether those are truly vows that have been extorted either from the unwilling, or from those who on account of age were not able to judge concerning the kind of life, whom parents or friends thrust into the monasteries that they might be supported at the public expense, without the loss of private patrimony; whether vows are lawful that openly tend to an evil issue, either because on account of weakness they are not observed, or because those who are in these rechte Gelübde und christlich seien. Von diesen Fragen ist unser Streit und Disputation. Und so wir in unserer Konfession von vielen untüchtigen Gelübden auch gesagt haben, welche die Canones der Päpste selbst verwerfen, noch [dennoch] wollen die Widersacher alles, was wir vorgebracht, verwerfen haben. Denn also sagen sie mit klaren Worten, daß alles, so wir vorgebracht haben, soll verwerfen werden.

Ac operae pretium est audire, quomodo cavillentur nostras rationes et quid afferant ad muniendam suam causam. Ideo breviter percurramus pauca quaedam argumenta nostra, et dilectum in his obiter cavillationes adversariorum. Quum autem haec tota causa diligenter et copiose a Luthero tractata sit in libro, cui titulum fecit: De votis monasticis, volumus hic librum illum pro repetito habere.

11) Primum hoc certissimum est non esse licitum votum, quo sentit is, qui vovet, [R. 279 se mereri remissionem peccatorum coram Deo aut satisfacere pro peccatis coram Deo. Nam haec opinio est manifesta contumelia evangelii, quod docet nobis gratis donari remissionem peccatorum propter Christum, ut supra copiose dictum est. Recte igitur citavimus Pauli locum ad Galatas, Gal. 5, 4: Evacuati estis a Christo, qui in lege iustificamini, a gratia excidistis. Qui quaerunt remissionem peccatorum non fide in Christum, sed operibus monasticis, detrahunt de honore Christi et iterum crucifigunt Christum. Audite autem, audite, quomodo hic elabuntur architecti Confutationis! Pauli locum tantum de lege Mosis exponunt et addunt monachos omnia propter Christum observare et conari propius secundum evangelium vivere, ut mereantur vitam aeternam. Et addunt horribilem epilogum his verbis: Quare impia sunt, quae hic 13) contra monasticen allegantur. O Christe, quamdiu feres has contumelias, quibus evangelium tuum afficiunt hostes nostri! Diximus in Confessione remissionem peccatorum gratis accipi propter Christum per fidem. Si haec non est ipsa evangelii vox, si non est sententia Patris aeterni, quam tu, qui es in sinu Patris, revelasti mundo, iure plectimur. Sed tua mors testis est, tua resurrectio testis est, Spiritus Sanctus testis est, tota ecclesia tua testis est, vere hanc esse evangelii sententiam, quod consequamur remissionem peccatorum non propter nostra merita, sed propter te, per fidem.

des Evangelii des ewigen Vaters, welche du, Herr, der du sitzt im Schoß des Vaters, der Welt offenbart hast, so sollen wir billig gestraft werden. Aber dein herber, bitterer Tod am Kreuz, dein heiliger Geist, welchen du reichlich ausgeteilt hast, deine ganze heilige, christliche Kirche gibt klar, gewaltig und gewiß Zeugnis, welches so hell und offenbar ist als die Sonne, daß dies die Summa, der Kern des Evangelii ist, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen nicht um unser Verdienstes willen, sondern durch den Glauben an Christum.

14) Paulus quum negat homines lege Mosis mereri remissionem peccatorum, multo magis detrahit hanc laudem traditionibus humanis, idque aperte ad Colossenses, 2, 16, testatur. Si lex Mosis, quae erat divinitus revelata, non merebatur remissionem peccatorum, quanto

Es will aber hier not sein anzuzeigen, wie sie doch unsere Gründe ansehen, und was sie vorbringen, ihre Sache zu erhalten. Darum wollen wir kurz verlegen [widerlegen], was die Widersacher vorbringen. Und so nun dieser Handel fleißig und reichlich gehandelt ist in dem Buch Doctoris Martini Von den Klostergelübden, so wollen wir dasselbe Buch hier als für erneuert und erholt [wiederholt] achten.

Für das erste ist das gewiß, daß solche Gelübde nicht göttlich noch christlich sind, wenn ich also mein Klostergelübde tue, daß ich gedente, dadurch zu erlangen Vergebung der Sünden gegen Gott oder für die Sünden genuggutun. Denn das ist ein Irrtum, der da öffentlich wider das Evangelium ist, und ist eine Lästerung Christi. Denn das Evangelium lehrt, daß wir ohne Verdienst Vergebung der Sünden erlangen durch Christum, wie wir hier oben reichlich gesagt haben. Darum haben wir St. Pauli Spruch recht eingeführt zu den Galatern am 5.: „So ihr durchs Gesetz wollt gerecht werden, so seid ihr von Christo und der Gnade abgefallen.“ Denn die da suchen Vergebung der Sünden nicht durch den Glauben an Christum, sondern durch die Klostergelübde und Möncheret, die rauben Christo seine Ehre und kreuzigen ihn aufs neue. Hört aber, Lieber, hört, wie die Meister der Confutation hier gerne Beihelfer suchen wollten, sagen: Paulus sei allein vom Gesetz Moses zu verstehen, die Mönche aber tun und halten alles um Christus' willen und fleißigen sich, aufs allerhöchste dem Evangelio gemäß zu leben, damit sie das ewige Leben verdienen: und setzen ein schrecklich Wort dazu: „Darum ist es“, sagen sie, „unschristlich und keckerisch, was wider das Mönchsleben wird vorgebracht.“ O Herr Jesu Christe, wie lange willst du leiden und dulden solche öffentliche Schmach deines heiligen Evangelii, da unsere Feinde dein Wort und Wahrheit lästern?

Wir haben in unserer Konfession gesagt, daß man Vergebung der Sünden ohne Verdienst durch den Glauben an Christum erlangen müsse. Ist das nicht das lautere, reine Evangelium, wie es die Apostel gepredigt, ist das nicht die Stimme der du sitzt im Schoß des Vaters, der Welt offenbart hast, so sollen wir billig gestraft werden. Aber dein herber, bitterer Tod am Kreuz, dein heiliger Geist, welchen du reichlich ausgeteilt hast, deine ganze heilige, christliche Kirche gibt klar, gewaltig und gewiß Zeugnis, welches so hell und offenbar ist als die Sonne, daß dies die Summa, der Kern des Evangelii ist, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen nicht um unser Verdienstes willen, sondern durch den Glauben an Christum.

Wenn Paulus darf sagen, daß wir durch das heilige, göttliche Gesetz Moses und seine Werke nicht verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, so will er, daß wir viel weniger das tun durch menschliche Satzungen, und das zeigt er zu den Kolossern klar genug an. Denn so die Werke des Gesetzes fraternities are compelled to approve and aid the abuses of the Mass, the godless worship of saints, and the counsels to rage against good men: concerning these questions we are treating. And although we have said very many things in the Confession concerning such vows as even the canons of the Popes condemn, nevertheless the adversaries command that all things which we have produced be rejected. For they have used these words.

And it is worth while to hear how they pervert our reasons, and what they adduce to fortify their own cause. Accordingly, we will briefly run over a few of our arguments, and, in passing, explain away the sophistry of the adversaries in reference to them. Since, however, this entire cause has been carefully and fully treated by Luther in the book to which he gave the title De Votis Monasticis, we wish here to consider that book as reiterated.

First, it is very certain that a vow is not lawful by which he who vows thinks that he merits the remission of sins before God, or makes satisfaction before God for sins. For this opinion is a manifest insult to the Gospel, which teaches that the remission of sins is freely granted us for Christ's sake, as has been said above at some length. Therefore we have correctly quoted the declaration of Paul to the Galatians, Gal. 5, 4: Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the Law; ye are fallen from grace. Those who seek the remission of sins, not by faith in Christ, but by monastic works, detract from the honor of Christ, and crucify Christ afresh. But hear, hear how the composers of the Confutation escape in this place! They explain this passage of Paul only concerning the Law of Moses, and they add that the monks observe all things for Christ's sake, and endeavor to live the nearer the Gospel in order to merit eternal life. And they add a horrible peroration in these words: Wherefore those things are wicked that are here alleged against monasticism. O Christ, how long wilt Thou bear these reproaches with which our enemies treat Thy Gospel? We have said in the Confession that the remission of sins is received freely for Christ's sake, through faith. If this is not the very voice of the Gospel, if it is not the judgment of the eternal Father, which Thou who art in the bosom of the Father hast revealed to the world, we are justly blamed. But Thy death is a witness, Thy resurrection is a witness, the Holy Ghost is a witness, Thy entire Church is a witness, that it is truly the judgment of the Gospel that we obtain remission of sins, not on account of our merits, but on account of Thee, through faith.

When Paul denies that by the Law of Moses men merit the remission of sins, he withdraws this praise much more from human traditions; and this he clearly testifies Col. 2, 16. If the Law of Moses, which was divinely revealed, minus istae fatuae observationes abhorrentes a civili consuetudine vitae merentur remissionem peccatorum!

15] Adversarii fingunt Paulum abolere legem Moysi, et Christum ita succedere, [R. 280 ut non gratis donet remissionem peccatorum, sed propter opera aliarum legum, si quae 16] nunc excogitentur. Hac impia et fanatica imaginatione obruunt beneficium Christi. Deinde fingunt inter hos, qui observant illam legem Christi, monachos propius observare quam alios, propter hypocrisin paupertatis, obedientiae et castitatis, quum quidem omnia sint plena simulationis. Paupertatem iactant in summa copia rerum omnium. Obedientiam iactant, quum nullum genus hominum libertatem habeat maiorem quam monachi. De coelibatu non libet dicere, qui quam purus sit in plerisque, qui student continere, Gerson indicat. Et quotusquisque continere studet?

lich geschaffen haben. Von ihrer heiligen, großen, will es Gerson sagen lassen, der auch von denjenigen, so ernstlich sich gekümmert, keusch zu leben, wahrlich nicht viel Reinigkeit und Heiligkeit sagt; wiewohl das mehrere Teil ist Heuchelei und unter tausend nicht einer, der mit Ernst gebietet, rein und keusch zu leben, daß wir innenbig der Herzen Gedanken

17] Scilicet hac simulatione propius secundum evangelium vivunt monachi. Christus non ita succedit Mosi, ut propter nostra opera remittat peccata, sed ut sua merita, suam propitiationem opponat irae Dei pro nobis, ut gratis nobis ignoscatur. Qui vero praeter Christi propitiationem propria merita opponit irae Dei, et propter propria merita consequi remissionem peccatorum conatur, sive afferat opera legis Mosaicae, sive Decalogi, sive regulae Benedicti, sive regulae Augustini, sive aliarum regularum, is abolet promissionem Christi, abiecit Christum et excidit gratia. Haec est Pauli sententia.

Quum autem supra copiose ostensum [R. 281 20] sit impiam opinionem esse, quod propter opera nostra consequamur remissionem peccatorum, breviores in hoc loco erimus. Facile enim inde prudens lector ratiocinari poterit, quod non mereamur remissionem peccatorum per opera monastica. Itaque et illa blasphemiam nullo modo ferenda est, quae apud Tho-

Mosis, welches durch Gott war offenbart, nicht verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, wieviel weniger werden's tun die nährischen Werke, Möncherei, Rosenkränze und dergleichen, die auch zu weltlichem Leben nicht nur noch nütze sind, viel weniger geben sie der Seele ewiges Leben.

Die Widersacher erdichten ihnen selbst einen Traum, daß Christus das Gesetz Moses habe abgetan und sei gekommen also nach Mose und ein neu, gut Gesetz gebracht, dadurch man Vergebung der Sünden erlangen müsse. Durch den schwärmerischen, nährischen Gedanken drücken sie Christum unter und seine Wohltat. Danach erdichten sie weiter, daß unter denen, welche die neuen Gesetze Christi halten, die Mönche Christo und den Aposteln am nächsten ähnlich leben und wandeln durch ihren Gehorsam, Armut und Keuschheit, so doch die ganze Möncherei eitel unberühmte, schändliche Heuchelei ist. Sie sagen von Armut, so sie doch vor großem Überfluß nie haben erfahren können, wie einem rechten Armen zu Herzen ist. Sie rühmen ihren Gehorsam, so kein Volk auf Erden freier ist denn die Mönche, welche aus Bischofs- und Fürstengehorsam sich meisterschäftlichen Keuschheit mag ich nicht sagen; ich ernstlich sich gekümmert, keusch zu leben, wahrlich das mehrere Teil ist Heuchelei und unter tausend nicht einer, der mit Ernst gebietet, rein und keusch zu leben, daß wir innenbig der Herzen Gedanken

Soll nun das die große Heiligkeit sein? Heißt das Christo und dem Evangelio gemäß gelebt? Christus ist nicht also nach Mose gekommen, neue Gesetze zu bringen, daß er um unserer Werke willen die Sünden verberge, sondern sein Verdienst, seine eigenen Werke setzt er gegen Gottes Zorn für uns, daß wir ohne Verdienst Gnade erlangen. Wer aber ohne die Veröhnung Christi seine eigenen Werke gegen Gottes Zorn setzt und um seines eigenen Verdienstes willen Vergebung der Sünden erlangen will, er bringe die Werke des Gesetzes Moses, der zehn Gebote, der Regeln Benedicti, Augustini oder andere Regeln, so wirft er hinweg die Verheißung Christi, fällt ab von Christo und seiner Gnade.

Hier wollen aber Kaiserliche Majestät, alle Fürsten und Stände des Reichs merken, wie überaus unverschämt die Widersacher sind, daß sie trotziglich dürfen sagen, es sei alles gottlos, was wir wider die Möncherei haben vorgebracht, so wir doch ganz gewisse und klare Sprüche Pauli angezogen haben, und je nichts klarer, gewisser in der ganzen Bibel ist, denn daß wir Vergebung der Sünden erlangen allein durch den Glauben an Christum. Und diese gewisse, göttliche Wahrheit dürfen die Meister der Konfutation, die verzweifeltsten Bösewichter und heillosen Vuben, gottlose Lehre heißen. Wir haben aber keinen Zweifel, wo Kaiserliche Majestät und die Fürsten des Reichs verwahrt werden, sie werden eine solche öffentliche Gotteslästerung lassen aus der Konfutation tilgen und austreiben.

Die weil wir aber hier oben reichlich angezeigt, daß es ein Irrtum sei, daß wir Vergebung der Sünden um unser Verdienstes willen erlangen sollten, so wollen wir hier desto kürzer reden. Denn ein jeder verständiger Leser kann leichtlich abnehmen, daß wir durch die elenden Mönchs-werke nicht können vom Tode und des Teufels Gewalt erlöst werden und Vergebung der Sünden did not merit the remission of sins, how much less do these silly observances [monasticism, rosaries, etc.], averse to the civil custom of life, merit the remission of sins!

The adversaries feign that Paul abolishes the Law of Moses, and that Christ succeeds in such a way that He does not freely grant the remission of sins, but on account of the works of other laws, if any are now devised. By this godless and fanatical imagination they bury the benefit of Christ. Then they feign that among those who observe this Law of Christ, the monks observe it more closely than others, on account of their hypocritical poverty, obedience, and chastity, since indeed all these things are full of sham. In the greatest abundance of all things they boast of poverty. Although no class of men has greater license than the monks [who have masterfully decreed that they are exempt from obedience to bishops and princes], they boast of obedience. Of celibacy we do not like to speak; how pure this is in most of those who desire to be continent, Gerson indicates. And how many of them desire to be continent [not to mention the thoughts of their hearts]?

Of course, in this sham life the monks live more closely in accordance with the Gospel! Christ does not succeed Moses in such a way as to remit sins on account of our works, but so as to set His own merits and His own propitiation on our behalf against God's wrath, that we may be freely forgiven. Now, he who, apart from Christ's propitiation, opposes his own merits to God's wrath, and on account of his own merits endeavors to obtain the remission of sins, whether he present the works of the Mosaic Law, or of the Decalog, or of the rule of Benedict, or of the rule of Augustine, or of other rules, annuls the promise of Christ, has cast away Christ, and has fallen from grace. This is the verdict of Paul.

But, behold, most clement Emperor Charles, behold, ye princes, behold, all ye ranks, how great is the impudence of the adversaries! Although we have cited the declaration of Paul to this effect, they have written: Wicked are those things that are here cited against monasticism. But what is more certain than that men obtain the remission of sins by faith for Christ's sake? And these wretches dare to call this a wicked opinion! We do not at all doubt that if you had been advised of this passage, you would have taken [will take] care that such blasphemy be removed from the Confutation.

But since it has been fully shown above that the opinion is wicked, that we obtain the remission of sins on account of our works, we shall be briefer at this place. For the prudent reader will easily be able to reason thence that we do not merit the remission of sins by monastic works. Therefore this blasphemy also is in no way to be endured which is read in 22] nibus sine impiis opinionibus utuntur. At sentire, quod illae observationes sint cultus, propter quos coram Deo iusti reputentur et per quos mereantur vitam aeternam, hoc pugnat cum evangelio de iustitia fidei, quod docet, quod propter Christum donetur nobis iustitia et vita aeterna. Pugnat et cum dicto Christi Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me mandatis hominum. Pugnat et cum hac sententia, Rom. 14, 23: Omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est. Quomodo autem possunt affirmare, quod sint cultus, quos Deus approbet tamquam iustitiam coram ipso, quum nullum habeant testimonium Verbi Dei?

24] Sed videte impudentiam adversariorum. Non solum docent, quod observationes (R. 282) illae sint cultus iustificantes, sed addunt perfectionem esse cultus, hoc est, magis merentes remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, quam sint alia vitae genera. Et hic concurrunt multae falsae ac perniciosae opiniones. Fingunt se servare praecepta et consilia. Postea homines liberales, quum somnient se habere merita supererogationis, vendunt haec
25] alia. Haec omnia plena sunt pharisaicae vanitatis. Extrema enim impietas est sentire, quod Decalogus ita satisfaciant, ut supersint merita, quum haec praecepta omnes sanctos accusent: Diligas Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, Deut. 6, 5, item: Non concupisces, Rom. 7, 7. Propheta ait Ps. 116, 11: Omnis homo mendax, id est, non recte de Deo sentiens, non satis timens, non satis credens Deo. Quare falso gloriantur monachi in observatione monasticae vitae praeceptis satisfieri ac plus quam praecepta fieri.

pharisaische Heuchelei und Gleisnerei. Denn nachdem [da] das erste Gebot Gottes: „Du sollst Gott, deinen Herrn, lieben von ganzem Herzen, von ganzer Seele“ usw., höher ist, denn ein Mensch auf Erden begreifen kann, nachdem es die höchste Theologia ist, daraus alle Propheten, alle Apostel ihre beste, höchste Lehre als aus dem Brunnen geschöpft haben, ja, so es ein solch hohes Gebot ist, danach verdienen. Darum ist auch das gotteslästerliche, häßliche Wort, welches Thomas schreibt, in seinem Wege zu leiden, daß ins Kloster gehen solle eine neue Taufe sein oder der Taufe gleich sein. Denn es ist eine teuflische Wüterelei und Irrtum, daß man eine heillose menschliche Sägung und Gebot, welches weder Gottes Gebot noch Zusage hat, der heiligen Taufe vergleichen sollte, dabei seine [eine] Zusage oder Verheißung Gottes ist.

Zum andern, so sind diese Stücke, willige Armut, Gehorsam, Keuschheit, wenn sie anders nicht unrein ist, eitel Adiaphora und leibliche Übung, darin weder Sünde noch Gerechtigkeit zu suchen ist. Darum haben die Heiligen derselben viel anders gebraucht, als St. Bernhard, Franciscus und andere, denn je kund die Mönche. Denn dieselben haben solches Dinges gebraucht zur Übung des Leibes, daß sie desto leichter warten könnten Lehrens, Predigens und anderer dergleichen, nicht daß solche Werke Gottesdienste sollten sein, vor Gott gerecht zu machen oder das ewige Leben zu verdienen, sondern die Werke malet Paulus recht ab, da er sagt: „Leibliche Übung ist wenig nütze.“ Und es ist möglich, daß in etlichen Klöstern noch etliche fromme Leute sind, welche lesen und studieren, die solcher Regeln und Sägungen brauchen ohne Heuchelei und mit diesem Bericht, daß sie ihre Möncherei nicht für Heiligkeit halten. Das aber halten, daß dieselben Werke ein Gottesdienst seien, dadurch wir vor Gott fromm werden und das ewige Leben verdienen, das ist stracks wider das Evangelium und wider Christum. Denn das Evangelium lehrt, daß wir durch den Glauben an Christum gerecht werden und das ewige Leben erlangen. So ist es auch stracks wider das Wort Christi: „Sie dienen mir vergeblich mit Menschenengeboten.“ So ist es wider diesen Spruch Pauli: „Alles, was nicht aus dem Glauben ist, das ist Sünde.“ Wie können sie aber sagen, daß es Gottesdienste sind, die Gott gefallen und angenehm seien vor ihm, so sie kein Gotteswort noch Befehl haben?

Hier ist aber erst zu merken, wie gar unverschämte Heuchler und Buben sie sind. Sie dürfen sagen, daß ihre Klostergeübde und Orden nicht allein Gottesdienste seien, die gerecht und fromm vor Gott machen, sondern setzen noch dies dazu, daß es Stände seien der Vollkommenheit, das ist, heiligere und höhere Stände denn andere, als Ehestand, Regentenstand; und sind also in solcher ihrer mönchischen Heuchelei und pharisaischem Wesen unzählige andere greuliche, ketzerische Irrtümer begriffen. Denn sie rühmen sich für die allerheiligsten Leute, welche nicht allein die Gebote oder praecepta, sondern auch die consilia, das ist, die hohen Räte, was die Schrift von hohen Gaben nicht ein Gebot, sondern einen Rat gibt, halten. Danach so sie ihnen selbst erbiethen, sie seien so reich von Verdienst und Heiligkeit, daß ihnen noch überbleibt, so sind dennoch die frommen Heiligen so milde, daß sie ihre merita supererogationis, ihre übrigen Verdienste, andern anbieten und um einen gleichen Pfennig, um Geld, lassen zufluchen. Dieses alles ist eitel grobe, greuliche, erlogene, erkunstene Heiligkeit und eitel

Thomas, that the monastic profession is equal to Baptism. It is madness to make human tradition, which has neither God's command nor promise, equal to the ordinance of Christ, which has both the command and promise of God, which contains the covenant of grace and of eternal life.

Secondly. Obedience, poverty, and celibacy, provided the latter is not impure, are, as exercises, adiaphora [in which we are not to look for either sin or righteousness]. And for this reason the saints can use these without impiety, just as Bernard, Franciscus, and other holy men used them. And they used them on account of bodily advantage, that they might have more leisure to teach and to perform other godly offices, and not that the works themselves are, by themselves, works that justify or merit eternal life. Finally, they belong to the class of which Paul says, 1 Tim. 4, 8: Bodily exercise profiteth little. And it is credible that in some places there are also at present good men, engaged in the ministry of the Word, who use these observances without wicked opinions [without hypocrisy and with the understanding that they do not regard their monasticism as holiness]. But to hold that these observances are services on account of which they are accounted just before God, and through which they merit eternal life, conflicts with the Gospel concerning the righteousness of faith, which teaches that for Christ's sake righteousness and eternal life are granted us. It conflicts also with the saying of Christ, Matt. 15, 9: In vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. It conflicts also with this statement, Rom. 14, 23: Whatsoever is not of faith is sin. But how can they affirm that they are services which God approves as righteousness before Him when they have no testimony of God's Word?

But look at the impudence of the adversaries! They not only teach that these observances are justifying services, but they add that these services are more perfect, i. e., meriting more the remission of sins and justification, than do other kinds of life [that they are states of perfection, i. e., holier and higher states than the rest, such as marriage, rulership]. And here many false and pernicious opinions concur. They imagine that they [are the most holy people who] observe [not only] precepts and [but also] counsels [that is, the superior counsels, which Scripture issues concerning exalted gifts, not by way of command, but of advice]. Afterwards these liberal men, since they dream that they have the merits of supererogation, sell these to others. All these things are full of pharisaic vanity. For it is the height of impiety to hold that they satisfy the Decalog in such a way that merits remain, while such precepts as these are accusing all the saints: Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thine heart, Deut. 6, 5. Likewise: Thou shalt not covet, Rom. 7, 7. [For as the First Commandment of God (Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind) is higher than a man upon earth can comprehend, as it is the highest theology, from which all the prophets and all the apostles have drawn as from a spring their best and highest doctrines; yea, as it is such an exalted commandment, according to which alone all divine service, all honor to God, every offering, all thanksgiving in heaven and upon earth, must be regulated and judged, so that all divine service, high and precious and holy though it appear, if it be not in accordance with this commandment, is nothing but husks and shells without a kernel, yea, nothing but filth and abomination before God; which exalted commandment no saint whatever has perfectly fulfilled, so that even Noah and Abraham, David, Peter and Paul acknowledged themselves imperfect and sinners: it is an unheard-of, pharisaic, yea, an actually diabolical pride for a sordid Barefooted monk or any similar godless hypocrite to say, yea, preach and teach, that he has observed and fulfilled the holy high commandment so perfectly, and according to the demands and will of God has done so many good allein aller Gottesdienst, alle Gotteslehre, alle Opfer, alle Dankagung im Himmel und auf Erden reguliert und gerichtet müssen werden, also daß alle Gottesdienste, wie hoch, läßlich und heilig sie scheinen, wenn sie außer dem Gebot sind, eitel Schalen und Hülsen ohne Kern, ja eitel Unflat und Greuel vor Gott sind, welches hohe Gebot so gar kein Heiliger vollkommen erfüllt hat, daß noch wohl Noah und Abraham, David, Petrus und Paulus sich da für unvollkommen, für Sünder bekennen und hier unten bleiben müssen: so ist es ungehörter pharisaischer, ja recht teuflischer Stolz, daß ein laufziger Barfüßermönch oder dergleichen heiloser Heuchler soll sagen, ja predigen und lehren, er habe das heilige, hohe Gebot also vollständig gehalten und erfüllt und nach Erfordern und dem Willen Gottes so viel gute Werke getan, daß ihm noch Verdienste überbleiben. Ja, liebe Heuchler, wenn sich die heiligen zehn Gebote und das hohe erste Gottesgebot also erfüllen ließen, wie sich die Brote und Partelen lassen in Sad fieden! Es sind unverschämte Heuchler, damit die Welt in diesen letzten Zeiten geplatzt ist. Der Prophet David sagt: „Alle Menschen sind Lügner“, das ist, kein Mensch auf Erden, auch nicht die Heiligen achten oder fürchten Gott so hoch und groß, als sie sollten, kein Mensch auf Erden glaubt und vertraut Gott so ganz vollständig, als er soll usw. Darum sind es Lügen und heuchlerische, erdichtete Träume, daß die Mönche rühmen, sie leben nach der Vollkommenheit des Evangelii und der Gebote Gottes, oder tun mehr, denn sie schuldig sind, daß ihnen gute Werke und etliche Zentner übriger, überflüssiger Heiligkeit im Vorrat bleiben.

26) Deinde falsum et hoc est, quod observationes monasticae sint opera consiliorum evangelii. Nam evangelium non consulit discrimina vestitus, ciborum, abdicationem rerum propriarum. Hae sunt traditiones humanae, de quibus omnibus dictum est 1 Cor. 8, 8: Esca non commendat Deo. Quare neque cultus iustificantes sunt, neque perfectio, imo, quum his titulis fucatae proponuntur, sunt merae doctrinae daemoniorum.

27) Virginitas suadet, sed his, qui donum habent, ut supra dictum est. Error est autem perniciosissimus sentire, quod perfectio evangelica sit in traditionibus humanis. Nam ita etiam Mahometistarum monachi gloriari possent se habere perfectionem evangelicam. Neque est in observatione aliorum, quae dicuntur ἀδιάφορα, sed quia regnum Dei est iustitia et vita in cordibus, Rom. 14, 17, ideo perfectio est crescere timorem Dei, fiduciam misericordiae promissae in Christo et curam obediendi vocationi, sicut et Paulus describit perfectionem 2 Cor. 3, 18: Transformamur a [R. 283] claritate in claritatem, tamquam a Domini Spiritu. Non ait: Alium subinde cucullum accipimus aut alios calceos aut alia cingula. Miserabile est in ecclesia tales pharisaicas, imo Mahometicas voces legi atque audiri, videlicet perfectionem evangelii, regni Christi, quod est vita aeterna, in his stultis observationibus vestium et similium nugarum collocari.

gehen von einem Orden in den andern, wir ziehen jehund diese, dann jene Kappe an, jehund diesen Gürtel, dann jenen Strick usw. Es ist erbärmlich, daß in der christlichen Kirche solche pharisaische, ja türkische und mahometische Lehre überhandgenommen hat, daß sie lehren, die evangelische Vollkommenheit und das Reich Christi, durch welches sich hier die ewigen Güter und das ewige Leben anheben, sollen stehen in Rappen, in Kleidern, in Speisen und dergleichen Kinderwerk.

28) Nunc audite Areopagitas nostros, quam indignam sententiam posuerint in Confutatione. Sic aiunt: Sacris literis expressum est monasticam vitam, debita observatione custoditam, quam per gratiam Dei quilibet monastio custodire possunt, mereri vitam aeternam, et quidem multo auctiorem Christus eis promisit Matth. 19, 29, qui reliquerint domum 29) aut fratres etc. Haec sunt verba adver-

Auch so ist das falsch und erlogen, daß das Mönchsleben sollte sein eine Erfüllung der Konfession oder Räte im Evangelio. Denn das Evangelium hat nirgend geraten solchen Unterschied der Kleider, der Speisen, oder durch solchen Bettelstab der Leute Güter auszusaugen; denn es sind eitel Menschenfahrungen, von welchen Paulus sagt: „Die Speise macht uns nicht heiliger vor Gott“ usw. Darum sind es auch nicht Gottesdienste, die vor Gott fromm machen, sind auch nicht eine evangelische Vollkommenheit, sondern wenn man sie mit den prächtigen Titeln lehrt, predigt und ausschreit, so sind's, wie sie Paulus nennt, rechte Teufelslehren.

Die Jungfrauschaft lobt Paulus, und als einen guten Rat predigt er's denen, welche dieselbe Gabe haben, wie ich hier oben gesagt habe. Deshalb ist es ein schändlicher, höllischer Irrtum, lehren und halten, daß evangelische Vollkommenheit in menschlichen Sackungen stehe. Denn auf die Weise möchten sich auch die Mahometisten und Türken rühmen (denn sie haben auch Siefedel und Mönche, wie glaubliche Historien vorhanden), daß sie evangelische Vollkommenheit hielten. So ist auch die evangelische Vollkommenheit nicht in den Dingen, welche Adiaphora sind, sondern die weil dieses das Reich Gottes ist, daß inwendig der Heilige Geist unsere Herzen erleuchte, reinige, stärke, und daß er ein neu Licht und Leben in den Herzen wirke, so ist die rechte evangelische, christliche Vollkommenheit, daß wir täglich im Glauben, in Gottesfurcht, in treulichem Fleiß des Berufs und Amts, das uns befohlen, zunehmen, wie auch Paulus die Vollkommenheit beschreibet, daß er sagt 2 Kor. 3: „Wir werden verklärt in dasselbige Bild von einer Klarheit zu der andern, als vom Geist des Herrn.“ Er sagt nicht: Wir Hier höre man aber weiter die trefflichen Lehrer, wie sie in ihre Konfutation so eine öffentliche Gotteslästerung und häßlich Wort gesetzt haben. Sie dürfen unverschämt sagen, „es sei in der Heiligen Schrift geschrieben, daß das Mönchsleben und die heiligen Orden das ewige Leben verdienen, und Christus habe dasselbe sonderlich den Mönchen überschweniglich zugesagt, welche also verlassen Haus, Hof, Brüder, Schwestern“. Das sind works, that merit even superabounds to him. Yea, dear hypocrites, if the holy Ten Commandments and the exalted First Commandment of God were fulfilled as easily as the bread and remnants are put into the sack! They are shameless hypocrites with whom the world is plagued in this last time.] The prophet says, Ps. 116, 11: All men are liars, i. e., not thinking aright concerning God, not fearing God sufficiently, not believing Him sufficiently. Therefore the monks falsely boast that in the observance of a monastic life the commandments are fulfilled, and more is done than what is commanded [that their good works and several hundredweights of superfluous, superabundant holiness remain in store for them].

Again, this also is false, namely, that monastic observances are works of the counsels of the Gospel. For the Gospel does not advise concerning distinctions of clothing and meats and the renunciation of property. These are human traditions, concerning all of which it has been said, 1 Cor. 8, 8: Meat commendeth us not to God. Therefore they are neither justifying services nor perfection; yea, when they are presented covered with these titles, they are mere doctrines of demons.

Virginity is recommended, but to those who have the gift, as has been said above. It is, however, a most pernicious error to hold that evangelical perfection lies in human traditions. For thus the monks even of the Mohammedans would be able to boast that they have evangelical perfection. Neither does it lie in the observance of other things which are called adiaphora, but because the kingdom of God is righteousness and life in hearts, Rom. 14, 17, perfection is growth in the fear of God, and in confidence in the mercy promised in Christ, and in devotion to one's calling; just as Paul also describes perfection 2 Cor. 3, 18: We are changed from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. He does not say: We are continually receiving another hood, or other sandals, or other girdles. It is deplorable that in the Church such pharisaic, yea, Mohammedan expressions should be read and heard as, that the perfection of the Gospel, of the kingdom of Christ, which is eternal life, should be placed in these foolish observances of vestments and of similar trifles.

Now hear our Areopagites [excellent teachers] as to what an unworthy declaration they have recorded in the Confutation. Thus they say: It has been expressly declared in the Holy Scriptures that the monastic life merits eternal life if maintained by a due observance, which by the grace of God any monk can maintain; and, indeed, Christ has promised this as much more abundant to those who have left home or brothers, etc., Matt. 19, 29. These are the words of the adversaries, in sariorum, in quibus hoc primum impudentissime dicitur, quod sacris literis expressum sit vitam monasticam mereri vitam aeternam. Ubi enim loquuntur sacrae literae de monastica? Sic agunt causam adversarii, sic citant Scripturas nihili homines; quum nemo nesciat monasticam recens excogitatum esse, tamen allegant auctoritatem Scripturae, et quidem dicunt hoc suum decretum expressum esse in Scripturis.

30] Praeterea contumelia afficiunt Christum, quum dicunt homines per monasticam mereri vitam aeternam. Deus ne suae quidem legi hunc honorem tribuit, quod mereatur vitam aeternam, sicut clare dicit apud Ezech., cap. 20, 25: Ego dedi eis praecepta non bona 31] et iudicia, in quibus non vivunt. Primum hoc certum est, quod vita monastica non meretur remissionem peccatorum, sed hanc fide gratis accipimus, ut supra dictum est. Deinde 32] propter Christum, per misericordiam donatur vita aeterna his, qui fide accipiunt remissionem, nec opponunt merita sua iudicio Dei, sicut et Bernhardus gravissime dicit: Necesse est primo omnium credere, quod remissionem peccatorum habere non possis nisi per indulgentiam Dei. Deinde, quod nihil prorsus habere queas operis boni, nisi [R. 284 et hoc dederit ipse. Postremo, quod aeternam vitam nullis potes operibus promereri, nisi gratis detur et illa. Cetera, quae in eandem sententiam sequuntur, supra recitavimus. Addit autem in fine Bernhardus: Nemo se seducat, quia, si bene cogitare voluerit, inveniet procul dubio, quod nec cum decem millibus possit occurrere ei, qui cum viginti mil- 33] libus venit ad se. Quum autem nec divinae legis operibus mereamur remissionem peccatorum aut vitam aeternam, sed necesse sit quaerere misericordiam promissam in Christo, multo minus observationibus monasticis, quum sint merae traditiones humanae, tribuendus est hic honor, quod mereantur remissionem peccatorum aut vitam aeternam.

die klaren Worte der Widersacher. Ist aber das nicht eine ganz unterschämte, häßliche Lüge, es sei in der Heiligen Schrift geschrieben, daß man durch das Mönchsleben könnte das ewige Leben verdienen? Wie seid ihr doch so klug! Wo redet doch die Schrift von Möncherei? Also handeln diese große, treffliche Sache die Widersacher; also führen sie die Schrift ein. Die ganze Welt weiß, die Historien sind vor Augen, daß die Orden und Möncherei ein ganz neu Ding ist; noch [dennoch] dürfen sie rühmen, die Heilige Schrift rede von ihrer Möncherei.

Darüber so lästern sie und schmähen Christum, daß sie sagen, man könne durch Klosterleben das ewige Leben verdienen. Gott tut seinem eigenen Gesetz nicht die Ehre, daß man durch die Werke des Gesetzes sollte das ewige Leben verdienen, wie er klar sagt Ezech. am 20.: „Ich habe ihnen gegeben Gesetze, dadurch sie das Leben nicht haben können.“ Denn für das erste ist das gewiß, daß durch Möncherei niemand kann das ewige Leben verdienen, sondern um Christus' Verdienstes willen, durch lauter Barmherzigkeit, wird das ewige Leben gegeben denjenigen, so durch den Glauben Verggebung der Sünden erlangen und halten denselben gegen Gottes Urteil, nicht ihr armes Verdienst. Wie auch St. Bernhard ein sein Wort geredet hat: „daß wir Verggebung der Sünden nicht haben können denn allein durch Gottes Gnade und Güte“; item, „daß wir gar nichts von guten Werken haben können, wenn er es nicht gibt“; item, „daß wir das ewige Leben nicht verdienen können mit Werken, sondern es werde uns auch aus Gnaden gegeben“. Und dergleichen redet St. Bernhard viel auf dieselbe Meinung, wie wir oben erzählt. Und am Ende setzt noch St. Bernhard dazu: „Darum wolle niemand darin sich selbst betrügen noch verführen; denn wird er's selbst recht bedenken, so wird er gewiß finden, daß er mit zehntausend dem nicht kann entgegenkommen (nämlich Gott), der mit zwanzigtausend auf ihn zudringt.“ So wir denn auch nicht durch die Werke des göttlichen Gesetzes Verggebung der Sünden oder das ewige Leben verdienen, sondern müssen die Barmherzigkeit suchen, welche in Christo verheißen ist, so verdienen wir es viel weniger durch Klosterleben, Möncherei, das eitel Menschenfahrungen sind, und soll die Ehre viel weniger den bettelischen Sätzungen gegeben werden.

Diejenigen, die da lehren, daß wir durch Möncherei können Verggebung der Sünden verdienen, und setzen also das Vertrauen, welches Christo allein gebührt, auf die elenden Sätzungen, die treten schlecht das heilige Evangelium und die Verheißung von Christo mit Füßen; und für den Heiland Christum ehren sie ihre schändlichen Rappen, ihre mönchischen tolen Werke. Und so es ihnen noch selbst fehlt an Gnade, so tun sie als die gottlosen, heillosen Leute, daß sie noch ihre merita supererogationis erdichten und andern Leuten das übrige Zell am Himmel verkaufen.

Wir reden hier desto kürzer von dieser Sache; denn aus dem, so droben geredet von der Buße, de iustificatione, von Menschenfahrungen usw., ist genug zu merken, daß die Klostergebilde nicht der Schatz sind, dadurch wir erlöst und erlangen ein ewiges Leben usw. Und so Christus dieselben Sätzungen nennt vergebliche Gottesdienste, so sind sie in keinem Wege eine evangelische Vollkommenheit.

which it is first said most impudently that it is expressed in the Holy Scriptures that a monastic life merits eternal life. For where do the Holy Scriptures speak of a monastic life? Thus the adversaries plead their case, thus men of no account quote the Scriptures. Although no one is ignorant that the monastic life has recently been devised, nevertheless they cite the authority of Scripture, and say, too, that this their decree has been expressly declared in the Scriptures.

Besides, they dishonor Christ when they say that by monasticism men merit eternal life. God has ascribed not even to His Law the honor that it should merit eternal life, as He clearly says in Ezek. 20, 25: I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live. In the first place, it is certain that a monastic life does not merit the remission of sins, but we obtain this by faith freely, as has been said above. Secondly, for Christ's sake, through mercy, eternal life is granted to those who by faith receive remission, and do not set their own merits against God's judgment, as Bernard also says with very great force: It is necessary first of all to believe that you cannot have the remission of sins unless by God's indulgence. Secondly, that you can have no good work whatever, unless He has given also this. Lastly, that you can merit eternal life by no works, unless this also is given freely. The rest that follows to the same effect we have above recited. Moreover, Bernard adds at the end: Let no one deceive himself, because if he will reflect well, he will undoubtedly find that with ten thousand he cannot meet Him [namely, God] who cometh against him with twenty thousand. Since, however, we do not merit the remission of sins or eternal life by the works of the divine Law, but it is necessary to seek the mercy promised in Christ, much less is this honor of meriting the remission of sins or eternal life to be ascribed to monastic observances, since they are mere human traditions.

Thus those who teach that the monastic life merits the remission of sins or eternal life, and transfer the confidence due Christ to these foolish observances, altogether suppress the Gospel concerning the free remission of sins and the promised mercy in Christ that is to be apprehended. Instead of Christ they worship their own hoods and their own filth. But since even they need mercy, they act wickedly in fabricating works of supererogation, and selling them [their superfluous claim upon heaven] to others.

We speak the more briefly concerning these subjects, because from those things which we have said above concerning justification, concerning repentance, concerning human traditions, it is sufficiently evident that monastic vows are not a price on account of which the remission of sins and life eternal are granted. And since Christ calls traditions useless services, they are in no way evangelical perfection.

36] Verum adversarii videri volunt astute moderari vulgarem persuasionem de perfectione. Negant monasticam vitam perfectionem esse, sed dicunt statum esse acquirendae perfectionis. Belle dictum est, et meminimus hanc correctionem exstare apud Gersonem. Apparet enim prudentes viros offensos immodicis illis encomiis vitae monasticae, quum non auderent in totum detrahere ei [R. 285 laudem perfectionis, addidisse hanc ἐπαινόρ-θωσιν, quod sit status acquirendae perfectionis] nis. Hoc si sequimur, nihilo magis erit monastica status perfectionis quam vita agricolae aut fabri. Nam hi quoque sunt status acquirendae perfectionis. Omnes enim homines in quacunque vocatione perfectionem expetere debent, hoc est, crescere in timore Dei, in fide, in dilectione proximi et similibus virtutibus spiritualibus.

38] Exstant in historiis eremitarum exempla, Antonii et aliorum, quae exaequant genera vitae. Scribitur Antonio petenti, ut Deus sibi ostenderet, quantum in hoc vitae genere proficeret, quendam in urbe Alexandria autorem monstratum esse per somnium, cui compararetur. Postridie Antonius veniens in urbem accedit ad autorem, exploraturus illius exercitia et dona; collocutus cum homine nihil audit, nisi mane eum pro universa civitate paucis verbis orare, deinde arti suae operam dare. Hic intellexit Antonius non esse iustificationem tribuendam illi vitae generi, quod susceperat.

der Schuster: Ich tue nichts Besonderes; denn morgens spreche ich mein Gebet für die ganze Stadt und arbeite danach mein Handwerk, warte meines Hauses usw. Da verstand Antonius bald, was Gott durch die Offenbarung gemeint hätte. Denn man wird nicht durch dies oder jenes Leben vor Gott gerecht, sondern allein durch den Glauben an Christum.

39] Sed adversarii, etsi nunc moderantur laudes de perfectione, tamen aliter reipsa sentiunt. Vendunt enim merita et applicant pro aliis hoc praetextu, quod observent praecepta et consilia, quare reipsa sentiunt sibi superesse merita. Quid est autem arrogare sibi perfectionem, si hoc non est? Deinde in ipsa Confutatione positum est, quod monastici contendant propius secundum evangelium vivere. Tribuit igitur perfectionem traditionibus humanis, si ideo propius secundum evangelium vivunt monachi, quia non habent proprium, quia sunt coelibes, quia obediunt regulae in vestitu, cibis et similibus nugis.

dung oder Kappe trägt, also fastet, also betet: so ist ja ihre Meinung, daß ihre Möncherei christliche Vollkommenheit sei, biweil sie dem Evangelio näher

40] Item, Confutatio dicit monachos mereri vitam aeternam auctiorem, et allegat Scripturam, Matth. 19, 29: Qui reliquerit domum etc.; scilicet, hic quoque perfectionem arrogat factitiis religionibus. Sed hic locus Scripturae nihil facit ad vitam monasticam. Non enim hoc vult Christus, quod deserere [R. 286 parentes, coniugem, fratres sit opus ideo faciendum, quia mereatur remissionem peccatorum et vitam aeternam. Imo maledicta est illa desertio. Fit enim cum contumelia

Noch haben etliche vernünftige Mönche etne Scheu gehabt, ihre Möncherei so hoch zu rühmen, daß sie sollte christliche Vollkommenheit heißen. Die haben diesen hohen Ruhm gemäßiget, haben gesagt, es sei nicht christliche Vollkommenheit, sondern es sei ein Stand, der dazu dienen soll, christliche Vollkommenheit zu suchen. Solcher Mäßigung gedenkt auch Gerson und verwirft die unchristliche Rede, daß Möncherei christliche Vollkommenheit sei. Wo nun Möncherei nur ein Stand ist, Vollkommenheit zu suchen, so ist's nicht mehr ein Stand der Vollkommenheit denn der Bauern und Ackerleute, der Schneider und Bäcker Leben usw. Denn das alles sind auch Stände, christliche Vollkommenheit zu suchen. Denn alle Menschen, sie seien, in was Stände sie wollen, ein jeder nach seinem Beruf, so sollen sie nach der Vollkommenheit, solange dies Leben währt, streben und allzeit zunehmen in Gottesfurcht, im Glauben, in Liebe gegen den Nächsten und dergleichen geistlichen Gaben.

Man liest in vitis patrum von St. Antonio und etlichen andern großen heiligen Einfiedeln, welche durch Erfahrung dahin sind endlich gekommen, daß sie gemerkt, daß sie ihre Werke vor Gott nicht mehr fromm machen denn anderer Stände Werke. Denn St. Antonius hat auf eine Zeit Gott gebeten, daß er ihm doch zeigen wolle, wie weit er gekommen wäre ins Leben der Vollkommenheit. Da ward ihm angezeigt ein Schuster zu Alexandria und ward ihm gesagt, dem Handwerksmanne wäre er in Heiligkeit gleich. Bald den andern Tag machte sich Antonius auf, zog gen Alexandria, sprach denselben Schuster an und fragte mit Fleiß, was er für einen heiligen Wandel, Leben und Wesen führte. Da antwortete ihm

Die Widersacher aber, wiewohl sie sich sekund auch schämen, die Möncherei Vollkommenheit zu nennen, so halten sie es doch im Grund dafür. Denn sie verkaufen ihre Werke und Verdienste und geben vor, sie halten nicht allein die Gebote, sondern die consilia und Räte, und wähen, sie behalten Verdienst noch übrig. Heißt das nun nicht mit der Lai Vollkommenheit und Heiligkeit rühmen, wenn sie gleich mit Worten ein wenig die Sache mäßigen? Auch ist klar gesetzt in der Confutation, daß die Mönche näher und genauer nach dem Evangelio leben denn andere Weltliche. Wo nun ihre Meinung ist, daß man dadurch dem Evangelio näher lebt, wenn man nichts Eigenes hat, außerhalb der Ehe lebt, eine sonderliche Kleidung, außer der Kappe trägt, also fastet, also betet: so ist ja ihre Meinung, daß ihre Möncherei christliche Vollkommenheit sei, biweil sie dem Evangelio näher sein soll denn gemein Leben.

Item, in der Confutation steht geschrieben, daß die Mönche das ewige Leben reichlicher erlangen denn andere, und ziehen an die Schrift: „Wer Haus und Hof verläßt“ usw. Da rühmen sie auch eine Vollkommenheit, welche soll an der Möncherei sein. Aber der Spruch redet nichts von der Möncherei. Denn Christus will da nicht, daß Vater, Mutter, Weib, Kind, Haus und Hof verlassen ein solch Werk sei, damit man Vergeltung der Sünden und das ewige Leben verdiene, sondern auf die Weise Vater und Mutter verlassen,

But the adversaries cunningly wish to appear as if they modify the common opinion concerning perfection. They say that a monastic life is not perfection, but that it is a state in which to acquire perfection. It is prettily phrased! We remember that this correction is found in Gerson. For it is apparent that prudent men, offended by these immoderate praises of monastic life, since they did not venture to remove entirely from it the praise of perfection, have added the correction that it is a state in which to acquire perfection. If we follow this, monasticism will be no more a state of perfection than the life of a farmer or mechanic. For these are also states in which to acquire perfection. For all men, in every vocation, ought to seek perfection, that is, to grow in the fear of God, in faith, in love towards one's neighbor, and similar spiritual virtues.

In the histories of the hermits there are examples of Anthony and of others which make the various spheres of life equal. It is written that when Anthony asked God to show him what progress he was making in this kind of life, a certain shoemaker in the city of Alexandria was indicated to him in a dream to whom he should be compared. The next day Anthony came into the city, and went to the shoemaker in order to ascertain his exercises and gifts, and, having conversed with the man, heard nothing except that early in the morning he prayed in a few words for the entire state, and then attended to his trade. Here Anthony learned that justification is not to be ascribed to the kind of life which he had entered [what God had meant by the revelation; for we are justified before God not through this or that life, but alone through faith in Christ].

But although the adversaries now moderate their praises concerning perfection, yet they actually think otherwise. For they sell merits, and apply them on behalf of others, under the pretext that they are observing precepts and counsels; hence they actually hold that they have superfluous merits. But what is it to arrogate to one's self perfection, if this is not? Again, it has been laid down in the Confutation that the monks endeavor to live more nearly in accordance with the Gospel. Therefore it ascribes perfection to human traditions if they are living more nearly in accordance with the Gospel by not having property, being unmarried, and obeying the rule in clothing, meats, and like trifles.

Again, the Confutation says that the monks merit eternal life the more abundantly, and quotes Scripture, Matt. 19, 29: Every one that hath forsaken houses, etc. Accordingly, here, too, it claims perfection also for factitious religious rites. But this passage of Scripture in no way favors monastic life. For Christ does not mean that to forsake parents, wife, brethren, is a work that must be done because it merits the remission of sins and eternal life. Yea, such a forsaking is cursed. For if any one forsakes parents or wife in order by this very work to merit the remis-

Christi, si quis ideo deserat parentes aut coniugem, ut hoc ipso opere mereatur remissionem peccatorum et vitam aeternam.

41 Duplex autem desertio est. Quaedam sit sine vocatione, sine mandato Dei; hanc non probat Christus, Matth. 15, 9. Nam opera a nobis electa sunt inutiles cultus. Clarius autem hinc apparet Christum non probare hanc fugam, quia loquitur de deserenda uxore et liberis. Scimus autem, quod mandatum Dei prohibet deserere uxorem et liberos. Alia desertio est, quae sit mandato Dei, videlicet quum cogit nos potestas aut tyrannis cedere, aut negare evangelium. Hic habemus mandatum, ut potius sustineamus iniuriam, potius eripi nobis patiamur non solum facultates, coniugem, liberos, sed vitam quoque. Hanc desertionem probat Christus ideoque addit: propter evangelium, ut significet se de his loqui, non qui faciunt iniuriam uxori et liberis, sed qui propter confessionem evangelii 42] sustinent iniuriam. Corpus nostrum etiam deserere debemus propter evangelium. Hic ridiculum fuerit sentire, quod cultus Dei sit se ipsum occidere et relinquere corpus sine mandato Dei. Ita ridiculum est sentire, quod cultus Dei sit deserere possessiones, amicos, coniugem, liberos sine mandato Dei.

Leben zu lassen um des Evangeliums willen. Da wäre es nun närrisch und ganz widersinnig verstanden, wenn ich mich selbst töten wollte ohne Gottes Befehl. Also ist es auch närrisch, daß für Heiligkeit und Gottesdienst halten, daß ich aus eigenem Vornehmen

43] Constat igitur male detorqueri dictum Christi ad vitam monasticam. Nisi fortassis hoc quadrat, quod centuplum in hac vita recipiunt. Plurimi enim sunt monachi non propter evangelium, sed propter culinam et otium, qui pro exiguis patrimoniis inveniunt 44] amplissimas opes. Sed ut tota res monastica simulationis plena est, ita falso praetextu testimonia Scripturae citant, ut dupliciter peccent, hoc est, ut fallant homines, et fallant praetextu nominis divini.

45] Citatur et alius locus de perfectione, Matth. 19, 21: Si vis perfectus esse, [R. 287] vade, vende, quae habes, et da pauperibus et veni et sequere me. Hic locus exercuit multos, qui sinnerunt perfectionem esse, possessiones ac dominia rerum abiicere. Sinaismus philosophos Aristippum praedicare, qui magnum auri pondus abiicit in mare. Talia exempla nihil pertinent ad Christianam perfectionem. Rerum divisio, dominia et possessio sunt ordinationes civiles, approbatae Verbo Dei in praecepto, Exod. 20, 15: Non furtum facies. Desertio facultatum non habet mandatum aut consilium in Scripturis. Nam evangelica paupertas non est desertio rerum, sed non esse avarum, non confidere opibus, sicut David pauper erat in ditissimo regno.

gefaßt Gott gar nichts und ist in die Hölle vermalebdt. Denn wenn jemand darum Eltern, Haus, Hof verläßt, daß er dadurch will Vergebung der Sünden und das ewige Leben verdienen, da läßert er Christum.

Es ist aber zweierlei Verlassen. Eins geschieht aus Beruf und Gottes Gebot. Das Verlassen, welches ohne Beruf und Gottes Gebot geschieht, das läßt ihm [sich] der Herr Christus gar nicht gefallen. Denn die Worte, wo wir selbst erwählen, nennt der Herr Christus unnütze, vergebliche Gottesdienste. Man sieht aber daraus noch klarer, daß Christus nicht meint ein solches Fliehen von Weib und Kind; er sagt: „Wer da verläßt Weib, Kind, Haus, Hof“ usw. Nun wissen wir, daß Gott geboten hat, Weib, Kind nicht zu verlassen. Es ist aber ein ander Verlassen, wenn wir aus Gottes Gebot verlassen Eltern, Weib, Kind usw., und wenn wir es selbst vornehmen. Denn wenn Tyrannen mich wollten zwingen, das Evangelium zu verleugnen, oder berjagen, da haben wir Gottes Befehl, daß wir sollen eher Unrecht leiden, als daß wir nicht allein von Weib und Kindern, Haus und Hof vertrieben werden, sondern auch, daß man uns unser Weib und Leben nimmt. Von dem Verlassen redet Christus, darum setzt er auch dazu: „um des Evangeliums willen“, und zeigt genug an, daß er von denen rede, die um des Evangeliums willen leiden, nicht Weib und Kind aus eigenem Vornehmen verlassen. Denn wir sind auch schuldig, unser eigen

Leben zu lassen um des Evangeliums willen. Da wäre es nun närrisch und ganz widersinnig verstanden, wenn ich mich selbst töten wollte ohne Gottes Befehl. Also ist es auch närrisch, daß für Heiligkeit und Gottesdienst halten, daß ich aus eigenem Vornehmen

Derhalben wird der Spruch Christi übel auf die Möncherei gedeutet. Es möchte sich aber das auf die Mönche reimen, daß sie Hundertfältiges in diesem Leben empfangen. Denn viele werden Mönche um des Reichs willen, und daß sie Mühsigang und heisse Rücken haben, da sie als Bettler dennoch in reiche Klöster kommen. Wie aber die ganze Möncherei voll Heuchelei ist und Betrugs, also ziehen sie auch die Schrift fälschlich an, tun also zweierlei schreckliche Sünde: für eins, daß sie die Welt mit Abgötterei betrügen; zum andern, daß sie Gottes Namen und Wort fälschlich anziehen, ihre Abgötterei zu schmücken.

Auch so wird ein Spruch angezogen: „So du willst vollkommen sein, so gehe, verkaufe alles, was du hast, und gib's den Armen und folge mir nach.“ Der Spruch hat vielen zu schaffen gemacht, daß sie haben wollen wäñhen, das sei die höchste Heiligkeit und Vollkommenheit, nicht Eigenes haben, nicht Haus, Hof, Güter haben. Es mögen aber die Synici, als Diogenes, der kein Haus haben wollte, sondern lag in einem Faß, solche heidnische Heiligkeit rühmen; christliche Heiligkeit steht viel auf höheren Sachen denn auf solcher Heuchelei. Denn Güter haben, Haus und Hof, sind weltlicher Regimente Ordnungen, welche durch Gott bekätigt sind, als im siebenten Gebot: „Du sollst nicht stehlen“ usw. Darum Güter, Haus und Hof verlassen, ist in der Schrift nicht geboten noch geraten. Denn evangelische, christliche Armut steht nicht darin, daß ich die Güter verlasse, sondern daß ich nicht darauf vertraue, gleichwie David gleichwohl arm war bei einer großen Gewalt und Königtich.

sion of sins or eternal life, this is done with dishonor to Christ.

There is, moreover, a twofold forsaking. One occurs without a call, without God's command; this Christ does not approve, Matt. 15, 9. For the works chosen by us are useless services. But that Christ does not approve this flight appears the more clearly from the fact that He speaks of forsaking wife and children. We know, however, that God's commandment forbids the forsaking of wife and children. The forsaking which occurs by God's command is of a different kind, namely, when power or tyranny compels us either to depart or to deny the Gospel. Here we have the command that we should rather bear injury, that we should rather suffer not only wealth, wife, and children, but even life, to be taken from us. This forsaking Christ approves, and accordingly He adds: For the Gospel's sake, Mark 10, 29, in order to signify that He is speaking not of those who do injury to wife and children, but who bear injury on account of the confession of the Gospel. For the Gospel's sake we ought even to forsake our body. Here it would be ridiculous to hold that it would be a service to God to kill one's self, and without God's command to leave the body. So, too, it is ridiculous to hold that it is a service to God without God's command to forsake possessions, friends, wife, children.

Therefore it is evident that they wickedly distort Christ's word to a monastic life. Unless perhaps the declaration that they "receive a hundredfold in this life" be in place here. For very many become monks not on account of the Gospel, but on account of sumptuous living and idleness, who find the most ample riches instead of slender patrimonies. But as the entire subject of monasticism is full of shams, so, by a false pretext, they quote testimonies of Scripture, and as a consequence they sin doubly, i. e., they deceive men, and that, too, under the pretext of the divine name.

Another passage is also cited concerning perfection Matt. 19, 21: If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come and follow Me. This passage has exercised many, who have imagined that it is perfection to cast away possessions and the control of property. Let us allow the philosophers to extol Aristippus, who cast a great weight of gold into the sea. [Cynics like Diogenes, who would have no house, but lay in a tub, may commend such heathenish holiness.] Such examples pertain in no way to Christian perfection. [Christian holiness consists in much higher matters than such hypocrisy.] The division, control, and possession of property are civil ordinances, approved by God's Word in the commandment, Ex. 20, 15: Thou shalt not steal. The abandonment of property has no command or advice in the Scriptures. For evangelical poverty does not consist in the abandonment of property, but in not being avaricious, in not trusting in wealth, just as David was poor in a most wealthy kingdom.

47] Quare quum desertio facultatum sit mere traditio humana, est inutilis cultus. Et immodica sunt illa encomia in Extravagante, quae ait abdicationem proprietatis omnium rerum propter Deum meritoriam et sanctam et viam perfectionis esse. Et periculosissimum est rem pugnantem cum civili consuetudine talibus immoderatis laudibus efferre. 48] At Christus hic perfectionem vocat. Imo iniuriam faciunt textui, qui truncatum allegant. Perfectio est in hoc, quod addit Christus: Sequere me. Exemplum obedientiae in vocatione propositum est. Et quia vocationes dissimiles sunt, ita haec vocatio non est omnium, sed proprie ad illam personam, cum qua ibi loquitur Christus, pertinet, sicut vocatio Davidi ad regnum, Abrahami ad mactandum filium non sunt nobis imitandae. Vocationes sunt personales, sicut negotia ipsa variant temporibus et personis; sed exemplum obedientiae est generale. Perfectio erat futura illi iuveni, si huic vocationi credidisset et obedivisset. Ita perfectio nobis est obedire unumquemque vera fide suae vocationi.

Verus, daß er König werden sollte, nicht alle betrifft; Abrahams Verus, daß er seinen Sohn opfern sollte, betrifft nicht andere. Also sind die Verufe ungleich; aber der Gehorsam soll gleich sein, und darin steht Vollkommenheit, so ich in meinem Verus gehorsam bin, nicht so ich mich eines fremden Verus annehme, da ich nicht Befehl oder Gottes Gebot von habe.

51] Tertio. In votis monasticis promittitur castitas. Supra autem diximus de [R. 288 coniugio sacerdotum, non posse votis aut legibus tolli ius naturae in hominibus. Et quia non omnes habent donum continentiae, multi propter imbecillitatem infelicitur continent. Neque vero ulla vota aut ullae leges possunt abolere mandatum Spiritus Sancti, 1 Cor. 7, 2: Propter fornicationem unusquisque habeat uxorem suam. Quare hoc votum non est licitum in his, qui non habent donum continentiae, sed propter imbecillitatem contaminantur. De hoc toto loco satis supra dictum est, in quo profecto mirum est, quum versentur ob oculos pericula et scandala, tamen adversarios defendere suas traditiones contra manifestum Dei praeceptum. Nec commovet eos vox Christi, qui obiurgat Pharisaeos, Matth. 23, 13 sqq., qui traditiones contra mandatum Dei fecerant.

53] Quarto. Liberant hos, qui vivunt in monasteriis, impii cultus, quales sunt profanatio missae ad quaestum collatae pro mortuis, cultus sanctorum, in quibus duplex vitium est, et quod sancti in locum Christi surrogantur et impie coluntur, sicut sinxerunt Dominicastrum rosarium beatae Virginis, quod est mera patrologia non minus stulta quam impia, vanissimam fiduciam alens. Deinde hae ipsae impietates tantum conferuntur ad 54] quaestum. Item, evangelium de gratuita remissione peccatorum propter Christum, de iustitia fidei, de vera poenitentia, de operibus, quae habent mandatum Dei, neque audiunt neque docent. Sed versantur aut in philosophicis disputationibus aut in traditionibus ceremoniarum, quae obscurant Christum.

Darum diemeil solch Verlassen der Güter nichts ist denn eine menschliche Sägung, so ist es ein unnützer Gottesdienst. Und des Papsts Extravagant rühmt und lobt auch viel zu hoch solche mönchische, heuchlerische Armut, da sie sagt, nicht Eigenes haben um Gottes willen sei ein verdienstlich, heilig Ding und ein Weg der Vollkommenheit. Wenn unerfahrene Leute solch Rühmen hören, fallen sie darauf, es sei unschicklich, in Gütern sitzen; daraus folgen denn viele Irrtümer und Aufruhre. Durch solch Rühmen ist Möncher betrogen worden, und werden dadurch viele Anabaptisten verführt. Sie sprechen aber: Hat's doch Christus selbst Vollkommenheit genannt. Da sage ich nein zu; denn sie tun dem Text Gewalt, daß sie ihn nicht ganz ansehen. Vollkommenheit steht in diesem Stüd, da Christus spricht: „Folge mir nach!“ Und darin steht eines jeden Christen Vollkommenheit, daß er Christo folge, ein jeder nach seinem Verus; und sind doch die Verufe ungleich; einer wird berufen zu einem Regenten, der andere zu einem Hausvater, der dritte zu einem Prediger. Darum, ob schon jener Jüngling berufen ist, daß er verkaufen sollte, betrifft sein Verus nicht andere, wie Davids Für das dritte, eins von den Substantialklostergelübden ist die Keuschheit. Nun haben wir oben von der Priesterere gesagt, daß man durch kein Gesetz oder Klostergelübde natürlich oder göttlich Recht ändern kann; und so nicht alle Leute die Gabe der Keuschheit haben, so halten sie auch dieselben, daß Gott geflagt sei. So können auch keine Klostergelübde noch Gesetze dem Heiligen Geist sein Gebot ändern, da Paulus sagt: „Eure rei zu vermeiden, habe ein jeglicher sein eigen Eheweib.“ Darum sind die Klostergelübde nicht christlich in denen, welche nicht haben die Gabe der Keuschheit, sondern fallen und machen's ärger aus Schwachheit. Von dem Artikel haben wir hier oben gesagt, und ist wahrlich Wunder, so die Widersacher vor Augen sehen so viele, unzählige Fährlichkeiten der Gewissen und Ärgernisse, daß sie nichtsdestoweniger als die törichten, rasenden Leute bringen auf solche Menschenfügungen wider das öffentliche Gottesgebot und sehen nicht, daß der Herr Christus so ernstlich strafft die Pharisäer, welche Sägungen wider Gottes Gebot lehrten.

Zum vierten, so sollte doch jedermann vom Klosterleben abschrecken der greuliche, schreckliche Mißbrauch der Messen, welche gehalten werden für Lebendige und für die Toten; item, das Anrufen der Heiligen, das alles auf Geiz, auf eitel Teufelsgreuel gerichtet ist. Denn am Anrufen der Heiligen ist zweierlei Greuel: der eine, daß der Heiligen Dienst auf Geiz gerichtet ist; der andere, daß die Heiligen werden gesetzt an Christus' Statt, und daß sie werden abgöttisch angebetet und für Mittler gegen Gott gehalten, wie allein die Predigermönche (schweige [geschweige denn] unzählige tolle Träume der andern Mönche) mit der Brüderschaft des Rosenkranzes eine rechte unterschämte Abgötterei haben angerichtet, welches [worüber] jeßund Feinde und Freunde selbst spotten. Item, das Evangelium, welches da predigt Vergebung der Sünden um Christus' willen, von rechter Buße,

Therefore, since the abandonment of property is merely a human tradition, it is a useless service. Excessive also are the praises in the Extravagant, which says that the abdication of the ownership of all things for God's sake is meritorious and holy, and a way of perfection. And it is very dangerous to extol with such excessive praises a matter conflicting with political order. [When inexperienced people hear such commendations, they conclude that it is unchristian to hold property; whence many errors and seditions follow; through such commendations Muentzer was deceived, and thereby many Anabaptists were led astray.] But [they say] Christ here speaks of perfection. Yea, they do violence to the text who quote it mutilated. Perfection is in that which Christ adds: Follow Me. An example of obedience in one's calling is here presented. And as callings are unlike [one is called to rulership, a second to be father of a family, a third to be a preacher], so this calling does not belong to all, but pertains properly to that person with whom Christ there speaks, just as the call of David to the kingdom, and of Abraham to slay his son, are not to be imitated by us. Callings are personal, just as matters of business themselves vary with times and persons; but the example of obedience is general. Perfection would have belonged to that young man if he had believed and obeyed this vocation. Thus perfection with us is that every one with true faith should obey his own calling. [Not that I should undertake a strange calling for which I have not the commission or command of God.]

Thirdly. In monastic vows chastity is promised. We have said above, however, concerning the marriage of priests, that the law of nature [or of God] in men cannot be removed by vows or enactments. And as all do not have the gift of continence, many because of weakness are unsuccessfully continent. Neither, indeed, can any vows or any enactments abolish the command of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 7, 2: To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife. Therefore this vow is not lawful in those who do not have the gift of continence, but who are polluted on account of weakness. Concerning this entire topic enough has been said above, in regard to which indeed it is strange, since the dangers and scandals are occurring before men's eyes, that the adversaries still defend their traditions contrary to the manifest command of God. Neither does the voice of Christ move them, who chides the Pharisees, Matt. 23, 13 f., who had made traditions contrary to God's command.

Fourthly. Those who live in monasteries are released from their vows by such godless ceremonies as of the Mass applied on behalf of the dead for the sake of gain; the worship of saints, in which the fault is twofold, both that the saints are put in Christ's place, and that they are wickedly worshiped, just as the Dominicasters invented the rosary of the Blessed Virgin, which is mere babbling, not less foolish than it is wicked, and nourishes the most vain presumption. Then, too, these very impieties are applied only for the sake of gain. Likewise, they neither hear nor teach the Gospel concerning the free remission of sins for Christ's sake, concerning the righteousness of faith, concerning true repentance, concerning works which have God's command.

von rechten guten Werken, die Gottes Befehl haben, hören sie nicht, sie lehren's auch nicht, sondern lehren aus ihren Predigten Fabeln von Heiligen und eigenerdichtete Werke, dadurch Christus wird unterdrückt. Das alles haben die Bischöfe leiden können.

55] Non hic dicemus de illo toto cultu ceremoniarum, de lectionibus, cantu et similibus rebus, quae poterant tolerari, si haberentur pro exercitiis, sicut lectiones in scholis, quarum finis est docere audientes et inter docendum aliquos commovere ad timorem aut fidem. Sed nunc fingunt has ceremonias esse [R. 289 cultus Dei, qui mereantur remissionem peccatorum ipsis et aliis. Ideo enim augent has ceremonias. Quodsi susciperent ad docendos et adhortandos auditores, breves et accuratae lectiones plus prodesse quam illae infinitae 56] βαρτολομαίαι. Ita tota vita monastica plena est hypocrisis et falsis opinionibus. Ad haec omnia accedit et hoc periculum, quod, qui sunt in illis collegiis, coguntur assentiri persequentibus veritatem. Multi igitur graves et magnae rationes sunt, quae liberant bonos viros ab hoc vitae genere.

Christum. Darüber ist noch die Fährlichkeit dabei, daß diejenigen, die also in Stiften oder Klöstern fromme, reibliche Leute das Klosterleben stehen oder auch verlassen mögen.

57] Postremo multos liberant ipsi canones, qui aut illiciti artibus monachorum sine iudicio voverunt, aut coacti ab amicis voverunt. Talia vota ne canones quidem pronuntiant esse vota. Ex his omnibus apparet plurimas esse causas, quae docent vota monastica, qualia hactenus facta sunt, non esse vota, quare tuto deseri potest vitae genus plenum hypocrisis et falsarum opinionum.

58] Hic obiciunt ex lege Nazaraeos, Num. 6, 2 sqq. Sed hi non suscipiebant vota sua cum his opinionibus, quas hactenus diximus nos reprehendere in votis monachorum. Nazaraeorum ritus erat exercitium aut protestatio fidei coram hominibus; non merebatur remissionem peccatorum coram Deo, non iustificabat coram Deo. Deinde sicut nunc circumcisio aut mactatio victimarum non esset cultus, ita nec ritus Nazaraeorum nunc debet proponi tamquam cultus, sed debet iudicari simpliciter ἀδιόφορον. Non igitur recte confertur monachus sine verbo Dei excogitatus, ut sit cultus, qui mereatur remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem, cum ritu Nazaraeorum, qui habebat verbum Dei, nec traditus erat in hoc, ut mereretur remissionem peccatorum, sed ut esset exercitium externum sicut aliae caeremoniae legis. Idem de aliis votis in lege traditis dici potest.

der Nazarder Stand, welchen Gott befohlen hatte, und war nicht dazu erdacht, daß die Nazarder dadurch sollten erlangen einen gnädigen Gott, sondern daß es eine äußerliche Zucht und Übung wäre des Leibes wie andere Ceremonien im Gesetz Moses. Item, gleich daselbe ist auch von andern mancherlei Gelübden, die im Gesetz Moses gesetzt werden, zu antworten.

59] Allegantur et Rechabitae, qui nec sessiones habebant ulla, nec vinum [R. 290 bibebant, ut scribit Ieremias cap. 35, 6 sq. Scilicet pulchre quadrat exemplum Rechabitarum ad monachos nostros, quorum mona-

Wir wollen hier geschweigen der unzähligen kindischen Ceremonien und närrischen Gottesdienste mit Vokationen, mit Gesängen und dergleichen, welche zum Teil möchten zu bulden sein, wenn sie ein Maß hätten und zu guter Übung gebraucht würden, wie man der Vokationen in der Schule und der Predigt dazu gebraucht, daß die Zuhörer davon sich bessern. Aber nun erdichten sie ihnen selbst, daß solche mancherlei Ceremonien sollen Gottesdienste sein, Vergebung der Sünden dadurch zu verdienen ihnen selbst und andern; darum machen sie auch ohne Unterlaß neue Ceremonien. Denn wenn sie solche Kirchendienste und Ceremonien dahin richteten, daß die Jugend und der gemeine Mann möchte geübt werden in Gottes Wort, so wären kurze und fleißige Vokationen viel nützer denn ihr Geplärre im Chor, das weder Maß noch Ende hat. Also ist das ganze Klosterleben gar voll Abgötterei und voll heuchlerischer Irrtümer wider das erste und andere Gebot, wider daß diejenigen, die also in Stiften oder Klöstern Darüber, so sprechen die Canones selbst diejenigen los, die überredet sind mit guten Worten, ehe sie zu ihrem rechten Alter gekommen sind, oder welche die Freunde wider ihren Willen in ein Kloster verstoßen haben. Aus dem allem erscheint, daß viele Ursachen sind, welche da anzeigen, daß die Klostergelübde, welche bisher geschehen sind, nicht rechte christliche, bündige Gelübde sind. Darum mag man das Klosterleben mit gutem Gewissen verlassen, nachdem [da] es voll Heuchelei und allerlei Greuel ist.

Hier werfen uns die Widersacher vor die Nazarder [Naziräer] im Gesetz Moses. Aber die taten ihre Gelübde nicht der Meinung, dadurch Vergebung der Sünden zu erlangen, wie wir oben von den Mönchsgelübden gesagt haben. Der Nazarder Orden war eine leibliche Übung mit Fasten, mit gewisser Speise, dadurch sie ihren Glauben bekannten, nicht daß sie dadurch Vergebung der Sünden erlangten oder dadurch vom ewigen Tod erlöst würden; denn das suchten sie anderswo, nämlich in der Verheißung von dem gegebenen Samen. Item, wie die Beschneidung im Gesetz Moses oder das Opferschlachten jeßund nicht soll für einen Gottesdienst aufgerichtet werden, also soll man das Fasten oder Ceremonie der Nazarder nicht aufrichten oder anzeigen als einen Gottesdienst, sondern soll gehalten werden für ein Mittelding und leibliche Übung. Verhalben können noch sollen sie ihren Mönchsstand, welcher ohne Gottes Wort erdichtet ist als ein Gottesdienst, dadurch Gott versöhnt werde, nicht vergleichen mit

Auch so ziehen die Widersacher an das Exempel der Rechabiten, welche keine Güter hatten, auch keinen Wein tranken, wie Jeremia sagt am 35. Kapitel. Ja wahrlich, es reimt sich wohl der Rechabiten Exempel zu unsern Mönchen, so ihre Klöster

But they are occupied either in philosophic discussions or in the handing down of ceremonies that obscure Christ.

We will not here speak of the entire service of ceremonies, of the lessons, singing, and similar things, which could be tolerated if they [were regulated as regards number, and if they] would be regarded as exercises, after the manner of lessons in the schools [and preaching], whose design is to teach the hearers, and, while teaching, to move some to fear or faith. But now they feign that these ceremonies are services of God, which merit the remission of sins for themselves and for others. For on this account they increase these ceremonies. But if they would undertake them in order to teach and exhort the hearers, brief and pointed lessons would be of more profit than these infinite babblings. Thus the entire monastic life is full of hypocrisy and false opinions [against the First and Second Commandments, against Christ]. To all these this danger also is added, that those who are in these fraternities are compelled to assent to those persecuting the truth. There are, therefore, many important and forcible reasons which free good men from the obligation to this kind of life.

Lastly, the canons themselves release many, who either without judgment [before they have attained a proper age] have made vows when enticed by the tricks of the monks, or have made vows under compulsion by friends. Such vows not even the canons declare to be vows. From all these considerations it is apparent that there are very many reasons which teach that monastic vows such as have hitherto been made are not vows; and for this reason a sphere of life full of hypocrisy and false opinions can be safely abandoned.

Here they present an objection derived from the Law concerning the Nazarites, Num. 6, 2 f. But the Nazarites did not take upon themselves their vows with the opinions which, we have hitherto said, we censure in the vows of the monks. The rite of the Nazarites was an exercise [a bodily exercise with fasting and certain kinds of food] or declaration of faith before men, and did not merit the remission of sins before God, did not justify before God. [For they sought this elsewhere, namely, in the promise of the blessed Seed.] Again, just as circumcision or the slaying of victims would not be a service of God now, so the rite of the Nazarites ought not to be presented now as a service, but it ought to be judged simply as an adiaphoron. It is not right to compare monasticism, devised without God's Word, as a service which should merit the remission of sins and justification, with the rite of the Nazarites, which had God's Word, and was not taught for the purpose of meriting the remission of sins, but to be an outward exercise, just as other ceremonies of the Law. The same can be said concerning other ceremonies prescribed in the Law.

The Rechabites also are cited, who did not have any possessions, and did not drink wine, as Jeremiah writes, chap. 35, 6 f. Yea, truly, the example of the Rechabites accords beauti-steria superant palatia regum, qui lautissime vivunt. Et Rechabites in illa omnium rerum penuria tamen erant coniuges. Nostri monachi, quum affluant omnibus deliciis, profitentur coelibatum.

60] Ceterum exempla iuxta regulam, hoc est, iuxta Scripturas certas et claras, non contra regulam seu contra Scripturas interpretari convenit. Certissimum est autem observationes nostras non mereri remissionem peccatorum aut iustificationem. Quare quum laudantur Rechabites, necesse est eorum morem suum non ideo servasse, quod sentirent se per eum mereri remissionem peccatorum, aut opus ipsum cultum esse iustificantem, aut propter quem consequerentur vitam aeternam, non per misericordiam Dei, propter semen promissum. Sed quia habuerunt mandatum parentum, laudatur obedientia, de qua exstat praeceptum Dei: Honora patrem et matrem.

62] Deinde mos habebat finem proprium: quia peregrini erant, non Israelitae, apparet patrem voluisse eos certis notis discernere a suis popularibus, ne relaberentur ad impietatem popularium. Volebat his notis eos admonere doctrinae fidei et immortalitatis. 63] Talis finis est licitus. At fines monasticae longe alii traduntur. Fingunt opera monasticae cultus esse, fingunt ea mereri remissionem peccatorum ac iustificationem. Est igitur dissimile monasticae exemplum Rechabitarum; ut omittamus hic alia incommoda, quae haerent in praesenti monastica.

64] Citant et ex priore ad Timotheum, cap. 5, 11 sqq., de viduis, quae servientes ecclesiae alebantur de publico, ubi ait: Nubere volunt, habentes damnationem, quia primam fidem irritam fecerunt. Primum hic fingamus apostolum de votis loqui; tamen hic locus non patrociniabitur monasticis [R. 291] votis, quae sunt de impiis cultibus, et hac opinione, ut mereantur remissionem peccatorum et iustificationem. Paulus enim tota voce damnat omnes cultus, omnes leges, omnia opera, si ita observentur, ut mereantur remissionem peccatorum, aut ut propter ea consequamur vitam aeternam, non propter Christum per misericordiam. Ideo necesse est vota viduarum, si qua fuerunt, dissimilia fuisse votis monasticis.

66] Praeterea, si non desinant adversarii detorquere locum ad vota, detorquendum erit eodem hoc quoque, quod vetat eligi viduam minorem annis sexaginta, 1 Tim. 5, 9. Ita vota 67] ante eam aetatem facta erunt irrita. Sed nondum norat ecclesia haec vota. Itaque damnat Paulus viduas, non quia nubunt, iubet enim nubere iuniores, sed quia publico sumptu alitae lasciviebant ideoque fidem abiciebant.

prächtiger denn der Könige Paläste gebaut sind, so sie in allem Überfluß leben. Auch so sind die Rechabiten bei ihrer Armut doch Eheleute gewesen; unsere Mönche, so sie alle Pracht, allen Überfluß haben, geben in ihrer Heuchelei Keuschheit vor.

Nun, die Verständigen und Gelehrten wissen wohl, daß man alle Exempel nach der Regel, daß ist, nach der klaren Schrift, und nicht wider die Regel oder Schrift soll auslegen oder einführen. Darum, so die Rechabiten in der Schrift gelobt werden, so ist es gewiß, daß sie ihre Weise und Ceremonie nicht darum gehalten haben, dadurch Vergebung der Sünden oder ewiges Leben zu verdienen, oder daß ihre Werke an ihnen selbst sie vor Gott versöhnen könnten, sondern sie haben als fromme, gottesfürchtige Kinder geglaubt an den gesegneten, gebenedeiten Samen, an den zukünftigen Christum, und diemeil sie haben Gehot und Befehl gehabt ihrer Eltern, wird in der Schrift gelobt ihr Gehorsam, von welchem das vierte Gebot redet: „Du sollst deinen Vater und deine Mutter ehren.“

Item, so hat der Rechabiten Weise noch eine Ursache. Sie waren unter den Heiden gewesen, da hat sie ihr Vater unterscheiden wollen von den Heiden mit etlichen Zeichen, daß sie nicht wieder fielen in gottlos Wesen und Abgötterei. Darum hat sie ihr Vater dadurch wollen erinnern der Gottesfurcht, des Glaubens, der Auferstehung der Toten; und daß ist eine gute Ursache. Aber die Möncherei hat viel andere Ursachen. Sie erdichten, daß die Möncherei sei ein Gottesdienst, dadurch man verdiene Vergebung der Sünden und Gott versöhnt werde. Darum ist es gar keine Vergleichung mit der Rechabiten Exempel; daß ich geschweige andern unzähligen Unrats und Irrgehirns, welche darüber noch am Klosterleben sind.

Auch so bringen sie vor aus der ersten Epistel zum Timotheo am 5. von den Wittwen, welche den Kirchen dienten und von dem gemeinen Kirchengut ernährt wurden, da Paulus sagt: „Denn wenn sie heil worden sind wider Christum, so wollen sie freien; und haben ihr Urtheil, daß sie den ersten Glauben verbrochen haben.“ Ich will gleich setzen, daß, da der Apostel von den Gelübden rede (wie doch nicht ist), so tut doch der Spruch gar nichts dazu, daß die Klostergelübde sollten christlich sein. Denn die Klostergelübde geschehen darum, daß sie sollen ein Gottesdienst sein, dadurch man Vergebung der Sünden verdiene. Paulus aber verwirft alle Gesehe, alle Werke, alle Gottesdienste, welche also gehalten und angenommen werden, dadurch Vergebung der Sünden und das ewige Leben zu verdienen, welches wir allein durch Christum erlangen. Darum ist es gewiß, ob die Wittwen etliche Gelübde getan hätten, daß sie doch ungleich den jetzigen Klostergelübden gewesen sind.

Darüber, wenn die Widersacher je den Spruch Pauli wollten auf die Klostergelübde ziehen und behnen, so müßten sie das auch annehmen, daß Paulus verbietet, „es solle keine Witwe eingenommen werden, die jünger wäre denn sechzig Jahre“. Also werden denn alle Klostergelübde, welche vor der Zeit des Alters geschehen sind von jüngeren Leuten, unbündig und nichts sein. Aber die Kirche hat von den Klostergelübden die Zeit nichts fully with our monks, whose monasteries excel the palaces of kings, and who live most sumptuously! And the Rechabites, in their poverty of all things, were nevertheless married. Our monks, although abounding in all voluptuousness, profess celibacy.

Besides, examples ought to be interpreted according to the rule, i. e., according to certain and clear passages of Scripture, not contrary to the rule, that is, contrary to the Scriptures. It is very certain, however, that our observances do not merit the remission of sins or justification. Therefore, when the Rechabites are praised, it is necessary [it is certain] that these have observed their custom, not because they believed that by this they merited remission of sins, or that the work was itself a justifying service, or one on account of which they obtained eternal life, instead of, by God's mercy, for the sake of the promised Seed. But because they had the command of their parents, their obedience is praised, concerning which there is the commandment of God: Honor thy father and mother.

Then, too, the custom had a particular purpose: Because they were foreigners, not Israelites, it is apparent that their father wished to distinguish them by certain marks from their countrymen, so that they might not relapse into the impiety of their countrymen. He wished by these marks to admonish them of the [fear of God, the] doctrine of faith and immortality. Such an end is lawful. But for monasticism far different ends are taught. They feign that the works of monasticism are a service; they feign that they merit the remission of sins and justification. The example of the Rechabites is therefore unlike monasticism; to omit here other evils which inhere in monasticism at present.

They cite also from 1 Tim. 5, 11 ff. concerning widows, who, as they served the Church, were supported at the public expense, where it is said: They will marry, having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith. First, let us suppose that the Apostle is here speaking of vows [which, however, he is not doing]; still this passage will not favor monastic vows, which are made concerning godless services, and in this opinion, that they merit the remission of sins and justification. For Paul, with ringing voice, condemns all services, all laws, all works, if they are observed in order to merit the remission of sins, or that, on account of them, instead of through mercy on account of Christ, we obtain remission of sins. On this account the vows of widows, if there were any, must have been unlike monastic vows.

Besides, if the adversaries do not cease to misapply the passage to vows, the prohibition that no widow be selected who is less than sixty years, 1 Tim. 5, 9, must be misapplied in the same way. Thus vows made before this age will be of no account. But the Church did not yet know these vows. Therefore Paul condemns widows, not because they marry, for he commands the younger to marry; but because, when supported at the public expense, they became wanton, and thus cast off faith. He calls this first faith, clearly not in a monastic vow, but in Christianity [of their Baptism, their Christian duty, their Christianity]. And in this sense he understands faith in the same chapter, v. 8: If any one hat seinen Glauben verleugnet." Denn er redet anders vom Glauben denn die Sophisten. Darum sagt er, daß diejenigen den Glauben verleugnen, die ihre Hausgenossen nicht versorgen. Also sagt er auch von den vorwizigen Weibern, daß sie den Glauben fahren lassen.

Hoc vocat primam fidem, scilicet non voti monastici, sed Christianismi. Et hoc modo fidem accipit in eodem capite, v. 8: Si quis proprios, et maxime domesticos, non curat, fidem abne- 68] gavit. Aliter enim de fide loquitur quam sophistae. Non tribuit fidem his, qui habent peccatum mortale. Ideo dicit hos abiicere fidem, qui non curant propinquos. Et ad eundem modum dicit mulierculas petulantes fidem abiicere.

69] Percurrimus aliquot nostras rationes et obiter diluimus ea, quae adversarii obliciunt. Et haec collegimus non solum propter adversarios, sed multo magis propter pias mentes, ut habeant in conspectu causas, quare improbare debeant hypocrisin et fictos cultus monasticos, quos quidem totos haec una vox Christi abrogat, quum ait Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me mandatis hominum. Quare vota ipsa et observationes ciborum, lectionum, cantuum, vestitus, calceorum, cingulorum inutiles cultus sunt coram Deo. Et certo sciant omnes piae mentes simpliciter pharisaicam et damnatam opinionem esse, quod illae [R. 292 observationes mereantur remissionem peccatorum, quod propter eas iusti reputemur, quod propter eas consequamur vitam aeternam, non 70] per misericordiam propter Christum. Et necesse est sanctos viros, qui in his vitae generibus vixerunt, abiecta fiducia talium observationum didicisse, quod remissionem peccatorum propter Christum gratis habent, quod propter Christum per misericordiam consecuturi essent vitam aeternam, non propter illos cultus, quod Deus tantum approbet cultus suo Verbo institutos, qui valeant in fide.

von St. Bernhard ein Exempel hat, daß er gesagt: Gott will keine andern Gottesdienste haben, denn gewußt. So verwirft nun Paulus die Wittwen nicht darum, daß sie ehelich werden (denn er heißt die jungen ehelich werden), sondern daß sie aus dem gemeinen Kirchentafeln sich nähren ließen, deselben zu ihrer Lust und Nutwillen mißbrauchten und also den ersten Glauben brächen. Das heißt er den ersten Glauben fahren lassen nicht der Klostergeßubbe, sondern ihrer Laufe, ihrer christlichen Pflicht, ihres Christentums. Und also redet er auch vom Glauben im selben Kapitel: „So jemand seine Hausgenossen nicht versorget, der Wir haben etliche Ursachen angezeigt und verlegt [widerlegt], was die Widersacher vorgebracht. Dieses haben wir nicht allein um der Widersacher willen erzählt, sondern vielmehr um etlicher christlicher Herzen und Gewissen willen, daß sie mögen klar vor Augen haben, warum die Klostergeßubbe und die mancherlei Möncherei nicht recht oder christlich sind, welche auch alle miteinander das einige Wort Christi möchte zu Boden stoßen, da er sagt: „Sie dienen mir vergeblich mit Menschenengeboten.“ Denn aus dem Wort allein hat man kurz, daß die ganze Möncherei, Rappen, Strid, Gürtel und alle eigenerdichtete Heiligkeit vor Gott unnütz, vergebliche Gottesdienste seien, und alle christlichen, frommen Herzen sollen das ganz für gewiß halten, daß dies gewiß ein pharisäischer, verdammt, häßlicher Irrtum ist, daß wir sollten durch solche Möncherei Vergebung der Sünden oder das ewige Leben verdienen und nicht vielmehr erlangen durch den Glauben an Christum. Darum fromme Leute, so im Klosterleben selig geworden und erhalten sind, die haben endlich müssen dahin kommen, daß sie an allem ihrem Klosterleben verzagt, alle ihre Werke wie Rot verachtet, alle ihre heuchlerischen Gottesdienste verdammt und sich an die Zusage der Gnade in Christo fest gehalten haben, wie man des denn Perdite vixi, „Ich habe sündlich gelebt“. Denn welche er selbst hat aufgerichtet durch sein Wort.

De Potestate Ecclesiastica.

Artikel XXVIII. (XIV.)

Von der Potestate Ecclesiastica.

Die Widersacher machen hier ein groß Geschrei von den Freiheiten und Privilegien der Geistlichen (wie sie es nennen) und setzen danach einen solchen Beschluß: „Es ist“, sagen sie, „alles nichts und untüchtig, was in diesem Artikel wider die Freiheit und Privilegien der Kirchen und Priester wird vorgebracht.“ Hier handeln die Meister der Konfutation aber als Buben, uns zu betrugeln. Denn in unserer Konfession ist nichts geredet wider der Kirchen oder Priester Freiheiten, damit sie von weltlicher Obrigkeit, Ratsern, Königen und Fürsten begnadet sind. Denn wir lehren ja, man soll weltliche Ordnungen und Rechte halten.

Aber wollte Gott, daß die Widersacher doch auch einmal hörten die unsägliche, erbärmliche, große Klage aller Kirchen, daß große Schreien und Seufzen so viel frommer Herzen und Gewissen! Der Kirchen Freiheit, und was Geld und Gut belangt, vergessen die Widersacher nicht, aber wie die nötigsten, nützlichsten Ämter in der Kirche bestellt sind, provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith. For he speaks otherwise of faith than the sophists. He does not ascribe faith to those who have mortal sin. He, accordingly, says that those cast off faith who do not care for their relatives. And in the same way he says that wanton women cast off faith.

We have recounted some of our reasons, and, in passing, have explained away the objections urged by the adversaries. And we have collected these matters, not only on account of the adversaries, but much more on account of godly minds, that they may have in view the reasons why they ought to disapprove of hypocrisy and fictitious monastic services, all of which indeed this one saying of Christ annuls, which reads, Matt. 15, 9: In vain they do worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Therefore the vows themselves and the observances of meats, lessons, chants, vestments, sandals, girdles, are useless services in God's sight. And all godly minds should certainly know that the opinion is simply pharisaic and condemned that these observances merit the remission of sins; that on account of them we are accounted righteous; that on account of them, and not through mercy on account of Christ, we obtain eternal life. And the holy men who have lived in these kinds of life must necessarily have learned, confidence in such observance having been rejected, that they had the remission of sins freely; that for Christ's sake through mercy they would obtain eternal life, and not for the sake of these services [therefore godly persons who were saved and continued to live in monastic life had finally come to this, namely, that they despaired of their monastic life, despised all their works as dung, condemned all their hypocritical service of God, and held fast to the promise of grace in Christ, as in the example of St. Bernard, saying, Perdite viam, I have lived in a sinful way]; because God only approves services instituted by His Word, which services avail when used in faith.

Article XXVIII (XIV):

Of Ecclesiastical Power.

Here the adversaries cry out violently concerning the privileges and immunities of the ecclesiastical estate, and they add the peroration: All things are vain which are presented in the present article against the immunity of the churches and priests. This is mere calumny; for in this article we have disputed concerning other things. Besides, we have frequently testified that we do not find fault with political ordinances, and the gifts and privileges granted by princes.

But would that the adversaries would hear, on the other hand, the complaints of the churches and of godly minds! The adversaries courageously guard their own dignities and wealth; meanwhile, they neglect the condition of the churches; they do not care that the churches are rightly taught, and that the Sacraments are duly administered. haltung etlicher ihrer Traditionen, die öffentlich wider Gott sind. So sie nun ihre Privilegia rühmen, sollten sie billig auch ihr Amt bedenken und vieler frommen Christen Seufzen und Klagen hören, die ohne Zweifel Gott hört, und [er] wird einmal Rechenschaft von den Prälaten fordern.

6] Quum autem nos in Confessione, in hoc articulo, varios locos complexi simus, adversarii nihil respondent nisi episcopos habere potestatem regiminis et coercitivae correctionis, ad dirigendum subditos in finem beatitudinis aeternae et ad potestatem regiminis requiri potestatem iudicandi, definiendi, discernendi et statuendi ea, quae ad praefatum finem expediunt aut conducunt. Haec sunt verba Confutationis, in quibus docent nos adversarii, quod episcopi habeant auctoritatem condendi leges utiles ad consequendam vitam aeternam. De hoc articulo controversia est.

7] Oportet autem in ecclesia retinere hanc doctrinam, quod gratis propter Christum fide accipiamus remissionem peccatorum. Oportet et hanc doctrinam retineri, quod humanae traditiones sint inutiles cultus, quare nec peccatum nec iustitia in cibo, potu, vestitu et similibus rebus collocanda est, quarum usum voluit Christus liberum relinqui, quum ait Matth. 15, 11: Quod intrat in os, non inquinat hominem, et Paulus Rom. 14, 17: Regnum Dei non est esca aut potus. Itaque nullum habent ius episcopi condendi traditiones extra evangelium, ut mereantur remissionem peccatorum, ut sint cultus, quos approbet Deus tamquam iustitiam, et qui gravent conscientias, ita ut peccatum sit eos omittere. Haec omnia docet vel unus locus in Actis, 15, 9 sq., ubi apostoli dicunt: Fide purificari corda. Et deinde prohibent imponere iugum, et ostendunt, quantum periculi sit, exaggerant peccatum istorum, qui onerant ecclesiam. [R. 294 Quid tentatis Deum? inquirunt. Hoc fulmine nihil terrentur adversarii nostri, qui vi defendunt traditiones et impias opiniones.

ernste Wort der Apostel, welches sie billig als ein Donner Schlag schrecken sollte, lassen ihnen die Widersacher gar nicht zu Herzen gehen, sondern wollen noch mit aller Tyrannei und Gewalt ihre erdichteten Gottesdienste verteidigen.

Nam et supra damnaverunt articulum XV., 9] in quo posuimus, quod traditiones non mereantur remissionem peccatorum, et hic dicunt traditiones conducere ad vitam aeternam. Num merentur remissionem peccatorum? Num sunt cultus, quos approbat Deus da sorgen sie nichts. Sie fragen gar nichts danach, wie man lehre oder predige; sie fragen nicht danach, wie christlicher Gebrauch der Sacramente erhalten werde; sie ordinieren grobe Eitel. Damit ist [die] christliche Lehre untergegangen, daß die Kirchen nicht mit tüchtigen Predigern bestellt sind. Sie machen Traditionen und un[er]trägliche Bürden, die Seelen zu verderben, und ob solchen ihren Traditionen halten sie viel fester denn ob Gottes Geboten. Viel arme Seelen stehen jeztund im Zweifel, wissen nicht, was sie halten sollen. Da gebührt den Prälaten, zu hören, was recht, was unrecht wäre, und die Mißbräuche zu ändern, den armen Leuten aus dem Zweifel zu helfen und die Last von den beschwerten Gewissen zu nehmen. Was sie aber tun, ist am Tage. Sie machen Eitel wider [die] öffentliche Wahrheit, erzeigen unerhörte Tyrannei wider fromme Leute zur Erhaltung etlicher ihrer Traditionen, die öffentlich wider Gott sind. So sie nun ihre Privilegia rühmen, sollten sie billig auch ihr Amt bedenken und vieler frommen Christen Seufzen und Klagen hören, die ohne Zweifel Gott hört, und [er] wird einmal Rechenschaft von den Prälaten fordern.

Auch antwortet die Confutation nicht auf unsere Gründe, sondern stellt sich recht päpstlich, sagt von großer Gewalt der Bischöfe und beweist sie nicht, spricht also, daß die Bischöfe Gewalt haben zu herrschen, zu richten, zu strafen, zu zwingen, Gesetze zu machen, dienlich zum ewigen Leben. Also rühmt die Confutatio der Bischöfe Gewalt und beweist sie doch nicht. Von diesem Artikel ist nun der Streit: ob die Bischöfe Macht haben, Gesetze zu machen außer dem Evangelio und zu gebieten, dieselben zu halten als Gottesdienste, dadurch ewiges Leben zu verdienen.

Darauf tun wir diesen Bericht: Man muß in der Kirche diese Lehre behalten, daß wir ohne Verdienst, um Christus' willen, durch den Glauben Vergebung der Sünden erlangen; so muß man auch die Lehre behalten, daß alle Menschen-sagungen nicht nütze sind, Gott zu versöhnen. Darum in Speise, Trank, Kleibern und dergleichen ist weder Sünde noch Gerechtigkeit zu setzen. Denn Paulus spricht: „Das Reich Gottes ist nicht Essen und Trinken.“ Darum haben die Bischöfe nicht Macht, Sagungen zu machen außer dem Evangelio, also daß man dadurch Vergebung der Sünden erlangen wollte, oder daß es sollten Gottesdienste sein, um welcher willen uns Gott gerecht schätze, und zu welchen sie die Gewissen verpflichten bei einer Tod-sünde. Daß alles lehrt der einige Spruch in Geschichten der Apostel [am] 15. Kapitel, da Petrus sagt, „daß die Herzen werden durch den Glauben gereinigt“. Und danach verbieten sie, ein Joch oder Bürde auf die Jünger zu legen, und sagen, wie [ge]fährlich das sei. Auch geben sie zu verstehen, daß die schrecklich sündigen und wider Gott handeln und Gott versuchen, die also die Kirche beschweren. Denn sie sagen: „Was versucht ihr Gott?“ Dieß harte,

Denn den XV. Artikel, darin wir gesetzt haben, daß wir durch Menschen-sagungen nicht verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, verdammen sie und sagen hier: Die Menschen-sagungen sind nützlich und dienlich, das ewige Leben zu verdienen. Dagegen ist ja öffentlich, daß sie das Herz inwendig nicht priesthood they admit all kinds of persons indiscriminately. [They ordain rude asses; thus the Christian doctrine perished, because the Church was not supplied with efficient preachers.] Afterwards they impose intolerable burdens; as though they were delighted with the destruction of their fellow-men, they demand that their traditions be observed far more accurately than the Gospel. Now, in the most important and difficult controversies, concerning which the people urgently desire to be taught, in order that they may have something certain which they may follow, they do not release the minds which are most severely tortured with doubt; they only call to arms. Besides, in manifest matters [against manifest truth] they present decrees written in blood, which threaten horrible punishments to men unless they act clearly contrary to God's command. Here, on the other hand, you ought to see the tears of the poor, and hear the pitiable complaints of many good men, which God undoubtedly considers and regards, to whom one day you will render an account of your stewardship.

But although in the Confession we have in this article embraced various topics, the adversaries make no reply [act in true popish fashion], except that the bishops have the power of rule and coercive correction, in order to direct their subjects to the goal of eternal blessedness; and that the power of ruling requires the power to judge, to define, to distinguish and fix those things which are serviceable or conduce to the aforementioned end. These are the words of the Confutation, in which the adversaries teach us [but do not prove] that the bishops have the authority to frame laws [without the authority of the Gospel] useful for obtaining eternal life. The controversy is concerning this article.

[Regarding this matter we submit the following:] But we must retain in the Church this doctrine, namely, that we receive the remission of sins freely for Christ's sake, by faith. We must also retain this doctrine, namely, that human traditions are useless services, and therefore neither sin nor righteousness should be placed in meat, drink, clothing, and like things, the use of which Christ wished to be left free, since He says, Matt. 15, 11: Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man; and Paul, Rom. 14, 17: The kingdom of God is not meat and drink. Therefore the bishops have no right to frame traditions in addition to the Gospel, that they may merit the remission of sins, that they may be services which God is to approve as righteousness, and which burden consciences, as though it were a sin to omit them. All this is taught by that one passage in Acts, 15, 9 ff., where the apostles say [Peter says] that hearts are purified by faith. And then they prohibit the imposing of a yoke, and show how great a danger this is, and enlarge upon the sin of those who burden the Church. Why tempt ye God? they say. By this thunderbolt our adversaries are in no way terrified, who defend by violence traditions and godless opinions.

For above they have also condemned Article XV, in which we have stated that traditions do not merit the remission of sins, and they here say that traditions conduce to eternal life. Do they merit the remission of sins? Are they services which God approves as righteousness? Do they quicken hearts?

tamquam iustitiam? Num vivificant corda? 10] Paulus ad Colossenses, 2, 20 sqq., ideo negat prodesse traditiones ad iustitiam aeternam et vitam aeternam, quia cibus, potus, vestitus et similia sint res usu pereuntes. At vita aeterna in corde rebus aeternis, hoc est, Verbo Dei et Spiritu Sancto, efficitur. Expediant igitur adversarii, quomodo conducant traditiones ad vitam aeternam.

12] Ceterum quam potestatem tribuat evangelium episcopis, diximus in Confessione. Qui nunc sunt episcopi, non faciunt episcoporum officia iuxta evangelium; sed sint sane episcopi iuxta politiam canonicam, quam non reprehendimus. Verum nos de episcopo loqui-
13] mur iuxta evangelium. Et placet nobis vetus partitio potestatis in potestatem ordinis et potestatem iurisdictionis. Habet igitur episcopus potestatem ordinis, hoc est, ministerium Verbi et sacramentorum, habet et potestatem iurisdictionis, hoc est, auctoritatem excommunicandi obnoxios publicis criminibus et rursus absolvendi eos, si conversi
14] petant absolutionem. Neque vero habent potestatem tyrannicam, hoc est, sine [R. 295 certa lege, neque regiam, hoc est, supra legem, sed habent certum mandatum, certum verbum Dei, quod docere, iuxta quod exercere suam iurisdictionem debent. Quare non sequitur, etiamsi habeant aliquam iurisdictionem, quod possint novos cultus instituire. Nam cultus nihil pertinent ad iurisdictionem. Et habent Verbum, habent mandatum, quatenus exercere iurisdictionem debeant, scilicet, si quis commiserit adversus illud Verbum, quod acceperunt a Christo.

brauchen sollen. Ob sie schon solche Jurisdiction über öffentliche Laster haben, so folgt doch nicht, daß sie darum Macht haben, neue Gottesdienste anzurichten. Denn iurisdiction und neue Gottesdienste machen, sind weit voneinander. Item, es streckt sich auch die iurisdiction nicht auf Sünden wider ihre neuen Gesetze, sondern allein auf solche Sünden, die wider Gottes Gebot sind. Denn das Evangelium richtet ihnen nicht ein Regiment an außer dem Evangelio, das ist ja klar und gewiß.

15] Quamquam nos in Confessione addidimus etiam, quatenus liceat eis condere traditiones, videlicet non tamquam necessarios cultus, sed ut sit ordo in ecclesia propter tranquillitatem. Et hae non debent laqueos inicere conscientiis, tamquam praecipiant necessarios cultus, sicut Paulus docet, quum ait Gal. 5, 1: In libertate, qua Christus vos liberavit, state, ne iterum iugo servitutis sub-

trösten; so bringen sie auch kein neu Licht über Leben in das Herz; wie denn Paulus zu den Kolossern sagt, daß darum die Sagenungen nichts helfen, ewige Gerechtigkeit oder ewiges Leben zu erlangen, denn die Sagenungen lehren vom Unterschied der Speisen, Kleider und der Dinge, welche sich unter'n Händen verzehren. Das ewige Leben aber, welches inwendig durch Glauben in diesem Leben anfängt, wirkt der Heilige Geist im Herzen durch das Evangelium. Darum werden die Widersacher nimmermehr beweisen, daß man durch Menschen sagenungen das ewige Leben verdiene.

So nun das Evangelium klar verbiethet, daß mit solchen Sagenungen die Kirchen und Gewissen nicht sollen beschwert werden, also daß man dadurch Vergebung der Sünden erlangen müsse, oder müsse sie halten als nötige Gottesdienste, ohne welche christliche Heiligkeit nicht sein könne, oder daß man sie bei einer Todsünde zu halten soll schuldig sein, so werden die Widersacher nimmermehr beweisen, daß die Bischöfe solche Gottesdienste anzurichten Macht haben.

Was aber die Bischöfe für ein Amt oder Gewalt haben in der Kirche, haben wir in der Confession gesagt. Die Bischöfe, so jeztund den Bischofsnamen tragen in der Kirche, tun gar nicht ihr bischöflich Amt nach dem Evangelio. Aber laß sie gleich Bischöfe sein der canonica politia nach, welche wir in ihrem Wert lassen. Wir reben aber von rechten, christlichen Bischöfen, und es gefällt mir die alte Division oder Teilung nicht übel, da sie gesagt haben, bischöfliche Gewalt stehe in diesen zweien, potestate ordinis und potestate iurisdictionis, das ist, in Reichung der Sacramente und geistlichem Gerichtszwang. So hat ein jeder christlicher Bischof potestatem ordinis, das ist, das Evangelium zu predigen, Sacramente zu reichen; auch hat er Gewalt eines geistlichen Gerichtszwangs in der Kirche, das ist, Macht und Gewalt, aus der christlichen Gemeinde zu schließen diejenigen, so in öffentlichen Lastern gefunden werden, und dieselben, wenn sie sich bekehren, wieder anzunehmen und ihnen die Absolution mitzuteilen. Sie haben aber nicht eine tyrannische Gewalt, das ist, ohne gewisses Gesetz zu urteilen. So haben sie auch keine königliche Gewalt, das ist, über die gegebenen [hinaus] Gesetze zu schaffen, sondern haben ein gewiß Gottesgebot und gemessenen Befehl, unter welchem sie sind, nach welchem sie ihre geistliche Gewalt und Gerichtszwang

Wiewohl wir nun in der Confession dazugesetzt haben, wiefern die Bischöfe mögen Sagenungen machen, nämlich daß sie die nicht als nötige Gottesdienste aufrichten und lehren, sondern daß [es] still und ordentlich in der Kirche zugehe. Aber damit sollen die Gewissen nicht gefangen sein, als seien's nötige Gottesdienste. Denn Paulus zu'n Galatern sagt am 5. Kapitel: „So stehet nun in der Freiheit, wie euch Christus hat freigemacht, und laßt euch nicht wieder unter das Joch der Knechtschaft bringen!“ So muß man nun freilassen, solche äußerliche Sagenungen zu brauchen oder nicht zu brauchen, daß sie nicht für solche

Paul to the Colossians, 2, 20 ff., says that traditions do not profit with respect to eternal righteousness and eternal life; for the reason that food, drink, clothing and the like are things that perish with the using. But eternal life [which begins in this life inwardly by faith] is wrought in the heart by eternal things, i. e., by the Word of God and the Holy Ghost. Therefore let the adversaries explain how traditions conduce to eternal life.

Since, however, the Gospel clearly testifies that traditions ought not to be imposed upon the Church in order to merit the remission of sins; in order to be services which God shall approve as righteousness; in order to burden consciences, so that to omit them is to be accounted a sin, the adversaries will never be able to show that the bishops have the power to institute such services.

Besides, we have declared in the Confession what power the Gospel ascribes to bishops. Those who are now bishops do not perform the duties of bishops according to the Gospel; although, indeed, they may be bishops according to canonical polity, which we do not censure. But we are speaking of a bishop according to the Gospel. And we are pleased with the ancient division of power into power of the order and power of jurisdiction [that is, the administration of the Sacraments and the exercise of spiritual jurisdiction]. Therefore the bishop has the power of the order, i. e., the ministry of the Word and Sacraments; he has also the power of jurisdiction, i. e., the authority to excommunicate those guilty of open crimes, and again to absolve them if they are converted and seek absolution. But their power is not to be tyrannical, i. e., without a fixed law; nor regal, i. e., above law; but they have a fixed command and a fixed Word of God, according to which they ought to teach, and according to which they ought to exercise their jurisdiction. Therefore, even though they should have some jurisdiction, it does not follow that they are able to institute new services. For services pertain in no way to jurisdiction. And they have the Word, they have the command, how far they ought to exercise jurisdiction, namely, if any one would do anything contrary to that Word which they have received from Christ. [For the Gospel does not set up a rule independently of the Gospel; that is quite clear and certain.]

Although in the Confession we also have added how far it is lawful for them to frame traditions, namely, not as necessary services, but so that there may be order in the Church, for the sake of tranquillity. And these traditions ought not to cast snares upon consciences, as though to enjoin necessary services; as Paul teaches when he says, Gal. 5, 1: Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty where-with Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. The use of such ordinances ought therefore to be left free, provided that offenses be avoided, and that they be not judged to be necessary services; just as the apostles them-

sollten nötig sein oder ewig bleiben. Denn sie haben wider ihre eigene Schrift und Lehre nicht gehandelt, darin sie das gar heftig streiten [verfechten], daß man die Kirche nicht solle mit Sagenen also beschweren oder verpflichten, als wären sie nötig zur Seligkeit.

17) Haec est simplex ratio traditionum interpretandarum, videlicet ut sciamus eas non esse necessarios cultus, et tamen propter vitanda scandala in loco sine superstitione 18) observemus. Et sic multi docti et magni viri in ecclesia senserunt. Nec videmus, quod opponi possit. Certum est enim, sententiam illam, Luc. 10, 16: Qui vos audit, me audit, non loqui de traditionibus, sed maxime contra traditiones facere. Non est enim mandatum cum libera, ut vocant, sed cautio de rato, de speciali mandato, hoc est, testimonium datum apostolis, ut eis de alieno verbo, non de proprio, credamus. Vult enim Christus nos confirmare, quemadmodum opus erat, ut [R. 298 sciremus verbum traditum per homines efficax esse, nec quaerendum esse aliud verbum 19) de coelo. De traditionibus non potest accipi: Qui vos audit, me audit. Requirit enim Christus, ut ita doceant, ut ipse audiat, quia dicit: Me audit. Igitur suam vocem, suum verbum vult audiri, non traditiones humanas. Ita dictum, quod maxime pro nobis facit et gravissimam consolationem et doctrinam continet, detorquent isti asini ad res nugacissimas, discrimina ciborum, vestitus et similia.

soll man Christum hören. Dies tröstliche Wort, welches aufs allerstärkste unsere Lehre bekätigt und viel nötige Lehre und Trost für die christlichen Gewissen in sich hat, das deuten die groben Esel auf ihre nährischen Sagenen, auf ihre Speisen, Trank, Kleider und dergleichen Kinderwerk.

20) Citant et hoc, Ebr. 13, 17: Obedite praepositionis vestris. Haec sententia requirit obedientiam erga evangelium. Non enim constituit regnum episcopis extra evangelium. Nec debent episcopi traditiones contra evangelium condere, aut traditiones suas contra evangelium interpretari. Idque quum faciunt, obedientia prohibetur, iuxta illud, Gal. 1, 8: Si quis aliud evangelium docet, anathema sit.

21) Idem respondemus ad hunc locum, Matth. 24, 3: Quidquid dixerint, facite, quod constat non universaliter praecipere, ut omnia recipiamus, quia alibi, Act. 5, 29, iubet Scriptura plus obedire Deo quam hominibus. Quando igitur impia docent, non sunt audiendi. Haec autem impia sunt, quod traditiones humanae sint cultus Dei, quod sint necessarii cultus, quod mereantur remissionem peccatorum et vitam aeternam.

So richtet dieser Spruch auch nicht ein Regiment an außer dem Evangelio; darum können sie ihre Gewalt, die sie außer dem Evangelio aufgerichtet haben, nicht durchs Evangelium beweisen. Denn das Evangelium redet nicht de traditionibus, sondern von Gottes Wort zu lehren.

Gottesdienste geachtet oder gehalten werden, welche nötig sollten sein zur Seligkeit. Doch ist man schuldig, Ärgernis zu meiden. Also haben die Apostel viel Dings um guter Zucht willen in der Kirche geordnet, das mit der Zeit geändert ist, und haben nicht Sagenen also gemacht, daß sie hätten wider ihre eigene Schrift und Lehre nicht gehandelt, darin sie das gar heftig streiten [verfechten], daß man die Kirche nicht solle mit Sagenen also beschweren oder verpflichten, als wären sie nötig zur Seligkeit.

Das ist ein einfältiger, klarer Unterricht von Menschen sagenen, nämlich daß wir wissen, daß es nicht nötige Gottesdienste sind, und daß man sie dennoch nach Gelegenheit, Ärgernis zu meiden, halten soll. Und also haben viel gelehrte, große Leute in der Kirche gehalten und gelehrt, und ist gewiß, daß die Widerfacher dawider nichts können aufbringen. So ist es auch gewiß, daß dieses Wort des Herrn Christi Luc. 10: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich“, nicht von Menschen sagenen redet, sondern ist kraß dawider. Denn die Apostel empfangen da nicht ein mandatum cum libera, das ist, einen ganz freien, ungemessenen Befehl und Gewalt, sondern haben einen gemessenen Befehl, nämlich, nicht ihr eigen Wort, sondern Gottes Wort und das Evangelium zu predigen. Und der Herr Christus will in den Worten: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich“ alle Welt stärken, wie auch vonnöten war, daß wir sollten ganz gewiß sein, daß das leibliche Wort Gottes Kraft wäre, und daß niemand vom Himmel ein ander Wort dürfte suchen oder erwarten. Darum kann dies Wort: „Wer euch höret, der höret mich“ von Sagenen nicht verstanden werden. Denn Christus will da, daß sie also lehren sollen, daß man durch ihren Mund Christum selbst höre. So müssen sie ja nicht ihr eigen Wort predigen, sondern sein Wort, seine Stimme und Evangelium, selves ordained [for the sake of good discipline] very many things which have been changed with time. Neither did they hand them down in such a way that it would not be permitted to change them. For they did not dissent from their own writings, in which they greatly labor lest the Church be burdened with the opinion that human rites are necessary services.

Auch ziehen sie diesen Spruch an zu den Hebräern am 13.: „Gehorcht denen, die euch vorgehen“ usw. Dieser Spruch fordert, daß man soll gehorcht sein dem Evangelio; denn er gibt den Bischöfen nicht eine eigene Herrschaft oder Herren-gewalt außer dem Evangelio; so sollen auch die Bischöfe nicht wider das Evangelium Sagenen machen, noch ihre Sagenen wider das Evangelium auslegen. Denn wenn sie das tun, so verbietet uns das Evangelium, ihnen gehorcht zu sein, wie Paulus zu den Galatern sagt: „So euch jemand würde ein ander Evangelium predigen, der sei verflucht!“

Gleich dasselbe antworten wir auch auf den Spruch Matth. am 23.: „Auf Moses Stuhl sitzen die Schriftgelehrten usw.“; alles nun, was sie euch sagen, das ihr halten sollt, das haltet und tut's.“ Das ist gewiß, daß damit nicht geboten wird universaliter, insgemein, daß wir alles sollen halten, was sie gebieten, auch wider Gottes Gebot und Wort. Denn an einem andern Ort sagt die Schrift: „Man muß Gott mehr gehorchen denn den Menschen.“ Darum, wenn sie unschriftlich und wider die Schrift lehren, soll man sie nicht hören.

This is the simple mode of interpreting traditions, namely, that we understand them not as necessary services, and nevertheless, for the sake of avoiding offenses, we should observe them in the proper place. And thus many learned and great men in the Church have held. Nor do we see what can be said against this. For it is certain that the expression Luke 10, 16: He that heareth you heareth Me, does not speak of traditions, but is chiefly directed against traditions. For it is not a mandatum cum libera (a bestowal of unlimited authority), as they call it, but it is a cautio de rato (a caution concerning something prescribed), namely, concerning the special command [not a free, unlimited order and power, but a limited order, namely, not to preach their own word, but God's Word and the Gospel], i. e., the testimony given to the apostles, that we believe them with respect to the word of another, not their own. For Christ wishes to assure us, as was necessary, that we should know that the Word delivered by men is efficacious, and that no other word from heaven ought to be sought. He that heareth you heareth Me, cannot be understood of traditions. For Christ requires that they teach in such a way that [by their mouth] He Himself be heard, because He says: He heareth Me. Therefore He wishes His own voice, His own Word, to be heard, not human traditions. Thus a saying which is most especially in our favor, and contains the most important consolation and doctrine, these stupid men pervert to the most trifling matters, the distinctions of food, vestments, and the like.

They quote also Heb. 13, 17: Obey them that have the rule over you. This passage requires obedience to the Gospel. For it does not establish a dominion for the bishops apart from the Gospel. Neither should the bishops frame traditions contrary to the Gospel, or interpret their traditions contrary to the Gospel. And when they do this, obedience is prohibited, according to Gal. 1, 9: If any man preach any other gospel, let him be accursed.

We make the same reply to Matt. 23, 3: Whatever they bid you observe, that observe, because evidently a universal command is not given that we should receive all things [even contrary to God's command and Word], since Scripture elsewhere, Acts 5, 29, bids us obey God rather than men. When, therefore, they teach wicked things, they are not to be heard. But these are wicked things, namely, that human traditions are services of God, that they are necessary services, that they merit the remission of sins and eternal life.

ΤΕΛΟΣ.

Daß aber die Widersacher zu Ende der Confutation uns verunglimpfen und beschweren, daß diese Lehre zu Ungehorsam und andern mehr Ärgernissen Ursache gebe, solches wird dieser unserer Lehre unbillig aufgelegt. Denn es ist öffentlich, daß [die] Obrigkeit ausß höchsten durch diese Lehre gepreiset ist. So weiß man, daß an den Orten, da diese Lehre gepredigt wird, durch Gottes Gnade bis- anher die Obrigkeit in allen Ehren von Untertanen gehalten ist.

Daß aber Uneinigkeit und Spaltung in der Kirche ist, weiß man, wie sich diese Händel erklä- zugetragen haben, und wer Ursache zur Trennung gegeben, nämlich die Indulgenztrümer, die unleid- liche Lügen unerschämmt predigten und nachmals den Luther verdamnten, daß er dieselben Lügen nicht billigte, dazu erregten für und für mehr Händel, daß Luther andere, mehr Irrthümer anzusechten ver- ursacht ward. Diemeil aber unser Gegenteil die Wahrheit nicht hat dulden wollen und sich untersteht, öffentliche Irrthümer noch mit Gewalt zu handhaben, ist leichtlich zu richten, wer an der Trennung schuldig ist. Es sollte ja billig alle Welt, alle Weisheit, alle Gewalt Christo und seinem heiligen Wort weichen; aber der Teufel ist Gottes Feind, darum erregt er alle seine Macht wider Christum, Gottes Wort zu dämpfen und [zu] unterdrücken. Also ist der Teufel mit seinen Gliedern, so sich wider Gottes Wort legt, Ursache der Spaltung und Uneinigkeit; denn wir zum höchsten Frieden ge- sucht haben, des wir noch zum höchsten begehren, so fern, daß wir nicht gedrungen werden, Christum zu lästern und zu verleugnen. Denn Gott weiß, der aller Herzen Richter ist, daß wir an dieser schred- lichen Uneinigkeit nicht Lust oder Freude haben. So hat der Gegenteil bisanher seinen Frieden machen wollen, darin nicht gesucht sei, daß wir die heilsame Lehre von Vergebung der Sünden durch Christum ohne unser Verdienst sollten fallen lassen, dadurch doch Christus zum höchsten gelästert würde.

Und niewohl nicht ohne ist, daß, wie die Welt pflegt, in dieser Spaltung dennoch Ärgernisse durch frevel und ungeschickte Leute etwa vorgefallen, denn der Teufel richtet solche Ärgernisse an zu Schmach dem Evangelio: so find sie doch alle nicht zu achten gegen den hohen Trost, den diese Lehre mit sich gebracht hat, die lehrt, daß wir um Christus' willen ohne unser Verdienst Vergebung der Sünden und einen gnädigen Gott haben; item, daß sie unterrichtet, daß Gottesdienst nicht sei, verlassen weltliche Stände und Obrigkeit, sondern daß solche Stände und Obrigkeit Gott gefallen und rechte heilige Werke und Gottesdienste seien.

So wir auch des Gegenteils Ärgernisse erzählen sollten, dazu wir wahrlich nicht Lust haben, würde es gar ein schrecklich Register werden: wie die Messe zu einem schändlichen, lästerlichen Jahrmarkt durch den Gegenteil gemacht; wie ein unzünftig Leben durch ihren Zölibat angerichtet ist; wie die Päpste nun länger denn vierhundert Jahre mit den Kaisern gekriegt haben und des Evangelii vergessen und allein danach getrachtet, daß sie selbst Kaiser wären und ganz Italien unter sich brächten; wie sie mit den Kirchengütern gespielt haben; wie durch ihren Unkeiß viel falsche Lehre und falsche Gottesdienste durch die Mönche aufgerichtet sind. Ist doch ihr Heiligendienst eine öffentliche heidnische Abgötterei. Alle ihre Strikenten sagen nicht ein Wort von diesem Glauben an Christum, dadurch man Vergebung der Sünden erlangt. Die höchste Heiligkeit sehen sie in Menschenfagungen; davon schreiben und pre- digen sie vornehmlich. So ist das billig auch unter ihre Ärgernisse zu zählen, daß sie sich öffentlich er- zeigen, was Geist sie haben, daß sie so viel unschuldige, fromme Leute jegund um christlicher Lehre willen ermorden. Doch wollen wir hierbon jegund nicht reden; denn diese Sachen soll man nach Gottes Wort richten und die Ärgernisse beider Seiten diemeil nicht ansehen.

Wir hoffen, es sollen alle Gottesfürchtigen in dieser unserer Schrift genugsam sehen, daß unsere Lehre christlich und allen Frommen tröstlich und heilsam sei. Darum bitten wir Gott, daß er Gnade verleihe, daß sein heiliges Evangelium bei allen erkannt und geehrt werde, zu seinem Lobe und zu Friede, Einigkeit und Seligkeit unser aller; und erbieten uns hiemit, wo es not ist, von allen Artikeln weiter Bericht zu tun.

They present, as an objection, the public offenses and commotions which have arisen under pretext of our doctrine. To these we briefly reply. If all the scandals be brought together, still the one article concerning the remission of sins, that for Christ's sake through faith we freely obtain the remission of sins, brings so much good as to hide all evils. And this, in the beginning, gained for Luther not only our favor, but also, that of many who are now contending against us. "For former favor ceases, and mortals are forgetful," says Pindar. Nevertheless, we neither desire to desert truth that is necessary to the Church, nor can we assent to the adversaries in condemning it. For we ought to obey God rather than men. Those who in the beginning condemned manifest truth, and are now persecuting it with the greatest cruelty, will give an account for the schism that has been occasioned. Then, too, are there no scandals among the adversaries? How much evil is there in the sacrilegious profanation of the Mass applied to gain! How great disgrace in celibacy! But let us omit a comparison. This is what we have replied to the Confutation for the time being. Now we leave it to the judgment of all the godly whether the adversaries are right in boasting that they have actually refuted our Confession from the Scriptures.

THE END.

[As regards the slander and complaint of the adversaries at the end of the Confutation, namely, that this doctrine is causing disobedience and other scandals, this is unjustly imputed to our doctrine. For it is evident that by this doctrine the authority of magistrates is most highly praised. Moreover, it is well known that in those localities where this doctrine is preached, the magistrates have hitherto, by the grace of God, been treated with all respect by the subjects.

But as to the want of unity and dissension in the Church, it is well known how these matters first happened, and who have caused the division, namely, the sellers of indulgences, who shamelessly preached intolerable lies, and afterwards condemned Luther for not approving of those lies, and besides, they again and again excited more controversies, so that Luther was induced to attack many other errors. But since our opponents would not tolerate the truth, and dared to promote manifest errors by force, it is easy to judge who is guilty of the schism. Surely, all the world, all wisdom, all power ought to yield to Christ and His holy Word. But the devil is the enemy of God, and therefore rouses all his might against Christ, to extinguish and suppress the Word of God. Therefore the devil with his members, setting himself against the Word of God, is the cause of the schism and want of unity. For we have most zealously sought peace, and still most eagerly desire it, provided only we are not forced to blaspheme and deny Christ. For God, the discernor of all men's hearts, is our witness that we do not delight and have no joy in this awful disunion. On the other hand, our adversaries have so far not been willing to conclude peace without stipulating that we must abandon the saving doctrine of the forgiveness of sin by Christ without our merit, though Christ would be most foully blasphemed thereby.

And although, as is the custom of the world, it cannot be but that offenses have occurred in this schism through malice and by imprudent people; for the devil causes such offenses, to disgrace the Gospel; yet all this is of no account in view of the great comfort which this teaching has brought men, that for Christ's sake, without our merit, we have forgiveness of sins and a gracious God. Again, that men have been instructed that forsaking secular estates and magistracies is not a divine worship, but that such estates and magistracies are pleasing to God, and to be engaged in them is a real holy work and divine service.

If we also were to narrate the offenses of the adversaries, which, indeed, we have no desire to do, it would be a terrible list: what an abominable, blasphemous fair the adversaries have made of the Mass; what unchaste living has been instituted by their celibacy; how the Popes have for more than 400 years been engaged in wars against the emperors, have forgotten the Gospel, and only sought to be emperors themselves, and to bring all Italy into their power; how they have juggled the possessions of the Church; how through their neglect many false teachings and forms of worship have been set up by the monks. Is not their worship of the saints manifest pagan idolatry? All their writers do not say one word concerning faith in Christ, by which forgiveness of sin is obtained; the highest degree of holiness they ascribe to human traditions; it is chiefly of these that they write and preach. Moreover, this, too, ought to be numbered with their offenses, that they clearly reveal what sort of a spirit is in them, because they are now putting to death so many innocent, pious people on account of Christian doctrine. But we do not now wish to say more concerning this; for these matters should be decided in accordance with God's Word, regardless of the offenses on either side.

We hope that all God-fearing men will sufficiently see from this writing of ours that ours is the Christian doctrine and comforting and salutary to all godly men. Accordingly, we pray God to extend His grace to the end that His holy Gospel may be known and honored by all, for His glory, and for the peace, unity, and salvation of all of us. Regarding all these articles we offer to make further statements, if required.]

[THE SMALCALD ARTICLES.]

Articles of Christian Doctrine, which were to have been presented on our part to the Council, if any had been assembled at Mantua or elsewhere, indicating what we could accept or yield, and what we could not.

Written by Dr. Martin Luther

In the Year 1537.

Sorrede Doktor Martin Luthers.

Da der Papst Paulus, des Namens der dritte, ein Konzilium ausschrieb im vergangenen Jahr auf die Pfingsten, zu Mantua zu halten, und hernach von Mantua wegrückte, daß man noch nicht weiß, wohin er's legen will oder kann, und wir uns auf unsern Teil versehen sollten, daß wir entweder auch zum Konzilio berufen oder ungerufen verdammt würden: ward mir befohlen, Artikel unserer Lehre zu stellen und zusammen[zu]bringen, ob's zur Handlung [wenn es zur Verhandlung] käme, was und wiefern wir wollten oder könnten den Papisten weichen, und auf welchen wir gedächten endlich zu beharren und zu bleiben.

Demnach habe ich diese Artikel zusammen[ge]bracht und unserm Teil überantwortet. Die sind auch von den Unsern angenommen und einträglich bekannt, und beschloffen, daß man sie solle (wo der Papst mit den Seinen einmal so kühn wollte werden, ohne Lügen und Trügen, mit Ernst und wahrhaftig ein recht frei, christlich Konzilium zu halten, wie er wohl [schuldig wäre] öffentlich überantworten und unsers Glaubens Bekenntnis vorbringen.

Aber weil sich der römische Hof so greulich vor einem freien christlichen Konzilio fürchtet und das Nicht so schändlich flucht, daß er auch denen, die seines Teils sind, die Hoffnung genommen hat, als werde er nimmermehr ein frei, christlich Konzilium leiden, viel weniger selbst halten; daran sie sich denn, wie billig, fast [sehr] ärgern und nicht geringe Beschwerden darüber haben, als die daran merken, daß der Papst lieber wollte die ganze Christenheit verloren und alle Seelen verdammt sehen, ehe er sich oder die Seinen wollte ein wenig reformieren und seiner Tyranei ein Maß setzen lassen: so hab' ich gleichwohl diese Artikel indes wollen durch öffentlichen Druck an den Tag geben, ob ich ja eher sterben sollte, denn ein Konzilium würde (wie ich mich ganz versehen und verhoffe), weil die listflüchtigen und tag-scheuernden Schelme so jämmerlich Mühe haben, das Konzilium zu verjagen und zu verhindern, damit die, so nach mir leben und bleiben werden, mein Zeugnis und Bekenntnis haben vorzubewenden [anzuführen] über das [außer dem] Bekenntnis, das ich zuvor [im Jahre 1528] habe lassen ausgehen, darauf ich auch noch bisher [ge]blieben bin und bleiben will mit Gottes Gnade.

Denn was soll ich sagen? Wie soll ich klagen? Ich bin noch im Leben, schreibe, predige und lese täglich, noch [dennoch] finden sich solche giftige Leute, nicht allein unter den Widersachern, sondern auch falsche Brüder, die unsers Teils sein wollen, die sich unterstehen, meine Schrift und Lehre stracks wider mich zu führen, lassen mich zusehen und zuhören, ob sie wohl wissen, daß ich anders lehre, und wollen ihr Gift mit meiner Arbeit schmücken und die armen Leute unter mei-

Praefatio D. Martini Lutheri.

1] Quum papa Paulus, huius nominis tertius, concilium indiceret anno superiori circa Pentecosten Mantuae congregandum, et [R. 298 paulo post ab urbe Mantua alio transferret (unde nondum constat, quo illud convocare vel velit vel possit) et nobis quoque sperandum esset, ut ad concilium ipsi etiam voceremur, vel metuendum, ne non vocati damneremur, iniungebatur mihi, ut articulos doctrinae nostrae conscriberem et colligerem, si forte res procederet, ut constaret, quid et quatenus pontificiis cedere, et in quibus capitibus constanter perseverare et vellemus et possemus.

2] Conscripsi igitur hosce articulos et nostrae parti tradidi. A nostris illi recepti et unanimi confessione approbati sunt et decretum est, ut concilio (si quod a papa et pontificiis tandem sine mendaciis et fraudibus vero, legitimo et Christiano modo institueretur, sicut omnino deberet) publice offerrentur, et fidei nostrae confessionem explicarent.

Quum autem Romana ista aula seu [R. 299 3] curia adeo formidet Christianum liberumque concilium et lucem turpissime fugiat, ita ut etiam ipsis pontificiis spes concilii Christiani non tantum convocandi, sed etiam ferendi et concedendi prorsus adempta sit, unde sane offenduntur merito multi pontificii et aegre ferunt negligentiam istam papae, ac inde facile colligunt malle papam interitum totius Christianitatis et damnationem omnium animarum quam sui et suorum vel exiguum saltem reformationem, et quam tyrannidi suae modum praescribi patiatur: ideo et nihilominus articulos hos in publicum emittere volui, ut si citius ex hac vita evocarer, quam concilium congregaretur (quod ita eventurum esse omnino confido et spero, quum lucifugi isti nebulones nimium in protrahendo et impediendo concilio laborent), ut, inquam, ii, qui post me vivent et remanebunt, testimonium et confessionem meam haberent et proponere possent adiunctam confessioni, quam antea publicavi, in qua hactenus constanter permansi et permanebo deinceps per Dei gratiam.

4] Quid enim dicam? Quomodo querelam instituam? Adhuc superstes sum, scribo, conciones habeo et praelego publice et quotidie, et tamen virulenti homines non tantum ex adversariis, sed etiam falsi fratres, qui nobiscum se sentire aiunt, mea scripta et doctrinam meam simpliciter contra me afferre et allegare audent, me vivente, vidente et audiente, etiamsi sciant me aliter docere, et volunt virus suum meo labore exornare et miseros

Preface of Dr. Martin Luther.

Since Pope Paul III convoked a Council last year, to assemble at Mantua about Whitsuntide, and afterwards transferred it from Mantua, so that it is not yet known where he will or can fix it, and we on our part either had to expect that we would be summoned also to the Council or [to fear that we would] be condemned unsummoned, I was directed to compile and collect the articles of our doctrine [in order that it might be plain] in case of deliberation as to what and how far we would be both willing and able to yield to the Papists, and in what points we intended to persevere and abide to the end.

I have accordingly compiled these articles and presented them to our side. They have also been accepted and unanimously confessed by our side, and it has been resolved that, in case the Pope with his adherents should ever be so bold as seriously and in good faith, without lying and cheating, to hold a truly free [legitimate] Christian Council (as, indeed, he would be in duty bound to do), they be publicly delivered in order to set forth the Confession of our Faith.

But though the Romish court is so dreadfully afraid of a free Christian Council, and shuns the light so shamefully, that it has [entirely] removed, even from those who are on its side, the hope that it will ever permit a free Council, much less that it will itself hold one, whereat, as is just, they [many Papists] are greatly offended and have no little trouble on that account [are disgusted with this negligence of the Pope], since they notice thereby that the Pope would rather see all Christendom perish and all souls damned than suffer either himself or his adherents to be reformed even a little, and his [their] tyranny to be limited, nevertheless I have determined meanwhile to publish these articles in plain print, so that, should I die before there would be a Council (as I fully expect and hope, because the knaves who flee the light and shun the day take such wretched pains to delay and hinder the Council), those who live and remain after me may have my testimony and confession to produce, in addition to the Confession which I have issued previously, whereby up to this time I have abided, and, by God's grace, will abide.

For what shall I say? How shall I complain? I am still living, writing, preaching, and lecturing daily; [and] yet there are found such spiteful men, not only among the adversaries, but also false brethren that profess to be on our side, as dare to cite my writings and doctrine directly against myself, and let me look on and listen, although they know well that I teach otherwise, and nem Namen verführen. Was will doch immer mehr nach meinem Tode werden?

Ja, ich sollte billig alles verantworten, weil [solange] ich noch lebe. Ja wiederum, wie kann ich allein alle Mäuler des Teufels stopfen? Sondern denen (wie sie alle vergiftet sind), die nicht hören noch merken wollen, was wir schreiben, sondern allein an dem sich üben mit allem Fleiß, wie sie unsere Worte in allen Buchstaben aufs schändlichste verkehren und verderben mögen. Solchen lasse ich den Teufel antworten oder zulezt Gottes Zorn, wie sie verdienen. Ich denke oft an den guten Gerson, der zweifelte, ob man etwas Gutes sollte öffentlich schreiben. Tut man's nicht, so werden viel Seelen veräümt, die man könnte retten; tut man's aber, so ist der Teufel da mit unzähligen giftigen, bösen Mäulern, die alles vergiften und verkehren, daß doch die Frucht verhindert wird. Doch was sie daran gewinnen, sieht man am Tage. Denn hinfemal sie so schändlich wider uns gelogen und die Leute mit Lügen haben wollen behalten, hat Gott sein Werk immer fort [voran] getrieben, ihren Haufen immer kleiner und unsern größer gemacht und sie mit ihren Lügen zuschanden lassen werden, und noch immerfort.

Ich muß eine Historia sagen. Es ist hie zu Wittenberg gewesen aus Frankreich ein Doctor gesandt, der vor uns öffentlich sagte, daß sein König gewiß und übergewiß wäre, daß bei uns keine Kirche, keine Obrigkeit, kein Ehestand sei, sondern ginge alles untereinander wie das Vieh und täte jedermann, was er wollte. Nun rat, wie werden uns an jenem Tage vor dem Richterstuhl Christi ansehen die, so solche grobe Lügen dem Könige und andern Landen durch ihre Schrift eingeildet [eingeprägt, weißgemacht] haben für eitel Wahrheit? Christus, unser aller Herr und Richter, weiß ja wohl, daß sie lügen und gelogen haben; des Urteil werden sie wiederum müssen hören; das weiß ich fürwahr. Gott belehre, die zu bekehren sind, zur Buße! Den andern wird's heißen: Weh und Ach ewiglich!

Und daß ich wieder komme zur Sache, möchte ich fürwahr wohl gern ein recht christlich Konzilium sehen, damit doch viel Sachen und Leuten geholfen würde. Nicht daß wir's bedürfen; denn unsere Kirchen sind nun durch Gottes Gnade mit dem reinen Wort und rechtem Brauch der Sacramente, mit Erkenntnis allerlei Stände und rechten Werken also erleuchtet und beschickt [versorgt], daß wir unferthalben nach keinem Konzilio fragen und in solchen Stücken vom Konzilio nichts Besseres zu hoffen noch zu erwarten wissen. Sondern da sehen wir in den Distrikten allenthalben viel Pfarren ledig und wüß, daß einem das Herz möchte brechen, und fragen doch weder Bischöfe noch Zumherren [Domherren] danach, wie die armen Leute leben oder sterben, für welche doch Christus ist gestorben, und sollen denselben nicht hören mit ihnen reden als den rechten Hirten mit seinen Schafen, daß mir graut und bange ist, er möchte einmal ein Engelkonzilium lassen gehen über Deutschland, daß uns alle in Grund verderbte wie Sodom und Gomorra, weil wir sein so freventlich mit dem Konzilio spotten.

5) Deberem quidem ad omnia respondere, dum adhuc vivo. Sed quaeso, quomodo [R. 300] omnia diaboli ora obstruere solus possum? praesertim eorum (utpote venenatorum omnium), qui nec audire nec attendere volunt, quid scribamus, sed in eo toti sunt, ut verba nostra etiam in minutissimis literis scelerate pervertant et depravent. His ergo diabolus respondeat et tandem ira Dei, quemadmodum 6) merentur. Saepe recordor boni Gersonis dubitantis, num quid boni publice scribendum et proferendum sit. Si scriptio omittitur, multae animae negliguntur, quae liberari potuissent. Si vero illa praestatur, statim diabolus praesto est cum linguis pestiferis et calumniarum plenis, quae omnia corrumpunt et veneno inficiunt, ut utilitas scriptorum 7) impediatur. Quid tamen ex ista malitia sua commodi recipiant, manifestum est. Quia enim nos mendaciis perditae onerant et simpliciores per ista mendacia in suo coetu retinere voluerunt, Deus opus suum subinde promovit et ipsorum coetum reddidit minorem, nostrum vero maiorem, ac ipsos ob mendacia confudit et confundit etiamnum.

8) Recitabo historiam. Fuit Wittebergae Doctor quidam ex Galliis missus, qui nobis palam indicabat, regi suo certo certius persuasum esse apud nos nullam esse ecclesiam, nullum magistratum, nullum coniugium, sed promiscue omnes pecudum more vivere pro 9) arbitrio. Dic iam, quo vultu nos coram tribunali Christi in ultimo iudicio sint aspecturi ii, qui tam crassa et prodigiosa mendacia regi et aliis regnis per sua scripta inculcarunt ceu veritatem? Christus, omnium nostrum Dominus et iudex, scit ipse istos mentiri et semper mentitos esse. Huius sententiam vicissim audire cogentur, quod certo [R. 301] scio. Deus convertat convertendos, ut agant poenitentiam! Ceteros obruet vae et ah in aeternum.

10) Ut autem redeam ad rem, optarim ex animo concilium Christianum et liberum aliquando congregari, ut multis et rebus et hominibus consuleretur; non quod nos concilio indigeamus (nostrae enim ecclesiae per Dei gratiam puritate Verbi et vero usu sacramentorum ac cognitione vocationum et verorum operum ita sunt illustratae et constitutae, ut concilio opus nobis non sit, nec a concilio de his rebus quidquam melius sperare et expectare possimus), sed quod in episcopatibus videamus passim multas parochias plane desertas et vacuas, ita ut prae dolore cor hominis pii exstingui facile possit. Et tamen nec episcopi nec canonici curant, quomodo miseri homines vel vivant vel moriantur, pro quibus tamen Christus est mortuus, quem miseri homines ut verum pastorem cum ovibus suis loquentem audire non possunt 11) sunt. Et hoc me movet, ut exhorrescens vehementer metuum, ne Christus ipse aliquando convocet concilium angelicum contra Germaniam, quo funditus deleamur, sicut Sodom et Gomorrha, quandoquidem tam temere ipsi illudimus nomine et praetextu concilii.

as wish to adorn their venom with my labor, and under my name to [deceive and] mislead the poor people. [Good God!] Alas! what first will happen when I am dead?

Indeed, I ought to reply to everything while I am still living. But, again, how can I alone stop all the mouths of the devil? especially of those (as they all are poisoned) who will not hear or notice what we write, but solely exercise themselves with all diligence how they may most shamefully pervert and corrupt our word in every letter. These I let the devil answer, or at last God's wrath, as they deserve. I often think of the good Gerson, who doubts whether anything good should be [written and] published. If it is not done, many souls are neglected who could be delivered: but if it is done, the devil is there, with malignant, villainous tongues without number which envenom and pervert everything, so that nevertheless the fruit [the usefulness of the writings] is prevented. Yet, what they gain thereby is manifest. For while they have lied so shamefully against us, and by means of lies wished to retain the people, God has constantly advanced His work, and been making their following ever smaller and ours greater, and by their lies has caused and still causes them to be brought to shame.

I must tell a story. There was a doctor sent here to Wittenberg from France, who said publicly before us that his king was sure, and more than sure, that among us there is no church, no magistrate, no married life, but all live promiscuously as cattle, and each one does as he pleases. Imagine now, how will those who by their writings have instilled such gross lies into the king and other countries as the pure truth, look at us on that day before the judgment-seat of Christ? Christ, the Lord and Judge of us all, knows well that they lie and have [always] lied; His sentence they, in turn, must hear; that I know certainly. God convert to repentance those who can be converted! Regarding the rest it will be said, Woe, and, alas! eternally.

But to return to the subject. I verily desire to see a truly Christian Council [assembled some time], in order that many matters and persons might be helped. Not that we need it, for our churches are now, through God's grace, so enlightened and equipped with the pure Word and right use of the Sacraments, with knowledge of the various callings and of right works, that we on our part ask for no Council, and on such points have nothing better to hope or expect from a Council. But we see in the bishoprics everywhere so many parishes vacant and desolate that one's heart would break, and yet neither the bishops nor canons care how the poor people live or die, for whom nevertheless Christ has died, and who are not permitted to hear Him speak with them as the true Shepherd with His sheep. This causes me to shudder and fear that at some time He may send a council of angels upon Germany utterly destroying us, like Sodom and Gomorrah, because we so wantonly mock Him with the Council.

Über solche nötige Kirchensachen wären auch in weltlichem Stande unzählige große Stüde zu bessern. Da ist Uneinigkeit der Fürsten und Stände, Bucher und Geiz sind wie eine Sündflut eingerissen und eitel Recht geworden, Nutzwill, Unzucht, Übermut mit Kleibern, Fressen, Spielen, Brangen mit allerlei Untugend und Bosheit, Ungehorsam der Untertanen, Gefinde und Arbeiter aller Handwerke, auch der Bauern Übersehung [Überborteilung] (und wer kann's alles erzählen?) haben also überhandgenommen, daß man's mit zehn Konziliis und zwanzig Reichstagen nicht wieder wird zurechtbringen. Wenn man solche Hauptstücke des geistlichen und weltlichen Standes, die wider Gott sind, im Konzilio würde handeln, so würde man wohl zu tun kriegen alle Hände voll, daß man dieweil wohl würde verzeihen des Kinderspiels und Narrenwerks von langen Röden, großen Platten [Tonsuren], breiten Gürteln, Bischofs- und Kardinalshüten oder Stäben und dergleichen Gaukelei. Wenn wir zuvor hätten Gottes Gebot und Befehl ausgerichtet im geistlichen und weltlichen Stande, so wollten wir Zeit genug finden, die Speisen, Kleider, Platten und Kaseln [Mehkleider] zu reformieren. Wenn wir aber solche Kamele verschlingen und dafür Rücken zeigen, die Balken lassen stehen und die Splitter richten wollen, so möchten wir wohl auch mit dem Konzilio zufrieden sein.

Darum hab' ich wenig Artikel gestellt; denn wir ohnedas von Gott so viel Befehl haben in der Kirche, in der Obrigkeit, im Hause zu tun, daß wir sie nimmermehr ausrichten können. Was soll's denn, oder wozu hilft's, daß man drüber viel Dekrete und Satzungen im Konzilio macht, sonderlich so man diese Hauptstücke, von Gott geboten, nicht achtet noch hält? Gerade als müßte er unser Gaukelspiel feiern [sehen] dafür, daß wir seine ernsten Gebote mit Füßen treten. Aber unsere Sünden drücken uns und lassen Gott nicht gnädig über uns sein; denn wir büßen auch nicht [tun keine Buße], wollen dazu noch allen Greuel verteidigen.

Ach lieber Herr Jesu Christe, halt du selber Konzilium und erlöse die Deinen durch deine herrliche Zukunft! Es ist mit dem Papst und den Seinen verloren; sie wollen dein nicht. So hilf du uns Armen und Elenden, die wir zu dir seufzen und dich suchen mit Ernst, nach der Gnade, die du uns gegeben hast, durch deinen Heiligen Geist, der mit dir und dem Vater lebet und regieret, ewiglich gelobet! Amen.

12] Praeter haec tam necessaria negotia ecclesiastica essent quoque res magnae in statu politico corrigendae, ut discordia principum et statum. Usura et avaritia oeu diluvium inundarunt et specie iuris defenduntur. Petulantia, lascivia, superbia et luxur ac fastus in vestitu, crapula, alea, pompa, vitiorum et scelerum concursus, malitia, contumacia subditorum, familiae, opificum, mercenariorum, rusticorum aucupia et iniquissima in venditionibus aestimatio (et quis recitare potest omnia?) adeo accreverunt, ut decem conciliis et viginti comitiis politicis corrigi nequeant. Si haec principalia [R. 302 in ecclesiastico et politico statu, quae contra 13] Deum sunt, in concilio tractarentur, satis superque esset, de quibus ageretur, nec opus esset ludicris et iocularibus confabulationibus de veste talari, de insignibus verticalibus, rasuris et tonsuris, de cingulis latis seu balteis, de episcoporum et cardinalium infulis, galeris, pileis et baculis et similibus vanitatibus. Si antea Dei mandatum et voluntatem in ecclesiastico et politico ordine expeditissemus, satis postea otii et temporis nobis relinqueretur ad reformationem ciborum, vestium, cereorum, rasurarum, casularum etc. At, quia camelos deglutimus et interea culices excolamus, trabes relinquimus et festucas inquirimus et iudicamus, supersedere concilio possumus.

14] Paucos igitur articulos conscripsi. Habemus enim iam antea satis mandatorum Dei in ecclesia, in politia, in oeconomia, quibus satisfacere nunquam possumus. Ad quid ergo prodest copia ista decretorum, traditionum et legum in concilio, quum praecipua capita a Deo mandata nec curentur nec serventur? Quasi vero Deus in ludicris fabulis nostris acquiescere, et interea sua divina mandata pedibus ut conculcentur, ferre cogatur. Peccata autem nostra nos aggravant, nec sinunt Deum nobis esse propitium, quia poenitentiam non agimus et insuper omnem abominationem defendere volumus.

15] O Domine Iesu Christe, indicito et celebra tu ipse concilium, et libera tuos adventu tuo glorioso. Actum est de papa et pontificiis. Hi te non curant. Iuva ergo nos miseros et inopes, qui ad te gemimus et te ex corde quaerimus secundum gratiam, quam nobis dedisti, per Spiritum Sanctum tuum, qui tecum et cum Patre vivit et regnat, benedictus in saecula! Amen.

Besides such necessary ecclesiastical affairs, there would be also in the political estate innumerable matters of great importance to improve. There is the disagreement between the princes and the states; usury and avarice have burst in like a flood, and have become lawful [are defended with a show of right]; wantonness, lewdness, extravagance in dress, gluttony, gambling, idle display, with all kinds of bad habits and wickedness, insubordination of subjects, of domestics and laborers, of every trade, also the exactions [and most exorbitant selling prices] of the peasants (and who can enumerate all?) have so increased that they cannot be rectified by ten Councils and twenty Diets. If such chief matters of the spiritual and worldly estates as are contrary to God would be considered in the Council, they would have all hands so full that the child's play and absurdity of long gowns [official insignia], large tonsures, broad cinctures [or sashes], bishops' or cardinals' hats or maces, and like jugglery would in the mean time be forgotten. If we first had performed God's command and order in the spiritual and secular estate, we would find time enough to reform food, clothing, tonsures, and surplices. But if we want to swallow such camels, and, instead, strain at gnats, let the beams stand and judge the motes, we also might indeed be satisfied with the Council.

Therefore I have presented few articles; for we have without this so many commands of God to observe in the Church, the state, and the family that we can never fulfil them. What, then, is the use, or what does it profit that many decrees and statutes thereon are made in the Council, especially when these chief matters commanded of God are neither regarded nor observed? Just as though He were bound to honor our jugglery as a reward of our treading His solemn commandments under foot. But our sins weigh upon us and cause God not to be gracious to us; for we do not repent, and, besides, wish to defend every abomination.

O Lord Jesus Christ, do Thou Thyself convoke a Council, and deliver Thy servants by Thy glorious advent! The Pope and his adherents are done for; they will have none of Thee. Do Thou, then, help us, who are poor and needy, who sigh to Thee, and beseech Thee earnestly, according to the grace which Thou hast given us, through Thy Holy Ghost, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Father, blessed forever. Amen.

THE FIRST PART

Treats of the Sublime Articles Concerning the Divine Majesty, as:

I.

That Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, three distinct persons in one divine essence and nature, are one God, who has created heaven and earth.

II.

That the Father is begotten of no one; the Son of the Father; the Holy Ghost proceeds from Father and Son.

III.

That not the Father nor the Holy Ghost, but the Son became man.

IV.

That the Son became man in this manner, that He was conceived, without the cooperation of man, by the Holy Ghost, and was born of the pure, holy [and always] Virgin Mary. Afterwards He suffered, died, was buried, descended to hell, rose from the dead, ascended to heaven, sits at the right hand of God, will come to judge the quick and the dead, etc., as the Creed of the Apostles, as well as that of St. Athanasius, and the Catechism in common use for children, teach.

Concerning these articles there is no contention or dispute, since we on both sides confess them. Therefore it is not necessary now to treat further of them.

THE SECOND PART

Treats of the Articles which Refer to the Office and Work of Jesus Christ, or Our Redemption.

The first and chief article is this,

That Jesus Christ, our God and Lord, died for our sins, and was raised again for our justification, Rom. 4, 25.

And He alone is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world, John 1, 29; and God has laid upon Him the iniquities of us all, Is. 53, 6.

Likewise: All have sinned and are justified without merit [freely, and without their own works or merits] by His grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, in His blood, Rom. 3, 23 f.

Now, since it is necessary to believe this, and it cannot be otherwise acquired or apprehended by any work, law, or merit, it is clear and certain that this faith alone justifies us, as St. Paul says, Rom. 3, 28: For we conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the Law. Likewise v. 26: That He might be just, and the Justifier of him which believeth in Christ.

Of this article nothing can be yielded or surrendered [nor can anything be granted or permitted contrary to the same], even though heaven and earth, and whatever will not abide, should sink to ruin. For there is none selig werden", spricht Petrus Act. 4. „Und durch seine Wunden sind wir geheilet", Jes. 53. Und auf diesem Artikel steht alles, was wir wider den Papst, Teufel und Welt lehren und leben. Darum müssen wir des gar gewiß sein und nicht zweifeln, sonst ist es alles verloren und behält Papst und Teufel und alles wider uns den Sieg und Recht.

Der II. Artikel. Von der Messe.

Daß die Messe im Papsttum muß der größte und schrecklichste Gruel sein, als die stracks und gewaltiglich wider diesen Hauptartikel strebt und doch über und vor allen andern päpstlichen Abgöttereien die höchste und schönste gewesen ist. Denn es ist gehalten [sie halten dafür], daß solch Opfer oder Werk der Messe (auch durch einen bösen Ruch getan) helfe dem Menschen von Sünden, beide hier im Leben und dort im Fegefeuer, welches doch allein soll und muß tun das Lamm Gottes, wie droben gesagt. Von diesem Artikel ist auch nicht zu weichen oder nachzulassen; denn der erste Artikel leidet's nicht.

Und wo etwa vernünftige Papisten wären, möchte man dermaßen [gemählig] und freundlicher Weise mit ihnen reden: Erstlich, warum sie doch so hart an der Messe hielten? Ist's doch ein lauter Menschenfünklein, von Gott nicht geboten. Und alle Menschenfünklein mögen wir fallen lassen, wie Christus spricht Matth. 15: „Sie dienen mir vergeblich mit Menschengeboten."

Zum andern ist's ein unnötig Ding, daß man ohne Sünde und [Ge]fahr wohl lassen kann.

Zum dritten kann man das Sakrament viel besser und seliger[er] Weise (ja allein seliger Weise) nach Christus' Einklebung kriegen. Was ist's denn, daß man um einer erdichteten, unnötigen Sache willen, da man's sonst wohl und seliger haben kann, die Welt in Jammer und Not wollte zwingen?

Man lasse den Leuten öffentlich predigen, wie die Messe als ein Menschentand möge ohne Sünde nachbleiben und niemand verdammt werde, wer sie nicht achte, sondern möge wohl ohne Messe, durch bessere Weise selig werden: was gilt's, ob die Messe alsdann nicht von ihr selbst fallen wird, nicht allein bei dem tollen Pöbel, sondern auch bei allen frommen, christlichen, vernünftigen, gottesfürchtigen Herzen; viel mehr, wo sie hören würden, daß es ein [ge]fährlich Ding, ohne Gottes Wort und willen erdichtet und erfunden ist.

Zum vierten, weil solche unzählige, unaussprechliche Mißbräuche in aller Welt mit Kaufen und Verkaufen der Messen entstanden [sind], sollte man sie billig lassen fahren, auch allein [um] solchen Mißbräuchen zu wehren, wenn sie gleich an ihr selbst etwas Nützliches und Gutes hätte. Wie viel mehr soll man sie fahren lassen, solche Mißbräuche ewiglich zu verhüten, weil sie doch gar unnötig, unnütz und [ge]fährlich ist und man alles nötiger, nützlicher und gewisser ohne die Messe haben kann!

Zum fünften. Nun aber die Messe nichts anders ist noch sein kann (wie der Canon und alle Bücher sagen) denn ein Werk der Menschen (auch bus datum, per quod salvari possimus, inquit Petrus Act. 4, 12. Et per vulnera eius sanati sumus, Esa. 53, 3. Et in hoc articulo sita sunt et consistunt omnia, quae contra papam, diabolum et universum mundum in vita nostra docemus, testamur et agimus. Quare oportet nos de hac doctrina esse certos, et minime dubitare, alioquin actum est prorsus, et papa et diabolus et omnia adversa ius et victoriam contra nos obtinent.

II. Articulus de Missa docet:

1) Quod missa in papatu sit maxima et horrenda abominatio, simpliciter et hostiliter e diametro pugnans contra articulum primum, quae tamen prae omnibus aliis pontificiis idololatriis summa et speciosissima fuit. Statuerunt enim, quod sacrificium istud seu opus missae, etiam ab impio ac perduto nebulone praestitum, liberet hominem a peccatis cum in hac vita, tum in purgatorio, quum tamen solus agnus Dei nos liberet, ut supra dictum est. Hic nihil permittendum nec cedendum est, quia prior articulus id non fert.

2) Cum sanioribus pontificiis placide hoc modo conferri posset: Primum, quare tam rigide missae patrocinium suscipiant, quum illa tantummodo sit hominum inventum et a Deo non mandata sit? Hominum vero inventiones tuto omittere possumus, ut Christus testatur Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me mandatis hominum.

3) Secundo. Res est non necessaria, quae sine peccato et periculo omitti potest.

4) Tertio. Sacramentum meliori et Deo magis accepto, imo hoc solo accepto, [R. 306] salutari et beato modo secundum Christi institutionem sumi potest. Cur igitur propter signum humanum et non necessarium, quum aliter et rectius res ipsa haberi possit, ad extremas miseras homines cogerentur et adigerentur?

5) Curetur, ut publice hominibus ostendatur missam ut rem commentitiam seu humanum signum posse sine peccato omitti, et neminem damnari, qui missam non curat, sed etiam sine missa meliore ratione homines salvari posse. Sic fiet, ut missa sit sponte corruitura, non tantum in vulgo rudi, sed etiam in animis omnium piorum, Christianorum et sanorum, idque multo magis, quum audierint missam esse quiddam valde periculosum, sine Dei Verbo et voluntate confectum atque inventum.

6) Quarto. Quum fere innumeri et inenarrabiles abusus in universo mundo ex negotiatione missarum exstiterint, abroganda merito missa est, ut abusus isti removeantur, etiamsi quid utilitatis et boni in se contineret. Quanto magis autem, quum plane inutilis, non necessaria et periculosa sit, et omnia utilius atque certius absque missa haberi possint, eam missam facere debemus, ut abusus istos tetros perpetuo fugamus!

7) Quinto. Quum missa nihil sit aliud nec aliud esse possit (sicut canon et omnes libri pronuntiant) quam opus hominum (etiam other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, says Peter, Acts 4, 12. And with His stripes we are healed, Is. 53, 5. And upon this article all things depend which we teach and practise in opposition to the Pope, the devil, and the [whole] world. Therefore, we must be sure concerning this doctrine, and not doubt; for otherwise all is lost, and the Pope and devil and all things gain the victory and suit over us.

Article II: Of the Mass.

That the Mass in the Papacy must be the greatest and most horrible abomination, as it directly and powerfully conflicts with this chief article, and yet above and before all other popish idolatries it has been the chief and most specious. For it has been held that this sacrifice or work of the Mass, even though it be rendered by a wicked [and abandoned] scoundrel, frees men from sins, both in this life and also in purgatory, while only the Lamb of God shall and must do this, as has been said above. Of this article nothing is to be surrendered or conceded, because the first article does not allow it.

If, perchance, there were reasonable Papists we might speak moderately and in a friendly way, thus: first, why they so rigidly uphold the Mass. For it is but a pure invention of men, and has not been commanded by God; and every invention of man we may [safely] discard, as Christ declares, Matt. 15, 9: In vain do they worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

Secondly. It is an unnecessary thing, which can be omitted without sin and danger.

Thirdly. The Sacrament can be received in a better and more blessed way [more acceptable to God], (yea, the only blessed way), according to the institution of Christ. Why, then, do they drive the world to woe and [extreme] misery on account of a fictitious, unnecessary matter, which can be well obtained in another and more blessed way?

Let [care be taken that] it be publicly preached to the people that the Mass as men's twaddle [commentitious affair or human figment] can be omitted without sin, and that no one will be condemned who does not observe it, but that he can be saved in a better way without the Mass. I wager [Thus it will come to pass] that the Mass will then collapse of itself, not only among the insane [rude] common people, but also among all pious, Christian, reasonable, God-fearing hearts; and that the more, when they would hear that the Mass is a [very] dangerous thing, fabricated and invented without the will and Word of God.

Fourthly. Since such innumerable and unspeakable abuses have arisen in the whole world from the buying and selling of masses, the Mass should by right be relinquished, if for no other purpose than to prevent abuses, even though in itself it had something advantageous and good. How much more ought we to relinquish it, so as to prevent [escape] forever these horrible abuses, since it is altogether unnecessary, useless, and dangerous, and we can obtain everything by a more necessary, profitable, and certain way without the Mass.

Fifthly. But since the Mass is nothing else, and can be nothing else (as the Canon and all books declare), than a work of men (even of wicked scoundrels), by which one attempts böser Buben), damit einer sich selbst und andere mit sich gegen Gott versöhnen, Vergebung der Sünden und Gnade erwerben und verdienen will (denn also wird sie gehalten, wenn sie aufs allerbeste wird gehalten; was sollte sie sonst?), so soll und muß man sie verdammten und verwerfen. Denn das ist kraß wider den Hauptartikel, der da sagt, daß nicht ein böser oder frommer Mensch mit seinem Werk, sondern das Lamm Gottes und Sohn Gottes unsere Sünde trägt.

Und ob einer zum guten Schein wollte vorgeben, er wolle zur Andacht sich selbst berichten [mit dem Sacrament versehen] oder kommunizieren, das ist nicht Ernst. Denn wo [wenn] er mit Ernst will kommunizieren, so hat er's gewiß und aufs beste im Sacrament, nach der Einsetzung Christi gereicht. Aber sich selbst kommunizieren ist ein Menschenbündel [eine menschliche Meinung], ungewiß und unnötig, dazu verboten. Und er weiß auch nicht, was er macht, weil er ohne Gottes Wort falschem Menschenbündel und Fündlein [Erfindung] folgt. So ist's auch nicht Recht (wenn alles sonst schlecht [richtig] wäre), daß einer das gemeine Sacrament der Kirche nach seiner eigenen Andacht will brauchen und damit seines Gefallens ohne Gottes Wort außer der Kirche Gemeinschaft spielen.

Dieser Artikel von der Messe wird's ganz und gar sein im Konzilio. Denn wo es möglich wäre, daß sie uns alle andern Artikel nachgäben, so könnten sie doch diesen Artikel nicht nachgeben. Wie der Campegius zu Augsburg gesagt, er wollte sich eher auf [in] Stücke zerreißen lassen, ehe er wollte die Messe fahren lassen. So werde ich mich auch mit Gottes Hilfe eher lassen zu Asche machen, ehe ich einen Mechtmecht mit seinem Werke, er sei gut oder böse, lasse meinem Herrn und Heiland Jesu Christo gleich oder höher sein. Also sind und bleiben wir ewiglich geschieden und widereinander. Sie fühlen's wohl, wo die Messe fällt, so liegt das Papsttum; ehe sie das lassen geschehen, so töten sie uns alle, wo sie es vermögen.

Über das alles hat dieser Drachenschwanz, die Messe, viel Ungezieser und Geschmeiß, mancherlei Abgötterei gezeugt.

Erstlich das Fegfeuer. Da hat man mit Seelenmessen, Vigilien, dem Siebenten, dem Dreißigten und jährlichen Begängnissen, zuletzt mit der Gemeinwohle und aller Seelen Tag und Seelbad [Freibad für Arme, zum Seelenheil des Stifters geipendet] ins Fegfeuer gehandelt, daß die Messe schier allein für die Toten gebraucht ist, so doch Christus das Sacrament allein für die Lebendigen gestiftet hat. Darum ist das Fegfeuer mit allem seinem Gepränge, Gottesdienst und Gewerbe für ein lauter Teufelsgepenk zu achten. Denn es ist auch wider den Hauptartikel, daß allein Christus und nicht Menschenwerk den Seelen helfen soll; ohne daß sonst auch uns nichts von den Toten befohlen noch geboten ist. Derhalben mag man es wohl lassen, wenn es schon kein Irretum noch Abgötterei wäre.

Die Papisten führen hier Augustinum und etliche Väter [an], die vom Fegfeuer sollen geschrieben haben, und meinen, wir sehen nicht, impiorum nebulonum), quo opere aliquis se ipsum et alios una cum se ipso cum Deo reconciliare, remissionem peccatorum et gratiam impetrare et mereri conatur (sic enim aestimatur missa, quum maxime praedicatur; ad quid enim alioqui prodesset?), ideo certe damnanda et reiicienda est. Hoc enim directe pugnat cum primario articulo, qui affirmat non missificum sacerdotem, vel bonum vel malum, suo opere, sed Agnum Dei et Filium Dei tollere peccata nostra.

8) Quodsi quis fucum facere et praetendere vellet, se ex devotione sibi ipsi communionem exhibere velle, is longe erraret, nec [R.307 serio et ex animo loqueretur. Communio enim vera et certa est in sacramento, quae sit secundum institutionem Christi. Se ipsum autem communicare humana persuasio est, incerta et non necessaria, imo prohibita. Nescit enim ille, quid faciat, quum absque Verbo Dei opinioni et figmento humano obsequatur. Non 9) etiam recte facit is (etiamsi res alioqui plana esset), qui sacramentum proprium ecclesiae, extra ecclesiae communionem, sine Verbo Dei, ex propria quadam devotione et affectione usurpare vult.

10) In hoc articulo de missa concilium potissimum sudabit et consummabitur. Etsi enim possibile esset, ut omnes reliquos articulos nobis concederent, tamen hunc concedere non poterunt, quemadmodum Campegius Augustae dixit, se prius omnia tormenta, membrorum dilanationem et mortem passerum, quam missam missam facturum esse. Et ego etiam per Dei opem in cineres corpus meum redigi et concremari patiar prius, quam ut missarium ventrem, vel bonum vel malum, equiparari Christo Iesu, Domino et Servatori meo, aut eo superiorem esse feram. Sic scilicet in aeternum disiungimur et contrarii invicem sumus. Sentiunt quidem optime, cadente missa cadere papatum. Hoc priusquam fieri patiantur, omnes nos trucidabunt, si poterunt.

11) Ceterum draconis cauda ista (missam intelligo) peperit multiplices abominationes et idololatrias.

12) Primo purgatorium. Missis enim pro animabus, item vigiliis, septimis, et tricesimis, anniversariis, exsequiis, postremo vulgari septimana et omnium animarum die, balneis, et quae his affinia sunt, innumeris aliis phantasiis, irruerunt in purgatorium. Sic missa propemodum pro solis defunctis fuit celebrata, quum tamen Christus sacramentum pro [R.308 solis viventibus instituerit. Quapropter purgatorium, et quicquid ei solennitatis, cultus et quaestus adhaeret, mera diaboli larva est. Pugnat enim cum primo articulo, qui docet Christum solum, et non hominum opera, animas liberare. Et constat etiam de mortuis nihil nobis divinitus mandatum esse. Idcirco tuto omitti illud omne potest, etiamsi nihil erroris et idololatriae ei inesset.

13) Pontificii elegant Augustinum et quodam patres, qui de purgatorio scripserint, et non putant nos intelligere, ad quid et quare to reconcile himself and others to God, and to obtain and merit the remission of sins and grace (for thus the Mass is observed when it is observed at the very best; otherwise what purpose would it serve?), for this very reason it must and should [certainly] be condemned and rejected. For this directly conflicts with the chief article, which says that it is not a wicked or a godly hireling of the Mass with his own work, but the Lamb of God and the Son of God, that taketh away our sins.

But if any one should advance the pretext that as an act of devotion he wishes to administer the Sacrament, or Communion, to himself, he is not in earnest [he would commit a great mistake, and would not be speaking seriously and sincerely]. For if he wishes to commune in sincerity, the surest and best way for him is in the Sacrament administered according to Christ's institution. But that one administer communion to himself is a human notion, uncertain, unnecessary, yea, even prohibited. And he does not know what he is doing, because without the Word of God he obeys a false human opinion and invention. So, too, it is not right (even though the matter were otherwise correct) for one to use the common Sacrament of [belonging to] the Church according to his own private devotion, and without God's Word and apart from the communion of the Church to trifle therewith.

This article concerning the Mass will be the whole business of the Council. [The Council will perspire most over, and be occupied with, this article concerning the Mass.] For if it were [although it would be] possible for them to concede to us all the other articles, yet they could not concede this. As Campegius said at Augsburg that he would be torn to pieces before he would relinquish the Mass, so, by the help of God, I, too, would suffer myself to be reduced to ashes before I would allow a hireling of the Mass, be he good or bad, to be made equal to Christ Jesus, my Lord and Savior, or to be exalted above Him. Thus we are and remain eternally separated and opposed to one another. They feel well enough that when the Mass falls, the Papacy lies in ruins. Before they will permit this to occur, they will put us all to death if they can.

In addition to all this, this dragon's tail, [I mean] the Mass, has begotten a numerous vermin-brood of manifold idolatries.

First, purgatory. Here they carried their trade into purgatory by masses for souls, and vigils, and weekly, monthly, and yearly celebrations of obsequies, and finally by the Common Week and All Souls' Day, by soul-baths so that the Mass is used almost alone for the dead, although Christ has instituted the Sacrament alone for the living. Therefore purgatory, and every solemnity, rite, and commerce connected with it, is to be regarded as nothing but a specter of the devil. For it conflicts with the chief article [which teaches] that only Christ, and not the works of men, are to help [set free] souls. Not to mention the fact that nothing has been [divinely] commanded or enjoined upon us concerning the dead. Therefore all this may be safely omitted, even if it were no error and idolatry.

The Papists quote here Augustine and some of the Fathers who are said to have written concerning purgatory, and they think that we do not understand for what purpose and to what end they spoke as they did. St. Auguswozu und wohin sie solche Sprüche führen. St. Augustinus schreibt nicht, daß ein Fegfeuer sei, hat auch keine Schrift, die ihn dazu zwingt, sondern läßt es in Zweifel hangen, ob eins sei, und sagt, seine Mutter habe begehrt, daß man ihrer sollte gedenken bei dem Altar oder Sacrament. Nun, solches alles ist ja nichts denn Menschenandacht gewesen einzelner Personen, die keine Artikel des Glaubens (welches allein Gott zugehört) stiften.

Aber unsere Papisten führen solch Menschenwort dahin, daß man solle glauben ihrem schändlichen, lästerlichen, verfluchten Jahrmarkt von Seelmessen ins Fegfeuer zu opfern usw. Solches werden sie noch lange nicht aus St. Augustino beweisen. Wenn sie nun den fegfeuerischen Messenjahrmarkt abgetan haben, davon St. Augustinus nie geträumt hat, alsdann wollen wir mit ihnen reden, ob St. Augustinus' Wort ohne Schrift möge zu dulden sein und der Toten gedacht werden bei dem Sacrament. Es gilt nicht, daß man aus der heiligen Väter Worten oder Worten Artikel des Glaubens macht, sonst müßte auch ein Artikel des Glaubens werden, was sie für Speise, Kleider, Häuser usw. gehabt hätten, wie man mit dem Heiligtum [Reliquien] getan hat. Es heißt, Gottes Wort soll Artikel des Glaubens stellen und sonst niemand, auch kein Engel.

Zum andern ist das daraus gefolgt, daß die bösen Geister haben viel Büherei angerichtet, daß sie als Menschenseelen erschienen sind, Messen, Vigilien, Wallfahrten und andere Almosen geheißt mit unfählichen Lügen und Schallheiten. Welches wir alle haben für Artikel des Glaubens halten und danach leben müssen, und der Papst [hat] solches bekräftigt, wie auch die Messe und alle andern Greuel. Hier ist auch kein Weichen oder Nachlassen.

Zum dritten die Wallfahrten. Da hat man auch gesucht Messen, Vergebung der Sünden und Gottes Gnade; denn die Messe hat's alles regiert. Nun ist das ja gewiß, daß solche Wallfahrten ohne Gottes Wort uns nicht geboten, auch nicht vonnöten [sind], weil wir's wohl besser haben mögen und sie ohne alle Sünde und [Ge]fahr lassen mögen. Warum läßt man denn daheim eigene Pfarren, Gottes Wort, Weib und Kind usw., die nötig und geboten sind, und läuft den unnötigen, ungewissen, schädlichen Teufelsirrwischen nach? Ohne daß der Teufel den Papst geritten hat, solches zu preisen und [zu] bekräftigen, damit die Leute ja häufig von Christo auf ihre eigenen Werke fielen und abgöttisch würden, welches das Ärgste dran ist, über das, daß es unnötig, ungeboten, ungeraten und ungewiß, dazu schädlich Ding ist. Darum ist hier auch kein Weichen oder Nachgeben usw. Und man lasse solches predigen, daß es unnötig, dazu [ge]fährlich sei; danach [wird man] sehen, wo Wallfahrten bleiben.

sic illi locuti sint. Augustinus non scribit esse purgatorium, nec etiam habet testimonium Scripturae, quo nitatur, sed in dubio relinquit, num sit, et inquit matrem suam petisse, ut sui commemoratio fieret ad altare sive sacramentum. At hoc in universum nihil nisi hominum, et quidem unius atque alterius, devotio fuit, non constituens articulum fidei, id quod solius Dei est.

14) Nostri autem pontificii sententias istas hominum citant, ut fides habeatur tetrīs, blasphemis et maledictis nundinationibus de missis pro animabus in purgatorio, seu de inferiis et oblationibus etc. Sed ex Augustino nunquam ista probabunt. Et quum nundinationes istas et missas purgatorio destinatas aboleverint, quae ne per somnium quidem Augustino in mentem venerunt, colloquemur tandem cum illis, an Augustini dicta, destituta Verbo, sint admittenda, et an mortuorum commemoratio ad eucharistiam sit facienda.

15) Ex patrum enim verbis et factis non sunt extruendi articuli fidei, alioquin etiam articulus fidei fieret victus ipsorum, vestimentorum ratio, domus etc., quemadmodum cum reliquiis sanctorum luserunt. Regulam autem aliam habemus, ut videlicet Verbum Dei condat articulos fidei, et praeterea nemo, ne angelus quidem.

16) Secundo. Hoc etiam inde evenit, ut cacodaemones malitiam suam exerceant, et ceu animae defunctorum apparent, [R. 309] missas, vigiliis, peregrinationes et elemosinas exigent, horrendis mendaciis et ludibris. Quae omnia oportuit nos pro articulis fidei recipere et vitam secundum illa instituere, atque haec papa confirmavit, sicut et missam et alias abominationes omnes. In his ergo cedere aut aliquid concedere nec possumus nec debemus.

18) Tertio. Ortus inde sunt peregrinationes. Ad has etiam postulatæ sunt missae, remissio peccatorum et gratia Dei. Missa enim omnia gubernavit. Constat autem certo, peregrinationes istius modi carentes Verbo Dei nobis mandatas non esse, nec esse necessarias, quum melius ad animae curam pervenire, et sine peccato et periculo peregrinationes illas omittere possimus. Cur domi vocationes, parochiae, Verbum Dei, uxores et liberi etc. deseruntur, quorum cura necessaria et mandata est, et non necessarij, incerti, periculosi et diabolici ignes vere fatui seu errores

19) illis praefertuntur? Sic scilicet Satanas papam dementavit, ut ista laudaret et stabiliret, et multi magno numero a Christo ad propria sua opera desciscerent et idolatrae [idololatrae] fierent, quod omnium pessimum est, quum alioqui res ipsa per se nec necessaria nec praecepta sit, sed consilio et certitudine destituatur et plane noxia sit. Quamobrem hic cedere aut concedere aliquid non tine does not write that there is a purgatory, nor has he a testimony of Scripture to constrain him thereto, but he leaves it in doubt whether there is one, and says that his mother asked to be remembered at the altar or Sacrament. Now, all this is indeed nothing but the devotion of men, and that, too, of individuals, and does not establish an article of faith, which is the prerogative of God alone.

Our Papists, however, cite such statements [opinions] of men in order that men should believe in their horrible, blasphemous, and cursed traffic in masses for souls in purgatory [or in sacrifices for the dead and oblations], etc. But they will never prove these things from Augustine. Now, when they have abolished the traffic in masses for purgatory, of which Augustine never dreamt, we will then discuss with them whether the expressions of Augustine without Scripture [being without the warrant of the Word] are to be admitted, and whether the dead should be remembered at the Eucharist. For it will not do to frame articles of faith from the works or words of the holy Fathers; otherwise their kind of fare, of garments, of house, etc., would have to become an article of faith, as was done with relics. [We have, however, another rule, namely] The rule is: The Word of God shall establish articles of faith, and no one else, not even an angel.

Secondly. From this it has followed that evil spirits have perpetrated much knavery [exercised their malice] by appearing as the souls of the departed, and with unspeakable [horrible] lies and tricks demanded masses, vigils, pilgrimages, and other alms. All of which we had to receive as articles of faith, and to live accordingly; and the Pope confirmed these things, as also the Mass and all other abominations. Here, too, there is no [cannot and must not be any] yielding or surrendering.

Thirdly. [Hence arose] the pilgrimages. Here, too, masses, the remission of sins and the grace of God were sought, for the Mass controlled everything. Now it is indeed certain that such pilgrimages, without the Word of God, have not been commanded us, neither are they necessary, since we can have these things [the soul can be cared for] in a better way, and can omit these pilgrimages without any sin and danger. Why, therefore, do they leave at home [desert] their own parish [their called ministers, their parishes], the Word of God, wives, children, etc., who are ordained and [attention to whom is necessary and has been] commanded, and run after these unnecessary, uncertain, pernicious will-o'-the-wisps of the devil [and errors]? Unless the devil was riding [made insane] the Pope, causing him to praise and establish these practises, whereby the people again and again revolted from Christ to their own works, and became idolaters, which is worst of all; moreover, it is neither necessary nor commanded, but is senseless and doubtful, and besides harmful. Hence here, too, there can be no yielding or surrendering [to yield or concede anything here is not lawful], etc. And let this be preached, that such pilgrimages are not necessary, but dangerous; and then see what will become of them. [For thus they will perish of their own accord.]

Fourthly. Fraternities [or societies], in which cloisters, chapters, vicars have assigned and communicated (by a legal contract and sale) all masses and good works, etc., both Leute; welches nicht allein eitel Menschenhand, ohne Gottes Wort, ganz unnötig und ungeboten, sondern auch wider den ersten Artikel der Erlösung ist, darum keineswegs zu leiden.

Zum fünften das Heiligtum, darin so mancher öffentliche Lügen und Narrenwerk erfunden, von Sündens- und Rostknochen, das auch um solcher Büberei willen, des der Teufel gelacht hat, längst sollte verdammt worden sein, wenngleich etwas Gutes dran wäre; dazu [kommt, daß es] auch ohne Gottes Wort, weder geboten noch geraten, ganz unnötig und unnütz Ding ist. Aber das Ärgste [ist], daß es auch hat müssen Ablass und Vergebung der Sünden wirken, als ein gut Werk und Gottesdienst, wie die Messe usw.

Zum sechsten, hier gehört her der liebe Ablass, so beide den Lebendigen und Toten ist gegeben (doch um Geld), und der leidige Judas oder Papst das Verdienst Christi samt den übrigen Verdiensten aller Heiligen und der ganzen Kirche darin verkauft usw. Welches alles nicht zu leiden ist und auch nicht allein ohne Gottes Wort, ohne Not, ungeboten, sondern zuwider ist dem ersten Artikel. Denn Christus' Verdienst nicht durch unser Werk oder Pfennig, sondern durch den Glauben aus Gnaden erlangt wird, ohne alles Geld und Verdienst, nicht durch's Papsts Gewalt, sondern durch die Predigt oder Gottes Wort vortragen.

Von Anrufung der Heiligen.

Anrufung der Heiligen ist auch der endchristlichen [antichristlichen] Mißbräuche einer und streitet wider den ersten Hauptartikel und tilgt die Erkenntnis Christi, ist auch nicht geboten noch geraten, hat auch kein Exempel der Schrift, und haben's alles tausendmal besser an Christo, wenn jenes gleich köstlich Gut wäre, als doch nicht ist.

Und wiewohl die Engel im Himmel für uns bitten (wie Christus selber auch tut), also auch die Heiligen auf Erden oder vielleicht auch im Himmel, so folgt daraus nicht, daß wir die Engel und Heiligen anrufen, anbeten, ihnen fasten, feiern, Messe halten, opfern, Kirchen, Altar, Gottesdienst stiften und [auf] andere Weise mehr dienen und sie für Nothelfer halten und allerlei Hilfe unter sie teilen und jeglichem eine sonderliche zueignen sollten, wie die Papisten lehren und tun. Denn das ist Abgötterei, und solche Ehre gehört Gott allein zu. Denn du kannst als ein Christ und Heiliger auf Erden für mich bitten, nicht in einerlei, sondern in allen Nothen. Aber darum soll ich dich nicht anbeten, anrufen, feiern, fasten, opfern, Messe halten dir zu Ehren und auf dich meinen Glauben zur Seligkeit setzen. Ich kann dich sonst [auf andere Weise] wohl ehren, lieben und dir danken in Christo. Wenn nun solche abgöttische Ehre von den Engeln und toten Heiligen weggenommen wird, so wird die andere Ehre ohne Schaden sein, ja bald vergessen werden. Denn wo der Ruh und Hilfe, beide leiblich und geistlich, nicht mehr zu hoffen ist, werden sie die Heiligen wohl mit Frieden lassen, beide im Grabe und im Him-omnes et bona opera etc. pro vivis et mortuis. Hoc non tantum prorsus humanum figmentum est, sine Verbo Dei, non necessarium, non mandatum, sed etiam contra primum [R.310] articulum articulum redemptionis. Quare nec admittendum nec ferendum.

22] Quinto. Reliquiae sanctorum refertae multis mendaciis, ineptiis et fatuitatibus. Canum et equorum ossa ibi saepe reperta sunt. Et licet aliquid forte laudandum fuisset, tamen propter imposturas istas, quae diabolo risum excitarunt, iamdudum damnari debuissent, quum praesertim careant Verbo Dei, et non necessariae et inutiles sint. Est 23] que hoc omnium terribilissimum, quod finxerunt istas reliquias indulgentiam et remissionem peccatorum operari, et loco cultus Dei et boni operis, sicut missam, illas venerati sunt etc.

24] Sexto. Huc pertinent indulgentiae vivis et defunctis pro pecunia attributae, quibus sacrilegus et damnatus ille Iudas seu papa meritum Christi et merita superflua omnium sanctorum et totius ecclesiae vendidit etc., quae omnia et singula nequaquam ferenda sunt, quia carent Verbo Dei, non sunt mandata, non sunt necessaria, sed pugnant cum articulo primo. Meritum enim Christi non nostris operibus aut nummis, sed per fidem ex gratia apprehenditur et obtinetur sine pecunia et merito, non per papae potestatem, sed per praedicationem Verbi Dei oblatum et propositum.

De Invocatione Sanctorum.

25] Invocatio sanctorum est etiam pars abusu et errorum antichristi, pugnant cum primo principali articulo et delens agnitionem Christi. Non etiam est mandata, nec consilio nec exemplo nec testimonio Scripturae nititur. Omnia in Christo melius et certius nobis sunt proposita, ut non egamus invocatione sanctorum, etiamsi res pretiosa esset, quum tamen sit res maxime perniciosa.

Etsi angeli in coelo pro nobis orant [R.311] 26] (sicut ipse quoque Christus facit) et sancti in terris et fortassis etiam in coelis, tamen inde non sequitur angelos et sanctos a nobis esse invocandos, adorandos, ieiuniis, feriis, missis, oblationibus, templorum, altarium, cultuum fundationibus et aliis modis honorandos, ut patronos et intercessores, et unicuique eorum certa auxilia esse tribuenda, ut papistae docent et faciunt. Hoc enim idololatrium est, et hic honos soli Deo tribuendus est.

27] Potes quidem ut Christianus et sanctus in terris pro me orare, non in una tantum, sed in omni necessitate, propterea autem non debeo te adorare, invocare, ferias, ieiunia, oblationes, missas in tui honorem et cultum celebrare et fidem ad salutem meam tibi mancipare, quum aliis modis te honorare, diligere et tibi gratias agere in Christo possim. Hic 28] ergo idololatrius cultus de angelis et defunctis sanctis si sublatus fuerit, reliqua veneratio periculo carebit et cito oblivioni tradetur. Ubi enim spes commodi et subsidii corporalis et spiritualis adempta fuerit, ibi cultus sanctorum facile evanescet, sive illi sint for the living and the dead. This is not only altogether a human bauble, without the Word of God, entirely unnecessary and not commanded, but also contrary to the chief article, Of Redemption. Therefore it is in no way to be tolerated.

Fifthly. The relics, in which there are found so many falsehoods and tomfooleries concerning the bones of dogs and horses, that even the devil has laughed at such rascalities, ought long ago to have been condemned, even though there were some good in them; and so much the more because they are without the Word of God; being neither commanded nor counseled, they are an entirely unnecessary and useless thing. But the worst is that [they have imagined that] these relics had to work indulgence and the forgiveness of sins [and have revered them] as a good work and service of God, like the Mass, etc.

Sixthly. Here belong the precious indulgences granted (but only for money) both to the living and the dead, by which the miserable [sacrilegious and accursed] Judas, or Pope, has sold the merit of Christ, together with the superfluous merits of all saints and of the entire Church, etc. All these things [and every single one of them] are not to be borne, and are not only without the Word of God, without necessity, not commanded, but are against the chief article. For the merit of Christ is [apprehended and] obtained not by our works or pence, but from grace through faith, without money and merit; and is offered [and presented] not through the power of the Pope, but through the preaching of God's Word.

The invocation of saints is also one of the abuses of Antichrist conflicting with the chief article, and destroys the knowledge of Christ. Neither is it commanded nor counseled, nor has it any example [or testimony] in Scripture, and even though it were a precious thing, as it is not [while, on the contrary, it is a most harmful thing], in Christ we have everything a thousandfold better [and surer, so that we are not in need of calling upon the saints].

And although the angels in heaven pray for us (as Christ Himself also does), as also do the saints on earth, and perhaps also in heaven, yet it does not follow thence that we should invoke and adore the angels and saints, and fast, hold festivals, celebrate Mass in their honor, make offerings, and establish churches, altars, divine worship, and in still other ways serve them, and regard them as helpers in need [as patrons and intercessors], and divide among them all kinds of help, and ascribe to each one a particular form of assistance, as the Papists teach and do. For this is idolatry, and such honor belongs alone to God. For as a Christian and saint upon earth you can pray for me, not only in one, but in many necessities. But for this reason I am not obliged to adore and invoke you, and celebrate festivals, fast, make oblations, hold masses for your honor [and worship], and put my faith in you for my salvation. I can in other ways indeed honor, love, and thank you in Christ. If now such idolatrous honor were withdrawn from angels and departed saints, the remaining honor would be without harm and would quickly be forgotten. For when advantage and assistance, both bodily and spiritual, are no more to be expected, the saints will not be troubled [the worship of the saints will soon vanish], neither in their graves nor in heaven. For without a reward

mel. Denn umsonst oder aus Liebe wird ihrer niemand viel gedenken, achten noch [sie] ehren.

Und die Summa: Was die Messe ist, was daraus [ge]kommen ist, was daran hanget, das können wir nicht leiden und müssen's verdammen, damit wir das heilige Sacrament rein und gewiß, nach der Einsetzung Christi, durch den Glauben gebraucht und empfangen, behalten mögen.

Der III. Artikel. Von Stiften und Klöstern.

Daß die Stifte und Klöster, vorzeiten guter Meinung gestiftet, zu erziehen gelehrte Leute und tüchtige Weisbilder, sollten wiederum in solchem [Ge]brauch geordnet werden, damit man Pfarrherren, Prediger und andere Kirchendiener haben möge, auch sonst nötige Personen zu weltlichem Regiment in Städten und Ländern, auch wohlgezogene Jungfrauen zu Hausmüttern und Haushälterinnen usw.

Wo sie dazu nicht dienen wollen, ist's besser, man lasse sie wüste liegen oder reiße sie ein, denn daß sie sollten mit ihrem lästerlichen Gottesdienst, durch Menschen erdichtet, als etwas Besseres denn der gemeine Christenstand und von Gott gestiftete Ämter und Orden [Veruse] gehalten werden. Denn das ist alles auch wider den ersten Hauptartikel von der Erlösung Jesu Christi. Zudem, daß sie auch (wie alle andern Menschenfünklein) nicht geboten, nicht bonnöten, nicht nütze, dazu [ge]fährliche und vergebliche Mühe machen, wie die Propheten solche Gottesdienste Aven, daß ist, Mühe, heißen.

Der IV. Artikel. Vom Papsttum.

Daß der Papst nicht sei iure divino ober aus Gottes Wort das Haupt der ganzen Christenheit (denn das gehört e in e m allein zu, der heißt Jesus Christus), sondern allein Bischof oder Pfarrherr der Kirche zu Rom und derjenigen, so sich williglich oder durch menschliche Creatur (das ist, weltliche Obrigkeit), zu ihm begeben haben, nicht unter ihm als einem Herrn, sondern neben ihm als Brüder und Gesellen, Christen zu sein, wie solches auch die alten Konzilia und die Zeit St. Cypriani weisen [zeigen].

Jetzt aber darf kein Bischof den Papst Bruder heißen wie zu der Zeit, sondern muß ihn seinen allergnädigsten Herrn heißen, wenn's auch ein König oder Kaiser wäre. Das wollen, sollen und können wir nicht auf unser Gewissen nehmen; wer es aber tun will, der tue es ohne uns.

Hieraus folgt, daß alle dasjenige, so der Papst aus solcher falscher, freveler, lästerlicher, angemaßter Gewalt getan und vorgenommen hat, eitel teuflich Geschichte und Geschäft gewesen und noch sei (ohne was das leibliche Regiment belangt, darin Gott auch wohl durch einen Tyrannen und Pöbeln läßt einem Volk viel Gutes geschehen), zu Verderbung der ganzen heiligen christlichen Kirche in sepulcris sive in coelis. Frustra enim aut ex mera caritate nemo ipsorum facile recordabitur, nec eos colet et honore divino afficiet.

29) Summatim: Quidquid missa pontificia est, et quidquid habet, quod ex ea natum est, et quidquid ei adhaeret, id universum ferre non possumus, sed damnare cogimur, ut venerandum sacramentum, purum et certum, secundum institutionem Christi, per fidem usurpatum et acceptum, retinere possimus.

III. Articulus. De Collegiis Canonicorum, Cathedralibus et Monasteriis.

1) Collegia canonicorum et coenobia [R.312 olim optima intentione maiorum fundata ad educandos viros doctos et castas ac modestas feminas, debebant rursum converti in talem usum, ut pastores, concionatores et alii ecclesiarum ministri haberi possent, item alii idonei ad politicam administrationem sive ad rempublicam, in civitatibus et regionibus, ac pie educatae virgines ad oeconomiam et liberorum educationem etc.

2) Hunc usum si non retineant, consultum est, ut vasta deserantur aut diruantur potius, quam ut idololatricis cultibus et signis hominum propagata praeferantur Christianae vitae et a Deo mandatis officiis et vocationibus. Haec enim omnia pugnant cum primo principali articulo de redemptione, facta per Iesum Christum. Quid, quod, sicut alia hominum somnia, non sunt praecepta, non necessaria, non utilia, sed periculosa, et causam praebent vano labori, molestiis periculosos et cultui infrugifero, quem prophetae appellant Aven, id est, dolorem et laborem.

IV. Articulus de Papatu docet,

1) Quod papa non sit iure divino seu secundum Verbum Dei caput totius Christianitatis (hoc enim nomen uni et soli Iesu Christo debetur), sed tantum episcopus et pastor ecclesiae, quae est Romae, et eorum, qui voluntarie et sponte vel per humanam creaturam, id est, politicum magistratum, se ad eum conferunt, non ut sub ipso tamquam sub domino vivant, sed ut cum eo tamquam fratres, collegae, sodales et Christiani sint, quemadmodum hoc ipsum vetera concilia et aetas Cypriani ostendunt.

2) Hodie vero nullus episcoporum audet papam nominare fratrem, ut aetate Cypriani factum est, sed oportet, ut episcopi, imo Caesares et reges papam appellent omnium gratiosissimum dominum. Hanc arrogantiam bona conscientia nec volumus nec possumus nec debemus probare. Qui vero se ei subicere voluerit, faciat id suo periculo sine nobis.

3) Hinc sequitur, omnia, quae papa [R.313 ex tam arrogante, temeraria, mendace, blasphemia et furto arrepta potestate suscepit et fecit et adhuc facit, fuisse et esse mere diabolica acta et instituta (excepta politici regni administratione, ubi Deus saepe etiam per tyrannos et perfidos nebulones populo alicui benefacit) ad perditionem totius sanctae ec-or out of pure love no one will much remember, or esteem, or honor them [bestow on them divine honor].

In short, the Mass itself and anything that proceeds from it, and anything that is attached to it, we cannot tolerate, but must condemn, in order that we may retain the holy Sacrament pure and certain, according to the institution of Christ, employed and received through faith.

Article III: Of Chapters and Cloisters.

That chapters and cloisters [colleges of canons and communistic dwellings], which were formerly founded with the good intention [of our forefathers] to educate learned men and chaste [and modest] women, ought again to be turned to such use, in order that pastors, preachers, and other ministers of the churches may be had, and likewise other necessary persons [fitted] for [the political administration of] the secular government [or for the commonwealth] in cities and countries, and well-educated maidens for mothers and housekeepers, etc.

If they will not serve this purpose, it is better that they be abandoned or razed, rather than [continued and], with their blasphemous services invented by men, regarded as something better than the ordinary Christian life and the offices and callings ordained by God. For all this also is contrary to the first chief article concerning the redemption made through Jesus Christ. Add to this that (like all other human inventions) these have neither been commanded; they are needless and useless, and, besides, afford occasion for dangerous and vain labor [dangerous annoyances and fruitless worship], such services as the prophets call Aven, i. e., pain and labor.

Article IV: Of the Papacy.

That the Pope is not, according to divine law or according to the Word of God the head of all Christendom (for this [name] belongs to One only, whose name is Jesus Christ), but is only the bishop and pastor of the Church at Rome, and of those who voluntarily or through a human creature (that is, a political magistrate) have attached themselves to him, to be Christians, not under him as a lord, but with him as brethren [colleagues] and comrades, as the ancient councils and the age of St. Cyprian show.

But to-day none of the bishops dare to address the Pope as brother as was done at that time [in the age of Cyprian]; but they must call him most gracious lord, even though they be kings or emperors. This [Such arrogance] we will not, cannot, must not take upon our conscience [with a good conscience approve]. Let him, however, who will do it, do so without us [at his own risk].

Hence it follows that all things which the Pope, from a power so false, mischievous, blasphemous, and arrogant, has done and undertaken, have been and still are purely diabolical affairs and transactions (with the exception of such things as pertain to the secular government, where God often permits much good to be effected for a people, even through a tyrant and [faithless] scoundrel) for the ruin of the entire holy [catholic or]

(sobiel an ihm gelegen) und zu verkünden den ersten Hauptartikel von der Erlösung Jesu Christi.

Denn da stehen alle seine Bullen und Bücher, darin er brüllt wie ein Löwe (als der Engel Apoc. 12 bildet), daß kein Christ könne selig werden, er sei denn ihm gehorsam und untertan in allen Dingen, was er will, was er sagt, was er tut. Welches alles nichts anderes ist, denn also viel gesagt: Wenn du gleich an Christum glaubst und alles an ihm hast, was zur Seligkeit ist, so ist's doch nichts und alles umsonst, wo du mich nicht für deinen Gott hältst, mir untertan und gehorsam bist, so es doch offenbarlich ist, daß die heilige Kirche ohne Papst gewesen zum wenigsten über fünfhundert Jahre, und bis auf diesen Tag die griechische und viel anderer Sprachen Kirchen noch nie unter dem Papst gewesen und noch nicht sind. So ist's, wie oft gesagt, ein Menschengebicht, das nicht geboten, ohne Not und vergeblich [ist]; denn die heilige christliche Kirche ohne solch Haupt wohl bleiben kann und wohl besser geblieben wäre, wo solch Haupt durch den Teufel nicht aufgemworfen wäre. Und ist auch das Papsttum kein nütze in der Kirche, denn es übt kein christlich Amt, und muß also die Kirche bleiben und bestehen ohne den Papst.

Und ich sehe, daß der Papst wollte sich des begeben, daß er nicht iure divino oder aus Gottes Gebot der Oberste wäre, sondern, damit die Einigkeit der Christen wider die Kotten und Ketzerei desto daß [besser] erhalten würde, müßte man ein Haupt haben, daran sich die andern alle hielten; solches Haupt würde nun durch Menschen erwählt und stünde in menschlicher Wahl und Gewalt, das selbe Haupt zu ändern, zu entsetzen, wie zu Konstanzen das Konzilium fast die [ungefähr diese] Weise hielt mit den Päpsten, setzten der dreie ab und wählten den vierten; ich sehe nun, sage ich, daß sich der Papst und der Stuhl zu Rom solches begeben und annehmen wollte (welches doch unmöglich ist; denn er müßte sein ganz Regiment und Stand lassen umkehren und zerstören mit allen seinen Rechten und Büchern; Summa, er kann's nicht tun); dennoch wäre damit der Christenheit nichts geholfen, und würden viel mehr Kotten werden denn zuvor.

Denn weil man solchem Haupt nicht müßte untertan sein aus Gottes Befehl, sondern aus menschlichem guten Willen, würde es gar leichtlich und bald verachtet, zuletzt kein Glied behalten, müßte auch nicht immerdar zu Rom oder anderm Ort sein, sondern wo und in welcher Kirche Gott einen solchen Mann hätte gegeben, der tüchtig dazu wäre. O, das wollte ein weitläufig, müßes Wesen werden!

Darum kann die Kirche nimmermehr daß [besser] regiert und erhalten werden, denn daß wir alle unter einem Haupt, Christo, leben, und die Bischöfe alle, gleich nach dem Amt (ob sie wohl ungleich nach den Gaben), fleißig zusammenhalten in einträchtiger Lehre, Glauben, Sakramenten, Gebeten und Werken der Liebe usw.; wie St. Hieronymus schreibt, daß die Priester zu clesiae catholicae seu Christianae (quantum in ipso est) et ad destructionem primi et praecipui articuli de redemptione facta per Iesum Christum.

4) Prostant enim omnes ipsius bullae et libri, in quibus rugit ut leo (ut angelus Apoc. 12, 1 sqq. significat), clamitans neminem Christianorum posse salvari, nisi ei obediat et subiectus sit in omnibus, quaecunque vult, quaecunque dicit, quaecunque facit. Hoc totum quid aliud dictum est nisi: Licet in Christum credas et omnia, quae ad salutem necessaria sunt, in ipso solo habeas, tamen te nihil proficere, nisi papam habeas et colas ut Deum tuum et ei subditus sis et obedias? Quum tamen manifestum sit sanctam ecclesiam sine papa fuisse ad minimum ultra quingentos annos, et adhuc hodie Graecorum et multarum aliarum linguarum ecclesias nec fuisse hactenus, nec adhuc esse sub papa.

5) Taceo, quod, ut saepe dictum est, hominum hoc figmentum sit, non mandatum, non necessarium, non utile. Sancta enim Christiana sive catholica ecclesia consistere absque isto capite optime potest, et constitisset certe rectius, ac melius cum ea ageretur, nisi diabolus illud caput in medium proiecisset et 6) exaltasset. Et certum est papatum nullius esse usus in ecclesia, quia nullum ecclesiasticum officium exercet. Et necesse est, ecclesiam permanere et consistere sine papa.

7) Pono autem, papam fateri se non iure divino sive ex mandato Dei esse supremum, sed, ut concordia et unitas Christianorum adversus sectarios et haereticos commodius conservari possit, caput certum esse eligendum, cui ceteri omnes quasi innitantur, [R. 314] atque tale caput per homines eligi, et in hominum quoque electione et potestate situm esse, illud caput ut mutet et removeat, sicut Constantiense concilium hac propemodum ratione tres papas removit et quartum elegit; pono, inquam, haec a papa et sede Romana ita dici et accipi (quod tamen impossibile est, sic enim universum suum regnum et statum immutari, everti et destrui pateretur omniaque iura et volumina sua, id quod, ut paucis dicam, nunquam faciet): tamen neque hoc modo consuleretur ecclesiae Christianae, sed plures quam antea sectae oriturae essent.

8) Si enim non ex mandato Dei, verum ex hominis libera voluntate capiti isti obedientia praestanda esset, facile et brevi tempore contemptum, tandem nullum membrum retineret, nec etiam perpetuo Romae aut quovis alio in loco illud esse oporteret, sed ubicunque et in quacunque ecclesia Deus virum talem, qui ad tantum munus obeundum idoneus esset, largiretur. Haec res perplexa et confusio plena futura esset.

9) Quapropter ecclesia nunquam melius gubernari et conservari potest, quam si omnes sub uno capite, quod est Christus, vivamus, et episcopi omnes pares officio (licet dispares sint quoad dona) summa cum diligentia coniuncti sint unanimitate doctrinae, fidei, sacramentorum, orationis et operum caritatis etc., sicut S. Hieronymus scribit sacerdotes Alex-

Christian Church (so far as it is in his power) and for the destruction of the first and chief article concerning the redemption made through Jesus Christ.

For all his bulls and books are extant, in which he roars like a lion (as the angel in Rev. 12 depicts him, [crying out] that no Christian can be saved unless he obeys him and is subject to him in all things that he wishes, that he says, and that he does. All of which amounts to nothing less than saying: Although you believe in Christ, and have in Him [alone] everything that is necessary to salvation, yet it is nothing and all in vain unless you regard [have and worship] me as your god, and be subject and obedient to me. And yet it is manifest that the holy Church has been without the Pope for at least more than five hundred years, and that even to the present day the churches of the Greeks and of many other languages neither have been nor are yet under the Pope. Besides, as often remarked, it is a human figment which is not commanded, and is unnecessary and useless; for the holy Christian [or catholic] Church can exist very well without such a head, and it would certainly have remained better [purer, and its career would have been more prosperous] if such a head had not been raised up by the devil. And the Papacy is also of no use in the Church, because it exercises no Christian office; and therefore it is necessary for the Church to continue and to exist without the Pope.

And supposing that the Pope would yield this point, so as not to be supreme by divine right or from God's command, but that we must have [there must be elected] a [certain] head, to whom all the rest adhere [as their support] in order that the [concord and] unity of Christians may be preserved against sects and heretics, and that such a head were chosen by men, and that it were placed within the choice and power of men to change or remove this head, just as the Council of Constance adopted nearly this course with reference to the Popes, deposing three and electing a fourth; supposing, I say, that the Pope and See at Rome would yield and accept this (which, nevertheless, is impossible; for thus he would have to suffer his entire realm and estate to be overthrown and destroyed, with all his rights and books, a thing which, to speak in few words, he cannot do), nevertheless, even in this way Christianity would not be helped, but many more sects would arise than before.

For since men would have to be subject to this head, not from God's command, but from their personal good pleasure, it would easily and in a short time be despised, and at last retain no member; neither would it have to be forever confined to Rome or any other place, but it might be wherever and in whatever church God would grant a man fit for the [taking upon him such a great] office. Oh, the complicated and confused state of affairs [perplexity] that would result!

Therefore the Church can never be better governed and preserved than if we all live under one head, Christ, and all the bishops, equal in office (although they be unequal in gifts), be diligently joined in unity of doctrine, faith, Sacraments, prayer, and works of love, etc., as St. Jerome writes that the priests at Alexandria together and in common gov-

Alexandria sämmtlich und insgemein die Kirche regierten, und [wie] die Apostel auch getan und hernach alle Bischöfe in der ganzen Christenheit, bis der Papst seinen Kopf über alle erhob.

Dies Stüd zeigt gewaltiglich, daß er der rechte Endekrist oder Wiberkrist sei, der sich über und wider Christum gesetzt und erhöht hat, weil er will die Christen nicht lassen selig sein ohne seine Gewalt, welche doch nichts ist, von Gott nicht geordnet noch geboten. Das heißt eigentlich „über Gott und wider Gott sich setzen“, wie St. Paulus sagt 2 Theß. 2. Solches tut dennoch der Türke noch Tatter [Tatar] nicht, wie große Feinde sie der Christen sind, sondern lassen glauben an Christum, wer da will, und nehmen leiblichen Zins und Gehorsam von den Christen.

Aber der Papst will nicht lassen glauben, sondern spricht, man solle ihm gehorsam sein, so werde man selig. Das wollen wir nicht tun, oder drüber sterben in Gottes Namen. Das kommt alles daher, daß er iure divino der Oberste hat sollen heißen über die christliche Kirche. Darum hat er sich müssen Christo gleich und über Christum setzen, sich das Haupt, hernach einen Herrn der Kirche, zuletzt auch der ganzen Welt und schlecht [schlecht] einen irdischen Gott rühmen lassen, bis er auch den Engeln im Himmelreich zu gebieten sich unterstand. Und wenn man unterscheidet des Papstes Lehre von der Heiligen Schrift oder sie dagegen stellt und hält, so findet sich's, daß des Papstes Lehre, wo sie am allerbesten ist, so ist sie aus dem kaiserlichen, heidnischen Recht genommen und lehrt weltliche Händel und Gerichte, wie seine Decretales zeugen. Danach lehrt sie Ceremonien von Kirchen, Kleibern, Speisen, Personen und des Kindespiels, Narben [Scheinwens] und Narrenwerts ohne Maßen, aber in diesem allem gar nichts von Christo, Glauben und Gottes Geboten. Zuletzt ist's nichts denn eitel Teufel, da er seine Lügen von Messen, Fegfeuer, Klösteren, eigenem Wert und Gottesdienst (welches denn das rechte Papsttum ist) treibt über und wider Gott, verdammt, tötet und plagt alle Christen, so solchen seinen Greuel nicht über alles heben und ehren. Darum, so wenig wir den Teufel selbst für einen Herrn oder Gott anbeten können, so wenig können wir auch seinen Apostel, den Papst oder Endekrist, in seinem Regiment zum Haupt oder Herrn leiden. Denn Lügen und Mord, Leib und Seele zu verderben ewiglich, das ist sein päpstlich Regiment eigentlich, wie ich daselbe in vielen Büchern bewiesen habe.

An diesen vier Artikeln werden sie genugsam zu verdammen haben im Konzilio; denn sie nicht das geringste Gliedlein von der Artikel einem uns lassen können noch wollen. Des müssen wir gewiß sein und uns erwägen [vertrauend hingeben] der Hoffnung, Christus, unser Herr, habe seinen Widerfacher angegriffen und werde nachdrücken beide mit seinem Geist und Zukunft. Amen.

Denn im Konzilio werden wir nicht vor dem Kaiser oder weltlicher Obrigkeit wie zu Augsburg (der ganz ein gnädiges Ausschreiben tat und in der Güte ließ die Sachen verhören), sondern vor andriae communi opera gubernasse ecclesias. Et apostoli idem fecerunt ac postea omnes episcopi in toto orbe Christiano, donec papa caput suum super omnes attolleret.

10) Haec doctrina praeclare ostendit papam esse ipsum verum antichristum, qui supra et contra Christum sese extulit et exivit, quandoquidem Christianos non vult esse salvos [R. 315 sine sua potestate, quae tamen nihil est et 11] a Deo nec ordinata nec mandata est. Hoc proprie loquendo est se efferre supra et contra Deum, sicut Paulus 2 Thess. 2, 4 loquitur. Et hoc profecto nec Turcae nec Tartari faciunt, quantumvis sint Christianorum atroces hostes, sed permittunt, ut credat in Christum, quicumque voluerit, et accipiunt tributum et obedientiam externam sive corporalem a Christianis.

12) Papa vero prohibet hanc fidem, aiens sibi obediendum esse, si quis saltari velit. Hoc autem facere nolumus, etiamsi nobis propterea moriendum sit in nomine Domini. Et 13) id in universum inde oritur, quod papa iure divino voluit esse summum caput Christianae ecclesiae. Ideo se ipsum Christo aequiparavit et supra Christum tandem extulit et se caput, deinde dominum ecclesiae, postea totius mundi et simpliciter terrestrem deum praedicare voluit, donec etiam ipsis angelis in coelo praecipere haec et illa cona- 14) retur. Et quum instituitur discrimen inter dogma papae et Sacram Scripturam et utriusque fit collatio, manifeste patet papae dogma, etiam optimum, ex civili, Caesareo et ethnico iure concinnatum esse, et politica negotia et iudicia seu iura tractare, sicut ostendunt decretales; deinde proponere ceremonias de templis, vestibus, cibis, personis et similibus ludicris, larvis et iocularibus supra modum, et inter haec omnia nihil plane de Christo, fide et mandatis Dei; postremo repraesentare ipsum diabolum, dum mendacia papalia de missis, purgatorio, monastica vita, operibus propriis et cultibus fictitiis (in quibus singulis merus papatus fundatur et consistit) supra et contra Deum urget et disseminat, et omnes Christianos, qui has papae abominationes super omnia praedicare et honorare nolunt, damnat, trucidat, excruciat. Quare sicut diabolum ipsum non possumus adorare et pro Domino et Deo colere, [R. 316 ita nec eius apostolum, papam seu antichristum, in regno eius ut caput et dominum ferre possumus. Mentiri enim et occidere, animas et corpora in aeternum perdere pontificii regni proprium est, sicut hoc ipsum multis libris evidentissime ad oculum demonstravi.

15) Hi articuli quatuor sufficiunt, quos in concilio sibi damnandos proponant. Non enim vel minimum punctulum in his articulis nobis concedent. Et de hoc certos nos esse oportet et praemonitos ac obfirmatos firma spe, Christum, Dominum nostrum, irruisse in adversarium suum, quem et insecuturus et confecturus est Spiritu et adventu suo. Amen.

16) Nam in concilio stabimus non coram Caesare aut politico magistratu, sicut Augustae Vindelicorum (ubi Caesar clementissimum edictum promulgans, benigne et placide erned the churches, as did also the apostles, and afterwards all bishops throughout all Christendom, until the Pope raised his head above all.

This teaching shows forcefully that the Pope is the very Antichrist, who has exalted himself above, and opposed himself against Christ, because he will not permit Christians to be saved without his power, which, nevertheless, is nothing, and is neither ordained nor commanded by God. This is, properly speaking, to exalt himself above all that is called God, as Paul says, 2 Thess. 2, 4. Even the Turks or the Tartars, great enemies of Christians as they are, do not do this, but they allow whoever wishes to believe in Christ, and take bodily tribute and obedience from Christians.

The Pope, however, prohibits this faith, saying that to be saved a person must obey him. This we are unwilling to do, even though on this account we must die in God's name. This all proceeds from the fact that the Pope has wished to be called the supreme head of the Christian Church by divine right. Accordingly he had to make himself equal and superior to Christ, and had to cause himself to be proclaimed the head and then the lord of the Church, and finally of the whole world, and simply God on earth, until he has dared to issue commands even to the angels in heaven. And when we distinguish the Pope's teaching from, or measure and hold it against, Holy Scripture, it is found [it appears plainly] that the Pope's teaching, where it is best, has been taken from the imperial and heathen law, and treats of political matters and decisions or rights, as the Decretals show; furthermore, it teaches of ceremonies concerning churches, garments, food, persons and [similar] puerile, theatrical and comical things without measure, but in all these things nothing at all of Christ, faith, and the commandments of God. Lastly, it is nothing else than the devil himself, because above and against God he urges [and disseminates] his [papal] falsehoods concerning masses, purgatory, the monastic life, one's own works and [fictitious] divine worship (for this is the very Papacy [upon each of which the Papacy is altogether founded and is standing]), and condemns, murders, and tortures all Christians who do not exalt and honor these abominations [of the Pope] above all things. Therefore, just as little as we can worship the devil himself as Lord and God, we can endure his apostle, the Pope, or Antichrist, in his rule as head or lord. For to lie and to kill, and to destroy body and soul eternally, that is wherein his papal government really consists, as I have very clearly shown in many books.

In these four articles they will have enough to condemn in the Council. For they cannot and will not concede us even the least point in one of these articles. Of this we should be certain, and animate ourselves with [be forewarned and made firm in] the hope that Christ, our Lord, has attacked His adversary, and he will press the attack home [pursue and destroy him] both by His Spirit and coming. Amen.

For in the Council we will stand not before the Emperor or the political magistrate, as at Augsburg (where the Emperor published a most gracious edict, and caused matters to be heard kindly [and dispassionately]), but dem Papst und dem Teufel selbst werden wir das stehen, der nichts gedenkt zu hören, sondern schlichts [zu] verdammen, [zu] morden und zur Abgötterei zu zwingen. Darum müssen wir hier nicht seine Füße küssen oder sagen: Ihr seid mein gnädiger Herr! sondern wie im Zacharia [Sacharia] der Engel zum Teufel sprach: „Strafe dich Gott, Satan!“

Das dritte Teil der Artikel.

Folgende Stücke oder Artikel mögen wir mit Gelehrten, Vernünftigen oder unter uns selbst handeln. Der Papst und sein Reich achten derselben nicht viel; denn conscientia ist bei ihnen nichts, sondern Geld, Ehr' und Gewalt ist's gar.

I. Von der Sünde.

Hier müssen wir bekennen, wie St. Paulus Röm. 5 sagt, daß die Sünde sei von Adam, dem einigen Menschen, hergekommen, durch welches ungehorsam alle Menschen sind Sünder [ge-] worden, dem Tode und dem Teufel unterworfen. Dies heißt die Erbsünde oder Hauptsünde.

Solcher Sünde Früchte sind danach die bösen Werke, so in den zehn Geboten verboten sind, als Unglaube, falscher Glaube, Abgötterei, ohne Gottesfurcht sein, Vermessenheit, Verzweifeln, Blindheit und Summa, Gott nicht kennen oder achten; danach: lügen, bei Gottes Namen schwören, nicht beten, nicht anrufen, Gottes Wort nicht achten, Eltern ungehorsam sein, morden, Unkeuschheit, flehen, trügen usw.

Solche Erbsünde ist so gar eine tiefe, böse Verderbung der Natur, daß sie keine Vernunft nicht kennt, sondern muß aus der Schrift Offenbarung geglaubt werden, Ps. 51; Röm. 5; Ex. 33; Gen. 3. Darum sind das eitel Irrtümer und Blindheit wider diesen Artikel, daß die Scholtheologen [Scholastiker] gelehrt haben, nämlich:

Daß nach dem Erbsall Adams des Menschen natürliche Kräfte sind ganz und unverderbt [ge]blieben und der Mensch habe von Natur eine rechte Vernunft und guten Willen, wie die Philosophi solches lehren.

Item, daß der Mensch habe einen freien Willen, Gutes zu tun und Böses zu lassen, und wiederum, Gutes zu lassen und Böses zu tun.

Item, daß der Mensch möge [könne] aus natürlichen Kräften alle Gebote Gottes tun und halten.

Item, er möge [könne] aus natürlichen Kräften Gott lieben über alles und seinen Nächsten als sich selbst.

Item, wenn ein Mensch tut, soviel an ihm ist, so gibt ihm Gott gewißlich seine Gnade.

Item, wenn er zum Sakrament will gehen, ist nicht not ein guter Vorsatz, Gutes zu tun, sondern sei genug, daß er nicht einen bösen Vorsatz, Sünde zu tun, habe; so gar gut ist die Natur und das Sakrament so kräftig.

Es sei nicht in der Schrift gegründet, daß causam et rem ipsam audiri volebat), sed coram papa ac ipso diabolo comparebimus, qui nihil audire vult, sed simpliciter indicta causa damnare, occidere et ad idololatriam vi cogere. Quare hic non sunt nobis exosculandi pedes eius nec dicendum: Gratosissimus Dominus es! sed quemadmodum in Zacharia [3, 2] angelus ad Satanam dicebat: Increpet Dominus te, Satana!

[R. 317]

TERTIA PARS ARTICULORUM.

De sequentibus articulis agere poterimus cum doctis et prudentibus viris, vel etiam inter nos ipsos. Papa et regnum pontificum illos non magnopere curant. Conscientia enim apud eos nihil est, sed pecunia, gloria, honores, potentia ipsis sunt omnia.

I. De Peccato.

1] Hic constendum nobis est, ut Paulus Rom. 5, 11 affirmat, peccatum ab uno homine Adamo ortum esse et introisse in mundum, per cuius inobedientiam omnes homines facti sunt peccatores, morti et diabolo obnoxii. Hoc nominatur originale, hereditarium, principale et capitale peccatum.

2] Huius peccati fructus postea sunt mala opera in Decalogo prohibita, ut sunt diffidentia, incredulitas, falsa fides sive κακοπιστία, idololatria, sine Dei timore esse, praesumptio seu temeritas, desperatio, coecitas seu excoecatio, et ut summam dicam, Deum non agnoscere, non curare; deinde mentiri, nomine Dei abuti, peierare, non orare, non invocare, Verbum Dei contemnere vel negligere, parentibus immorigerum esse, occidere, lascivire, furari, decipere etc.

3] Hoc peccatum hereditarium tam profunda et tetra est corruptio naturae, ut nullius hominis ratione intelligi possit, sed ex Scripturae patefactione agnoscenda et credenda sit, Ps. 51, 7; Rom. 5, 12 sqq.; Exod. 33, 3; Gen. 3, 7 sqq. Quapropter meri sunt errores et caligines contra hunc articulum scholasticorum doctorum dogmata, quibus docetur:

Post Adae lapsum hominis naturales [R. 318]

4] vires mansisse integras et incorruptas et hominem naturaliter habere rationem rectam et bonam voluntatem, sicut philosophi docent.

5] Et, hominem habere liberum arbitrium faciendi bonum et omittendi malum, et contra omittendi bonum et faciendi malum.

6] Item, hominem posse naturalibus viribus omnia mandata Dei servare et facere.

7] Et, posse naturalibus viribus Deum super omnia diligere et proximum sicut se ipsum.

8] Item, si faciat homo, quantum in se est, Deum largiri ei certo suam gratiam.

9] Et, si accedere velit homo ad eucharistiam, non opus esse bono proposito recte faciendi, sed sufficere, si non adsit malum propositum peccandi; tam bonam scilicet esse naturam, et tantam esse vim sacramenti.

10] Item, non posse ex Scriptura probari

[we will appear] before the Pope and devil himself, who intends to listen to nothing, but merely [when the case has been publicly announced] to condemn, to murder and to force us to idolatry. Therefore we ought not here to kiss his feet, or to say: "Thou art my gracious lord," but as the angel in Zechariah 3, 2 said to Satan: The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan.

THE THIRD PART OF THE ARTICLES.

Concerning the following articles we may [will be able to] treat with learned and reasonable men, or among ourselves. The Pope and his [the Papal] government do not care much about these. For with them conscience is nothing, but money, [glory] honors, power are [to them] everything.

I. Of Sin.

Here we must confess, as Paul says in Rom. 5, 11, that sin originated [and entered the world] from one man Adam, by whose disobedience all men were made sinners, [and] subject to death and the devil. This is called original or capital sin.

The fruits of this sin are afterwards the evil deeds which are forbidden in the Ten Commandments, such as [distrust] unbelief, false faith, idolatry, to be without the fear of God, presumption [recklessness], despair, blindness [or complete loss of sight], and, in short, not to know or regard God; furthermore, to lie, to swear by [to abuse] God's name [to swear falsely], not to pray, not to call upon God, not to regard [to despise or neglect] God's Word, to be disobedient to parents, to murder, to be unchaste, to steal, to deceive, etc.

This hereditary sin is so deep and [horrible] a corruption of nature that no reason can understand it, but it must be [learned and] believed from the revelation of Scriptures, Ps. 51, 5; Rom. 5, 12 ff.; Ex. 33, 3; Gen. 3, 7 ff. Hence, it is nothing but error and blindness in regard to this article what the scholastic doctors have taught, namely:

That since the fall of Adam the natural powers of man have remained entire and incorrupt, and that man by nature has a right reason and a good will; which things the philosophers teach.

Again, that man has a free will to do good and omit evil, and, conversely, to omit good and do evil.

Again, that man by his natural powers can observe and keep [do] all the commands of God.

Again, that, by his natural powers, man can love God above all things and his neighbor as himself.

Again, if a man does as much as is in him, God certainly grants him His grace.

Again, if he wishes to go to the Sacrament, there is no need of a good intention to do good, but it is sufficient if he has not a wicked purpose to commit sin; so entirely good is his nature and so efficacious the Sacrament.

[Again,] that it is not founded upon Scrip- zum guten Wert verbunden sei der Heilige Geist mit seiner Gnade.

Solche und dergleichen viel Stüde sind aus Unverstand und Unwissenheit beide der Sünde und Christi, unser Heilands, gekommen, rechte heidnische Lehre, die wir nicht leiden können. Denn wo diese Lehre recht sollte sein, so ist Christus vergeblich gestorben, weil kein Schade noch Sünde im Menschen ist, dafür er sterben müßte; oder [er] wäre allein für den Leib, nicht für die Seele auch gestorben, weil die Seele gesund und allein der Leib des Todes ist.

II. Vom Gesetz.

Hier halten wir, daß das Gesetz gegeben sei von Gott, erstlich, der Sünde zu steuern mit Dören und Schreden der Strafe und mit Verheissen und Anbieten der Gnade und Wohltat. Aber solches alles ist der Bosheit halben, so die Sünde im Menschen gewirkt, übel geraten. Denn eines Teils sind davon ärger [ge]worden, als die dem Gesetze feind sind, darum, daß es verbeut [verbietet], was sie gerne tun, und gebet, was sie ungern tun. Derhalben, wo sie vor der Strafe können, tun sie nun mehr wider das Gesetz denn zuvor. Das sind denn die rohen, bösen Leute, die Böses tun, wo sie Stätte und Raum haben.

Die andern werden blind und vermessend, lassen sich täuschen, sie halten und können das Gesetz halten aus ihren Kräften, wie jetzt droben gesagt ist von den Schultheologen; daher kommen die Heuchler und falschen Heiligen.

Aber das vornehmste Amt oder Kraft des Gesetzes ist, daß es die Erbsünde mit den Früchten und allem offenbare und dem Menschen zeige, wie gar tief seine Natur gefallen und grundlos verderbt ist, als dem das Gesetz sagen muß, daß er keinen Gott habe noch achte und bete fremde Götter an, welches er zuvor und ohne das Gesetz nicht geglaubt hätte. Damit wird er erschreckt, gedemütigt, verzagt, verzweifelt, wollte gern, daß ihm geholfen würde, und weiß nicht wo aus, fängt an, Gott feind zu werden und zu murren usw. Das heißt denn Röm. 4: „Das Gesetz erregt Zorn“ und Röm. 5: „Die Sünde wird größer durchs Gesetz.“

III. Von der Buße.

Solch Amt [* des Gesetzes] behält das Neue Testament und treibet's auch, wie St. Paulus Röm. 1 tut und spricht: „Gottes Zorn wird vom Himmel offenbart über alle Menschen“; item 3: „Alle Welt ist vor Gott schuldig“ und: „Rein Mensch ist vor ihm gerecht.“ Und Christus Joh. 16: „Der Heilige Geist wird die Welt strafen um die Sünde.“

Das ist nun die Donnerstätt [der Blizstrahl] Gottes, damit er beide die offenbarlichen Sünder und falschen Heiligen in einen Haufen schlägt und läßt keinen recht haben, treibt sie allesamt in das Schreden und Verzagen. Das ist der Hammer (wie Jeremias spricht): „Mein Wort ist ein Hammer, der die Felsen zer splittert.“ Das ist nicht activa contritio, eine gemachte Reue, sondern passiva contritio, das rechte Herzeleid, Leiden und Fühlen des Todes.

ad bonum opus necessario requiri Spiritum Sanctum et eius gratiam.

1) Talia et similia portenta orta sunt ex incitiae et ignorantia peccati et Christi, Servatoris nostri, suntque vere et mere ethnica dogmata, quae tolerare non possumus. Si enim ista approbantur, Christus frustra mortuus est, quum nullum peccatum et damnum sit in homine, pro quo mori eum oportuerit; aut solummodo pro corpore mortuus diceretur, non pro anima, quandoquidem anima prorsus sana et solum corpus morti obnoxium perhiberetur.

II. De Lege.

1) Sentimus legem a Deo datam esse, primum ut peccatum prohiberetur comminationibus et metu poenarum, item promissione et annuntiatione gratiae et beneficiorum. [R. 319] Sed haec omnia propter malitiam, quam peccatum in homine effecit, male cesserunt. Qui- 2) dam enim inde deteriores redditii fuerunt, qui scilicet legem oderunt prohibentem ea, quae facere ipsi mallent, et praecipientem, quae gravatim praestant. Quare, nisi poena coerceantur, plura patrant contra legem quam antea. Atque hi sunt mali, effrenes et securi homines, qui perpetrant mala, quoties occasionem aliquam offerri sibi animadvertunt.

3) Quidam vero arrogantia et coecitate percutiuntur et insolenti opinionione tenentur, se servare et posse servare legem viribus suis, sicut iam paulo ante de scholasticis doctoribus dictum est. Hinc hypocritae et iustitarii seu in speciem sancti proveniunt.

4) Praecipuum autem officium et ἐνέργεια legis est, ut peccatum originale et omnes fructus eius revelet et homini ostendat, quam horrendum in modum natura eius lapsa sit et funditus ac totaliter depravata, ita ut lex ei dicat, hominem nec habere nec curare Deum et adorare alienos deos, id quod antea et sine lege homo non credidisset. Hac ratione perterrefit, humiliatur, prosternitur, desperat de se ipso et anxie desiderat auxilium, nec scit, quo fugiat, incipit irasci Deo et obmurmure 5) rare prae impatientia. Hoc est, quod Paulus inquit Rom. 4, 15: Lex iram operatur, et Rom. 5, 20: Lex augeat peccatum. Lex subintravit, ut abundaret delictum.

III. De Poenitentia.

1) Hoc officium legis retinetur in Novo Testamento, et in eo exercetur, ut Paulus Rom. 1, 18 facit, inquit: Ira Dei de coelo revelatur super omnes homines. Et 3, 12: Omnes sunt rei coram Deo. Nemo [R. 320] hominum iustus est coram eo. Et Christus Joh. 16, 8 inquit: Spiritus Sanctus arguet mundum de peccato.

2) Hoc igitur fulmen est Dei, quo et manifestos peccatores et hypocritas prosternit et nullum iustum pronuntiat, sed omnes ad terrorem et desperationem adigit. Hic malleus est, ut Hieremias inquit 23, 29: Verbum meum quasi malleus conterens petras. Haec non est activa contritio seu factitia et accersita, sed passiva contritio, conscientiae cruciatus, vera cordis passio et sensus mortis.

ture that for a good work the Holy Ghost with His grace is necessary.

Such and many similar things have arisen from want of understanding and ignorance as regards both this sin and Christ, our Savior, and they are truly heathen dogmas, which we cannot endure. For if this teaching were right [approved], then Christ has died in vain, since there is in man no defect nor sin for which he should have died; or He would have died only for the body, not for the soul, inasmuch as the soul is [entirely] sound, and the body only is subject to death.

II. Of the Law.

Here we hold that the Law was given by God, first, to restrain sin by threats and the dread of punishment, and by the promise and offer of grace and benefit. But all this miscarried on account of the wickedness which sin has wrought in man. For thereby a part [some] were rendered worse, those, namely, who are hostile to [hate] the Law, because it forbids what they like to do, and enjoins what they do not like to do. Therefore, wherever they can escape [if they were not restrained by] punishment, they [would] do more against the Law than before. These, then, are the rude and wicked [unbridled and secure] men, who do evil wherever they [notice that they] have the opportunity.

The rest become blind and arrogant [are smitten with arrogance and blindness], and [insolently] conceive the opinion that they observe and can observe the Law by their own powers, as has been said above concerning the scholastic theologians; thence come the hypocrites and [self-righteous or] false saints.

But the chief office or force of the Law is that it reveal original sin with all its fruits, and show man how very low his nature has fallen, and has become [fundamentally and] utterly corrupted; as the Law must tell man that he has no God nor regards [cares for] God, and worships other gods, a matter which before and without the Law he would not have believed. In this way he becomes terrified, is humbled, desponds, despairs, and anxiously desires aid, but sees no escape; he begins to be an enemy of [enraged at] God, and to murmur, etc. This is what Paul says, Rom. 4, 15: The Law worketh wrath. And Rom. 5, 20: Sin is increased by the Law. [The Law entered that the offense might abound.]

III. Of Repentance.

This office [of the Law] the New Testament retains and urges, as St. Paul, Rom. 1, 18, does, saying: The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Again, 3, 19: All the world is guilty before God. No man is righteous before Him. And Christ says, John 16, 8: The Holy Ghost will reprove the world of sin.

This, then, is the thunderbolt of God by which He strikes in a heap [hurls to the ground] both manifest sinners and false saints [hypocrites], and suffers no one to be in the right [declares no one righteous], but drives them all together to terror and despair. This is the hammer, as Jeremiah says, 23, 29: Is not My Word like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? This is not activa contritio or manufactured repentance, but passiva contritio [torture of conscience], true sorrow of heart, suffering and sensation of death.

Und das heißt denn die rechte Buße anfangen, und muß der Mensch hier hören solch Urteil: Es ist nichts mit euch allen; ihr seid öffentliche Sünder oder Heilige, ihr müßt alle anders werden und anders tun, weder [als] ihr jetzt seid und tut, ihr seid, wer und wie groß, weise, mächtig und heilig, als ihr wollt; hier ist niemand fromm.

Aber zu solchem Amt tut das Neue Testament flugs die tröstliche Verheißung der Gnade durchs Evangelium, der man glauben solle, wie Christus spricht Marci 1: „Izt Buße und glaubet dem Evangelio“, das ist, werdet und macht's anders und glaubt meiner Verheißung. Und vor ihm her Johannes wird genannt ein Prediger der Buße, doch zur Vergebung der Sünden, das ist, er sollte sie alle strafen und zu Sündern machen, auf daß sie wüßten, was sie vor Gott wären, und sich erkannten als verlorne Menschen und also dem Herrn bereitet würden, die Gnade zu empfangen und der Sünden Vergebung von ihm [zu] gewarten und an[zuh]nehmen. Also sagt auch Christus Luk. am 24. selbst: „Man muß in meinem Namen in alle Welt predigen Buße und Vergebung der Sünden.“

Wo aber das Gesetz solch sein Amt allein treibt ohne Zutun des Evangelii, da ist der Tod und die Hölle, und muß der Mensch verzweifeln wie Saul und Judas, wie St. Paulus sagt: „Das Gesetz tötet durch die Sünde.“ Wiederum gibt das Evangelium nicht einerlei Weise Trost und Vergebung, sondern durchs Wort, Sakramente und dergleichen, wie wir hören werden, auf daß die Erlösung ja reichlich sei bei Gott, wie der 130. Psalm sagt, wider das große Gefängnis der Sünden.

Aber jetzt müssen wir die falsche Buße der Sophisten gegen die rechte Buße halten, damit sie beide desto besser verstanden werden.

Von der falschen Buße der Papisten.

Unmöglich ist's gewesen, daß sie sollten recht von der Buße lehren, weil sie die rechten Sünden nicht erkannten. Denn (wie droben gesagt) sie halten von der Erbsünde nicht recht, sondern sagen, die natürlichen Kräfte des Menschen seien ganz und unverderbt [ge]blieben, die Vernunft könne recht lehren, und der Wille könne recht danach tun, daß Gott gewißlich seine Gnade gibt, wenn ein Mensch tut, soviel an ihm ist, nach seinem freien Willen.

Hieraus mußte nun folgen, daß sie allein die wirklichen Sünden büßten, als: böse bewilligte Gedanken (denn böse Bewegung, Lust, Neigung war nicht Sünde), böse Worte, böse Werke, die der freie Wille wohl hätte können lassen.

Und zu solcher Buße setzen sie drei Teile: Reue, Beichte, Genugtun, mit solcher Vertröstung und Zusage, wo der Mensch recht reute, beichtete, genügtate, so hätte er damit Vergebung verdient und die Sünde vor Gott bezahlt. Weiseten [wie] also die Leute in der Buße auf Zuversicht

3] Sic scilicet incipit vera poenitentia. Et hic homo audit sententiam promulgari dicentem: Quotquot estis, nihil estis, sive manifesti peccatores sive opinione vestra sancti sitis, omnes vos alios fieri oportet et aliter operari, quam quales nunc estis et sicut iam operamini, qualescunque sane sitis, magni, sapientes, potentes, sancti. In summa, hic nemo iustus, sanctus, pius est.

4] Huic officio Novum Testamentum statim adiungit consolationem et promissionem gratiae evangelii, cui credendum est, sicut Christus inquit Marci. 1, 15: Agite poenitentiam et credite evangelio, id est, fiat alii et faciatis aliter et credatis meae promissioni. Et ante Christum Iohannes nominatur praeco poenitentiae, sed ad remissionem peccatorum, hoc est, Iohannes omnes arguit et peccatores esse evicit, ut scirent, quid coram Deo essent, et se ipsos agnoscerent ut perditos homines, atque ita Deo apparerentur ad gratiam amplectendam et remissionem peccatorum ab eo sperandam et accipiendam. Sic etiam Christus Luc. 24, 47 ipse inquit: In nomine meo ubique praedicanda est poenitentia et remissio peccatorum inter omnes gentes.

7] Quando autem lex hoc officium suum sola exercet sine evangelio, nihil aliud nisi mors et infernus hominem opprimunt, prorsus desperantem, ut Saulem et Iudam, sicut [R. 321] Paulus [Rom. 7, 10] testatur legem per peccatum hominem morti tradere. Econtra evangelium affert consolationem et remissionem non uno tantum modo, sed per Verbum, sacramenta et similiter, quemadmodum audimus paulo post, ut ita redemptio apud Deum sit copiosa, ut in 130. Psalmo, v. 7, scriptum est, contra horrendam captivitatem peccati.

9] Nunc porro falsam poenitentiam sophistarum cum vera poenitentia conferemus, ut utraque melius intelligi possit.

De Falsa Poenitentia Pontificiorum.

10] Impossibile fuit pontificios recte docere de poenitentia, quum verum peccatum non recte agnoverint. Nam, ut supra ostensum est, de peccato originali non recte sentiunt, qui aiunt naturales vires hominis mansisse omnino integras et incorruptas, et rationem recte posse docere ac voluntatem posse ea, quae docentur, praestare, et Deum certo donare suam gratiam, quum homo tantum facit, quantum in se est, secundum liberum suum arbitrium.

Huic poenitentiae adiungunt tres partes: 12] contritionem, confessionem et satisfactionem, addita grandi consolatione et pollicitatione remissionis peccatorum, meriti, expiationis peccatorum ac plenariae redemptionis coram Deo, si homo vere doleat, confiteatur

This, then, is what it means to begin true repentance; and here man must hear such a sentence as this: You are all of no account, whether you be manifest sinners or saints [in your own opinion]; you all must become different and do otherwise than you now are and are doing [no matter what sort of people you are], whether you are as great, wise, powerful, and holy as you may. Here no one is [righteous, holy], godly, etc.

But to this office the New Testament immediately adds the consolatory promise of grace through the Gospel, which must be believed, as Christ declares, Mark 1, 15: Repent and believe the Gospel, i. e., become different and do otherwise, and believe My promise. And John, preceding Him, is called a preacher of repentance, however, for the remission of sins, i. e., John was to accuse all, and convict them of being sinners, that they might know what they were before God, and might acknowledge that they were lost men, and might thus be prepared for the Lord, to receive grace, and to expect and accept from Him the remission of sins. Thus also Christ Himself says, Luke 24, 47: Repentance and remission of sins must be preached in My name among all nations.

But whenever the Law alone, without the Gospel being added, exercises this its office, there is [nothing else than] death and hell, and man must despair, like Saul and Judas; as St. Paul, Rom. 7, 10, says: Through sin the Law killeth. On the other hand, the Gospel brings consolation and remission, not only in one way, but through the Word and Sacraments, and the like, as we shall hear afterward in order that [thus] there is with the Lord plenteous redemption, as Ps. 130, 7 says, against the dreadful captivity of sin.

However, we must now contrast the false repentance of the sophists with true repentance, in order that both may be the better understood.

Of the False Repentance of the Papists.

It was impossible that they should teach correctly concerning repentance, since they did not [rightly] know the real sins [the real sin]. For, as has been shown above, they do not believe aright concerning original sin, but say that the natural powers of man have remained [entirely] unimpaired and incorrupt; that reason can teach aright, and the will can in accordance therewith do aright [perform those things which are taught]; that God certainly bestows His grace when a man does as much as is in him, according to his free will.

It had to follow thence [from this dogma] that they did [must do] penance only for actual sins, such as wicked thoughts to which a person yields (for wicked emotion [concupiscence, vicious feelings, and inclinations], lust and improper dispositions [according to them] are not sins), and for wicked words and wicked deeds, which free will could readily have omitted.

And of such repentance they fix three parts, contrition, confession, and satisfaction, with Concordia Triglotta.

this [magnificent] consolation and promise added: If man truly repent, [feel remorse,] confess, render satisfaction, he thereby would have merited forgiveness, and paid for his sins before God [atoned for his sins and obtained a plenary redemption]. Thus in reeigener Werke. Daher kam das Wort auf der Kanzel, wenn man die gemeine Beichte dem Volke vortrug: „Hörte mit, Herr Gott, mein Leben, bis ich meine Sünde büße und mein Leben beßere!“

Hier war kein Christus und nichts vom Glauben gedacht, sondern man hoffte mit eigenen Werken die Sünde vor Gott zu überwinden und zu tilgen; der Reinigung [mit dieser Absicht] wurden wir auch Pfaffen und Mönche, daß wir uns selbst wider die Sünde legen wollten.

Mit der Reue war es also getan: Weil niemand alle seine Sünden konnte bedenken (sonderlich das ganze Jahr begangen), fielen sie den Peß also: wenn die verborgenen Sünden hernach ins Gedächtnis kämen, müßte man sie auch bereuen und beichten usw. Indes [bis dahin] waren sie Gottes Gnade befohlen.

Zudem, weil auch niemand wußte, wie groß die Reue sein sollte, damit sie ja genugsam wäre vor Gott, gaben sie solchen Trost: wer nicht könnte contritionem, das ist, Reue, haben, der sollte attritionem haben, welches ich mag eine halbe oder Anfang der Reue nennen; denn sie haben selbst alles beides nicht verstanden, wissen auch noch nicht, was es gesagt sei, so wenig als ich. Solche attritio ward denn contritio gerechnet, wenn man zur Beichte ging.

Und wenn sich's begab, daß etwa einer sprach, er könnte nicht reuen noch Leid haben für seine Sünden, als möchte geschehen sein in der Hurenliebe oder Rachgier usw., fragten sie, ob er denn nicht wünschte oder gern wollte, daß er Reue möchte haben. Sprach er dann: Ja (denn wer wollte hier nein sagen, ohne der Teufel selbst?), so nahmen sie es für die Reue an und vergaben ihm seine Sünden auf solch sein gut Werk. Hier zogen sie St. Bernhard zum Exempel an usw.

Hier sieht man, wie die blinde Vernunft tappt [unsicher tastet] in Gottes Sachen und Trost sucht in eigenen Werken nach ihrem Dunkel und an Christum oder den Glauben nicht denken kann. Wenn man's nun beim Licht befeht, ist solche Reue ein gemachter und gedichteter Gedanke aus eigenen Kräften ohne Glauben, ohne Erkenntnis Christi, darin zuweilen der arme Sünder, wenn er an die Lust oder Rache gedacht, lieber gelacht denn geweint hätte, ausgenommen, die entweder mit dem Gesehe recht [ge]troffen oder von dem Teufel vergeblich sind mit traurigem Geiste geplagt gewesen; sonst ist gewiß solche Reue lauter Heuchelei gewesen und hat der Sünden Lust nicht getötet. Denn sie mußten reuen, hätten lieber mehr gesündigt, wenn es frei gewesen wäre.

Mit der Beichte stand es also: Ein jeglicher mußte alle seine Sünden erzählen (welches ein unmögliches Ding ist); das war eine große Marter. Welche er aber vergessen hatte, wurden ihm so fern vergeben, wenn sie ihm würden einfallen, daß er sie noch müßte beichten. Damit [infolge dessen] konnte er nimmer wissen, wann er rein genug gebeichtet oder wann das Beichten einmal ein Ende haben sollte. Ward gleichwohl auf seine Werke et satisfaciatur. Sic in poenitentia homo ad fiduciam propriorum operum ducitur. [R. 322 13] Hinc orta est vox, quae in suggestia, quum praelegeretur vulgo publica absolutio, usurpata fuit: Prolonga, Deus, vitam meam, donec pro meis peccatis satisfacero et vitam meam emendavero.

14] Hic altum fuit silentium de Christo et fide, et tantum opinio et spes fuit de propriis operibus, quibus peccata coram Deo delerentur. Et hanc ob causam facti sumus sacrifici et monachi, ut nos ipsos peccato opponeremus.

15] Quod ad contritionem attinet, quum nemo posset omnia peccata sua in memoria retinere, praesertim per integrum annum commissa, centones hos assuebant, si memoria peccati absconditi forte recurreret, etiam illud sufficiente contritione defendendum et confitendum esse etc. Interea Dei gratiae homo committebatur.

16] Quum etiam nemo sciret, quanta contritio esse deberet, quae coram Deo sufficeret, dicebant, si quis contritionem non haberet, eum saltem attritionem habere oportere, id est, dimidiam quasi contritionem vel initium contritionis. Haec vocabula ipsi nec intellexerunt nec intelligunt, minus quam ego. Et attritio reputabatur pro contritione venientibus ad confessionem.

17] Et quum quis diceret se non posse habere contritionem, seu non dolere posse ob peccata sua (ut fieri potuit in illicito amore aut vindictae cupiditate et ceteris), interrogabant, an is non optaret et cuperet dolere. Respondenti cupere se (quis enim, nisi ipse diabolus, negaret se cupere?) accipiebant hoc pro contritione et remittebant peccata propter hoc bonum ipsius opus, quod nomine contritionis ornabant. Hic allegabant exemplum Bernhardi etc.

18] Videmus autem, quam palpet et titubet coeca ratio in rebus divinis et consolationem quaerat in propriis operibus pro sua opinione et Christi et fidei prorsus obliviscatur. Quodsi res ipsa perspicue consideretur, contritio ista est factitia et fictitia cogitatio seu imaginatio ex propriis viribus absque fide, absque agnitione Christi. Et in ista [R. 323] contritione miser peccator forte recordans suae flammae et cupiditatis vindictae vel ridere, vel lacrimare potius potuit, quam aliud cogitare, exceptis iis, qui vel legis fulmine tacti, vel a diabolo spiritu tristitiae afflicti fuerunt. His, inquam, exceptis contritio ista fuit mera hypocrisis et peccati flammam non mortificavit. Oportuit enim homines dolere, quum libentius peccassent, si liberum ipsis fuisset.

19] Confessio sic instituebatur, ut homines iuberentur omnia sua peccata enumerare (quod factum impossibile est); haec ingens carnificina fuit. Et si quis quorundam peccatorum oblitus esset, is eatenus absolvebatur, ut, si in memoriam illa recurrerent, ea postea confiteretur. Nemo igitur scire potuit, num unquam sufficienter, pure et recte confessus esset et quando confessionis finis futupenitance they instructed men to repose confidence in their own works. Hence the expression originated, which was employed in the pulpit when public absolution was announced to the people: Prolong, O God, my life, until I shall make satisfaction for my sins and amend my life.

There was here [profound silence and] no mention of Christ nor faith; but men hoped by their own works to overcome and blot out sins before God. And with this intention we became priests and monks, that we might array ourselves against sin.

As to contrition, this is the way it was done: Since no one could remember all his sins (especially as committed through an entire year), they inserted this provision, namely, that if an unknown sin should be remembered later [if the remembrance of a concealed sin should perhaps return], this also must be repented of and confessed, etc. Meanwhile they were [the person was] commended to the grace of God.

Moreover, since no one could know how great the contrition ought to be in order to be sufficient before God, they gave this consolation: He who could not have contrition, at least ought to have attrition, which I may call half a contrition or the beginning of contrition; for they have themselves understood neither of these terms, nor do they understand them now, as little as I. Such attrition was reckoned as contrition when a person went to confession.

And when it happened that any one said that he could not have contrition nor lament his sins (as might have occurred in illicit love or the desire for revenge, etc.), they asked whether he did not wish or desire to have contrition [lament]. When one would reply Yes (for who, save the devil himself, would here say No?), they accepted this as contrition, and forgave him his sins on account of this good work of his [which they adorned with the name of contrition]. Here they cited the example of St. Bernard, etc.

Here we see how blind reason, in matters pertaining to God, gropes about, and, according to its own imagination, seeks for consolation in its own works, and cannot think of [entirely forgets] Christ and faith. But if it be [clearly] viewed in the light, this contrition is a manufactured and fictitious thought [or imagination], derived from man's own powers, without faith and without the knowledge of Christ. And in it the poor sinner, when he reflected upon his own lust and desire for revenge, would sometimes [perhaps] have laughed rather than wept [either laughed or wept, rather than to think of something else], except such as either had been truly struck by [the lightning of] the Law, or had been vainly vexed by the devil with a sorrowful spirit. Otherwise [with the exception of these persons] such contrition was certainly mere hypocrisy, and did not mortify the lust for sins [flames of sin]; for they had to grieve, while they would rather have continued to sin, if it had been free to them.

As regards confession, the procedure was this: Every one had [was enjoined] to enumerate all his sins (which is an impossible thing). This was a great torment. From such as he had forgotten [But if any one had forgotten some sins] he would be absolved on the condition that, if they would occur to him, he must still confess them. In this way he could never know whether he had made a sufficiently pure confession [perfectly and correctly], or when confessing would ever have gewiesen und so getröstet: je reiner er beichtete und je mehr er sich schämte [zuschanden machte] und sich selbst also vor dem Priester schändete, je eher und besser er genugtäte für die Sünde; denn solche Demut ermürbe gewißlich Gnade bei Gott.

Hier war auch kein Glaube noch Christus, und die Kraft der Absolution ward ihm nicht gesagt, sondern auf Sünden zählen und Schämen stand sein Trost. Es ist aber nicht zu erzählen, was Marter, Büberei und Abgötterei solch Beichten angerichtet hat.

Die Genugtuung ist noch das Allerweitsüftigste. Denn kein Mensch konnte wissen, wieviel er tun sollte für eine einige Sünde, [geschweige denn für alle. Hier fanden sie nun einen Rat, nämlich daß sie wenig Genugtuns auflegten [auflegten], die man wohl halten konnte, als fünf Paternoster, einen Tag fasten usw.; mit der übrigen Buße weisete [wies] man sie ins Fegfeuer.

Hier war nun auch ein eitel Jammer und Not. Etliche meinten, sie würden nimmer aus dem Fegfeuer kommen, diemeil nach den alten Kanonen sieben Jahre Buße auf eine Todsünde gehörte. Noch [dennoch] stand die Zurecht auch auf unserm Werk der Genugtuung, und wo die Genugtuung hätte mögen vollkommen sein, so hätte die Zurecht gar darauf gestanden, und wäre weder Glaube noch Christus nütze gewesen; aber sie war unmöglich. Wenn nun einer hundert Jahre also gebüßt hätte, so hätte er doch nicht gewußt, wann er ausgebüßt hätte. Das hieß immerdar gebüßt und nimmermehr zur Buße kommen.

Hier kam nun der heilige Stuhl zu Rom der armen Kirche zu Hilfe und erfand den Ablass; damit vergab und hob er auf die Genugtuung, erstlich einzeln, sieben Jahre, hundert Jahre usw., und teilte es aus unter die Kardinalen und Bischöfe, daß einer konnte hundert Jahre, einer hundert Tage Ablass geben; aber die ganze Genugtuung aufzuheben, behielt er ihm [sich] allein zuvor.

Da nun solches begann Geld zu tragen und der Bullenmarkt gut ward, erdachte er das Guldensjahr und legte es gen Rom; das hieß er Vergabung aller Pein und Schuld. Da liefen die Leute zu; denn es wäre jedermann gern der schweren, un[er]träglichen Last losgemacht [* los gewesen]. Das hieß die Schätze der Erde finden und erheben. Flugs eilte der Papst weiter und machte viel Guldensjahr aufeinander; aber je mehr er Geld verschlang, je weiter ihm der Eslund ward.

Darum schidte er's danach durch Legaten heraus in die Länder, bis alle Kirchen und Häuser voll Guldensjahre wurden. Zuletzt rumpelte er auch ins Fegfeuer unter die Toten, erstlich mit Messen und Vigilien stiften, danach mit dem Ablass und dem Guldensjahr, und wurden endlich die rus esset. Et tamen nihilominus ducebantur homines ad propria sua opera, et haec consolatio ipsis proponebatur: quo confessio esset purior, magis ingenua et aperta, pudore et ignominia coram sacerdote suffusa, eo satisfactionem pro peccato esse plenior, et humilitate illa certo ac merito gratiam Dei impetrari.

20] Nulla hic fides, nullus Christus erat. Et virtus absolutionis non explicabatur confidenti, sed consolatio eius in enumeratione peccatorum et pudefactione consistebat. Nemo autem recitare potest miserias, carnificinas, fraudes et idololatrias, ex confessione ista natas.

22] Hic quoque magna calamitas oriebatur. Quidam enim metuebant, se in aeternum ex purgatorio non liberari posse, quum [R. 324 secundum veteres canones pro uno peccato mortali poenitentia septennis seu septem annorum constituta esset. Et tamen fiducia semper collocata erat in nostro opere satisfactionis, ac si satisfactio potuisset esse perfecta, tota fiducia in eam coniecta fuisset, nec opus fuisset Christo et fide. At impossibilis illa erat. Et si quis centum annos poenitentiam ista ratione exercuisset, nondum certus tamen de sufficientia, perfectione et fine poenitentiae suae fuisset. Hoc scilicet erat perpetuo poenitere et nunquam ad poenitentiam pervenire.

24] Hac de causa sedes ista Romana sancta miserae ecclesiae subveniebat et indulgentias effingebat, quibus remittebatur et abolebatur expiatio seu satisfactio, primum particulatim, ad annos septem, centum etc., et eas distribuebat inter cardinales et episcopos, ita ut quidam annos centum, quidam ad dies centum indulgentiam conferrent. Totam autem satisfactionem relaxandi potestatem sibi reservabat.

25] Hac ratione quum accresceret pecunia et nundinatio bullarum esset fructuosa, excogitavit annum aureum iubilaeum, vere auriferum [Iubeljahr, Gueldenjahr], quem Romae celebrari voluit. Hunc appellabat remissionem omnis culpae et poenae. Accurrebant igitur plurimi, quia ab onere molestissimo liberari unusquisque cupiebat. Hoc erat effodere et conquirere thesauros terrae. Mox papa annos aureos multiplicabat et alium super alium accumulabat, et quo plus auri devorabat, eo plus fauces ipsius appetebant.

Ideoque per legatos suos mittebat annos istos passim in provincias, quoad omnia templa et domus annis aureis opplerentur. Tan- 26] dem irruebat etiam in purgatorium ad defunctos, primum missarum et vigiliarum fundatione, deinde indulgentiis et anno aureo, an end. Yet he was pointed to his own works, and comforted thus: The more fully [sincerely and frankly] one confesses, and the more he humiliates himself and debases himself before the priest, the sooner and better he renders satisfaction for his sins; for such humility certainly would earn grace before God.

Here, too, there was no faith nor Christ, and the virtue of the absolution was not declared to him, but upon his enumeration of sins and his self-abasement depended his consolation. What torture, rascality, and idolatry such confession has produced is more than can be related.

As to satisfaction, this is by far the most involved [perplexing] part of all. For no man could know how much to render for a single sin, not to say how much for all. Here they have resorted to the device of imposing a small satisfaction, which could indeed be rendered, as five Paternosters, a day's fast, etc.; for the rest [that was lacking] of the [in their] repentance they were directed to purgatory.

Here, too, there was nothing but anguish and [extreme] misery. [For] some thought that they would never get out of purgatory, because, according to the old canons, seven years' repentance is required for a single mortal sin. Nevertheless, confidence was placed upon our work of satisfaction, and if the satisfaction could have been perfect, confidence would have been placed in it entirely, and neither faith nor Christ would have been of use. But this confidence was impossible. For, although any one had done penance in that way for a hundred years, he would still not have known whether he had finished his penance. That meant forever to do penance and never to come to repentance.

Here now the Holy See at Rome, coming to the aid of the poor Church, invented indulgences, whereby it forgave and remitted [expiation or] satisfaction, first, for a single instance, for seven years, for a hundred years, and distributed them among the cardinals and bishops, so that one could grant indulgence for a hundred years and another for a hundred days. But he reserved to himself alone the power to remit the entire satisfaction.

Now, since this began to yield money, and the traffic in bulls became profitable, he devised the golden jubilee year [a truly gold-bearing year], and fixed it at Rome. He called this the remission of all punishment and guilt. Then the people came running, because every one would fain have been freed from this grievous, unbearable burden. This meant to find [dig up] and raise the treasures of the earth. Immediately the Pope pressed still further, and multiplied the golden years one upon another. But the more he devoured money, the wider grew his maw.

Later, therefore, he issued them [those golden years of his] by his legates [everywhere] to the countries, until all churches and houses were full of the Golden Year. At last he also made an inroad into purgatory

Seelen so wohlfeil, daß er eine um einen Schwertgroßchen [kurzfächische kleine Münze] losgab.

Noch half das auch alles nicht. Denn der Papst, wiewohl er die Leute auf solchen Ablass lehrte sich verlassen und vertrauen, so machte er's doch selbst wiederum auch ungewiß; denn er setzte in seine Bullen: wer des Ablasses oder Güldensjahrs wollte theilhaftig sein, der sollte bereut und gebeichtet sein [bereut und gebeichtet haben] und Geld geben. Nun haben wir droben gehört, daß solche Reue und Beichte bei ihnen ungewiß und Heuchelei ist. Desgleichen wußte auch niemand, welche Seele im Fegfeuer wäre, und so etliche drinnen wären, wußte niemand, welche recht gereut und gebeichtet hätten. Also nahm er das liebe Geld und verträufelte sie dießweil auf seine Gewalt und Ablass und weisete sie doch wiederum auf ihr ungewiß Wert.

Wo nun etliche waren, die nicht solcher wirklichen Sünden mit Gedanken, Worten und Werken sich schuldig dauchten [büßten], wie ich und meinesgleichen in Klöstern und Stiften, Mönche und Pfaffen sein wollten, die wir mit Fasten, Wachen, Beten, Messen, harten Kleidern und Lager usw. uns wehrten wider böse Gedanken und mit Ernst und Gewalt wollten heilig sein und doch das erbliche, angeborne Übel etwa [zuweilen] im Schlaf tat (wie auch St. Augustinus und Hieronymus mit andern bekennen), was seine Art ist, so hielt doch ein jeglicher vom andern, daß etliche so heilig wären, wie wir lehrten, die ohne Sünde, voll guter Werke wären, also, daß wir darauf unsere guten Werke andern, als uns überflüssig zum Himmel, mitteilten und verkauften. Das ist ja wahr, und sind Siegel, Briefe und Exempel vorhanden.

Diese [be]dürften der Buße nicht. Denn was wollten sie bereuen, weil sie in böse Gedanken nicht bewilligten? Was wollten sie beichten, weil sie [* böse] Worte vermieden? Wofür wollten sie genugtun, weil sie der Tat unschuldig waren, also daß sie auch andern armen Sündern ihre übrige Gerechtigkeit verkaufen konnten? Solche Heilige waren auch die Pharisäer und Schriftgelehrten zur Zeit Christi.

Hier kommt der feurige Engel St. Johannes, der rechte Bußprediger, und schlägt mit einem Donner alle beide in einen Haufen, spricht: „Ihr Buße!“ So denken jene: Haben wir doch gebüßt. Diese denken: Wir [be]dürfen keiner Buße. Spricht Johannes: Tut alle beide Buße, denn ihr seid falsche Büßer, so sind diese falsche Heilige, und [be]dürft alle beide Vergebung der Sünden, weil ihr alle beide noch nicht wißt, was die rechte Sünde sei, schweige [geschweige denn], daß ihr sie büßen oder meiden solltet. Es ist euer keiner gut, seid voller Unglaubens, Unverständs und Unwissenheit Gottes und seines Willens. Denn da ist er vorhanden, „von des Fülle wir alle müssen nehmen Gnade um Gnade“; und kein Mensch ohne ihn vor Gott kann gerecht sein. Darum, wollt ihr büßen, so büßt recht; eure Buße tut's nicht.

27] Neque tamen hoc quoque sufficiebat. Papa enim, etsi iubebat homines indulgentiis istis tuto fidere ad salutem, tamen ipse [R. 325] rem universam denuo incertam, in dubium vocabat. Nam in bullis suis scribit, eum, qui indulgentiarum seu iubilaei anni particeps fieri velit, oportere contritum et confessum esse, ac pecuniam numerare. Audivimus autem supra contritionem et confessionem illorum esse incertam et hypocriticam. Nemo etiam sciebat, quae anima in purgatorio esset, ac si quae in eo esse dicebantur, nemo sciebat, quae recte et contritae et confessae fuissent. Sic papa sanctum denarium corradebat et interea ducebat homines ad fiduciam potestatis et indulgentiarum suarum et rursus inde abducebat ac remittebat ad incerta ipsorum opera et merita.

28] Quumque nonnulli essent, qui se actualium peccatorum istorum vel cogitationibus vel verbis vel factis commissorum non agnoscebant reos, quemadmodum ego et mei similes in monasteriis et fundationibus, seu sacerdotum sodalitiis seu collegiis monachi et flamines ieiuniis, vigiliis, orationibus, missarum celebrationibus, duris lectisterniis et vestibus etc. resistere conabamur malis cogitationibus et violenter sancti esse volebamus, et licet innatum malum saepe etiam inter dormiendum (sicut Augustinus et Hieronymus et alii quoque conqueruntur) naturam suam exsereret: tamen nos mutuo sanctos esse aestimabamus, sicut docebamus, sine peccato et plenos operum bonorum, usque adeo, ut bona opera nostra etiam aliis, quasi superflua in nobis ad salutem consequendam, communicaremus et venderemus, id quod ita factum esse testantur sigilla, literae, exempla, quae exstant.

29] Quum igitur, inquam, tales essent, hi poenitentia non indigebant. Quae enim contritio poterat esse in iis, qui malis cogitationibus non assentirentur? Quae confessio de verbis non prolatis? Quae satisfactio [R. 326] pro non factis seu pro innocentia, qua aliis miseris peccatoribus superabundans iustitia vendi poterat? Tales hypocritae et sancti erant tempore Christi etiam Pharisaei et scribae.

30] Hic exsurgit angelus ille igneus, B. Iohannes, Apoc. 10, praeco verus verae poenitentiae, et tonitru ac fulmine uno ferit ambos (vendentes et ementes opera) inquiring 31] Matth. 3, 2: Agite poenitentiam. Attamen egimus poenitentiam, aiunt miseri illi. Ceteri vero dicunt: Non indigemus poenitentia. Iohannes autem inquit: Ambo agite poenitentiam, quia falsi estis poenitentiarum, et ceteri sunt falsi sancti seu hypocritae, et ambo indigetis remissione peccatorum, quum nondum sciatis, quid sit vere peccatum, nedum, ut de eo poenitere et fugere illud possitis. Nullus vestrum bonus est, pleni estis incredulitate, ruditate et ignorantia Dei et voluntatis Dei. Praesens enim hic coram adest, de cuius plenitudine nos omnes accipere among the dead, first, by founding masses and vigils, afterwards, by indulgences and the Golden Year, and finally souls became so cheap that he released one for a farthing.

But all this, too, was of no avail. For although the Pope taught men to depend upon, and trust in, these indulgences [for salvation], yet he rendered the [whole] matter again uncertain. For in his bulls he declares: Whoever would share in the indulgences or a Golden Year must be contrite, and have confessed, and pay money. Now, we have heard above that this contrition and confession are with them uncertain and hypocrisy. Likewise, also no one knew what soul was in purgatory, and if some were therein, no one knew which had properly repented and confessed. Thus he took the precious money [the Pope snatched up the holy pence], and comforted them meanwhile with [led them to confidence in] his power and indulgence, and [then again led them away from that and] directed them again to their uncertain work.

If, now [although], there were some who did not believe [acknowledge] themselves guilty of such actual sins in [committed by] thoughts, words, and works, — as I, and such as I, in monasteries and chapters [fraternities or colleges of priests], wished to be monks and priests, and by fasting, watching, praying, saying Mass, coarse garments, and hard beds, etc., fought against [strove to resist] evil thoughts, and in full earnest and with force wanted to be holy, and yet the hereditary, inborn evil sometimes did in sleep what it is wont to do (as also St. Augustine and Jerome among others confess), — still each one held the other in esteem, so that some, according to our teaching, were regarded as holy, without sin and full of good works, so much so that with this mind we would communicate and sell our good works to others, as being superfluous to us for heaven. This is indeed true, and seals, letters, and instances [that this happened] are at hand.

[When there were such, I say] These did not need repentance. For of what would they repent, since they had not indulged wicked thoughts? What would they confess [concerning words not uttered], since they had avoided words? For what should they render satisfaction, since they were so guiltless of any deed that they could even sell their superfluous righteousness to other poor sinners? Such saints were also the Pharisees and scribes in the time of Christ.

Here comes the fiery angel, St. John [Rev. 10], the true preacher of [true] repentance, and with one [thunderclap and] bolt hurls both [those selling and those buying works] on one heap, and says: Repent! Matt. 3, 2. Now, the former [the poor wretches] imagine: Why, we have repented! The latter [the rest] say: We need no repentance. John says: Repent ye, both of you, for ye are false penitents; so are these [the rest] false saints [or hypocrites], and all of you on either side need the forgiveness of sins, because neither of you know what true sin is, not to say anything about your duty to repent of it and shun it. For no one of you is good; you are full of unbelief, stupidity, and ignorance of God and God's will. For here He is present of whose fulness have all we received, and grace for grace, John 1, 16, and without Him no man can be just before God.

Und ihr Heuchler, die ihr keiner Buße bedürft, ihr Schlangen[ge]ziefer, wer hat euch versichert, daß ihr dem künftigen Zorn entrinnen werdet usw.?

Also predigt auch St. Paulus Röm. 3 und spricht: „Es ist keines verständig, keiner gerecht, keiner achtet Gottes, keiner tut Gutes, auch nicht einer; allzumal sind sie untüchtig und abtrünnig.“ Und Act. 17: „Nun aber gebet [gebietet] Gott allen Menschen an allen Enden, Buße zu tun.“ Allen Menschen, spricht er, niemand ausgenommen, der ein Mensch ist. Diese Buße lehrt uns die Sünde erkennen, nämlich daß [es] mit uns allen verloren, Haut und Haar nicht gut ist, und müssen schlechtes neue und andere Menschen werden.

Diese Buße ist nicht stüßlich und bettelisch wie jene, so die wirklichen Sünden büßt, und ist auch nicht ungewiß wie jene. Denn sie disputiert nicht, welches [Werk] Sünde oder nicht Sünde sei, sondern stößt alles in Haufen, spricht: es sei alles und eitel Sünde mit uns. Was wollen wir lange suchen, teilen und unterscheiden? Darum so ist auch hier die Reue nicht ungewiß. Denn es bleibt nichts da, damit wir möchten etwas Gutes gedenken, die Sünde zu bezahlen, sondern ein bloß, gewiß Verzagen an allem, daß wir sind, gedenken, reden oder tun usw.

Desgleichen kann die Beichte auch nicht falsch, ungewiß oder stüßlich sein. Denn wer bekennet, daß alles mit ihm eitel Sünde sei, der begreift alle Sünden, läßt keine außen und vergißt auch keine. Also kann die Genugtuung auch nicht ungewiß sein, denn sie ist nicht unsere ungewissen, sündlichen Werke, sondern das Leiden und Blut des unschuldigen Lämmleins Gottes, das der Welt Sünde trägt.

Von dieser Buße predigt Johannes und hernach Christus im Evangelio und wir auch. Mit dieser Buße stoßen wir Papst und alles, was auf unsere guten Werke gebaut ist, zu Boden. Denn es ist alles auf einen faulen, nichtigen Grund gebaut, welcher heißt gute Werke oder Gesetze, so doch kein gut Werk da ist, sondern eitel böse Werke, und niemand das Gesetz tut (wie Christus Joh. 7 sagt), sondern allzumal [es] übertreten. Darum ist das Gebäu eitel Rüge und Heuchelei, wo es am allerheiligsten und allerhöchsten ist.

Und diese Buße währt bei den Christen bis in den Tod; denn sie heißt sich [sie streitet] mit der übrigen Sünde im Fleisch durchs ganze Leben, wie St. Paulus Röm. 7 zeugt, daß er kämpfte mit dem Gesetze seiner Glieder usw., und das nicht durch eigene Kräfte, sondern durch die Gabe des Heiligen Geistes, welche folgt auf die Vergebung der Sünden. Derselbe Gabe reinigt und setzt täglich die übrigen Sünden aus und arbeitet, den Menschen recht rein und heilig zu machen.

oportet gratiam pro gratia [Ioh. 1, 16], et nemo hominum sine ipso coram Deo iustus esse potest. Quare si poenitentiam agere volueritis, recte illam agite, vestra poenitentia nulla est. Et, vos hypocritae, qui non egetis poenitentia, vos genimina viperarum, quis vos certos reddidit, ut fugeretis a ventura ira etc.? Matth. 3, 7 [Luc. 3, 7].

33] Eodem modo etiam Paulus Rom. 3, 12 concionatur: Non est iustus quisquam, non est intelligens, non est requirens Deum, non est, qui faciat bonum, ne unus quidem; omnes

34] declinaverunt et inutiles facti sunt. Et Act. 17, 30: Nunc Deus annuntiat hominibus, ut omnes ubique poenitentiam agant. Omnes, dicit, nemine excepto, qui modo homo est.

35] Haec poenitentia docet nos agnoscere peccatum, videlicet de nobis omnibus plane actum esse, et intus et in cute nihil boni in nobis esse, et simpliciter fieri nos alios et novos homines oportere.

36] Haec poenitentia non est partialis et mutilata, qualis est ista actualium [R. 327] peccatorum, nec etiam est incerta, qualis ista est. Non enim disputat, utrum sit peccatum vel non peccatum, sed totum proternit et affirmat universum et merum esse peccatum quoad nos (et nihil esse in nobis, quod non sit peccatum sive reum). Quid enim diu quærere, parti et distinguere volumus? Quamobrem etiam contritio hic non est dubia aut incerta. Nihil enim remanet, quo aliquid boni cogitare possimus ad expiandum peccatum, sed abicienda nobis est omnis spes de omnibus, quidquid sumus, quidquid cogitamus, loquimur et facimus etc.

37] Similiter confessio quoque non potest esse falsa, incerta, manca aut mutila. Qui enim constituit totum in se esse merum peccatum, is comprehendit omnia peccata, nullum excludit, nullius obliviscitur. Sic et satisfactio non potest esse incerta, quia non est nostrum incertum et peccato contaminatum opus, sed est passio et sanguis immaculati et innocentis Agni Dei, qui tollit peccata mundi.

38] De hac poenitentia concionatur Iohannes, deinde Christus in evangelio et nos etiam. Et hac poenitentiae concione destruimus papam et omnia, quae nituntur nostris bonis operibus. Omnia enim fundamento putri et vano insistent, quod appellatur bonum opus sive lex, quum tamen nullum bonum opus adsit, sed tantum mala opera, et nemo faciat legem (ut Christus Ioh. 7, 19 testatur), sed omnes eam transgrediantur. Quare aedificium, quod superstruitur, tantummodo mendacium et hypocrisis est, etiam quia in parte sanctissimum et formosissimum est.

40] Haec poenitentia in Christianis durat usque ad mortem, quia luctatur cum peccato residuo in carne per totam vitam, sicut Paulus Rom. 7, 14—25 ostendit, se belligerari cum lege membrorum suorum etc., idque non propriis viribus, sed dono Spiritus Sancti, [R. 328] quod remissionem peccatorum sequitur, et quotidie reliquias peccati purgat et expellit, et in eo est, ut hominem purificet, rectificet, sanctificet.

Therefore, if you wish to repent, repent aright; your penance will not accomplish anything [is nothing]. And you hypocrites, who do not need repentance, you serpents' brood, who has assured you that you will escape the wrath to come? etc. Matt. 3, 7; Luke 3, 7.

In the same way Paul also preaches, Rom. 3, 10—12: There is none righteous, there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God, there is none that doeth good, no not one; they are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable. And Acts 17, 30: God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. "All men," he says; no one excepted who is a man. This repentance teaches us to discern sin, namely, that we are altogether lost, and that there is nothing good in us from head to foot [both within and without], and that we must absolutely become new and other men.

This repentance is not piecemeal [partial] and beggarly [fragmentary], like that which does penance for actual sins, nor is it uncertain like that. For it does not debate what is or is not sin, but hurls everything on a heap, and says: All in us is nothing but sin [affirms that, with respect to us, all is simply sin (and there is nothing in us that is not sin and guilt)]. What is the use of [For why do we wish] investigating, dividing, or distinguishing a long time? For this reason, too, this contrition is not [doubtful or] uncertain. For there is nothing left with which we can think of any good thing to pay for sin, but there is only a sure despairing concerning all that we are, think, speak, or do [all hope must be cast aside in respect of everything], etc.

In like manner confession, too, cannot be false, uncertain, or piecemeal [mutilated or fragmentary]. For he who confesses that all in him is nothing but sin comprehends all sins, excludes none, forgets none. Neither can the satisfaction be uncertain, because it is not our uncertain, sinful work, but it is the suffering and blood of the [spotless and] innocent Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

Of this repentance John preaches, and afterwards Christ in the Gospel, and we also. By this [preaching of] repentance we dash to the ground the Pope and everything that is built upon our good works. For all is built upon a rotten and vain foundation, which is called a good work or law, even though no good work is there, but only wicked works, and no one does the Law (as Christ, John 7, 19, says), but all transgress it. Therefore the building [that is raised upon it] is nothing but falsehood and hypocrisy, even [in the part] where it is most holy and beautiful.

And in Christians this repentance continues until death, because, through the entire life it contends with sin remaining in the flesh, as Paul, Rom. 7, 14—25, [shows] testifies that he was with the law in his members, etc.; and that, not by his own powers, but by the gift of the Holy Ghost that follows the remission of sins. This gift daily cleanses and sweeps out the remaining sins, and works so as to render man truly pure and holy.

Hiervon weiß Papst, Theologen, Juristen noch kein Mensch nichts, sondern ist eine Lehre vom Himmel, durchs Evangelium offenbart, und muß Keterei heißen bei den gottlosen Heiligen.

Wiederum, ob etliche Kottengeister kommen würden, wie vielleicht etliche bereits da vorhanden sind und zur Zeit des Aufbruchs mir selbst vor Augen kamen, die da halten, daß alle die, so einmal den Geist der Vergebung der Sünden empfangen hätten oder gläubig geworden wären, wenn dieselben hernach sündigten, so blieben sie gleichwohl im Glauben und schädete ihnen solche Sünde nicht, und schrien also: Zu, was du willst, glaubst du, so ist's alles nichts, der Glaube vertilgt alle Sünden usw. Sagen dazu: wo jemand nach dem Glauben und Geist sündigte, so habe er den Geist und Glauben nie recht gehabt. Solcher unfähigen Menschen habe ich viel vor mir gehabt und [ich] Sorge, daß noch in etlichen solcher Teufel rede.

Darum so ist vonnöten zu wissen und zu lehren, daß, wo die heiligen Leute über das, so sie die Erbsünde noch haben und fühlen, darüber auch täglich büßen und streiten, etwa in öffentliche Sünde fallen, als David in Ehebruch, Mord und Gotteslästerung, daß alsdann der Glaube und Geist ist weg gewesen. Denn der Heilige Geist läßt die Sünde nicht walten und überhand gewinnen, daß sie vollbracht werde, sondern steuert und wehrt, daß sie nicht muß [darf] tun, was sie will. Tut sie aber, was sie will, so ist der Heilige Geist und Glaube nicht dabei; denn es heißt, wie St. Johannes sagt: „Wer aus Gott geboren ist, der sündigt nicht und kann nicht sündigen.“ Und ist doch auch die Wahrheit (wie derselbe St. Johannes schreibt): „So wir sagen, daß wir nicht Sünde haben, so lügen wir, und Gottes Wahrheit ist nicht in uns.“

IV. Vom Evangelium.

Wir wollen nun wieder zum Evangelio kommen, welches gibt nicht einerlei Weise Rat und Hilfe wider die Sünde; denn Gott ist überschwenglich reich in seiner Gnade: erlich durchs mündliche Wort, darin gepredigt wird Vergebung der Sünden in aller Welt, welches ist das eigentliche Amt des Evangelii; zum andern durch die Taufe; zum dritten durchs heilige Sacrament des Altars; zum vierten durch die Kraft der Schlüssel und auch per mutuum colloquium et consolationem fratrum, Matth. 18: Ubi duo fuerint congregati etc.

V. Von der Taufe.

Die Taufe ist nichts anderes denn Gottes Wort im Wasser, durch seine Einsetzung befohlen, oder wie St. Paulus sagt Eph. 5: lavacrum in verbo; wie auch Augustinus sagt: Accedat verbum ad elementum, et fit sacramentum. Und darum halten wir's nicht mit Thomas [Aquinas] und den Predigermönchen, die des Wortes (Gottes Einsetzung) vergessen und sagen, Gott habe eine geistliche Kraft ins Wasser gelegt, welche die Sünde durchs Wasser abwasche; auch nicht mit Scotus und den Barfüßermönchen, die da lehren, daß die

41] De tantis rebus papa, theologi, iuristae alique homines ex ratione sua nihil norunt, sed haec doctrina est e coelo per evangelium patefacta et ab impiis sanctis seu hypocritis pro haeresi proclamatur.

42] Ceterum si sectarii quidam orientur, quorum nonnulli iam forsitan adsunt et tempore seditionis rusticanae mihi ipsi in conspectum veniebant, sentientes omnes eos, qui semel Spiritum aut remissionem peccatorum accepissent et credentes facti essent, etsi deinde peccarent, manere tamen in fide, et peccatum ipsis nihil obesse. Hinc voces ipsorum: Fac quidquid lubet, modo credas, nihil tibi nocet, fides omnia peccata delet etc. Addunt praeterea, si quis post fidem et Spiritum acceptum peccet, eum nunquam Spiritum et fidem vere habuisse. Et tam insanos homines vidi et audiui multos, et vereor, ne adhuc in nonnullis daemon iste latitans habitet.

43] Si igitur, inquam, tales in posterum etiam orirentur, sciendum et docendum est, quod si sancti, qui originale peccatum adhuc habere se sentiunt et quotidie de eo poenitent et cum eo luctantur, insuper ruant in manifesta peccata, ut David in adulterium, homicidium et blasphemiam, eos excutere fidem et Spiritum Sanctum, et abesse tum ab ipsis 44] fidem et Spiritum Sanctum. Spiritus enim Sanctus non sinit peccatum dominari, invalescere et victoriam obtinere ac consummari, sed reprimat et coercet, ne facere possit, quod vult. Si vero facit, quod vult, certe Spiritus Sanctus et fides amittuntur nec simul adsunt. Sic enim inquit Iohannes [1 Ioh. 3, 9]: Qui ex Deo natus est, non peccat et peccare non potest. Et tamen etiam hoc verum est, quod idem Iohannes dicit [1 ep. 1, 8]: Si dicimus nos peccatum non habere, mentimur, et veritas Dei non est in nobis.

IV. De Evangelio.

Nunc ad evangelium redibimus, quod [R. 329] non uno modo consulit et auxiliatur nobis contra peccatum; Deus enim superabundanter dives et liberalis est gratia et bonitate sua: primum per verbum vocale, quo iubet praedicari remissionem peccatorum in universo mundo, et hoc est proprium officium evangelii; secundo per baptismum; tertio per venerandum sacramentum altaris; quarto per potestatem clavium, atque etiam per mutuum colloquium et consolationem fratrum, Matth. 18, 20: Ubi duo aut tres fuerint congregati etc.

V. De Baptismo.

1] Baptismus nihil est aliud quam verbum Dei cum mersione in aquam, secundum ipsius institutionem et mandatum, sive, ut Paulus inquit Eph. 5, 26, lavacrum in verbo; sicut et Augustinus ait: Accedat verbum ad el. rem-2] tum, et fit sacramentum. Quare non sentimus cum Thoma et monachis praedicatoribus seu Dominicanis, qui verbi et institutionis Dei oblitri dicunt, Deum spirituales virtutes aquae contulisse et indidisse, quae peccatum 3] per aquam abluit. Non etiam facimus

The Pope, the theologians, the jurists, and every other man know nothing of this [from their own reason], but it is a doctrine from heaven, revealed through the Gospel, and must suffer to be called heresy by the godless saints [or hypocrites].

On the other hand, if certain sectarists would arise, some of whom are perhaps already extant, and in the time of the insurrection [of the peasants] came to my own view, holding that all those who had once received the Spirit or the forgiveness of sins, or had become believers, even though they should afterwards sin, would still remain in the faith, and such sin would not harm them, and [hence] crying thus: "Do whatever you please; if you believe, it all amounts to nothing; faith blots out all sins," etc. — they say, besides, that if any one sins after he has received faith and the Spirit, he never truly had the Spirit and faith: I have had before me [seen and heard] many such insane men, and I fear that in some such a devil is still remaining [hiding and dwelling].

It is, accordingly, necessary to know and to teach that when holy men, still having and feeling original sin, also daily repenting of and striving with it, happen to fall into manifest sins, as David into adultery, murder, and blasphemy, that then faith and the Holy Ghost has departed from them [they cast out faith and the Holy Ghost]. For the Holy Ghost does not permit sin to have dominion, to gain the upper hand so as to be accomplished, but represses and restrains it so that it must not do what it wishes. But if it does what it wishes, the Holy Ghost and faith are [certainly] not present. For St. John says, 1 Ep. 3, 9: Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, . . . and he cannot sin. And yet it is also the truth when the same St. John says, 1 Ep. 1, 8: If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us.

IV. Of the Gospel.

We will now return to the Gospel, which not merely in one way gives us counsel and aid against sin; for God is superabundantly rich [and liberal] in His grace [and goodness]. First, through the spoken Word by which the forgiveness of sins is preached [He commands to be preached] in the whole world; which is the peculiar office of the Gospel. Secondly, through Baptism. Thirdly, through the holy Sacrament of the Altar. Fourthly, through the power of the keys, and also through the mutual conversation and consolation of brethren, Matt. 18, 20: Where two or three are gathered together, etc.

V. Of Baptism.

Baptism is nothing else than the Word of God in the water, commanded by His institution, or, as Paul says, a washing in the Word; as also Augustine says: Let the Word come to the element, and it becomes a Sacrament. And for this reason we do not hold with Thomas and the monastic preachers [or

Dominicans] who forget the Word (God's institution) and say that God has imparted to the water a spiritual power, which through the water washes away sin. Nor [do we agree] with Scotus and the Barefooted monks [Minorites or Franciscan monks], who teach Kaufe die Sünde abwasche aus Beistehen göttliches Willens, also daß diese Abwaschung geschieht allein durch Gottes Willen, gar nicht durchs Wort oder Wasser.

Von der Rintertaufe halten wir, daß man die Kinder taufen solle; denn sie gehören auch zu der verheißenen Erlösung, durch Christum geschehen, und die Kirche soll sie [die Taufe] ihnen reichen.

VI. Vom Sacrament des Altars.

Vom Sacrament des Altars halten wir, daß Brot und Wein im Abendmahl sei der wahrhaftige Leib und Blut Christi und werde nicht allein gereicht und empfangen von frommen, sondern auch von bösen Christen.

Und daß man nicht soll einerseits Gestalt allein geben. Und wir bedürfen der hohen Kunst nicht, die uns lehre, daß unter einer Gestalt so viel sei als unter beiden, wie uns die Sophisten und das Konzilium zu Konstanz lehren. Denn ob's gleich wahr wäre, daß unter einer so viel sei als unter beiden, so ist doch die einige Gestalt nicht die ganze Ordnung und Einköpfung, durch Christum gestiftet und befohlen. Und sonderlich verdammten und verfluchten wir in Gottes Namen diejenigen, so nicht allein beide[re] Gestalt lassen anstehen, sondern auch gar herrlich [selbstherrlich] daher verbieten, verdammen, lästern als Keterei und setzen sich damit wider und über Christum, unsern Herrn und Gott usw.

Von der Transsubstantiation achten wir der spitzigen Sophisterei gar nichts, da sie lehren, daß Brot und Wein verlassen oder verlieren ihr natürlich Wesen, und bleibe allein Gestalt und Farbe des Brots und nicht rechtes Brot. Denn es reimt sich mit der Schrift aufs beste, daß Brot da sei und bleibe, wie es St. Paulus selbst nennt: „Das Brot, das wir brechen“, und: „Also esse et bonum dem Brot.“

VII. Von [den] Schlüssel.

Die Schlüssel sind ein Amt und Gewalt, der Kirche von Christo gegeben, zu binden und zu lösen die Sünden, nicht allein die groben und wohlbekannten Sünden, sondern auch die subtilen, heimlichen, die Gott allein erkennt. Wie geschrieben steht im 19. Psalm: „Wer kennet, wieviel er fehlet?“ Und St. Paulus Röm. 7 klagt selbst, „daß er mit dem Fleisch diene dem Gesetze der Sünde“. Denn es steht nicht bei uns, sondern bei Gott allein, zu urteilen, welche, wie groß und wieviel Sünden sind, wie geschrieben steht im 143. Psalm: „Gehe nicht ins Gericht mit deinem Knecht; denn vor dir ist kein lebendiger Mensch gerecht.“ Und Paulus 1 Kor. 4 auch sagt: „Ich bin mir wohl nichts bewußt, aber darum bin ich nicht gerecht.“

VIII. Von der Reichte.

Weil die Absolution oder Kraft der Schlüssel [* des Schlüssels] auch eine Hilfe und Trost ist, wider die Sünde und böses Gewissen im Evangelio durch Christum gestiftet, so soll man die Reichte oder Absolution beileibe nicht lassen abkommen in der Kirche, sonderlich um der blöden [verzagten] Gewissen willen, auch um des jungen cum Scoto et Minoritis seu monachis Franciscanis, qui docent, baptismo ablui peccatum ex assistentia divinae voluntatis, et hanc ablu-tionem fieri tantum per Dei voluntatem, et minime per verbum et aquam.

4) De paedobaptismo docemus infantes esse baptizandos. Pertinent enim ad promissam redemptionem per Christum factam. Et ecclesia debet illis baptismum et promissionis illius annuntiationem.

VI. De Sacramento Altaris.

1) De sacramento altaris sentimus [R. 330] panem et vinum in coena esse verum corpus et sanguinem Christi, et non tantum dari et sumi a piis, sed etiam ab impiis Christianis.

2) Et non tantum unam speciem esse dandum. Non enim indigemus doxosophia ista, quae nos doceat sub una specie tantum esse quantum sub utraque, sicut sophistae et Concilium Constantiense docent. Etai enim verum esse forte possit, quod sub una tantum sit quantum sub utraque, tamen una species non est tota ordinatio et institutio per Christum facta, tradita et mandata. Imprimis vero damnamus et exsecramur in nomine Domini omnes eos, qui non tantum utramque speciem omittunt, verum etiam tyrannice eam prohibent, damnant et blasphemant ut haeresin et ita se ipsos supra et contra Christum, Dominum et Deum nostrum, extollunt opposcentes et praepoentes se Christo etc.

3) De transsubstantiatione subtilitatem ap-histicam nihil curamus, qua fingunt panem et vinum relinquere et amittere naturalem suam substantiam, et tantum speciem et colorem panis et non verum panem remanere. Optime enim cum Sacra Scriptura congruit, quod panis adsit et maneat, sicut Paulus ipse nominat [1 Cor. 10, 16]: Panis, quem frangimus. Et [1 Cor. 11, 28]: Ita edat de pane.

VII. De Clavibus.

1) Claves sunt officium et potestas ecclesiae a Christo data, ad ligandum et solvendum peccata non tantum enormia et manifesta, sed etiam subtilia, abscondita, soli Deo nota, sicut Ps. 19, 13 scriptum est: Delicta quis intelligit? Et Rom. 7, 25 Paulus conqueritur, [R. 331] 2) se carne servire legi peccati. Non enim penes nos est, sed solius Dei est iudicare, quae, quanta et quotuplicia sint peccata, ut scriptum est Ps. 143, 2: Ne intres in iudicium cum servo tuo, quia non iustificabitur coram 3) te omnis vivens. Et Paulus 1 Cor. 4, 4 inquit: Nullus quidem mihi conscius sum, sed per hoc non iustificatus sum.

VIII. De Confessione.

1) Quum absolutio et virtus clavium etiam sit consolatio et auxilium contra peccatum et malam conscientiam, in evangelio ab ipso Christo instituta, nequaquam in ecclesia confessio et absolutio abolenda est, praesertim propter teneras et pavidas conscientias et propter iuventutem indomitam et petulantem, that, by the assistance of the divine will, Baptism washes away sins, and that this ablution occurs only through the will of God, and by no means through the Word or water.

Of the baptism of children we hold that children ought to be baptized. For they belong to the promised redemption made through Christ, and the Church should administer it [Baptism and the announcement of that promise] to them.

VI. Of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Of the Sacrament of the Altar we hold that bread and wine in the Supper are the true body and blood of Christ, and are given and received not only by the godly, but also by wicked Christians.

And that not only one form is to be given. [For] we do not need that high art [specious wisdom] which is to teach us that under the one form there is as much as under both, as the sophists and the Council of Constance teach. For even if it were true that there is as much under one as under both, yet the one form only is not the entire ordinance and institution [made] ordained and commanded by Christ. And we especially condemn and in God's name execrate those who not only omit both forms, but also quite autocratically [tyrannically] prohibit, condemn, and blaspheme them as heresy, and so exalt themselves against and above Christ, our Lord and God [opposing and placing themselves ahead of Christ], etc.

As regards transubstantiation, we care nothing about the sophistical subtlety by which they teach that bread and wine leave or lose their own natural substance, and that there remain only the appearance and color of bread, and not true bread. For it is in perfect agreement with Holy Scriptures that there is, and remains, bread, as Paul himself calls it, 1 Cor. 10, 16: The bread which we break. And 1 Cor. 11, 28: Let him so eat of that bread.

VII. Of the Keys.

The keys are an office and power given by Christ to the Church for binding and loosing sin, not only the gross and well-known sins, but also the subtle, hidden, which are known only to God, as it is written in Ps. 19, 13: Who can understand his errors? And in Rom. 7, 25 St. Paul himself complains that with the flesh he serves the law of sin. For it is not in our power, but belongs to God alone, to judge which, how great, and how many the sins are, as it is written in Ps. 143, 2: Enter not into judgment with Thy servant; for in Thy sight shall no man living be justified. And Paul, 1 Cor. 4, 4, says: For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified.

VIII. Of Confession.

Since Absolution or the Power of the Keys is also an aid and consolation against sin and a bad conscience, ordained by Christ [Himself] in the Gospel, Confession or Absolution ought by no means to be abolished in the Church, especially on account of [tender and] timid consciences and on account of the untrained [and capricious] young people, in rohen Volks wissen, damit es verhöret und unterrichtet werde in der christlichen Lehre.

Die Erzählung aber der Sünden soll frei sein einem jeden, was er erzählen oder nicht erzählen will; denn solange wir im Fleisch sind, werden wir nicht lügen, wenn wir sagen: Ich bin ein armer Mensch voller Sünden; Röm. 7: „Ich fühle ein ander Gesetz in meinen Gliedern“ usw. Denn die weil die absolutio privata von dem Amt herkommt der Schlüssel, soll man sie nicht verachten, sondern hoch und wert halten wie alle andern Aemter der christlichen Kirche.

Und in diesen Stücken, so das mündliche, äußerliche Wort betreffen, ist fest darauf zu bleiben, daß Gott niemand seinen Geist oder Gnade gibt ohne durch oder mit dem vor[her]gehenden äußerlichen Wort, damit wir uns bewahren vor den Enthufiasen, das ist, Geistern, so sich rühmen, ohne und vor dem Wort den Geist zu haben, und danach die Schrift oder mündlich Wort richten, deuten und deuten ihres Gefallens; wie der Münzer tat und noch viel tun heutiges Tages, die zwischen dem Geist und Buchstaben scharfe Richter sein wollen und wissen nicht, was sie sagen oder setzen. Denn das Papsttum auch ein eitel Enthufiasmus ist, darin der Papst rühmt, alle Rechte sind im Schrein seines Herzens, und was er mit seiner Kirche urteilt und heißt, das soll Geist und Recht sein, wenn's gleich über und wider die Schrift oder das mündliche Wort ist.

Das ist alles der alte Teufel und alte Schlange, der Adam und Eva auch zu Enthufiasen machte, vom äußerlichen Wort Gottes auf [Schwarm-] Geisterei und Eigendünkel führte und tat's doch auch durch andere äußerliche Worte. Gleichwie auch unsere Enthufiasen das äußerliche Wort verdammten, und doch sie selbst nicht schweigen, sondern die Welt voll plaudern und schreiben, gerade als könnte der Geist durch die Schrift oder mündlich Wort der Apostel nicht kommen, aber durch ihre Schrift und Wort müßte er kommen. Warum lassen sie auch ihre Predigt und Schrift nicht ansehn, bis der Geist selber in die Leute ohne und vor ihrer Schrift kommt, wie sie rühmen, daß er in sie [ge]kommen sei ohne Predigt der [Heiligen] Schrift? Davon hier weiter nicht Zeit ist zu disputieren; wir haben's sonst genugam getrieben.

Denn auch die, so vor der Taufe glauben oder in der Taufe gläubig werden, haben's durchs äußerliche, vor[her]gehende Wort; als, die Alten, so zur Vernunft [ge]kommen sind, müssen zuvor gehört haben, daß, „wer da glaubt und getauft wird, der ist selig“, ob sie gleich, erst ungläubig, nach zehn Jahren den Geist und Taufe kriegen. Und Cornelius Act. am 10. hatte lange zuvor gehört bei den Juden vom künftigen Messias, dadurch er gerecht vor Gott und sein Gebet und Almosen angenehm waren in solchem Glauben (wie Lukas ihn gerecht und gottesfürchtig nennt), und nicht ohne solch vor[her]gehendes Wort oder Gehör konnte glauben noch gerecht sein. Aber St. Petrus mußte ihm offenbaren, daß der Messias (an welchen zukünftigen er bis daher geglaubt hatte) nun [ge]kommen wäre, und sein Glaube vom zukünftigen Messias ihn nicht bei den verdorren, ungläubigen Juden gefangen hielt, son-ut audiatur, examinetur et instituat in doctrina Christiana.

2) Enumeratio autem peccatorum debet esse unicuique libera, quid enumerare aut non enumerare velit. Quamdiu enim in carne sumus, non mentiemur consistentes et dicentes: Agnosco, me miserum esse peccatorem et scatere peccatis. Rom. 7, 23: Sentio aliam legem in membris meis etc. Et quum absolutio privata ab officio clavium oriatur, negligenda non est, sed maximi facienda, sicut et alia officia Christianae ecclesiae magni facienda sunt.

3) Et in his, quae vocale et externum Verbum concernunt, constanter tenendum est Deum nemini Spiritum vel gratiam suam largiri nisi per Verbum et cum Verbo externo et praecedente, ut ita praemuniamus nos adversum enthusiastas, id est, spiritus, qui iactitant se ante Verbum et sine Verbo Spiritum habere, et ideo Scripturam sive vocale Verbum iudicant, sicut et reflectunt pro libito, ut faciebat Monetarius et multi adhuc hodie, qui acute discernere volunt inter spiritum et literam et neutrum norunt, nec [R. 332]

4) quid statuunt, sciunt. Quid, quod etiam papatus simpliciter est merus enthusiasmus, quo papa gloriatur omnia iura esse in scrinio sui pectoris, et quidquid ipse in ecclesia sua sentit et iubet, id spiritum et iustum esse, etiamsi supra et contra Scripturam et vocale Verbum aliquid statuatur et praecipiat.

5) Hoc in universum antiquus est Satanas et serpens, qui etiam Adam et Evam in enthusiasmum conciebat et ab externo Verbo Dei ad spiritualitates et proprias opiniones abducebat, id quod tamen et ipse per alia ex-

6) terna verba perficiebat. Perinde ac hodie nostri enthusiastae externum Verbum damnant et tamen ipsi non silent, sed mundum garrulitatibus et scriptionibus implent, quasi vero Spiritus per scripta et vocale verbum apostolorum venire nequeat, sed per ipsorum verba et scripta primum veniat. Cur ergo non ipsi etiam omittunt suas conciones et scriptiones, donec Spiritus ipse ad homines sine ipsorum scriptis et ante ea veniat, quemadmodum gloriantur Spiritum se accepisse sine praedicatione Scripturarum? Sed de his iam non vacat pluribus disputare; et satis alias de his a nobis dictum est.

7) Nam etiam ii, qui ante baptismum credunt vel in baptismo credere incipiunt, per externum praecedens Verbum credunt ut adulti. Audiunt enim [Marc. 16, 16]: Quicumque oriderit et baptizatus fuerit salvus erit, etiamsi primum increduli post decennium accipiant

8) Spiritum et baptismum. Cornelius Act. 10, 1 sqq. longe ante audierat apud Iudaeos de venturo Messia, per quem iustus coram Deo, preces et eleemosynas Deo gratus praestabat ex fide (sicut Lucas eum nominat iustum, pium et timentem Dei) et sine praecedente illo Verbo atque auditu credere et iustus esse non poterat. Petrus autem patefacere ei iubebatur, Messiam (in quem venturum hactenus ille crederat) iam advenisse, ut fides [R. 333] eius de venturo Messia eum apud induratos et incredulos Iudaeos non captivum teneret, sed ut sciret se salvandum esse per praesentem order that they may be examined, and instructed in the Christian doctrine.

But the enumeration of sins ought to be free to every one, as to what he wishes to enumerate or not to enumerate. For as long as we are in the flesh, we shall not lie when we say: "I am a poor man [I acknowledge that I am a miserable sinner], full of sin." Rom. 7, 23: I see another law in my members, etc. For since private absolution originates in the Office of the Keys, it should not be despised [neglected], but greatly and highly esteemed [of the greatest worth], as [also] all other offices of the Christian Church.

And in those things which concern the spoken, outward Word, we must firmly hold that God grants His Spirit or grace to no one, except through or with the preceding outward Word, in order that we may [thus] be protected against the enthusiasts, i. e., spirits who boast that they have the Spirit without and before the Word, and accordingly judge Scripture or the spoken Word, and explain and stretch it at their pleasure, as Muenzer did, and many still do at the present day, who wish to be acute judges between the Spirit and the letter, and yet know not what they say or declare. For [indeed] the Papacy also is nothing but sheer enthusiasm, by which the Pope boasts that all rights exist in the shrine of his heart, and whatever he decides and commands with [in] his church is spirit and right, even though it is above and contrary to Scripture and the spoken Word.

All this is the old devil and old serpent, who also converted Adam and Eve into enthusiasts, and led them from the outward Word of God to spiritualizing and self-conceit, and nevertheless he accomplished this through other outward words. Just as also our enthusiasts [at the present day] condemn the outward Word, and nevertheless they themselves are not silent, but they fill the world with their pratings and writings, as though, indeed, the Spirit could not come through the writings and spoken word of the apostles, but [first] through their writings and words he must come. Why [then] do not they also omit their own sermons and writings, until the Spirit Himself come to men, without their writings and before them, as they boast that He has come into them without the preaching of the Scriptures? But of these matters there is not time now to dispute at greater length; we have elsewhere sufficiently urged this subject.

For even those who believe before Baptism, or become believing in Baptism, believe through the preceding outward Word, as the adults, who have come to reason, must first have heard: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, even though they are at first unbelieving, and receive the Spirit and Baptism ten years afterwards. Cornelius, Acts 10, 1 ff., had heard long before among the Jews of the coming Messiah, through whom he was righteous before God, and in such faith his prayers and alms were acceptable to God (as Luke calls him devout and God-fearing), and without such preceding Word and hearing could not have believed or been righteous. But St. Peter had to reveal to him that the Messiah (in whom, as one that was to come, he had hitherto believed) now had come, lest his faith concerning the coming Messiah hold him captive among the hardened and unbelieving Jews, but know that he was now to be bern müßte, daß er nun müßte selig werden durch den gegenwärtigen Messiam und denselben nicht mit den Juden verfolgen noch verfolgen u.s.w.

Summa, der Enthusiasmus steht in Adam und seinen Kindern von Anfang bis zum Ende der Welt, von dem alten Drachen in sie gestiftet und gegiftet, und ist aller Rezeret, auch des Papsttums und Mahomets, Ursprung, Kraft und Macht. Darum sollen und müssen wir darauf beharren, daß Gott nicht will mit uns Menschen handeln denn durch sein äußerlich Wort und Sakrament. Alles aber, was ohne solch Wort und Sakrament vom Geiste gerühmt wird, das ist der Teufel. Denn Gott wollte auch Moß erstlich durch den feurigen Busch und mündlich Wort erscheinen; und sein Prophet, weder Elias noch Elifäus, außer oder ohne die zehn Gebote den Geist [ge]kriegt haben. Und Johannes der Täufer nicht ohne Gabriels vorgehendes Wort empfangen noch ohne Mariä Stimme in seiner Mutter Leibe sprang. Und St. Petrus spricht: „Die Propheten haben nicht aus menschlichem Willen, sondern aus dem Heiligen Geiste geredet, doch als die heiligen Menschen Gottes.“ Aber ohne äußerlich Wort waren sie nicht heilig, viel weniger hätte sie als noch Unheilige der Heilige Geist zu reden getrieben; denn sie waren heilig, spricht er, da der Heilige Geist durch sie redete.

IX. Vom Bann.

Den großen Bann, wie es der Papst nennt, halten wir für eine lauter weltliche Strafe, und [derselbe] geht uns Kirchendiener nichts an. Aber der kleine, das ist, der rechte christliche Bann, ist, daß man offenbarliche, häßliche Sünden nicht soll lassen zum Sakrament oder anderer Gemeinschaft der Kirche kommen, bis sie sich bessern und die Sünde meiden. Und die Prediger sollen in diese geistliche Strafe oder Bann nicht mengen die weltliche Strafe.

X. Von der Weihe und Solation.

Wenn die Bischöfe wollten rechte Bischöfe sein und sich der Kirche und des Evangelii annehmen, so möchte man ihnen das um der Liebe und Einigkeit willen, doch nicht aus Not lassen gegeben sein, daß sie uns und unsere Prediger ordinierten und konfirmierten; doch hintangelegt alle Lärven und Gespenste [Blendwerke] unchristliches Wesens und Gepräges. Nun sie aber nicht rechte Bischöfe sind oder auch nicht sein wollen, sondern weltliche Herren und Fürsten, die weder predigen noch lehren noch taufen noch kommunizieren, noch einiges Wert oder Amt der Kirche treiben wollen, dazu diejenigen, die solch Amt berufen treiben, verfolgen und verdammen, so muß [darf] dennoch um ihrertwillen die Kirche nicht ohne Diener bleiben.

Darum, wie die alten Exempel der Kirche und der Väter uns lehren, wollen und sollen wir selbst ordinieren tüchtige Personen zu solchem Amt. Und das haben sie uns nicht zu verbieten noch zu wehren, auch [nicht] nach ihrem eigenen Rechte. Denn ihre Rechte sagen, daß diejenigen, so auch von Regern ordiniert sind, sollen geordiniert heißen und bleiben, gleichwie St. Hieronymus schreibt von der Kirche zu Alexandria, daß sie erstlich von Bischöfen [* ohne Bischöfe], durch die Priester und Prediger ingemein regiert sind worden.

9] Quid multis? Enthusiasmus insitus est Adamo et filiis eius a primo lapsu usque ad finem mundi, ab antiquo dracone ipsis veneno quodam implantatus et infusus, estque omnium haeresium et papatus et Mahometismi origo, 10] vis, vita et potentia. Quare in hoc nobis est constanter perseverandum, quod Deus non velit nobiscum aliter agere nisi per vocale Verbum et sacramenta, et quod, quidquid sine Verbo et sacramentis iactatur ut spiritus, sit 11] ipse diabolus. Nam Deus etiam Mosi voluit apparere per rubum ardentem et vocale Verbum. Et nullus propheta, sive Elias sive Elisaeus, Spiritum sine Decalogo sive Verbo 12] vocali accepit. Et Iohannes Baptista nec concipiebatur sine Gabrielis praecedente verbo, nec in matris utero saliebat sine Mariae verbo. 13] Et Petrus inquit, 2 Pet. 1, 21: Prophetae non ex voluntate humana, sed Spiritu Sancto inspirati locuti sunt, sancti Dei homines, qui sine Verbo externo non erant sancti, nec a Spiritu Sancto, ut non sancti seu profani, ad prophetandum impulsus; sed sancti erant, inquit Petrus, quum per eos Spiritus Sanctus loqueretur.

IX. De Excommunicatione.

Maiorem illam excommunicationem, quam papa ita nominat, non nisi civilem poenam esse ducimus, non pertinentem ad nos ministros ecclesiae. Minor autem, quam nominat, vera et Christiana est excommunicatio, quae manifestos et obstinatos peccatores non admittit ad sacramentum et communionem ecclesiae, donec emendentur et scelera vident. Et ministri non debent confundere hanc ecclesiasticam poenam seu excommunicationem cum poenis civilibus. [R. 334]

X. De Initiatione, Ordine et Vocatione.

1] Si episcopi suo officio recte fungerentur et curam ecclesiae et evangelii gererent, posset illis nomine caritatis et tranquillitatis, non ex necessitate, permitti, ut nos et nostros concionatores ordinarent et confirmarent, hac tamen conditione, ut seponerentur omnes larvae, praestigiae, deliramenta et spectra pom- 2] pae ethnicae. Quia vero nec sunt nec esse volunt veri episcopi, sed politici dynastae et principes, qui nec concionantur et docent, nec baptizant, nec coenam administrant, nec ullum opus et officium ecclesiae praestant, sed eos, qui vocati munus illud subeunt, persequuntur et condemnant: profecto ipsorum culpa ecclesia non deserenda, nec ministris spolianda est.

3] Quapropter, sicut vetera exempla ecclesiae et patrum nos docent, idoneos ad hoc officium ipsi ordinare debemus et volumus. Et hoc nobis prohibere non possunt, etiam secundum sua iura, quae affirmant etiam ab haereticis ordinatos vere esse ordinatos, et illam ordinationem non debere mutari. Et Hieronymus scribit de ecclesia Alexandrina, eam primum absque episcopis, presbyteris et ministris communi opera gubernatam fuisse.

saved by the present Messiah, and must not, with the [rabble of the] Jews deny nor persecute Him.

In a word, enthusiasm inheres in Adam and his children from the beginning [from the first fall] to the end of the world, [its poison] having been implanted and infused into them by the old dragon, and is the origin, power [life], and strength of all heresy, especially of that of the Papacy and Mahomet. Therefore we ought and must constantly maintain this point, that God does not wish to deal with us otherwise than through the spoken Word and the Sacraments. It is the devil himself whatsoever is extolled as Spirit without the Word and Sacraments. For God wished to appear even to Moses through the burning bush and spoken Word; and no prophet, neither Elijah nor Elisha, received the Spirit without the Ten Commandments [or spoken Word]. Neither was John the Baptist conceived without the preceding word of Gabriel, nor did he leap in his mother's womb without the voice of Mary. And Peter says, 2. Ep. 1, 21: The prophecy came not by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Without the outward Word, however, they were not holy, much less would the Holy Ghost have moved them to speak when they still were unholy [or profane]; for they were holy, says he, since the Holy Ghost spake through them.

IX. Of Excommunication.

The greater excommunication, as the Pope calls it, we regard only as a civil penalty, and it does not concern us ministers of the Church. But the lesser, that is, the true Christian excommunication, consists in this, that manifest and obstinate sinners are not admitted to the Sacrament and other communion of the Church until they amend their lives and avoid sin. And ministers ought not to mingle secular punishments with this ecclesiastical punishment, or excommunication.

X. Of Ordination and the Call.

If the bishops would be true bishops [would rightly discharge their office], and would devote themselves to the Church and the Gospel, it might be granted to them for the sake of love and unity, but not from necessity, to ordain and confirm us and our preachers; omitting, however, all comedies and spectacular display [deceptions, absurdities, and appearances] of unchristian [heathenish] parade and pomp. But because they neither are, nor wish to be, true bishops, but worldly lords and princes, who will neither preach, nor teach, nor baptize, nor administer the Lord's Supper, nor perform any work or office of the Church, and, moreover, persecute and condemn those who discharge these functions, having been called to do so, the Church ought not on their account to remain without ministers [to be forsaken by or deprived of ministers].

Therefore, as the ancient examples of the Church and the Fathers teach us, we ourselves will and ought to ordain suitable persons to this office; and, even according to their own laws, they have not the right to forbid or prevent us. For their laws say that those ordained even by heretics should be declared [truly] ordained and stay ordained [and that such ordination must not be changed], as St. Jerome writes of the Church at Alexandria, that at first it was governed in common by priests and preachers, without bishops.

XI. Von der Priesterche.

Daß sie die Ehe verboten und den göttlichen Stand der Priester mit ewiger Keuschheit beschwert haben, das [des] haben sie weder Fug noch Recht gehabt, sondern haben gehandelt als die endschristlichen, tyrannischen, verzweifelten Töben und damit Ursache gegeben allerlei erschredlicher, greulicher, unzähliger Sünden der Unkeuschheit, darin sie denn noch stecken. Als wenig nun uns oder ihnen Macht gegeben ist, aus einem Männlein ein Fräulein oder aus einem Fräulein ein Männlein zu machen oder beides nichts zu machen, so wenig haben sie auch Macht gehabt, solche Creaturen Gottes zu scheiden oder [zu] verbieten, daß sie nicht ehrlich und ehelich beieinander sollten wohnen. Darum wollen wir in ihren leidigen Zölibat nicht willigen, auch nicht leiden, sondern [wir wollen] die Ehe frei haben, wie sie Gott geordnet und gestiftet hat, und wollen sein Wort nicht zerreißen noch hindern; denn St. Paulus sagt 1 Tim. 4, es sei eine „teuflische Lehre“.

XII. Von der Kirche.

Wir gestehen ihnen nicht, daß sie die Kirche seien, und [sie] sind's auch nicht, und [wir] wollen's auch nicht hören, was sie unter dem Namen der Kirche gebieten oder verbieten. Denn es weiß, Gott Lob, ein Kind von sieben Jahren, was die Kirche sei, nämlich die heiligen Gläubigen und die Schäflein, die ihres Hirten Stimme hören. Denn also beten die Kinder: „Ich glaube eine heilige christliche Kirche.“ Diese Heiligkeit steht nicht in Chorhemden, Platten, langen Röcken und andern ihren Ceremonien, durch sie über [hinausgehend über] die Heilige Schrift erdichtet, sondern im Wort Gottes und rechtem Glauben.

XIII. Wie man vor Gott gerecht wird, und von guten Werken.

Was ich davon bisher und stetiglich gelehrt habe, das weiß ich gar nicht zu ändern, nämlich daß wir durch den Glauben (wie St. Petrus sagt) ein ander, neu, rein Herz kriegen, und Gott um Christus' willen, unsers Mittlers, uns für ganz gerecht und heilig halten will und hält. Obwohl die Sünde im Fleisch noch nicht gar weg oder tot ist, so will er sie doch nicht rächen [* rechnen (zurechnen)] noch wissen.

Und auf solchen Glauben, Verneuerung und Vergebung der Sünden folgen dann gute Werke. Und was an demselben [denselben] auch noch sündlich oder Mangel ist, soll nicht für Sünde oder Mangel gerechnet werden eben um desselben Christi willen, sondern der Mensch soll ganz, beide nach der Person und seinen Werken, gerecht und heilig heißen und sein aus lauter Gnade und Barmherzigkeit in Christo, über uns ausgeschüttet und ausgebreitet. Darum können wir nicht rühmen viel Verdienst und Werke, wo sie ohne Gnade und Barmherzigkeit angesehen werden, sondern wie geschrieben steht 1 Kor. 1: „Wer sich rühmet, der rühme sich des Herrn“, das ist, daß er einen gnädigen Gott hat. So ist's alles gut. Sagen auch weiter, daß, wo gute Werke nicht folgen, so ist der Glaube falsch und nicht recht.

XI. De Coniugio Sacerdotum.

1) Quod coniugium prohibuerunt et divinum ordinem sacerdotum perpetuo coelibatu oneraverunt, malitiose sine omni honesta causa fecerunt, et in eo antichristi, tyrannorum et pessimorum nebulonum opus exercuerunt, ac causam praeberunt multis horrendis, (R. 335 abominandis, innumeris peccatis tetra-
2) dinum, in quibus adhuc volutantur. Sicut autem nec nobis nec ipsis datum est, ut ex masculo feminam aut ex femella marem condamus aut utrumque annihilemus, ita etiam ipsis non est datum, ut creaturas Dei disiungant, separent, vetent, ne in coniugio honeste
3) una cohabitent et vivant. Quare ipsorum spurco coelibatu assentiri nolumus, nec etiam illum feremus, sed coniugium liberum habere volumus, sicut Deus illud ipse ordinavit et instituit, cuius opus nec rescindere nec destruere nec impedire volumus. Paulus enim dicit prohibitionem coniugii esse doctrinam daemoniorum, 1 Tim. 4, 1 sqq.

XII. De Ecclesia.

1) Nequaquam largimur ipsis, quod sint ecclesia, quia revera non sunt ecclesia. Non etiam audiemus ea, quae nomine ecclesiae vel
2) mandant vel vetant. Nam (Deo sit gratia) puer septem annorum novit hodie, quid sit ecclesia, nempe credentes, sancti, oviculae audientes vocem pastoris sui. Sic enim orant
3) pueri: Credo sanctam ecclesiam catholicam sive Christianam. Haec sanctitas non consistit in amiculo linteo, insigni verticali, veste talari et aliis ipsorum ceremoniis, contra Sacram Scripturam excogitatis, sed in Verbo Dei et vera fide.

XIII. Quomodo coram Deo Homo Iustificetur, et de Bonis Operibus.

1) Quod de iustificatione hactenus semper et assidue docui, mutare nec in minimo possum, videlicet nos per fidem, ut Petrus (R. 336 Act. 15, 9 loquitur, aliud novum et mundum cor acquirere, et Deum propter Christum, mediatorem nostrum, nos iustos et sanctos reputare. Et etsi peccatum in carne nondum plane ablatum et mortuum est, tamen Deus illud nobis non vult imputare nec meminisse.

2) Hanc fidem, renovationem et remissionem peccatorum sequuntur bona opera. Et quod in illis pollutum et imperfectum est, pro peccato et defectu non censetur, idque etiam propter Christum, atque ita totus homo, quum quoad personam suam tum quoad opera sua, iustus et sanctus est et nominatur ex mera gratia et misericordia, in Christo super nos
3) effusa, expansa et amplificata. Quare gloriari ob merita et opera non possumus, quum absque gratia et misericordia aspi-
4) cimus. Sic enim omnia bene se habent. Dicimus praeterea, ubi non sequuntur bona opera, ibi fidem esse falsam et non veram.

XI. Of the Marriage of Priests.

To prohibit marriage, and to burden the divine order of priests with perpetual celibacy, they have had neither authority nor right [they have done out of malice, without any honest reason], but have acted like antichristian, tyrannical, desperate scoundrels [have performed the work of antichrist, of tyrants and the worst knaves], and have thereby caused all kinds of horrible, abominable, innumerable sins of unchastity [depraved lusts], in which they still wallow. Now, as little as we or they have been given the power to make a woman out of a man or a man out of a woman, or to nullify either sex, so little have they had the power to [sunder and] separate such creatures of God, or to forbid them from living [and cohabiting] honestly in marriage with one another. Therefore we are unwilling to assent to their abominable celibacy, nor will we [even] tolerate it, but we wish to have marriage free as God has instituted [and ordained] it, and we wish neither to rescind nor hinder His work; for Paul says, 1 Tim. 4, 1 ff., that this [prohibition of marriage] is a doctrine of devils.

He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, namely, that he has a gracious God. For thus all is well. We say, besides, that if good works do not follow, faith is false and not true.

XII. Of the Church.

We do not concede to them that they are the Church, and [in truth] they are not [the Church]; nor will we listen to those things which, under the name of Church, they enjoin or forbid. For, thank God, [to-day] a child seven years old knows what the Church is, namely, the holy believers and lambs who hear the voice of their Shepherd. For the children pray thus: I believe in one holy [catholic or] Christian Church. This holiness does not consist in albs, tonsures, long gowns, and other of their ceremonies devised by them beyond Holy Scripture, but in the Word of God and true faith.

XIII. How One is Justified before God, and of Good Works.

What I have hitherto and constantly taught concerning this I know not how to change in the least, namely, that by faith, as St. Peter says, we acquire a new and clean heart, and God will and does account us entirely righteous and holy for the sake of Christ, our Mediator. And although sin in the flesh has not yet been altogether removed or become dead, yet He will not punish or remember it.

And such faith, renewal, and forgiveness of sins is followed by good works. And what there is still sinful or imperfect also in them shall not be accounted as sin or defect, even [and that, too] for Christ's sake; but the entire man, both as to his person and his works, is to be called and to be righteous and holy from pure grace and mercy, shed upon us [unfolded] and spread over us in Christ. Therefore we cannot boast of many merits and works, if they are viewed apart from grace and mercy, but as it is written, 1 Cor. 1, 31:

XIV. Von Klostergeübden.

Weil die Klostergeübde stracks wider den ersten Hauptartikel streiten, so sollen sie schlecht abe [abgetan] sein. Denn sie sind's, da Christus von sagt Matth. 24: Ego sum Christus etc. Denn wer da gelobt ein Klosterleben, der glaubt, daß er ein besser Leben führe denn der gemeine Christenmann und will durch seine Werke nicht allein ihm selber, sondern auch andern zum Himmel helfen; das heißt Christum verleugnen. Und sie rühmen aus ihrem St. Thomas [Aquinas], daß [das] Klostergeübde der Taufe gleich sei. Das ist eine Gotteslästerung.

XV. Von Menschenfahrungen.

Daß die Papisten sagen, Menschenfahrungen dienen zur Vergebung der Sünden oder verdienen die Seligkeit, das ist unchristlich und verdammt, wie Christus spricht: „Vergeblich dienen sie mir, weil sie lehren solche Lehren, die nichts sind denn Menschengebote.“ Item ad Titum 1: Aversantium veritatem. Item, daß sie sagen, es sei Todesünde, solche Sagen zu brechen, ist auch nicht recht.

Dies sind die Artikel, darauf ich stehen muß und stehen will bis in meinen Tod, ob Gott will, und weiß darin nichts zu ändern noch nachzugeben. Will aber jemand etwas nachgeben, das tue er auf sein Gewissen.

Zuletzt ist noch der Gaulesack [die Zaubertasche] des Papstes dahinten von närrischen und kindischen Artikeln, als von Kirchenweihe, von Glodentaufen, Altarsteintaufen und Gebattern dazu bitten, die dazu gaben usw. Welches Taufen ein Spott und Hohn der heiligen Taufe ist, daß man's nicht leiden soll. Danach von Lichtweihen, Palmen, Gladen, Kaser, Würzweihen usw., welches doch nicht kann geweiht heißen noch sein, sondern eitel Spott und Betrug ist. Und des Gauleswerks unählig viel, welche wir befehlen ihrem Gott und ihnen selbst anzubeten, bis sie es müde werden; wir wollen damit unermorren sein.

XIV. De Votis Monasticis.

1] Quia vota monastica e diametro pugnant cum primo principali articulo, ideo plane abroganda sunt. Ea enim sunt, de quibus Christus inquit Matth. 24, 5. 23 sqq.: Ego sum 2] Christus etc. Qui enim votum facit in monasterio vivendi, is credit se vitae rationem sanctiorem initurum esse, quam alii Christiani ducunt, et suis operibus non tantum sibi, sed etiam aliis coelum mereri vult. Hoc vero 3] quid aliud est quam Christum negare? Et pontificii ex suo Thoma dicere non erubescunt, votum monasticum esse aequale et par baptismo. Haec blasphemia est in Deum.

XV. De Humanis Traditionibus.

1] Quod pontificii dicunt humanas [R. 337] traditiones facere ad remissionem peccatorum et mereri salutem, plane impium et damnatum est, sicut Christus inquit [Matth. 16, 9]: Frustra colunt me docentes doctrinas et mandata hominum. Et Tit. 1, 14: Aversantium veritatem. Item, quod dicunt, esse peccatum mortale, si quis non servet ista statuta, etiam impium est.

3] Hi sunt articuli, in quibus constantem me esse oportet, et constans ero usque ad mortem meam, Deo dante. Et nec mutare nec concedere quidquam in illis possum. Si quis alius voluerit aliquid concedere, faciat id periculo suae conscientiae.

5] Deinde de consecrationibus cereorum, palmarum, placentarum, avenae, herbarum et aromatatum etc., quae omnia non possunt dici consecrationes, sed ludibria et merae imposturae sunt. Et sunt talium praestigiarum infinitae aliae, quas committimus deo ipsorum et ipsis adorandas, donec illis defatigentur. Nobis nihil cum istis negotiis esse debet.

7] Ego, Philippus Melancthon, supra positos articulos approbo ut pios et Christianos. De pontifice autem statuo, si evangelium [R. 338] admitteret, posse ei propter pacem et communem tranquillitatem Christianorum, qui iam sub ipso sunt et in posterum sub ipso erunt, superioritatem in episcopos, quam aliqui habet, iure humano etiam a nobis permitti.

XIV. Of Monastic Vows.

As monastic vows directly conflict with the first chief article, they must be absolutely abolished. For it is of them that Christ says, Matt. 24, 5. 23 ff.: I am Christ, etc. For he who makes a vow to live as a monk believes that he will enter upon a mode of life holier than ordinary Christians lead, and wishes to earn heaven by his own works not only for himself, but also for others; this is to deny Christ. And they boast from their St. Thomas that a monastic vow is equal to Baptism. This is blasphemy [against God].

XV. Of Human Traditions.

The declaration of the Papists that human traditions serve for the remission of sins, or merit salvation, is [altogether] unchristian and condemned, as Christ says Matt. 15, 9: In vain they do worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Again, Titus 1, 14: That turn from the truth. Again, when they declare that it is a mortal sin if one breaks these ordinances [does not keep these statutes], this, too, is not right.

These are the articles on which I must stand, and, God willing, shall stand even to my death; and I do not know how to change or to yield anything in them. If any one wishes to yield anything, let him do it at the peril of his conscience.

Lastly, there still remains the Pope's bag of impostures concerning foolish and childish articles, as, the dedication of churches, the baptism of bells, the baptism of the altar-stone, and the inviting of sponsors to these rites, who would make donations towards them. Such baptizing is a reproach and mockery of Holy Baptism, hence should not be tolerated. Furthermore, concerning the consecration of wax-tapers, palm-branches, cakes, oats, [herbs,] spices, etc., which indeed, cannot be called consecrations, but are sheer mockery and fraud. And such deceptions there are without number, which we commend for adoration to their god and to themselves, until they weary of it. We will [ought to] have nothing to do with them.

OF THE POWER AND PRIMACY OF THE POPE.

Treatise Compiled by the Theologians Assembled at Smalcald, in the Year 1537.

The Roman Pontiff claims for himself [in the first place] that by divine right he is [supreme] above all bishops and pastors [in all Christendom].

Secondly, he adds also that by divine right he has both swords, i. e., the authority also of bestowing and transferring kingdoms [enthroning and deposing kings, regulating secular dominions, etc.].

And thirdly, he says that to believe this is necessary for salvation. And for these reasons the Roman bishop calls himself [and boasts that he is] the vicar of Christ on earth.

These three articles we hold to be false, godless, tyrannical, and [quite] pernicious to the Church.

Now, in order that our proof [reason and opinion] may be [better] understood, we shall first define what they call being above all [what it means that he boasts of being supreme] by divine right. For they mean that he is universal [that the Pope is the general bishop over the entire Christian Church], or, as they say, ecumenical bishop, i. e., from whom all bishops and pastors throughout the omnes esse iure divino. Intelligunt enim esse episcopum universalem et, ut ipsi loquuntur, οικουμενικόν, id est, a quo debeant petere ordinationem et confirmationem omnes episcopi et pastores per totum orbem terrarum, qui habeat ius eligendi, ordinandi, confirmandi, 6] deponendi omnes episcopos. Ad haec arrogat sibi auctoritatem condendi leges de cultibus, de mutatione sacramentorum, de doctrina, et vult suos articulos, sua decreta, suas leges existimari pares legibus divinis, hoc est, sentit sic obligari conscientias hominum legibus pontificiis, ut peccent mortaliter, qui eas negligunt etiam sine scandalo. Et atrocius est, quod addit, quod sit de necessitate salutis haec omnia credere.

Gewalt auf das göttliche Recht und Heilige Schrift gründen; ja er will, daß man es der Heiligen Schrift und den Geboten Gottes soll vorziehen, und das noch ärger ist, setzt er noch das hinzu: Solches alles soll und muß man glauben bei Verlust der ewigen Seligkeit.

8] Luc. 22, 25 Christus expresse prohibet dominationem inter apostolos. Nam haec ipsa erat quaestio: quum Christus dixisset de sua passione, disputabant, quis esset praefuturus et tamquam absentis Christi vicarius futurus. Ibi Christus hunc apostolorum errorem reprehendit et docet non futuram inter illos dominationem seu superioritatem, sed apostolos tamquam pares ad commune ministerium evangelii mittendos esse. Ideo ait: Reges gentium dominantur eis, vos autem non sic; sed quicumque voluerit esse maior inter vos, erit minister vester. Hic ostendit antithesis, quod dominatio improbetur.

Idem docet similitudo, quum Christus in eadem disputatione de regno, Matth. 18, 2, collocat in medio puerum, significans non futurum principatum inter ministros, sicut nec puer principatum aliquem sibi sumit aut appetit.

9] Ioh. 20, 21. Christus pariter mittit apostolos sine discrimine, quum ait: Sicut misit me Pater, ita et ego mitto vos. Eodem modo ait se mittere singulos, sicut ipse missus est, quare nulli tribuit praerogativam aut dominationem prae reliquis.

10] Gal. 2, 7 sq. Paulus manifeste affirmat se neque ordinatum neque confirmatum esse a Petro, nec agnoscit Petrum talem, a quo petenda sit confirmatio. Et nominatim pugnat hac de re, suam vocationem non pendere ab auctoritate Petri. Debuit autem agnoscere Petrum tamquam superiorem, si Petrus erat iure divino superior. Ideo inquit Paulus se, zum ersten anzeigen, was es heiße, daß er rühmt, er sei aus göttlichen Rechten der Oberste. Denn also meinen sie es, daß der Papst über die ganze christliche Kirche gemeiner Bischof und, wie sie es nennen, oecumenicus episcopus sei, das ist, von welchem alle Bischöfe und Pfarrherren durch die ganze Welt sollen ordiniert und bestätigt werden, daß er allein Recht und Macht habe, alle Bischöfe und Pfarrherren zu wählen, ordnen, bestätigen und einzusetzen [* zu entsetzen]. Neben dem macht er sich auch dies an, daß er Macht habe, allerlei Geheze zu machen von Gottesdiensten, Änderung der Sacramente und der Lehre, und will, daß man seine Statuta und Satzungen andern Urteilen des christlichen Glaubens und der Heiligen Schrift soll gleich halten, als die ohne Sünde nicht mögen [können] nachgelassen werden. Denn er will solche

Darum wollen wir zum ersten aus dem heiligen Evangelio anzeigen, daß der Papst gar keiner Oberkeit [Brigleitet, Obergewalt] über andere Bischöfe und Seelsorger aus göttlichem Recht sich möge anmaßen.

I. Luk. 22 verbietet Christus mit klaren, hellen Worten, daß kein Apostel einige Oberkeit über die andern haben soll. Denn eben dies war die Frage unter den Jüngern, als Christus von seinem Leiden schon gesagt hatte, daß sie disputierten untereinander, wer unter ihnen Herr sein und Christum nach seinem Absterben verwesen sollte. Aber Christus strafft solchen Irrtum der Apostel und lehrt sie, es werde die Weise nicht haben, daß sie wollten Herren sein und Oberkeit haben, sondern sie sollten zugleich Apostel sein und in gleichem Amt das Evangelium predigen. Darum sagt er auch: „Die weltlichen Könige herrschen, und die Gewaltigen heißt man gnädige Herren. Ihr aber nicht also; sondern der Größte unter euch soll sein wie der Geringste und der Vornehmste wie ein Diener.“ Hier sieht man, wenn man's gegeneinander hält, daß er keine Herrschaft unter den Aposteln haben will.

II. Wie solches auch wohl scheint [deutlich hervorgeht] aus dem andern Gleichniß, da Christus in gleicher Disputation von der Herrschaft ein junges Kind mitten unter die Apostel stellt, auf daß er anzeige, daß, gleichwie ein Kind keiner Herrschaft begehrt noch sich unterfängt, also auch die Apostel und alle, so das Wort führen sollen, nicht Oberkeit sollen suchen noch brauchen.

III. Joh. 20 sendet Christus seine Jünger zugleich zum Predigtamt, ohne allen Unterschied, daß einer weder mehr noch weniger Gewalt soll haben denn der andere. Denn so sagt er: „Gleichwie mich mein Vater gesandt hat, so sende ich euch.“ Die Worte sind hell und klar, daß er einen jeden also sende, wie er ist gesendet worden. Da kann je keiner keine [be]sondere Oberkeit oder Gewalt vor und über die andern rühmen.

IV. Gal. 2 zeigt der heilige Paulus klar an, daß er von Petro weder ordiniert noch konfirmiert und bestätigt sei, erkennt auch Petrum in keinem Wege dafür, als hätte er von ihm müssen bestätigt werden, und insonderheit streitet [verficht] er dieses, daß sein Beruf auf St. Peters Gewalt gar nicht stehe noch gegründet sei. Nun sollte er je Petrum als einen Obersten [an]erkannt haben, entire world ought to seek ordination and confirmation, who [alone] is to have the right of electing, ordaining, confirming, deposing all bishops [and pastors]. Besides this, he arrogates to himself the authority to make [all kinds of] laws concerning acts of worship, concerning changing the Sacraments, [and] concerning doctrine, and wishes his articles, his decrees, his laws [his statutes and ordinances] to be considered equal to the divine laws [to other articles of the Christian Creed and the Holy Scriptures], i. e., he holds that by the papal laws the consciences of men are so bound that those who neglect them, even without public offense, sin mortally [that they cannot be omitted without sin. For he wishes to found this power upon divine right and the Holy Scriptures; yea, he wishes to have it preferred to the Holy Scriptures and God's commands]. And what he adds is still more horrible, namely, that it is necessary to believe all these things in order to be saved [all these things shall and must be believed at the peril of forfeiting salvation].

In the first place, therefore, let us show from the [holy] Gospel that the Roman bishop is not by divine right above [cannot arrogate to himself any supremacy whatever over] other bishops and pastors.

I. Luke 22, 25. Christ expressly prohibits lordship among the apostles [that no apostle should have any supremacy over the rest]. For this was the very question, namely, that when Christ spake of His passion, they were disputing who should be at the head, and as it were the vicar of the absent Christ. There Christ reproves this error of the apostles, and teaches that there shall not be lordship or superiority among them, but that the apostles should be sent forth as equals to the common ministry of the Gospel. Accordingly, He says: The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors, but ye shall not be so; but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. The antithesis here shows [By holding these matters against one another, one sees] that lordship [among the apostles] is disapproved.

II. Matt. 18, 2. The same is taught by the parable when Christ in the same dispute concerning the kingdom places a little child in the midst, signifying that among ministers there is not to be sovereignty, just as a child neither takes nor seeks sovereignty for himself.

III. John 20, 21. Christ sends forth His disciples on an equality, without any distinction [so that no one of them was to have more or less power than any other], when He says: As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. [These words are clear and plain:] He says that He sends them individually in the same manner as He Himself was sent; hence He grants to no one a prerogative or lordship above the rest.

IV. Gal. 2, 7 f. St. Paul manifestly affirms that he was neither ordained nor confirmed

[and endorsed] by Peter, nor does he acknowledge Peter to be one from whom confirmation should be sought. And he expressly contends concerning this point that his call does not depend upon the authority of Peter. But he ought to have acknowledged Peter as a superior if Peter was superior by divine right [if Peter, indeed, had received such supremacy from Christ]. Paul accordingly says that he had at once preached the Gospel [freely for a long time] without consulting Peter. Also: Of those who seemed to be somewhat (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me; God accepteth no man's person). And: They non consulto Petro, statim docuisse evangelium. Item: Mea nihil refert, quales illi fuerint, qui aliquid esse videntur; personam enim hominis Deus non accipit. Item: Qui videbantur esse aliquid, nulla mihi mandata dederunt. Quum igitur Paulus clare [R. 342] testetur se ne voluisse quidem requirere confirmationem Petri, etiam quum ad eum venisset: docet auctoritatem ministerii a Verbo Dei pendere, et Petrum non fuisse superiorem ceteris apostolis, nec unius Petri ordinationem aut confirmationem requirendam esse.

11] 1 Cor. 3. 6. Paulus exaequat ministros et docet ecclesiam esse supra ministros. Quare Petro non tribuitur superioritas aut dominatio supra ecclesiam aut reliquos ministros. Sic enim ait: Omnia vestra sunt, sive Paulus, sive Apollo, sive Cephas, id est, nec ceteri ministri nec Petrus sibi sumat dominationem aut superioritatem supra ecclesiam, non oneret ecclesiam traditionibus, non valeat ullius auctoritas plus quam Verbum, non opponatur auctoritas Cephae contra auctoritatem aliorum apostolorum, sicut argumentabantur eo tempore: Cephas hoc observat, qui est superior apostolus, ergo et Paulus et ceteri debent hoc observare. Hunc praetextum Paulus detrahit Petro et negat eius auctoritatem anteferendam esse ceteris aut ecclesiae.

Ex Historiis.

12] Nicaena Synodus ordinavit, ut Alexandrinus episcopus curaret ecclesias in Oriente et Romanus episcopus curaret suburbanas, hoc est, eas, quae in provinciis Romanis in Occidente erant. Hinc primum humano iure, hoc est, ordinatione synodi, crevit auctoritas Romani episcopi. Iam si Romanus episcopus habuisset iure divino superioritatem, non licuisset synodo detrahere ei aliquid iuris et in Alexandrinum transferre, imo omnes Orientis episcopi perpetuo debuissent petere ordinationem et confirmationem a Romano.

13] Item Synodus Nicaena constituit, ut episcopi eligerentur a suis ecclesiis, praesente aliquo vicino episcopo aut pluribus. Idem servatum est etiam in Occidente et in Latinis ecclesiis, sicut testatur Cyprianus et [R. 343] Augustinus. Sic enim ait Cyprianus in Epistola 4. ad Corneliū: Propter quod diligenter de divina traditione et apostolica observatione servandum est et tenendum, quod apud nos quoque et fere in omnibus provinciis tenetur, ut ad ordinationes rite celebrandas, ad eam plebem, cui praepositus ordinatur, episcopi eiusdem provinciae proximi quique conveniant, et episcopus deligatur plebe praesente, quae singulorum vitam plenissime novit, quod et apud nos factum videmus in Sabini collegae wo Petrus anders solche Oberkeit von Christo hätte empfangen, wie der Papst ohne allen Grund rühmt. Darum spricht auch Paulus, er habe das Evangelium eine lange Zeit frei gepredigt, ehe er sich mit Petro und den andern darüber besprochen habe. Item, er spricht: „es liege ihm nichts an denen, die das Ansehen haben, welcherlei sie gewesen sind. Denn Gott achtet das Ansehen der Person und Menschen nicht; mir aber haben die, so das Ansehen hatten, keinen Befehl getan“. Weil nun Paulus klar zeugt, er habe bei Petro nicht wollen anjehen, daß er ihm zu predigen erlaubte, auch dajumal, da er am letzten sei zu ihm das Predigtamt vom gemeinen Beruf der Apostel Person Petri Beruf oder Bestätigung haben.

V. 1 Cor. 3 macht Paulus alle Kirchenbiener gleich und lehrt, daß die Kirche mehr sei denn die Diener. Darum kann man mit keiner Wahrheit sagen, daß Petrus einige Oberkeit oder Gewalt vor andern Aposteln über die Kirche und alle andern Kirchenbiener gehabt habe. Denn so spricht er: „Es ist alles euer, es sei Paulus oder Apollo oder Cephas“; das ist: Es darf weder Peter noch andere Diener des Wortes ihnen [sich] zumessen einige Gewalt oder Oberkeit über die Kirche. Niemand soll die Kirche beschweren mit eigenen Säkungen, sondern hier soll es so heißen, daß keines Gewalt noch Ansehen mehr gelte denn das Wort Gottes. Man darf nicht Cephas' Gewalt höher machen denn der andern Apostel; wie sie denn zu der Zeit pflegten zu sagen: Cephas hält dies also, der doch der vornehmste Apostel ist, darum soll es Paulus und andere auch so halten. Nein, spricht Paulus, und zieht Petro dies Gütlein ab, daß sein Ansehen und Gewalt sollte höher sein denn der andern Apostel oder [der] Kirche.

Aus den Historien.

VI. Das Konzilium zu Nizäa hat beschlossen, daß der Bischof zu Alexandrien sollte befehlen die Kirchen im Orient und der Bischof zu Rom die suburbanas, das ist, die, so zu Rom gehörten im Ortsident. Hier ist des römischen Bischofs Macht zum ersten gewachsen, nicht aus göttlichen, sondern menschlichen Rechten, wie es im Concilio Nicaeno ist beschlossen worden. So nun der römische Bischof nach göttlichem Rechte wäre der Oberste gewesen, hätte das Konzilium zu Nizäa nicht Macht gehabt, ihm solche Gewalt zu nehmen und auf den Bischof zu Alexandria zu wenden [zu übertragen]; ja, alle Bischöfe im Orient sollten je und je vom Bischof zu Rom begehrt haben, daß er sie ordiniert und bestätigt hätte.

VII. Item, im Concilio Nicaeno ist beschlossen worden, daß eine jegliche Kirche einen Bischof für sich selbst im Beiwesen eines oder mehrerer Bischöfe, so in der Nähe wohnten, wählen sollte. Solches ist nicht allein im Orient eine lange Zeit, sondern auch in andern und lateinischen Kirchen gehalten worden, wie solches klar im Cypriano und Augustino ist ausgebrüht. Denn so spricht Cyprianus Epist. 4. ad Corneliū: „Darum soll man es fleißig nach dem Befehl Gottes und der Apostel Gebrauch halten, wie es denn bei uns und fast in allen Landen gehalten wird, daß zu der Gemeinde, da ein Bischof zu wählen ist, andere des Orts nahe gelegene Bischöfe zusammen sollen kommen, und in Gegenwart der ganzen Gemeinde, die eines jeden Wandel und Leben weiß, der who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me. Since Paul, then, clearly testifies that he did not even wish to seek for the confirmation of Peter [for permission to preach] even when he had come to him, he teaches that the authority of the ministry depends upon the Word of God, and that Peter was not superior to the other apostles, and that it was not from this one individual Peter that ordination or confirmation was to be sought [that the office of the ministry proceeds from the general call of the apostles, and that it is not necessary for all to have the call or confirmation of this one person, Peter, alone].

V. In 1 Cor. 3, 6, Paul makes ministers equal, and teaches that the Church is above the ministers. Hence superiority or lordship over the Church or the rest of the ministers is not ascribed to Peter [in preference to other apostles]. For he says thus: All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, i. e., let neither the other ministers nor Peter assume for themselves lordship or superiority over the Church; let them not burden the Church with traditions; let not the authority of any avail more than the Word [of God]; let not the authority of Cephas be opposed to the authority of the other apostles, as they reasoned at that time: "Cephas, who is an apostle of higher rank, observes this; therefore, both Paul and the rest ought to observe this." Paul removes this pretext from Peter, and denies [Not so, says Paul, and makes Peter doff his little hat, namely, the claim] that his authority is to be preferred to the rest or to the Church.

VI. The Council of Nice resolved that the bishop of Alexandria should administer the churches in the East, and the Roman bishop the suburban, i. e., those which were in the Roman provinces in the West. From this start by a human law, i. e., the resolution of the Council, the authority of the Roman bishop first arose. If the Roman bishop already had the superiority by divine law, it would not have been lawful for the Council to take any right from him and transfer it to the bishop of Alexandria; nay, all the bishops of the East ought perpetually to have sought ordination and confirmation from the bishop of Rome.

VII. Again the Council of Nice determined that bishops should be elected by their own churches, in the presence of some neighboring bishop or of several. The same was observed [for a long time, not only in the East, but] also in the West and in the Latin churches, as Cyprian and Augustine testify. For Cyprian says in his fourth letter to Cornelius: Accordingly, as regards the divine observance and apostolic practise, you must diligently keep and practise what is also observed among us and in almost all the provinces, that for celebrating ordinations properly, whatever bishops of the same province live nearest should come together with the people for whom a pastor is being appointed, and the bishop should be chosen in the presence of the people, who most fully know the life of each nostri ordinatione, ut de universae fraternitatis suffragio et de episcoporum, qui in praesentia convenerant, iudicio episcopatus ei deferretur et manus ei imponeretur [imponerentur].

16] Superioritas illa est impossibilis. Nam impossibile est unum episcopum esse inspectorem ecclesiarum totius orbis terrarum, aut ecclesias in ultimis terris sitas petere ab uno ordinationem. Constat enim regnum Christi dispersum esse per totum orbem terrarum, hodieque multae sunt ecclesiae in Oriente, quae non petunt a Romano episcopo ordinationem aut confirmationem. Itaque superioritas illa quum sit impossibilis, et non agnoverint eam ecclesiae in maxima parte orbis, satis apparet non institutam esse.

ganz und gar unmöglich ist, und die Kirchen in der Welt hin und wieder den Papst für einen solchen Herrn weder [an]erkannt noch gebraucht haben, [so] sieht man wohl, daß solche Oberleit nicht von Christo eingekehrt [ist] und nicht aus göttlichen Rechten kommt.

Hieronymus inquit: Si auctoritas [R. 344 18] quaeritur, orbis est maior urbe. Ubique episcopus fuerit, sive Romae sive Eubudii sive Constantinopoli sive Rhegii sive Alexandriae, eiusdem meriti est et eiusdem sacerdotii etc.

19] Gregorius scribens ad Alexandrinum patriarcham, vetat se appellari universalem episcopum. Et in regestis dicit, in Synodo Chalcedonensi oblatum esse primatum Romano episcopo, nec tamen acceptum. [Gregorius, Epist., lib. 7, Ep. 33 ad Mauric. Augustum: „Ego autem fidenter dico, quia, quisquis se universalem sacerdotem vocat vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua Anti-Christum praecurrit, quia superbiendo se ceteris praeponit.“]

praefatione epistolae, quam ad me ipsum, qui prohibui, direxistis, superbae appellationis verbum universalem me Papam dicentes imprimere curastis. Quod peto dulcissima mihi Sanctitas vestra ultra non faciat.“]

20] Postremo, quomodo potest papa iure divino esse supra totam ecclesiam, quum ecclesia habeat electionem, et paulatim mos invaluerit, ut Romani episcopi ab imperatoribus 21] confirmarentur? Item, quum diu fuissent certamina de primatu inter Romanum et inter Constantinopolitanum episcopum, tandem Phocas Imperator constituit Romano episcopo tribuendum esse primatum. Quodsi ecclesia vetus agnovisset Romani pontificis primatum, haec contentio non incidere potuisset, nec fuisset opus decreto Imperatoris.

Bischof soll gewählt werden, wie wir denn sehen, daß es in der Wahl Sabini, unsers Mitgefehen, auch geschehen ist, daß er nach Wahl der ganzen Gemeinde und Rat etlicher Bischöfe, so vorhanden gewesen, zum Bischof erwählt und die Hände ihm aufgelegt sind“ ujm.

Diese Weise heißt Cyprianus eine göttliche Weise und apostolischen Gebrauch und zeugt, daß es fast in allen Landen dazumal so gehalten sei.

Weil nun weder die ordinatio noch confirmatio dazumal durch das große Teil der Welt, in allen Kirchen der Griechen und Lateinischen, beim Bischofe zu Rom ist gesucht worden, [so] ist es klar, daß die Kirche dazumal solche Oberleit und Herrschaft dem Bischofe zu Rom nicht gegeben hat.

Solche Oberleit und Herrschaft ist auch ganz und gar unmöglich. Denn wie könnte es möglich sein, daß ein Bischof sollte alle Kirchen der ganzen Christenheit versorgen, oder daß die Kirchen, so fern von Rom gelegen, allein von einem alle ihre Kirchendiener könnten ordinieren lassen? Denn das ist je gewiß, daß das Reich Christi durch die ganze Welt ist ausgeteilt. So sind auch noch heutigestags viele christliche Versammlungen der Kirche im Orient, welche Kirchendiener haben, so weder vom Papst noch den Seinen ordiniert noch konfirmiert sind. Weil nun solche Oberleit, der sich der Papst wider alle Schrift anmaßt, auch

VIII. Es sind vor alters viele Konzilia ausgeschrieben und gehalten worden, in welchen der Bischof zu Rom nicht als der Oberste gefessen ist, als zu Nizäa und an andern Orten mehr. Dasselbe ist je auch eine Anzeigung, daß die Kirche dazumal den Papst für einen Oberherrn über alle Kirchen und Bischöfe nicht [an]erkannt habe.

IX. St. Hieronymus spricht: „Wenn man will von Gewalt und Herrschaft reden, so ist je orbis mehr denn urbs, daß ist, Welt ist mehr denn die Stadt Rom. Darum, es sei der Bischof zu Rom oder Eubudien, zu Konstantinopel oder Rhegio oder Alexandrien, so ist Würde und Amt gleich“ ujm.

X. Item, Gregorius schreibt zum Patriarchen zu Alexandria und berheut [verbietet] ihm, er soll ihn nicht heißen den höchsten Bischof, und in den Regesten sagt er, es sei im Konzilio zu Chalcedon dem Bischof zu Rom angeboten worden, er solle der oberste Bischof sein, aber er habe es nicht angenommen. [Gregorius, Epist., lib. 8, Ep. 30 ad Eulogium: „Nam dixi, nec mihi vos nec cuiquam alteri tale aliquid“ (Eulogius hatte mit Bezug auf Gregor den Ausdruck: „Sicut iussistis“ gebraucht), „scribere debere; et ecce in one, which we also have seen done among us at the ordination of our colleague Sabinus, that by the suffrage of the entire brotherhood, and by the judgment of the bishops who had assembled in their presence, the episcopate was conferred and hands laid on him.

XI. Zum letzten, wie kann der Papst nach göttlichen Rechten über die Kirche sein, weil doch die Wahl bei der Kirche steht, und dies gar mit der Zeit in die Gewohnheit gekommen ist, daß die römischen Bischöfe von den Kaisern sind bestätigt worden?

Cyprian calls this custom a divine tradition and an apostolic observance, and affirms that it is observed in almost all the provinces.

Since, therefore, neither ordination nor confirmation was sought from a bishop of Rome in the greater part of the world in the Latin and Greek churches, it is sufficiently apparent that the churches did not then accord superiority and domination to the bishop of Rome.

Such superiority is impossible. For it is impossible for one bishop to be the overseer of the churches of the whole world, or for churches situated in the most distant lands to seek ordination [for all their ministers] from one. For it is manifest that the kingdom of Christ is scattered throughout the whole world; and to-day there are many churches in the East which do not seek ordination or confirmation from the Roman bishop [which have ministers ordained neither by the Pope nor his bishops]. Therefore, since such superiority [which the Pope, contrary to all Scripture, arrogates to himself] is impossible, and the churches in the greater part of the world have not acknowledged [nor made use of] it, it is sufficiently apparent that it was not instituted [by Christ, and does not spring from divine law].

VIII. Many ancient synods have been proclaimed and held in which the bishop of Rome did not preside; as that of Nice and most others. This, too, testifies that the Church did not then acknowledge the primacy or superiority of the bishop of Rome.

IX. Jerome says: If the question is concerning authority, the world is greater than the city. Wherever there has been a bishop, whether at Rome, or Eugubium, or Constantinople, or Rhegium, or Alexandria, he is of the same dignity and priesthood.

X. Gregory, writing to the patriarch at Alexandria, forbids that he be called universal bishop. And in the Records he says that in the Council of Chalcedon the primacy was offered to the bishop of Rome, but was not accepted.

XI. Lastly, how can the Pope be over the entire Church by divine right when the Church has the election, and the custom gradually prevailed that bishops of Rome were confirmed by the emperors? Also, when for a long time there had been contests concerning the primacy between the bishops of Rome and Constantinople, the Emperor Phocas finally determined that the primacy should be assigned to the bishop of Rome. But if the ancient Church had acknowledged the primacy of the Roman Pontiff, this contention could not have occurred, neither would there have been need of the decree of the emperor.

22] Sed obiciunt quaedam dicta, videlicet [Matth. 16, 18 sq.]: Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo ecclesiam meam; item: Tibi dabo claves; item [Ioh. 21, 15]: Pasce oves meas; et alia quaedam. Quum autem haec tota controversia copiose et accurate tractata sit alibi in libris nostrorum, nec recenseri omnia hoc loco possint, referimus nos ad ea scripta, etque pro repetitis habere volumus. Breviter tamen respondebimus de interpretatione.

23] In omnibus illis dictis Petrus sustinet personam communem totius coetus apostolorum, sicut ex ipso textu apparet. Nam Christus interrogat non unum Petrum, sed ait: Vos quem me esse dicitis? Et quod hic singulari numero dicitur: Tibi dabo claves, quidquid ligaveris, alibi plurali numero dicitur [Matth. 18, 18]: Quidquid ligaveritis etc. Et in Iohanne [20, 23]: Quorum remiseritis peccata etc. Haec verba testantur pariter [R. 345 omnibus apostolis tradi claves, et pariter mitti omnes apostolos.

24] Ad haec necesse est fateri, quod claves non ad personam unius certi hominis, sed ad ecclesiam pertineant, ut multa clarissima et firmissima argumenta testantur. Nam Christus de clavibus dicens Matth. 18, 19 sq. addit: Ubiunque duo vel tres consenserint super terram etc. Tribuit igitur principaliter claves ecclesiae et immediate, sicut et ob eam causam ecclesia principaliter habet ius vocationis.

es beehrt, wird mitgeteilt; wie es denn im Werk vor Augen ist, daß die Kirche Macht hat, Kirchendiener zu ordinieren. Und Christus spricht bei diesen Worten: „Was ihr binden werdet“ usw. und deutet, wem er die Schlüssel geben, nämlich der Kirche: „Wo zwei oder drei versammelt sind in meinem Namen“ usw. Item, Christus gibt das höchste und letzte Gericht der Kirche, da er spricht: „Eag's der Kirche!“

Itaque necesse est in illis dictis Petrum sustinere personam totius coetus apostolorum. Quare non tribuunt aliquam praerogativam seu superioritatem seu dominationem Petro.

25] Quod vero dictum est: Super hanc petram aedificabo ecclesiam meam, certe ecclesia non est aedificata super auctoritatem hominis, sed super ministerium illius professionis, quam Petrus fecerat, in qua praedicat Iesum esse Christum, Filium Dei. Ideo alloquitur eum tamquam ministrum: Super hanc petram, id est, super hoc ministerium.

26] Porro ministerium novi testamenti non est alligatum locis et personis, sicut ministerium Leviticum, sed est dispersum per totum orbem terrarum, et ibi est, ubi Deus dat dona sua, apostolos, prophetas, pastores, doctores; nec valet illud ministerium propter ullius personae auctoritatem, sed propter Verbum 27] a Christo traditum. Et hoc modo, non de persona Petri, interpretantur plurimi ex sanctis patribus hanc sententiam (super hanc petram), ut Origenes, Cyprianus, Augustinus, 28] Hilarius et Beda. Sic ait Chrysostomus:

Hier werden etliche Sprüche wider uns geführt, als Matth. 16: „Du bist Petrus, und auf diesen Fels will ich bauen meine Gemeinde oder Kirche“; item: „Dir will ich die Schlüssel geben“; item: „Weide meine Schafe“, und dergleichen mehr. Weil aber dieser ganze Handel fleißig und genugsam von den Unsern zuvor ist tractiert, wollen wir dieselben Schriften hier erholt [wiederholt] haben und auf diesmal kurz antworten, wie bemeldete Sprüche im Grund zu verstehen sind.

In allen diesen Sprüchen ist Petrus eine gemeine Person und redet nicht für sich allein, sondern für alle Apostel. Dieses beweisen die Letzte klar. Denn Christus fragt je Petrum allein nicht, sondern spricht: „Wer jaget ihr, daß ich sei?“ Und daß Christus hier zu Petro allein redet, als: „Dir will ich die Schlüssel geben“; item: „Was du binden wirst“ usw., daßselbe redet er an andern Orten zu dem ganzen Haufen: „Alles, was ihr binden werdet auf Erden“ usw., item im Iohanne: „Welchen ihr die Sünden vergebet“ usw. Diese Worte zeugen, daß die Schlüssel allen insgemein gegeben und sie alle zugleich zu predigen gesandt worden sind.

Über das muß man je bekennen, daß die Schlüssel nicht e i n e m Menschen allein, sondern der ganzen Kirche gehören und gegeben sind, wie denn solches mit hellen und gewissen Ursachen genugsam kann erwiesen werden. Denn gleichwie die Verheißung des Evangelii gewiß und ohne Mittel der ganzen Kirche zugehört, also gehören die Schlüssel ohne Mittel der ganzen Kirche, die weil die Schlüssel nichts anderes sind denn das Amt, dadurch solche Verheißung jedermann, wer Daraus folgt nun, daß in solchen Sprüchen nicht allein Petrus, sondern der ganze Haufe der Apostel gemeint wird. Darum kann man in keinem Wege aus solchen Sprüchen eine [be]sondere Gewalt der Oberkeit [be]gründen, die Petrus vor andern Aposteln gehabt habe oder haben hat sollen. Daß aber [da] steht: „Und auf diesen Fels will ich meine Kirche bauen“, da muß man je bekennen, daß die Kirche nicht auf einiges Menschen Gewalt gebaut sei, sondern sie ist gebaut auf das Amt, welches das Bekenntnis führt, das Petrus tut, nämlich, daß „Jesus sei der Christ und Sohn Gottes“. Darum redet er ihn auch an als einen Diener solches Amtes, da dies Bekenntnis und Lehre innen geben soll, und spricht: „Auf diesen Felsen“, das ist, auf diese Predigt und Predigtamt.

Run ist je das Predigtamt an keinen gewissen Ort noch Person gebunden, wie der Leviten Amt im Gesetz gebunden war, sondern es ist durch die ganze Welt ausgebreut und ist an dem Ort, da Gott seine Gaben gibt: Apostel, Propheten, Hirten, Lehrer usw. Und tut die Person gar nichts zu solchem Wort und Amt, von Christo befohlen; es predige und lehre es, wer da wolle, wo Herzen sind, die es glauben und sich daran halten, denen widerfährt, wie sie es hören und glauben. Auf diese Weise legen solchen Spruch viel alte Lehrer aus, nicht von der Person Petri, sondern vom

But they cite against us certain passages, namely, Matt. 16, 18 f.: Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church; also: I will give unto thee the keys; also John 21, 15: Feed My sheep, and some others. But since this entire controversy has been fully and accurately treated elsewhere in the books of our theologians, and everything cannot be reviewed in this place, we refer to those writings, and wish them to be regarded as repeated. Yet we shall reply briefly concerning the interpretation [of the passages quoted].

In all these passages Peter is the representative of the entire assembly of apostles [and does not speak for himself alone, but for all the apostles], as appears from the text itself. For Christ asks not Peter alone, but says: Whom do ye say that I am? And what is here said [to Peter alone] in the singular number: I will give unto thee the keys; and whatsoever thou shalt bind, etc., is elsewhere expressed [to their entire number], in the plural Matt. 18, 18: Whatsoever ye shall bind, etc. And in John 20, 23: Whosoever sins ye remit, etc. These words testify that the keys are given alike to all the apostles, and that all the apostles are alike sent forth [to preach].

In addition to this, it is necessary to acknowledge that the keys belong not to the person of one particular man, but to the Church, as many most clear and firm arguments testify. For Christ, speaking concerning the keys, Matt. 18, 19, adds: If two or three of you shall agree on earth, etc. Therefore he grants the keys principally and immediately to the Church, just as also for this reason the Church has principally the right of calling. [For just as the promise of the Gospel belongs certainly and immediately to the entire Church, so the keys belong immediately to the entire Church, because the keys are nothing else than the office whereby this promise is communicated to every one who desires it, just as it is actually manifest that the Church has the power to ordain ministers of the Church. And Christ speaks in these words: Whatsoever ye shall bind, etc., and indicates to whom He has given the keys, namely, to the Church: Where two or three are gathered together in My name. Likewise Christ gives supreme and final jurisdiction to the Church, when He says: Tell it unto the Church.]

Therefore it is necessary that in these passages Peter is the representative of the entire assembly of the apostles, and for this reason they do not accord to Peter any prerogative, or superiority, or lordship [which he had, or was to have had, in preference to the other apostles].

However, as to the declaration: Upon this rock I will build My Church, certainly the Church has not been built upon the authority of man, but upon the ministry of the confession which Peter made, in which he proclaims that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. He accordingly addresses him as a minister: Upon this rock, i. e., upon this ministry. [Therefore he addresses him as a minister of this office in which this confession and doctrine is to be in operation, and says: Upon this rock, i. e., this preaching and ministry.]

Furthermore, the ministry of the New Testament is not bound to places and persons as the Levitical ministry, but it is dispersed throughout the whole world, and is there where God gives His gifts, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers; neither does this ministry avail on account of the authority of any person, but on account of the Word given by Christ. [Nor does the person of a teacher add anything to this word and office; it matters not who is preaching and teaching it; if there are hearts who receive and cling to it, to them it is done as they hear and believe.] And in this way, not as referring to the person of Peter, most of the holy Fathers, as Origen, Cyprian, Augustine, Hilary, and Bede, interpret this passage: Upon this rock. Chrysostom says thus: "Upon this rock," not upon Peter. For He built His Church not upon man, but upon the faith of Peter. But what was his faith? "Thou art the Christ, the Son Super hanc petram, non super Petrum. Non enim super hominem, sed super fidem Petri aedificavit ecclesiam suam. Quae autem erat 29) fides? Tu es Christus, Filius Dei vivi. Et Hilarius: Petro revelavit Pater, ut diceret: Tu es Filius Dei vivi. Super hanc igitur confessionis petram ecclesiae aedificatio est; haec fides ecclesiae fundamentum est.

30) Et hoc, quod dicitur [Ioh. 21, 15 sqq.]: Pasce oves meas, item: Diligis me plus [R. 346 his? hinc nondum sequitur peculiarem superioritatem Petro traditam esse. Iubet eum pascere, hoc est, docere Verbum seu ecclesiam Verbo regere, quod habet Petrus commune cum ceteris apostolis.

31) Secundus articulus magis etiam perspicuus est, quod Christus dederit apostolis tantum potestatem spiritualem, hoc est, mandatum docendi evangelii, annuntiandi remissionem peccatorum, administrandi sacramenta, excommunicandi impios sine vi corporali, nec dederit potestatem gladii aut ius constituendi, occupandi aut conferendi regna mundi. Christus enim ait [Matth. 28, 18 sq.]: Ite docentes servare ea, quae praecepi vobis. Item [Ioh. 20, 21]: Sicut misit me Pater, ita et ego mitto vos.

Constat autem Christum non esse missum, ut gladium gereret aut teneret regnum mundanum, sicut ipse inquit [Ioh. 18, 36]: Regnum non est de hoc mundo. Et Paulus ait [2 Cor. 1, 24]: Non dominamur fidei vestrae; item [2 Cor. 10, 4]: Arma militiae nostrae non sunt carnalia etc.

32) Quod igitur Christus in passione spinis coronatur et producitur deridendus in regia purpura, significatum est fore, ut spreto regno spirituali, hoc est, oppresso evangelio, constitutur aliud mundanum regnum, praetextu 33) potestatis ecclesiasticae. Quare Bonifacii Octavi Constitutio et cap. Omnes, distinct. 22, et similes sententiae sunt falsae et impiae, quae contendunt iure divino papam esse dominum 34) regnorum mundi. Ex qua persuasionem tenebrae in ecclesiam horribiles invectae sunt, deinde etiam magni in Europa motus orti. Neglectum est enim ministerium evangelii, extincta est notitia fidei et regni spiritualis, Christiana iustitia putabatur esse illa externa politia, quam papa constitueret. [Bonifacius VIII., Constitutio Unam sanctam in extrav. Commun. lib. 1, tit. 8, c. 1: „Porro subesse Romano pontifici, omni humanae creaturae declaramus, dicimus, definimus et pronuntiamus omnino esse de necessitate salutis.“ Hier deutet auch Bonifacius den Ausdruck spiritualis homo, 1 Kor. 2, 15, auf den Klerus und dessen Oberhaupt, den Papst.]

35) Deinde papae rapere ad se imperia coeperunt, transtulerunt regna, vexarunt iniustus excommunicationibus et bellis fere omnium nationum reges in Europa, sed maxime [R. 347 Imperatores Germanicos, alias ut occuparent Italicas civitates, alias ut episcopos Germaniae redigerent in suam servitutem, et eriperent imperatoribus collationem. Imo etiam in Clementina scriptum est: Vacante imperio papam esse legitimum successorem.

Amt und Bekenntnis, als: Origenes, Ambrosius, Cyprianus, Hilarius, Beda.

Daß nun an andern Orten steht: „Weibe meine Schafe“, item: „Petre, hast du mich auch lieber denn diese?“ [daraus] folgt noch nicht, daß Petrus mehr Gewalt sollte haben denn andere Apostel, sondern er heißt ihn weiden, das ist, das Evangelium predigen oder die Kirche durchs Evangelium regieren; das geht je ebensowohl auf andere Apostel als auf Petrum.

Der andere Artikel ist noch klarer denn der erste. Denn Christus hat seinen Jüngern allein geistliche Gewalt gegeben, das ist, er hat ihnen befohlen, das Evangelium zu predigen, Vergebung der Sünden zu verkündigen, die Sacramente zu reichen und die Gottlosen zu bannen, ohne leibliche Gewalt durchs Wort, und hat ihnen gar nicht befohlen, das Schwert zu führen, noch weltliche Regimente zu bestellen, einzunehmen, Könige zu setzen oder zu entsetzen. Denn so spricht Christus: „Gehet hin und lehret, daß man das halte, was ich euch geboten habe“; item: „Wie mich mein Vater gesandt hat, so sende ich euch.“

Nun ist es je am Tag, daß Christus nicht dazu gesandt ist, daß er das Schwert sollte führen oder auf weltliche Weise regieren, wie er denn selbst sagt: „Mein Reich ist nicht von dieser Welt.“ Und Paulus spricht: „Wir herrschen nicht über euren Glauben“; item: „Unsere Kriegstrüftung und Waffen sind nicht fleischlich“ usw.

Daß nun Christus in seinem Leiden mit Dornen gekrönt und im Purpurkleid herbegeführt und so verspottet ist worden, ist alles eine [Be-] deutung gewesen, daß mit der Zeit das rechte geistliche Reich Christi sollte verachtet und sein Evangelium unterdrückt und ein ander äußerlich Reich anstatt desselben unter dem Schein geistlicher Gewalt aufgerichtet werden. Darum ist die Constitutio Bonifacii VIII. und das cap. Omnes, dist. 22, und dergleichen andere Sprüche mehr ganz und gar falsch und gottlos, damit sie erhalten wollen, daß der Papst vermöge göttliches Rechts ein Herr sei über die Königreiche der Welt; wie denn aus solchem falschen Wahn zum ersten schreckliche Finsternis in der Kirche, und danach greuliche Zerrüttung und Rumor in Europa erfolgt sind. Denn da hat man das Predigtamt lassen fallen, und ist die Lehre vom Glauben und geistlichen Reich Christi gar verloschen, und man hat des Papstes äußerliches Wesen und Sagenungen für christliche Gerechtigkeit gehalten.

Danach sind die Päpste auch zugefahren, haben Fürstentümer und Königreiche zu [an] sich gerissen, Könige gesetzt und entsetzt und mit unbilligem Bann und Kriegen fast alle Könige in Europa geplagt, sonderlich aber die deutschen Kaiser, bisweilen darum, daß sie die Städte in Welschland [Italien] an sich brächten, bisweilen, daß sie die Bischöfe in Deutschland ihnen [sich] untertan machten und die Bistümer selbst verleihen möchten, die der Kaiser allein zu verleihen hat. Ja, das mehr ist, in der Clementina steht also: „Wenn das Kaisertum ledig stehe, so sei der Papst der rechte Erbe dazu“.

of the living God." And Hilary says: To Peter the Father revealed that he should say, "Thou art the Son of the living God." Therefore the building of the Church is upon this rock of confession; this faith is the foundation of the Church.

And as to that which is said John 21, 15 ff.: Feed My sheep, and, Lovest thou Me more than these? it does not as yet follow hence that a peculiar superiority was given Peter. He bids him "feed," i. e., teach the Word [the Gospel], or rule the Church with the Word [the Gospel], which Peter has in common with the other apostles.

The second article is still clearer, that Christ gave to the apostles only spiritual power, i. e., the command to teach the Gospel, to announce the forgiveness of sins, to administer the Sacraments, to excommunicate the godless without bodily force [by the Word], and that He did not give the power of the sword, or the right to establish, occupy, or confer kingdoms of the world [to set up or depose kings]. For Christ says, Matt. 28, 19, 20: Go ye, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; also John 20, 21: As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you.

Now, it is manifest that Christ was not sent to bear the sword or possess a worldly kingdom [rule in a worldly fashion], as He Himself says, John 18, 36: My kingdom is not of this world. And Paul says, 2 Cor. 1, 24: Not for that we have dominion over your faith; and 2 Cor. 10, 4: The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, etc.

Accordingly, that Christ in His passion is crowned with thorns and led forth to be derided in royal purple, this signified that in the future, after His spiritual kingdom was despised, i. e., the Gospel was suppressed, another kingdom of a worldly kind would be set up [in its place] with the pretext of ecclesiastical power. Therefore the Constitution of Boniface VIII and the chapter Omnès, Dist. 22, and similar opinions which contend that the Pope is by divine right the ruler of the kingdoms of the world, are [utterly] false and godless. From this persuasion horrible darkness has been brought into the Church, and after that also great commotions have arisen in Europe. For the ministry of the Gospel was neglected, the knowledge of faith and the spiritual kingdom became extinct, Christian righteousness was supposed to be that external government which the Pope had established.

Next, the Popes began to seize upon kingdoms for themselves; they transferred kingdoms, they vexed with unjust excommunications and wars the kings of almost all nations in Europe, but especially the German emperors, sometimes for the purpose of occupying cities of Italy, at other times for the purpose of reducing to subjection the bishops of Germany, and wresting from the emperors the conferring of episcopates. Yea, in the Clementines it is even written: When the empire is vacant, the Pope is the legitimate successor.

36] Ita papa non solum dominationem contra mandatum Christi invasit, sed etiam tyrannice praetulit se omnibus regibus. Nec tantum in hac re factum ipsum reprehendendum est, quantum illud detestandum, quod praetexit auctoritatem Christi, quod claves ad regnum mundanum transfert, quod salutem alligat ad has impias et nefarias opiniones, quum ait de necessitate salutis esse, ut credant homines iure divino hanc dominationem competere.

37] Hi tanti errores, quum obscurant fidem et regnum Christi, nullo modo dissimulandi sunt. Eventus enim ostendit eos fuisse magnas pestes ecclesiae.

38] Tertio loco hoc addendum est. Etiam si Romanus episcopus divino iure primatum et superioritatem haberet, tamen non debetur obedientia his pontificibus, qui defendunt impios cultus, idololatriam et doctrinam pugnantem cum evangelio. Imo tales pontifices et tale regnum haberi debent tamquam anathema, sicut Paulus [Gal. 1, 8] clare docet: Si angelus de coelo aliud evangelium doceret, praeter id, quod vos docui, anathema sit. Et in Actis [5, 29]: Oportet Deo magis obedire quam hominibus. Idem et canones clare docent, haereticum papae non esse obediendum.

Leviticus pontifex iure divino erat summus sacerdos, et tamen impiis pontificibus non erat obediendum, ut Ieremias et alii prophetae dissentiebant a pontificibus, apostoli dissentiebant a Caipha, nec debebant ei obedire.

39] Constat autem Romanos pontifices cum suis membris defendere impiam doctrinam et impios cultus. Ac plane notae antichristi competunt in regnum papae et sua membra. Paulus enim ad Thessalonicenses [2. ep. [R. 348 2, 3 sq.], describens antichristum, vocat eum adversarium Christi, extollem se super omne, quod dicitur aut colitur Deus, sedentem in templo Dei tamquam Deum. Loquitur igitur de aliquo regnante in ecclesia, non de regibus ethnicis, et hunc vocat adversarium Christi, quia doctrinam pugnantem cum evangelio excogitaturus sit, et is arrogabit sibi auctoritatem divinam.

40] Primum autem constat papam regnare in ecclesia et praetextu ecclesiasticae auctoritatis et ministerii sibi hoc regnum constituisse. Praetexit enim haec verba: Tibi dabo claves. Deinde doctrina papae multipliciter pugnat cum evangelio, et arrogat sibi papa auctoritatem divinam tripliciter. Primum, quia sumit sibi ius mutandi doctrinam Christi et cultus a Deo institutos, et suam doctrinam et suos cultus vult observari tamquam divina. Secundo, quia sumit sibi potestatem non

Also hat sich der Papst nicht allein weltlicher Herrschaft wider Gottes klaren Befehl unbillig unterfangen, sondern hat wie ein Tyrann über alle Könige sein wollen. Wiewohl nun solches Tun der Päpste an ihm selbst ganz und gar sträflich, so ist doch dies das Ärgste daran, daß er solchen Mutwillen und Frevel mit dem Befehl Christi deckt und die Schlüssel deutet auf weltliche Herrschaft und hängt an solche ungöttliche und schändliche Opinion der Seelen Seligkeit, da er sagt, es sollen es die Leute bei ihrer Seelen Seligkeit also glauben, daß der Papst solche Macht habe aus göttlichen Rechten.

Weil nun solche greuliche Irrtümer die Lehre vom Glauben und Reich Christi ganz verfinckert haben, will es sich in keinem Weg leiden, daß man dazu sollte stillschweigen; denn man sieht's im Werk vor Augen, was großer Schade der Kirche daraus ermahnen ist.

Zum dritten muß man auch dies wissen: ob schon der Papst den Primat und Oberkeit aus göttlichem Recht hätte, daß man denjenigen Päpsten, so falsche Gottesdienste, Abgötterei und falsche Lehre wider das Evangelium vorgeben, keinen Gehorsam schuldig ist. Ja, das mehr ist, man solle auch solche Päpste und solch Reich für ein anathema und verfluchtes Wesen halten, wie Paulus klar sagt: „Wenn ein Engel vom Himmel käme und ein ander Evangelium predigte, anders, denn wir euch gepredigt haben, der sei verflucht!“ Und in Actis steht: „Man soll Gott mehr gehorchen denn den Menschen.“ Wie die geistlichen Rechte selbst sagen: „Einem Papst, der ein Keger ist, soll man nicht gehorsam sein.“

Der Hohepriester im Geseze Moses hatte das Amt aus den göttlichen Rechten, gleichwohl war niemand verpflichtet zum Gehorsam, wenn sie wider Gottes Wort handelten, wie man sieht, daß Jeremias und andere Propheten sich von den Priestern sonderten. Also sonderten sich die Apostel von Caiphas und waren ihm keinen Gehorsam schuldig.

Nun ist es je am Tage, daß die Päpste samt ihrem Anhang gottlose Lehre und falsche Gottesdienste erhalten wollen und handhaben. So reimen sich auch alle Untugenden, so in der Heiligen Schrift vom Antichrist sind weißgesagt [s. weisgesagt], mit des Papstes Reich und seinen Gliedern. Denn Paulus, da er den Antichrist malt 2 Theß. 2, nennt er ihn einen „Widerjacher Christi, der sich über alles erhebe, daß Gott oder Gottesdienst heißt, also daß er sich setzt in den Tempel Gottes als ein Gott und gibt vor, er sei ein Gott“ usw. Hier redet Paulus von einem, der in der Kirche regiert, und nicht von weltlichen Königen, und nennt ihn einen Widerwärtigen Christi, weil er eine andere Lehre werde erdenken, und daß er sich solches alles werde anmaßen, als täte er's aus göttlichen Rechten.

Nun ist am ersten dies wahr, daß der Papst in der Kirche regiert und unter dem Schein geistlicher Gewalt solche Herrschaft hat an sich [ge]bracht; denn er gründet sich auf diese Worte: „Ich will dir die Schlüssel des Himmelreichs geben.“ Zum andern ist je des Papstes Lehre in alle Wege wider das Evangelium. Zum dritten, daß er vorgibt, er sei Gott, ist in dreien Stücken zu merken: Zum ersten, daß er sich des anmaßt, er möge die Lehre Christi und rechte Gottesdienste, von Gott selbst eingesetzt, ändern; und will seine Lehre und

Thus the Pope has not only usurped dominion, contrary to Christ's command, but has also tyrannically exalted himself above all kings. And in this matter the deed itself is not to be reprehended as much as it is to be detested, that he assigns as a pretext the authority of Christ; that he transfers the keys to a worldly government; that he binds salvation to these godless and execrable opinions, when he says it is necessary to salvation for men to believe that this dominion belongs to him by divine right.

Since these great errors obscure [the doctrine of] faith and [of] the kingdom of Christ, they are in no way to be concealed. For the result shows that they have been great pests to the Church.

In the third place, this must be added: Even though the bishop of Rome had the primacy and superiority by divine right, nevertheless obedience would not be due those pontiffs who defend godless services, idolatry, and doctrine conflicting with the Gospel. Nay; such pontiffs and such a government ought to be held accursed, as Paul clearly teaches, Gal. 1, 8: Though an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. And in Acts 5, 29: We ought to obey God rather than men. Likewise the canons also clearly teach that a heretical Pope is not to be obeyed.

The Levitical high priest was the chief priest by divine right, and yet godless high priests were not to be obeyed, as Jeremiah and other prophets dissented from the high priests, the apostles dissented from Caiaphas, and did not have to obey them.

Now, it is manifest that the Roman pontiffs, with their adherents, defend [and practise] godless doctrines and godless services. And the marks [all the vices] of Antichrist plainly agree with the kingdom of the Pope and his adherents. For Paul, 2 Ep. 2, 3, in describing to the Thessalonians Antichrist, calls him an adversary of Christ, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God. He speaks therefore of one ruling in the Church, not of heathen kings, and he calls this one the adversary of Christ, because he will devise doctrine conflicting with the Gospel, and will assume to himself divine authority.

Moreover, it is manifest, in the first place, that the Pope rules in the Church, and by the pretext of ecclesiastical authority and of the ministry has established for himself this kingdom. For he assigns as a pretext these words: I will give to thee the keys. Secondly, the doctrine of the Pope conflicts in many ways with the Gospel, and [thirdly] the Pope assumes to himself divine authority in a threefold manner. First, because he takes to himself the right to change the doctrine of Christ and services instituted by God, solum ligandi et solvendi in hac vita, sed etiam sumit sibi ius de animabus post hanc vitam. Tertio, quia papa non vult ab ecclesia aut ab ullo iudicari, et antefert suam auctoritatem iudicio conciliorum et totius ecclesiae. Hoc autem est se Deum facere, nolle ab ecclesia aut ab ullo iudicari. Postremo hos tam horribiles errores et hanc impietatem defendit summa saevitia et interficit dissidentes.

41] Haec quum ita sint, cavere omnes Christiani debent, ne fiant participes impiae doctrinae, blasphemiarum et iniustae crudelitatis papae. Ideo papam cum suis membris tamquam regnum antichristi deserere et exsecrari debent, sicut Christus iussit [Matth. 7, 15]: Cavete a pseudopropheta! Et Paulus iubet, impios doctores vitandos et exsecrandos esse tamquam anathemata [Gal. 1, 8; Tit. 3, 10]. Et 2 Cor. 6, 14 ait: Ne sitis consortes infidelium; quae est enim societas lucis et tenebrarum?

42] Dissidere a consensu tot gentium [R. 349 et dici schismaticos grave est. Sed auctoritas divina mandat omnibus, ne sint socii et propugnatores impietatis et iniustae saevitiae.

Ideo satis excusatae sunt conscientiae nostrae; sunt enim manifesti errores regni papae. Et Scriptura tota voce clamat, errores illos esse doctrinam daemoniorum et 43] antichristi. Manifesta est idololatria in profanatione missarum, quae quum alia vitia habent, tum ad turpissimum quaestum impu- 44] denter collatae sunt. Doctrina de poenitentia prorsus depravata est a papa et a suis membris. Docent enim remitti peccata propter dignitatem nostrorum operum. Deinde iubent dubitare, an contingat remissio. Nusquam docent, quod gratis propter Christum remittantur peccata, et quod hac fide consequamur remissionem peccatorum.

Ita gloriam Christi obscurant et conscientias firmam consolationem eripiunt et abolent veros cultus, videlicet exercitia fidei luctantis cum desperatione.

45] Obscuraverunt doctrinam de peccato et finxerunt traditionem de enumeratione delictorum, parientem multos errores et desperationem.

Affinxerunt satisfactiones, quibus etiam obscuraverunt beneficium Christi.

46] Ex his natae sunt indulgentiae, quae sunt mera mendacia, quaestus causa excogitata.

47] Deinde invocatio sanctorum quantos ab-

eigenen erdichteten Gottesdienste gehalten haben, als hätte sie Gott selbst geboten. Zum andern, daß er sich der Gewalt anmaßt zu binden und [zu] entbinden nicht allein in diesem zeitlichen Leben hier, sondern auch in jenem Leben. Zum dritten, daß der Papst nicht will leiden, daß die Kirche oder sonst jemand ihn richte, sondern seine Gewalt soll über alle Konzilia und die ganze Kirche gehen; das heißt aber sich selbst zum Gott machen, wenn man weder [der] Kirche noch jemandes Urteil leiden will. Zum letzten hat der Papst solche Irrtümer und gottlos Wesen auch mit unrechter Gewalt und Worten verteidigt, daß er alle, so es nicht allermachen mit ihm gehalten, hat umbringen lassen.

Weil nun dem also ist, sollen alle Christen auf das fleißigste sich hüten, daß sie solcher gottlosen Lehre, Gotteslästerung und unbilligen Wütereien sich nicht teilhaftig machen, sondern sollen vom Papst und seinen Gliedern oder Anhang als von des Antichrists Reich weichen und es verfluchen, wie Christus befohlen hat: „Hütet euch vor den falschen Propheten!“ Und Paulus gebietet, daß man falsche Prediger meiden und als einen Greuel verfluchen soll. Und 2 Kor. 6 spricht er: „Zieheth nicht am fremden Joch mit den Ungläubigen; denn was hat das Licht für Gemeinschaft mit der Finsternis?“ usw.

Schwer ist es, daß man von so viel Länden und Leuten sich trennen und eine [be]sondere Lehre führen will. Aber hier steht Gottes Befehl, daß jedermann sich soll hüten und nicht mit denen einhellig sein, so unrechte Lehre führen oder mit Wütereien zu erhalten gedenken.

Darum sind unsere Gewissen deshalb wohl entschuldigt und versichert. Denn man sieht je vor Augen die großen Irrtümer, so in des Papstes Reich gehen, und die Schrift schreit mit aller Macht, daß solche Irrtümer des Teufels und Antichrists Lehre seien. Die Abgötterei im Mißbrauch der Messen ist offenbar, welche neben dem, daß sie sonst nichts tügen [taugen], zum schändlichen Genieß und Krämerei mißbraucht sind. Die Lehre von der Buße ist vom Papst und den Seinen ganz gefälscht und verderbt worden. Denn so lehren sie: Sünde werde vergeben um unserer eigenen Werke willen; und hängen dies dran, man solle dennoch zweifeln, ob die Sünden vergeben sind. Dazu lehren sie nicht, daß um Christus' willen die Sünde ohne Verdienst vergeben, und solche Vergebung der Sünden durch den Glauben an Christum erlangt werde.

Mit solcher Lehre nehmen sie Christo seine Ehre und berauben die Gewissen des rechten und gewissen Trostes und tun ab die rechten Gottesdienste, nämlich die Übung des Glaubens, welcher mit dem Unglauben und Verzweiflung über der Verheißung des Evangelii kämpft.

Vergleichen haben sie auch die Lehre verdunkelt von der Sünde und eigene Sätze erdichtet, wie man alle Sünden erzählen und beichten müsse, daraus mancherlei Irrtum, auch endlich Verzweiflung gefolgt ist.

Danach haben sie eigene Genugtuung erdacht, dadurch die Wohlthat und das Verdienst Christi auch verfinstert ist.

Aus diesem ist der Ablass gefolgt, welcher lauter Lügen und allein um des Geldes willen erdacht ist.

Was ist denn danach für Mißbrauch und greu-and wants his own doctrine and his own services to be observed as divine; secondly, because he takes to himself the power not only of binding and loosing in this life, but also the jurisdiction over souls after this life; thirdly, because the Pope does not want to be judged by the Church or by any one, and puts his own authority ahead of the decision of Councils and the entire Church. But to be unwilling to be judged by the Church or by any one is to make oneself God. Lastly, these errors so horrible, and this impiety, he defends with the greatest cruelty, and puts to death those dissenting.

This being the case, all Christians ought to beware of becoming partakers of the godless doctrine, blasphemies, and unjust cruelty of the Pope. On this account they ought to desert and execrate the Pope with his adherents as the kingdom of Antichrist; just as Christ has commanded, Matt. 7, 15: Beware of false prophets. And Paul commands that godless teachers should be avoided and execrated as cursed, Gal. 1, 8; Titus 3, 10. And 2 Cor. 6, 14 he says: Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what communion hath light with darkness?

To dissent from the agreement of so many nations and to be called schismatics is a grave matter. But divine authority commands all not to be allies and defenders of impiety and unjust cruelty.

On this account our consciences are sufficiently excused; for the errors of the kingdom of the Pope are manifest. And Scripture with its entire voice exclaims that these errors are a teaching of demons and of Antichrist. The idolatry in the profanation of the masses is manifest, which, besides other faults [besides being altogether useless] are shamelessly applied to most shameful gain [and trafficking]. The doctrine of repentance has been utterly corrupted by the Pope and his adherents. For they teach that sins are remitted because of the worth of our works. Then they bid us doubt whether the remission takes place. They nowhere teach that sins are remitted freely for Christ's sake, and that by this faith we obtain remission of sins.

Thus they obscure the glory of Christ, and deprive consciences of firm consolation, and abolish true divine services, namely, the exercises of faith struggling with [unbelief and] despair [concerning the promise of the Gospel].

They have obscured the doctrine concerning sin, and have invented a tradition concerning the enumeration of offenses, producing many errors and despair.

They have devised, in addition, satisfactions, whereby they have also obscured the benefit [and merit] of Christ.

From these, indulgences have been born, which are pure lies, fabricated for the sake of gain.

Then, how many abuses and what horrible usus et quam horrendam idolatriam [idololatriam] peperit!

48) Quanta flagitia orta sunt ex traditione de coelibatu!

Quantas tenebras offudit evangelio doctrina de votis! Ibi finxerunt vota esse iustitiam coram Deo et mereri remissionem peccatorum. Ita transtulerunt beneficium Christi in humanas traditiones et penitus exstinxerunt doctrinam de fide. Finxerunt nugacissimas traditiones esse cultus Dei et perfectionem, et praetulerunt eas operibus vocationum, quas Deus requirit et ordinavit. Neque hi errores sunt existimandi leves; laedunt enim gloriam Christi et afferunt perniciem animabus, nec possunt dissimulari.

Deinde ad hos errores accedunt duo [R. 350 49] ingentia peccata: primum, quod defendit errores illos iniusta saevitia et suppliciis; alterum, quod iudicium eripit ecclesiae, nec sinit rite iudicari ecclesiasticas controversias, imo contendit se supra concilium esse et decreta conciliorum rescindere posse, sicut interdum impudenter loquuntur canones. Sed multo impudentius hoc factum esse a pontificibus, exempla testantur.

50) 9. Quaestione 3. ait canon: Nemo iudicabit primam sedem; neque enim ab Augusto, neque ab omni clero, neque a regibus, neque a populo iudeus iudicatur.

51) Duplicem tyrannidem exercet papa: defendit errores suos vi et homicidiis et vetat cognitionem. Hoc posterius etiam plus nocet quam ulla supplicia. Quia sublato vero iudicio ecclesiae non possunt tolli impia dogmata et impii cultus, et multis saeculis infinitas animas perdunt.

52) Considerent igitur pii tantos errores regni papae et tyrannidem et cogitent primum abiciendos esse errores et amplectendam esse veram doctrinam propter gloriam Dei et 53) ad salutem animarum. Deinde cogitent etiam, quantum scelus sit adiuvere iniustam crudelitatem in interficiendis sanctis, quorum sanguinem Deus haud dubie ulciscetur.

54) Imprimis autem oportet praecipua membra ecclesiae, reges et principes, consulere ecclesiae et curare, ut errores tollantur et conscientiae sanentur, sicut Deus nominatim reges hortatur [Pa. 2, 10]: Et nunc, reges, intelligite; erudimini, qui iudicatis terram. Prima enim cura regum esse debet, ut ornent gloriam Dei. Quare indignissimum fuerit eos conferre auctoritatem et potentiam suam ad confirmandam idololatriam et cetera infinita flagitia et ad faciendas caedes sanctorum.

Was für Schande und Laster sind gekommen aus dem Verbot der Ehe!

Wie ist nur das Evangelium durch die Lehre von [den] Gelübden so verdunkelt worden! Da hat man gelehrt, daß solche Gelübde sind vor Gott eine Gerechtigkeit und verdienen Vergebung der Sünden, daß also das Verdienst Christi auf Menschenfrazungen gezogen und die Lehre vom Glauben ganz vertilgt ist. Und haben ihre närrischen und leichtfertigen Sazungen für den rechten Gottesdienst und Vollkommenheit gerühmt und den Werken, welche Gott von einem jeden in seinem Beruf fordert und geordnet hat, vorgezogen. Nun darf man's nicht dafür achten, daß solches geringe Irrtümer sind, denn sie nehmen Christo seine Ehre und verdammen die Seelen; darum soll man sie nicht ungekräft lassen hingehen.

Zu diesen Irrtümern kommen nun zwei große, greuliche Sünden: die eine, daß der Papst solche Irrtümer mit unbilliger Wüterei und grausamer Tyrannei, mit Gewalt verteidigen und erhalten will; die andere, daß er der Kirche das Urteil nimmt und will solche Religionsfachen ordentlicherweise nicht richten lassen; ja, er will mehr denn alle Konzilia sein und die Macht haben, daß er alles, so in Konzilien beschloffen, möge zerreißen und aufheben; wie zuweilen die Kanones solches unverschämt herauszagen, und haben solches die Päpste noch unverschämter getrieben, wie viele Exempel bezeugen.

9. Quaest. 3. spricht der Canon: „Niemand soll den höchsten Stuhl richten; denn den Richter richtet weder Kaiser noch die Priester, weder König noch das Volk.“

Also handelt der Papst auf beiden Seiten wie ein Tyrann, daß er solche Irrtümer mit Gewalt und Wüterei verteidigt und will keine Richter leiden. Und dies andere Stück tut mehr Schaden denn alle Wüterei. Denn alsbald der Kirche das rechte Urteil und Erkenntnis genommen ist, kann nicht möglich sein, daß man falscher Lehre oder unrechtem Gottesdienst könnte steuern, und müssen derhalben viele Seelen verloren werden.

Darum sollen gottesfürchtige Leute solche greuliche Irrtümer des Papstes und seine Tyrannei wohl bedenken und zum ersten wissen, daß solche Irrtümer zu fliehen und die rechte Lehre der Ehre Gottes und der Seelen Seligkeit halben anzunehmen sei. Danach, daß man doch bedente, wie eine greuliche, große Sünde es sei, solche unbillige Wüterei des Papstes helfen fördern, da so viel fromme Christen so jämmerlich ermordet werden, welcher Blut ohne Zweifel Gott nicht wird ungerochen [ungerächt] lassen.

Vornehmlich aber sollen Könige und Fürsten als vornehmste Glieder der Kirche helfen und schauen, daß allerlei Irrtümer weggetan und die Gewissen recht unterrichtet werden, wie denn Gott zu solchem Amt die Könige und Fürsten sonderlich vermahnt im 2. Psalm: „Ihr Könige, laßt euch weisen, und ihr Richter auf Erden, laßt euch züchtigen!“ Denn dies soll bei den Königen und großen Herren die vornehmste Sorge sein, daß sie Gottes Ehre fleißig fördern. Darum wäre es je unbillig, wenn sie ihre Macht und Gewalt dahin wollten wenden, daß solche greuliche Abgötterei und andere unzählige Laster erhalten und die frommen Christen so jämmerlich ermordet würden.

What shameful acts have arisen from the tradition concerning celibacy!

What darkness the doctrine concerning vows has spread over the Gospel! There they feigned that vows are righteousness before God, and merit the remission of sins. Thus they have transferred the benefit of Christ to human traditions, and have altogether extinguished the doctrine concerning faith. They have feigned that the most trifling traditions are services of God and perfection, and have preferred these to the works of callings which God requires and has ordained. Neither are these errors to be regarded as light; for they detract from the glory of Christ and bring destruction to souls, neither can they be passed by unnoticed.

Then to these errors two great sins are added: The first, that he defends these errors by unjust cruelty and death-penalties. The second, that he wrests the decision from the Church, and does not permit ecclesiastical controversies [such matters of religion] to be judged according to the prescribed mode; yea, he contends that he is above the Council, and can rescind the decrees of Councils, as the canons sometimes impudently speak. But that this was much more impudently done by the pontiffs, examples testify.

Quest. 9, canon 3, says: No one shall judge the first seat; for the judge is judged neither by the emperor, nor by all the clergy, nor by the kings, nor by the people.

The Pope exercises a twofold tyranny: he defends his errors by force and by murders, and forbids judicial examination. The latter does even more injury than any executions, because, when the true judgment of the Church is removed, godless dogmas and godless services cannot be removed, and for many ages they destroy innumerable souls.

Therefore let the godly consider the great errors of the kingdom of the Pope and his tyranny, and let them ponder, first, that the errors must be rejected and the true doctrine embraced, for the glory of God and to the salvation of souls. Then let them ponder also how great a crime it is to aid unjust cruelty in killing saints, whose blood God will undoubtedly avenge.

But especially the chief members of the Church, kings and princes, ought to guard the interests of the Church, and to see to it that errors be removed and consciences be healed [rightly instructed], as God expressly exhorts kings, Ps. 2, 10: Be wise, now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth. For it should be the first care of kings [and great lords] to advance the glory of God. Therefore it would be very shameful for them to lend their influence and power to confirm idolatry and infinite other crimes, and to slaughter saints.

55] Et ut papa synodos habeat, quomodo sanari ecclesia potest, si papa nihil decerni contra arbitrium suum patiat, si nemini concedat dicere sententiam nisi suis [R. 351] membris, quae habet obligata horrendis iuramentis et maledictionibus ad defensionem suae tyrannidis et impietatis sine ulla exceptione Verbi Dei?

56] Quum autem iudicia synodorum sint ecclesiae iudicia, non pontificum, praecipue regibus convenit coercere pontificum licentiam et efficere, ne ecclesiae eripatur facultas iudicandi et decernendi ex Verbo Dei. Et ut reliquos errores papae taxare ceteri Christiani debent, ita etiam reprehendere debent pontificem defugientem et impediendem veram cognitionem et verum iudicium ecclesiae.

57] Itaque etiamsi Romanus episcopus iure divino haberet primatum, tamen posteaquam defendit impios cultus et doctrinam pugnantem cum evangelio, non debetur ei obedientia, imo necesse est ei tamquam antichristo adversari. Errores papae manifesti sunt et non leves.

58] Manifesta est etiam crudelitas, quam exercet. Et constat mandatum Dei esse, ut fugiamus idololatriam, impiam doctrinam et iniustam saevitiam. Ideo magnas, necessarias et manifestas causas habent omnes pii, ne obtemperant papae. Et hae necessariae causae pios consolantur adversus omnia convicia, quae de scandalis, de schismate, de discordia obici solent.

59] Qui vero sentiunt cum papa et defendunt eius doctrinam et cultus, polluant se idololatria et blasphemis opinionibus, fiunt rei sanguinis piorum, quos papa persequitur, laedunt gloriam Dei et impediunt salutem ecclesiae, quia confirmant errores et flagitia ad omnem posteritatem.

De Potestate et Iurisdictione Episcoporum.

60] Evangelium tribuit his, qui praesunt ecclesiis, mandatum docendi evangelii, [R. 352] remittendi peccata, administrandi sacramenta, praeterea iurisdictionem, videlicet mandatum excommunicandi eos, quorum nota sunt crimina, et resipiscentes rursum absolvendi.

61] Ac omnium confessione, etiam adversariorum, liquet hanc potestatem iure divino communem esse omnibus, qui praesunt ecclesiis, sive vocentur pastores sive presbyteri sive [62] episcopi. Ideoque Hieronymus aperte docet in literis apostolicis, omnes, qui praesunt ecclesiis, et episcopos et presbyteros esse, et citat ex Tito [Tit. 1, 5 sq.]: Propterea te reliqui in Creta, ut constituas presbyteros per civitates. Et deinde addit: Oportet episco-

Und im Fall, daß der Papst gleich ein Konzilium halten wollte, wie kann der Kirche wider solche Stülde geholfen werden, so der Papst nicht leiden will, daß man etwas wider ihn [be]schließe, oder andere, denn so ihm zuvor durch schredliche Eidespflichten, auch Gottes Wort unausgenommen, zugetan, in Kirchensachen richten sollen?

Weil aber die Urtheile in Konzilien der Kirche und nicht des Papstes Urtheile sind, will es je den Königen und Fürsten gehören, daß sie dem Papst solchen Mutwillen nicht einräumen, sondern schaffen, daß der Kirche die Macht zu richten nicht genommen und alles nach der Heiligen Schrift und Wort Gottes gerichtet werde. Und gleichwie die Christen alle andern Irrthümer des Papstes zu strafen schuldig sind, also sind sie auch schuldig, den Papst selbst zu strafen, wenn er stehen oder wehren will das rechte Urtheil und wahre Erkenntnis der Kirche.

Darum, obgleich der Papst aus göttlichen Rechten den Primat oder Oberkeit hätte, soll man ihm dennoch keinen Gehorsam leisten, weil er falsche Gottesdienste und eine andere Lehre wider das Evangelium erhalten will. Ja, man soll sich aus Not wider ihn als den rechten Antichrist setzen. Man sieht's je am Tage, was des Papstes Irrthümer und wie groß sie sind.

So sieht man auch die Wütere, welche er wider die frommen Christen vornimmt. So sieht Gottes Befehl und Wort da, daß wir Abgötterei, falsche Lehre und unbillige Wütere hüten sollen. Darum hat ein jeder frommer Christ wichtige, nötige und helle Ursachen genug, daß er dem Papst nicht Gehorsam leiste, und sind solche nötige Ursachen allen Christen ein großer Trost wider allerlei Schmach und Schande, die sie uns auflegen, daß wir Ärgernis geben, Zertrennung und Uneinigkeit anrichten.

Die es aber mit dem Papst halten und seine Lehre und falschen Gottesdienste verteidigen, die besetzen sich mit Abgötterei und gotteslästerlicher Lehre und laden auf sich alles Blut der frommen Christen, die der Papst und die Seinen verfolgen; die verhindern auch Gottes Ehre und der Kirche Seligkeit, weil sie solche Irrthümer und Laster vor aller Welt und allen Nachkommen zu Schaden verteidigen.

Von der Bischöfe Gewalt und Jurisdiction.

In unserer Confession und Apologia haben wir ingemein erzählt, was von Kirchengewalt zu sagen gemeint ist. Denn das Evangelium gebet [gebietet] denen, so den Kirchen sollen vorstehen, daß sie das Evangelium predigen, Sünden vergeben und Sakramente reichen sollen. Und über das gibt es ihnen die Jurisdiction, daß man die, so in öffentlichen Lasten liegen, bannen, und die sich bessern wollen, entbinden und absolvieren soll.

Nun muß es jedermann, auch unsere Widersacher, bekennen, daß diesen Befehl zugleich alle haben, die den Kirchen vorstehen, sie heißen gleich pastores oder presbyteri oder Bischöfe. Darum spricht auch Hieronymus mit hellen Worten, daß episcopi und presbyteri nicht unterschieden sind; sondern daß alle Pfarrherren zugleich Bischöfe und Priester sind, und allegiert den Text Pauli ad Tit. 1, da er zu Titos schreibt: Ich ließ dich dergleichen zu Kreta, daß du bestellest die Städte hin

And even though the Pope should hold Synods [a Council], how can the Church be healed if the Pope suffers nothing to be decreed contrary to his will, if he allows no one to express his opinion except his adherents, whom he has bound by dreadful oaths and curses to the defense of his tyranny and wickedness without any exception concerning God's Word [not even the Word of God being excepted]?

But since the decisions of Synods are the decisions of the Church, and not of the Popes, it is especially incumbent on kings to check the license of the Popes [not allow such wantonness], and to act so that the power of judging and decreeing from the Word of God is not wrested from the Church. And as the rest of the Christians must censure all other errors of the Pope, so they must also rebuke the Pope when he evades and impedes the true investigation and true decision of the Church.

Therefore, even though the bishop of Rome had the primacy by divine right, yet since he defends godless services and doctrine conflicting with the Gospel, obedience is not due him; yea, it is necessary to resist him as Antichrist. The errors of the Pope are manifest and not trifling.

Manifest also is the cruelty [against godly Christians] which he exercises. And it is clear that it is God's command that we flee idolatry, godless doctrine, and unjust cruelty. On this account all the godly have great, compelling, and manifest reasons for not obeying the Pope. And these compelling reasons comfort the godly against all the reproaches which are usually cast against them concerning offenses, schism, and discord [which they are said to cause].

But those who agree with the Pope, and defend his doctrine and [false] services, defile themselves with idolatry and blasphemous opinions, become guilty of the blood of the godly, whom the Pope [and his adherents] persecutes, detract from the glory of God, and hinder the welfare of the Church, because they strengthen errors and crimes to all posterity [in the sight of all the world and to the injury of all descendants].

[In our Confession and the Apology we have in general recounted what we have had to say concerning ecclesiastical power. For] The Gospel assigns to those who preside over churches the command to teach the Gospel, to remit sins, to administer the Sacraments, and besides jurisdiction, namely, the command to excommunicate those whose crimes are known, and again to absolve those who repent.

And by the confession of all, even of the adversaries, it is clear that this power by divine right is common to all who preside over churches, whether they are called pastors, or elders, or bishops. And accordingly Jerome openly teaches in the apostolic letters that all who preside over churches are both bishops and elders, and cites from Titus 1, 5 f.: For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou pum esse unius uxoris virum. Item Petrus et Iohannes vocant se presbyteros [1 Petr. 5, 1; 2 Joh. 1]. Et deinde addit: Quod autem postea unus electus est, qui ceteris praeponeretur, in remedium schismatis factum est, ne unusquisque ad se trahens ecclesiam Christi rumperet. Nam et Alexandrias a Marco Evangelista usque ad Esdras [Heraciam] et Dionysium episcopos presbyteri semper ea se unum eligebant et in excelso loco collocabant, quem episcopum nominabant, quomodo si exercitus imperatorem sibi faciat. Diaconi autem eligant ea se, quem industrius noverint et archidiaconum nuncupent. Quid enim facit episcopus excepta ordinatione, quod presbyter non facit?*

63] Docet igitur Hieronymus, humana auctoritate distinctos gradus esse episcopi et presbyteri seu pastoris. Idque res ipsa loquitur, quia potestas est eadem, quam supra 64] dixit. Sed una res postea fecit discrimen episcoporum et pastorum, videlicet ordinatio, quia institutum est, ut unus episcopus ordinaret ministros in pluribus ecclesiis.

66] Itaque quum episcopi ordinarii sunt hostes ecclesiae aut nolunt impertire ordinationem, ecclesiae retinent ius suum.

67] Nam ubicunque est ecclesia, ibi [R. 353] est ius administrandi evangelii. Quare necesse est ecclesiam retinere ius vocandi, eligendi et ordinandi ministros. Et hoc ius est donum proprie datum ecclesiae, quod nulla humana auctoritas ecclesiae eripere potest, sicut et Paulus testatur ad Ephesios [4, 8], quum ait: Ascendit, dedit dona hominibus. Et numerat inter dona propria ecclesiae pastores et doctores et addit, dari tales ad ministerium, ad aedificationem corporis Christi. Ubi est igitur vera ecclesia, ibi necesse est esse ius eligendi et ordinandi ministros. Sicut in casu necessitatis absolvit etiam laicus et fit minister ac pastor alterius; sicut narrat Augustinus historiam de duobus Christianis in navi, quorum alter baptizaverit καθ' ὅν μόνον, et is baptizatus deinde absolverit alterum.

68] Huc pertinent sententiae Christi, quae testantur claves ecclesiae datas esse, non tantum certis personis [Matth. 18, 20]: Ubique erunt duo vel tres congregati in nomine meo etc.

und her mit Priestern“, und nennt solche hernach Bischöfe: „Es soll ein Bischof eines Weibes Mann sein.“ So nennen sich selbst Petrus und Johannes presbyteros oder Priester. Danach sagt Hieronymus weiter: „Daß aber einer allein erwählt wird, der andere unter ihm habe, ist geschehen, daß man damit die [der] Zertrennung wehrte, daß nicht einer hier, der andere dort eine Kirche an sich zöge, und die Gemeinde also zerrissen würde. Denn zu Alexandria“, sagt er, „von Marko dem Evangelisten an bis auf Esdras [Heraciam] und Dionysium, haben allezeit die Presbyteri einen aus ihnen [sich] erwählt und höher gehalten und episcopum (einen Bischof) genannt, gleichwie ein Kriegsherr einen zum Hauptmann erwählt; wie auch die Diaconi einen aus ihnen [sich], der geschickt dazu ist, wählen und Archidiaconen nennen. Denn, sage mir, was tut ein Bischof mehr denn ein jeglicher Presbyter, ohne daß er andere zum Kirchenamt ordnet“ usw.?

Hier lehrt Hieronymus, daß solcher Unterschied der Bischöfe und Pfarrherren allein aus menschlicher Ordnung gekommen sei, wie man denn auch im Wert sieht. Denn das Amt und Befehl ist gar einerlei, und hat hernach allein die ordination den Unterschied zwischen Bischöfen und Pfarrherren gemacht. Denn so hat man's danach geordnet, daß ein Bischof auch in andern Kirchen Leute zum Predigtamt ordnete.

Weil aber nach göttlichem Recht kein Unterschied ist zwischen Bischöfen und Pastoren oder Pfarrherren, [so] ist's ohne Zweifel, wenn ein Pfarrherr in seiner Kirche etliche tüchtige Personen zu den Kirchendüngern ordnet, daß solche ordination nach göttlichen Rechten kräftig und recht ist.

Darum, weil doch die verordneten Bischöfe das Evangelium verfolgen und tüchtige Personen zu ordinieren sich weigern, hat eine jegliche Kirche in diesem Fall gut Zug und Recht, ihr selbst Kirchendiener zu ordinieren.

Denn wo die Kirche ist, da ist je der Befehl, das Evangelium zu predigen. Darum müssen die Kirchen die Gewalt behalten, daß sie Kirchendiener fordern, wählen und ordinieren. Und solche Gewalt ist ein Geschenk, welches der Kirche eigentlich von Gott gegeben und von keiner menschlichen Gewalt der Kirche kann genommen werden, wie St. Paulus zeugt Eph. 4, da er sagt: „Er ist in die Höhe gefahren und hat Gaben gegeben den Menschen.“ Und unter solchen Gaben, die der Kirche eigen sind, zählt er Pfarrherren und Lehrer“ und hängt daran, daß solche gegeben werden „zur Erbauung des Leibes Christi“. Darum folgt, wo eine rechte Kirche ist, daß da auch die Macht sei, Kirchendiener zu wählen und [zu] ordinieren. Wie denn in der Not auch ein schlechter [gewöhnlicher] Laie einen andern absolvieren und sein Pfarrherr werden kann, wie St. Augustin eine Historie schreibt, daß zwei Christen in einem Schiffe beisammen gewesen, deren einer den andern getauft und danach von ihm absolviert sei.

Hierher gehören die Sprüche Christi, welche zeugen, daß die Schlüssel der ganzen Kirche und nicht etlichen [be]sonderen Personen gegeben sind, wie der Text sagt: „Wo zwei oder drei in meinem Namen versammelt sind, bin ich mitten unter ihnen“ usw.

Zum letzten wird solches auch durch den Spruch Petri bekräftigt, da er spricht: „Ihr seid das königliche Priestertum.“ Diese Worte betreffen shouldest ordain elders in every city [and afterwards calls these persons bishops]. Then he adds: A bishop must be the husband of one wife. Likewise Peter and John call themselves elders [or priests], 1 Pet. 5, 1; 2 John 1. And he then adds: But that afterwards one was chosen to be placed over the rest, this was done as a remedy for schism, lest each one by attracting [a congregation here or there] to himself might rend the Church of Christ. For at Alexandria, from Mark the evangelist to the bishops Heracles and Dionysius, the elders always elected one from among themselves, and placed him in a higher station, whom they called bishop; just as an army would make a commander for itself. The deacons, moreover, may elect from among themselves one whom they know to be active, and name him archdeacon. For with the exception of ordination, what does the bishop that the elder does not?

Jerome, therefore, teaches that it is by human authority that the grades of bishop and elder or pastor are distinct. And the subject itself declares this, because the power [the office and command] is the same, as he has said above. But one matter afterwards made a distinction between bishops and pastors, namely, ordination, because it was [so] arranged that one bishop should ordain ministers in a number of churches.

But since by divine authority the grades of bishop and pastor are not diverse, it is manifest that ordination administered by a pastor in his own church is valid by divine law [if a pastor in his own church ordains certain suitable persons to the ministry, such ordination is, according to divine law, undoubtedly effective and right].

Therefore, when the regular bishops become enemies of the Church, or are unwilling to administer ordination, the churches retain their own right. [Because the regular bishops persecute the Gospel and refuse to ordain suitable persons, every church has in this case full authority to ordain its own ministers.]

For wherever the Church is, there is the authority [command] to administer the Gospel. Therefore it is necessary for the Church to retain the authority to call, elect, and ordain ministers. And this authority is a gift which in reality is given to the Church, which no human power can wrest from the Church, as Paul also testifies to the Ephesians, 4, 8, when he says: He ascended, He gave gifts to men. And he enumerates among the gifts specially belonging to the Church pastors and teachers, and adds that such are given for the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. Hence, wherever there is a true church, the right to elect and ordain ministers necessarily exists. Just as in a case of necessity even a layman absolves, and becomes the minister and pastor of another; as Augustine narrates the story of two Christians in a ship, one of whom baptized the catechumen, who after Baptism then absolved the baptizer.

Here belong the statements of Christ which testify that the keys have been given to the Church, and not merely to certain persons, Matt. 18, 20: Where two or three are gathered together in My name, etc.

Lastly, the statement of Peter also confirms this, 1 Ep. 2, 9: Ye are a royal priesthood.

nent, quae quum sola habeat sacerdotium, certe habet ius eligendi et ordinandi ministros.

70] Idque etiam communissima ecclesiae consuetudo testatur. Nam olim populus eligebat pastores et episcopos. Deinde accedebat episcopus seu eius ecclesiae seu vicinus, qui confirmabat electum impositione manuum, nec aliud fuit ordinatio nisi talis comprobatio. 71] Postea accesserunt novae caeremoniae, quales multas describit Dionysius. Sed est auctor novus et fictitius, quisquis est, sicut et Clementis scripta sunt supposititia. Deinde recentiores addiderunt: Do tibi potestatem sacrificandi pro vivis et mortuis. Sed ne illud quidem apud Dionysium est.

soll man wissen, daß die gottlose Lehre und Tyrannei Paulus, daß alle Bischöfe, so entweder selbst unrecht lehren oder unrechte Lehre und falschen Gottesdienst verteidigen, für sträfliche Leute sollen gehalten werden.

73] Diximus de ordinatione, quae una, ut Hieronymus ait, discernbat episcopos a reliquis presbyteris. Itaque nulla disputatione opus est de ceteris episcoporum officiis. Nec vero opus est dicere de confirmatione, item de campanarum consecratione, quae prope modum sola retinuerunt. De iurisdictione aliquid dicendum est.

74] Constat iurisdictionem illam communem excommunicandi reos manifestorum criminum pertinere ad omnes pastores. Hanc tyrannice ad se solos transtulerunt et ad quae-stum contulerunt. Constat enim officiales, ut vocantur, non toleranda licentia usos esse, et vel avaritia vel propter alias cupiditates vexasse homines et excommunicasse sine ullo ordine iudiciorum. Quae est autem tyrannis, officiales in civitatibus habere potestatem suo arbitratu, sine ordine iudiciorum damnandi 75] et excommunicandi homines? Et hac potestate qualibus in rebus abusi sunt, videlicet non in puniendis veris delictis, sed in ieiuniis aut feriis violatis aut similibus nugis! Tantum adulteria interdum puniebant; et in hac re saepe vexabant innocentes et honestos homines. Porro quum hoc crimen sit gravissimum, certe sine ordine iudiciali nemo damnandus est.

76] Quum igitur hanc iurisdictionem episcopi tyrannice ad se solos transtulerint eaque turpiter abusi sint, nihil opus est propter

eigentlich die rechte Kirche, welche, weil sie allein das Priestertum hat, muß sie auch die Macht haben, Kirchendiener zu wählen und [zu] ordinieren.

Solches zeugt auch der gemeine Brauch der Kirche. Denn vorzeiten wählte das Volk Pfarrherren und Bischöfe; dazu kam der Bischof, am selben Ort oder in der Nähe geessen, und bestätigte den gewählten Bischof durch Auflegen der Hände, und ist dazumal die ordinatio nichts anderes gewesen denn solche Bestätigung. Danach sind andere Ceremonien mehr dazugekommen, wie Dionysius deren etliche erzählt. Aber dasselbe Buch Dionysii ist ein neu Gedicht unter falschem Titel, wie auch das Buch Clementis einen falschen Titel hat und lange nach Elemente von einem bösen Muben gemacht ist. Danach ist auf die leht [ist zuletzt] auch dies hinangehängt worden, daß der Bischof gesagt hat zu denen, die er weihte: „Ich gebe dir Macht, zu opfern für die Lebendigen und die Toten“; aber das steht auch im Dionysio nicht.

Hieraus sieht man, daß die Kirche Macht hat, Kirchendiener zu wählen und [zu] ordinieren. Darum menn die Bischöfe entweder Acker sind oder tüchtige Personen nicht wollen ordinieren, sind die Kirchen vor Gott nach göttlichem Recht schuldig, ihnen selbst Pfarrherren und Kirchendiener zu ordinieren. Ob man nun dies wollte eine Unordnung oder Zertrennung heißen, [so] der Bischöfe daran schuldig ist. Denn so gebietet

Bissher haben wir von der Ordination gesagt, welche allein etwa [ehemals] Unterschied gemacht hat zwischen Bischöfen und den Priestern, wie Hieronymus spricht. Darum ist nicht not, von übrigen bischöflichen Eimern viel zu disputieren, man wollte denn von der Firmelung, Glockentaufen und anderm solchen Gaukelspiel reden, welches fast allein die Bischöfe sonderlich gebraucht; aber von der Jurisdiction ist noch zu handeln.

Dies ist gewiß, daß die gemeine iurdictio, die, so in öffentlichen Lasten liegen, zu bannen, alle Pfarrherren haben sollen, und daß die Bischöfe als Tyrannen sie zu sich gezogen und zu ihrem Genieß schändlich mißbraucht haben. Denn die Offiziale haben unleidlichen Mutwillen damit getrieben und die Leute entweder aus Geiz oder anderm Mutwillen wohl geplagt und ohne alles vor[her]gehendes rechtliches Erkenntnis gebannt. Was ist aber dies für eine Tyrannei, daß ein Offizial in einer Stadt die Macht soll haben, allein seinem Mutwillen nach ohne rechtliches Erkenntnis die Leute mit dem Bann so zu plagen und zu zwingen usw.? Nun haben sie solchen Zwang in allerlei Sachen gebraucht und nicht allein die rechten Laster damit nicht gestraft, da der Bann auf folgen sollte, sondern auch in andern, geringen Stücken, wo man nicht recht gestraft oder gefeiert hat, ohne daß sie zuweilen den Ehebruch gestraft und dann auch oft unschuldige Leute geschmäht und infamiert haben. Denn weil solche Beschuldigung sehr wichtig und schwer ist, soll je ohne rechtliches und ordentliches Erkenntnis in dem Fall niemand verdammt werden.

Weil nun die Bischöfe solche Jurisdiction als Tyrannen an sich gebracht und schändlich mißbraucht haben, dazu sonst gute Ursachen sind,

These words pertain to the true Church, which certainly has the right to elect and ordain ministers since it alone has the priesthood.

And this also a most common custom of the Church testifies. For formerly the people elected pastors and bishops. Then came a bishop, either of that church or a neighboring one, who confirmed the one elected by the laying on of hands; and ordination was nothing else than such a ratification. Afterwards new ceremonies were added, many of which Dionysius describes. But he is a recent and fictitious author, whoever he may be [this book of Dionysius is a new fiction under a false title], just as the writings of Clement also are spurious [have a false title and have been manufactured by a wicked scoundrel long after Clement]. Then more modern writers added [that the bishop said to those whom he was ordaining]: I give thee the power to sacrifice for the living and the dead. But not even this is in Dionysius.

From all these things it is clear that the Church retains the right to elect and ordain ministers. And the wickedness and tyranny of bishops afford cause for schism and discord [therefore, if the bishops either are heretics, or will not ordain suitable persons, the churches are in duty bound before God, according to divine law, to ordain for themselves pastors and ministers. Even though this be now called an irregularity or schism, it should be known that the godless doctrine and tyranny of the bishops is chargeable with it], because Paul, Gal. 1, 7 f., enjoins that bishops who teach and defend a godless doctrine and godless services should be regarded as accursed.

We have spoken of ordination, which alone, as Jerome says, distinguished bishops from other elders. Therefore there is need of no discussion concerning the other duties of bishops. Nor is it indeed necessary to speak of confirmation, nor of the consecration of bells [nor other tomfoolery of this kind], which are almost the only things which they have retained. Something must be said concerning jurisdiction.

It is certain that the common jurisdiction of excommunicating those guilty of manifest crimes belongs to all pastors. This they have tyrannically transferred to themselves alone, and have applied it to the acquisition of gain. For it is certain that the officials, as they are called, employed a license not to be tolerated, and either on account of avarice or because of other wanton desires tormented men and excommunicated them without any due process of law. But what tyranny is it for the officials in the states to have arbitrary power to condemn and excommunicate men without due process of law! And in what kind of affairs did they abuse this power? Indeed, not in punishing true offenses, but in regard to the violation of fasts or festivals, or like trifles! Only, they sometimes punished adulteries; and in this matter they often vexed [abused and defamed] innocent and honorable men. Besides, since this is a most grievous offense, nobody certainly is to be condemned without due process of law.

Since, therefore, bishops have tyrannically transferred this jurisdiction to themselves alone, and have basely abused it, there is no need, because of this jurisdiction, to obey hanc iurisdictionem obedire episcopis. Sed quum sint iustae causae, cur non obtemperemus, rectum est et hanc iurisdictionem reddere piis pastoribus et curare, ut legitime exerceatur ad morum emendationem et gloriam Dei.

77) Reliqua est iurdictio in iis causis, quae iure canonico ad forum, ut vocant, ecclesiasticum pertinent, ac praecipue in [R. 355] causis matrimonialibus. Haec quoque habent episcopi humano iure, et quidem non admodum veteri, sicut ex codice et novellis Iustiniani apparet iudicia matrimoniorum tunc fuisse apud magistratus. Et iure divino coguntur magistratus mundani haec iudicia exercere, si episcopi sint negligentes. Idem concedunt et canones. Quare etiam propter hanc iurisdictionem non necesse est obedire 78) episcopis. Et quidem quum leges quasdam condiderint iniustas de coniugiis et in suis iudiciis observent, etiam propter hanc causam opus est alia iudicia constitui. Quia traditiones de cognatione spirituali sunt iniustae. Iniusta etiam traditio est, quae prohibet coniugium personae innocenti post factum divortium. Etiam iniusta lex est, quae in genere omnes clandestinas et dolosas desponsationes contra ius parentum approbat. Est et iniusta lex de coelibatu sacerdotum. Sunt et alii laquei conscientiarum in eorum legibus, quos omnes recitare nihil attinet. Illud satis est recitasse, quod multae sunt iniustae leges papae de negotiis matrimonialibus, propter quas magistratus debent alia iudicia constituere.

in Ehefachen viel unrichtes und unbilliges Dings vom Papst ist geboten worden, daraus weltliche Obrigkeit Ursache genug hat, solche Gerichte für sich selbst anders zu bestellen.

79) Quum igitur episcopi, qui sunt addicti papae, defendant impiam doctrinam et impios cultus, nec ordinent pios doctores, imo adiuvent saevitiam papae, praeterea iurisdictionem eripuerint pastoribus et hanc tantum tyrannice exerceant, postremo quum in causis matrimonialibus multas iniustas leges observent, satis multae et necessariae causae sunt, quare ecclesiae non agnoscant eos tamquam episcopos.

80) Ipsi autem meminerint opes datas esse episcopis tamquam eleemosynas propter administrationem et utilitatem ecclesiarum, sicut inquit regula: Beneficium datur propter officium. Quare non possunt bona conscientia possidere illas eleemosynas et ecclesiam interim defraudant, cui opus est illis facultatibus ad ministros alendos et iuvanda studia et suppeditandum certis pauperibus et constituenda iudicia, praesertim matrimonialia. 81) Tanta enim varietas et magnitudo est controversiarum matrimonialium, ut his opus sit peculiari foro, ad quod constituendum opus est ecclesiae facultatibus. [R. 356] 82) Petrus [2. ep. 2, 13] praedixit futuros impios episcopos, qui eleemosynas ecclesiarum abuterentur ad luxum, neglecto ministerio. Sciant ergo illi, qui ecclesiam defraudant, etiam eius sceleris poenas Deo se daturos esse.

ihnen nicht zu gehorchen, so ist's recht, daß man diese geraubte Jurisdiction auch wieder von ihnen nehme und sie den Pfarrherren, welchen sie aus Christi Befehl gehört, zustelle und trachte, daß sie ordentlichweise den Leuten zur Besserung des Lebens und zur Mehrung der Ehre Gottes gebraucht werde.

Danach ist eine iurdictio in den Sachen, welche nach päpstlichem Recht in das forum ecclesiasticum oder Kirchengerecht gehören, wie sonderlich die Ehefachen sind. Solche Jurisdiction haben die Bischöfe auch nur aus menschlicher Ordnung an sich gebracht, die dennoch nicht sehr alt ist, wie man ex codice und novellis Justiniani sieht, daß die Ehefachen dazumal gar von weltlicher Obrigkeit gehandelt sind, und ist weltliche Obrigkeit schuldig, die Ehefachen zu richten, besonders, wo die Bischöfe unrecht richten oder nachlässig sind, wie auch die Canones zeugen. Darum ist man auch solcher Jurisdiction halben den Bischöfen keinen Gehorsam schuldig. Und dieweil sie etliche unbillige Satzungen von Ehefachen gemacht und in Gerichten, die sie besetzen, brauchen, ist weltliche Obrigkeit auch dieser Ursache halben schuldig, solche Gerichte anders zu bestellen. Denn je das Verbot von der Ehe zwischen Gebattern unrecht ist; so ist dies auch unrecht, daß, wo zwei geschieden werden, der unschuldige Teil nicht wiederum heiraten soll; item, daß ingemein alle Heiraten, so heimlich und mit Betrug, ohne der Eltern Vorwissen und Bewilligung geschehen, gelten und kräftig sein sollen. Item, so ist das Verbot von der Priesterche auch unrecht. Dergleichen sind in ihren Satzungen andere Stücke mehr, damit die Gewissen verwirrt und beschwert sind worden, die ohne Not ist, hier alle zu erzählen, und ist an dem genug, daß man weiß, daß Papst ist geboten worden, daraus weltliche Obrigkeit anders zu bestellen.

Weil denn nun die Bischöfe, so dem Papst sind zugetan, gottlose Lehre und falsche Gottesdienste mit Gewalt verteidigen und fromme Prediger nicht ordinieren wollen, sondern helfen dem Papst dieselben ermorden und darüber den Pfarrherren die Jurisdiction entzogen und allein wie Tyrannen zu ihrem Nutz je gebraucht haben, zum letzten weil sie auch in Ehefachen so unbillig und unrecht handeln, [so] haben die Kirchen großer und notwendiger Ursachen genug, daß sie solche nicht als Bischöfe [an]erkennen sollen.

Sie aber, die Bischöfe, sollen bedenken, daß ihre Güter und Einkommen gestiftet sind als Almosen, daß sie der Kirche dienen und ihr Amt desto statlicher ausrichten mögen, wie die regula heißt: Beneficium datur propter officium. Darum können sie solche Almosen mit gutem Gewissen nicht gebrauchen und berauben damit die Kirche, welche solche Güter bedarf zur Unterhaltung der Kirchendiener und gelehrte Leute aufzuziehen und etliche Arme zu versorgen, und sonderlich zur Bestellung der Ehegerichte. Denn da tragen sich so mancherlei und seltsame Fälle zu, daß es wohl eines eigenen Gerichts bedürfte; solches aber kann ohne Hilfe derselben Güter nicht bestellt werden. St. Peter spricht: „Es werden die falschen Bischöfe der Kirche Güter und Almosen zu ihrer Wollust brauchen und das Amt verlassen.“ Dieweil nun der Heilige Geist denselben dabei schrecklich dräuet, sollen die Bischöfe wissen, daß sie auch für diesen Raub Gott müssen Rechenschaft geben.

bishops. But since there are just reasons why we do not obey, it is right also to restore this jurisdiction to godly pastors [to whom, by Christ's command, it belongs], and to see to it that it is legitimately exercised for the reformation of morals and the glory of God.

There remains the jurisdiction in those cases which, according to canonical law, pertain to the ecclesiastical court, as they call it, and especially in cases of matrimony. This, too, the bishops have only by human right, and that, not a very old one, as appears from the Codes and Novellae of Justinian that decisions concerning marriage at that time belonged to the magistrates. And by divine right worldly magistrates are compelled to make these decisions if the bishops [judge unjustly or] are negligent. The canons also concede the same. Therefore, also on account of this jurisdiction it is not necessary to obey bishops. And, indeed, since they have framed certain unjust laws concerning marriages, and observe them in their courts, there is need also for this reason to establish other courts. For the traditions concerning spiritual relationship [the prohibition of marriage between sponsors] are unjust. Unjust also is the tradition which forbids an innocent person to marry after divorce. Unjust also is the law which in general approves all clandestine and underhanded betrothals in violation of the right of parents. Unjust also is the law concerning the celibacy of priests. There are also other snares of consciences in their laws, to recite all of which is of no profit. It is sufficient to have recited this, that there are many unjust laws of the Pope concerning matrimonial subjects on account of which the magistrates ought to establish other courts.

Since, therefore, the bishops, who are devoted to the Pope, defend godless doctrine and godless services, and do not ordain godly teachers, yea, aid the cruelty of the Pope, and, besides, have wrested the jurisdiction from pastors, and exercise it only tyrannically [for their own profit]; and lastly, since in matrimonial cases they observe many unjust laws, there are reasons sufficiently numerous and necessary why the churches should not recognize these as bishops.

But they themselves should remember that riches [estates and revenues] have been given to bishops as alms for the administration and advantage of the churches [that they may serve the Church, and perform their office the more efficiently], as the rule says: The benefice is given because of the office. Therefore they cannot with a good conscience possess these alms, and meanwhile defraud the Church, which has need of these means for supporting ministers, and aiding studies [educating learned men], and caring for the poor, and establishing courts, especially matrimonial. For so great is the variety and extent of matrimonial controversies that there is need of a special tribunal for these, and for establishing this, the endowments of the Church are needed. Peter predicted, 2 Ep.

2, 13, that there would be godless bishops, who would abuse the alms of the Church for luxury and neglect the ministry. Therefore [since the Holy Spirit in that connection utters dire threats] let those who defraud the Church know that they will pay God the penalty for this crime.

According to the command of the most illustrious princes and of the orders and states professing the doctrine of the Gospel, we have reread the articles of the Confession presented to the Emperor in the Assembly at Augsburg, and by the favor of God all the preachers who have been present in this Assembly at Smalcald harmoniously declare that they believe and teach in their churches according to the articles of the Confession and Apology. Ambrose Blaurer.

I have read, and again and again reread, the Confession and Apology presented at Augsburg by the Most Illustrious Prince, the Elector of Saxony, and by the other princes and estates of the Roman Empire, to his Imperial Majesty. I have also read the Formula of Concord concerning the Sacrament, made at Wittenberg with Dr. Bucer and others. I have also read the articles written at the Assembly at Smalcald in the German language by Dr. Martin Luther, our most revered preceptor, and the tract concerning the Papacy and the Power and Jurisdiction of Bishops. And in my humble opinion I judge that all these agree with Holy Scripture, and with the belief of the true and genuine catholic Church. But although in so great a number of most learned men who have now assembled at Smalcald I acknowledge that I am of all the least, yet, as I am not permitted to await the end of the assembly, I ask you, most renowned man, Dr. John Bugenhagen, most revered Father in Christ, that your courtesy may add my name, if it be necessary, to all that I have above mentioned. For I testify in this my own handwriting that I thus hold, confess, and constantly will teach, through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Vorrede D. Martini Lutheri.

Martinus Luther allen treuen, frommen Pfarrherren und Predigern Gnade, Barmherzigkeit und Friede in Jesu Christo, unserm Herrn!

Diesen Katechismus oder Christliche Lehre in solche kleine, schlechte [schlichte], einfältige Form zu stellen, hat mich gezwungen und gedrungen die klägliche, elende Not, so ich neulich erfahren habe, da ich auch ein Visitor war. Hilf, lieber Gott! wie manchen Jammer habe ich gesehen, daß der gemeine Mann doch so gar nichts weiß von der christlichen Lehre, sonderlich auf den Dörfern, und leider viel Pfarrherren fast ungelehrt und unthätig sind zu lehren, und sollen doch alle Christen heißen, getauft sein und der heiligen Sacramente genießen, können weder Vaterunser noch den Glauben oder zehn Gebote, leben dahin wie das liebe Vieh und unvernünftige Säue, und nun das Evangelium [ge]kommen ist, dennoch kein gelehrt [* gelernt] haben, aller Freiheit meisterlich zu mißbrauchen!

O ihr Bischöfe, was wollt ihr doch Christo immermehr antworten, daß ihr das Volk so schändlich habt lassen hingehen und euer Amt nicht einen Augenblick je beweiset [beweisen]? Daß euch alles Unglück fliehe! Verbietet [gebihtet] einerlei Gestalt und treibt auf eure Menschenetze, fragt aber diemeil nichts danach, ob sie das Vaterunser, Glauben, zehn Gebote oder einiges Gottes Wort können. Ach und wehe über euren Hals ewiglich!

tantum speciem sacramenti ac vestras traditiones urgetis: hoc prorsus contemnitis et negligitis, an illi, qui vestrae fidei et curae commendati sunt, Orationem Dominicam, Symbolum Apostolicum aut Decalogum teneant necne. Vae, vae vobis!

Darum bitte ich um Gottes willen euch alle, meine lieben Herren und Brüder, so Pfarrherren oder Prediger sind, wollet euch eures Amts von Herzen annehmen, euch erbarmen über euer Volk, das euch befohlen ist, und uns helfen den Katechismus in die Leute, sonderlich in das junge Volk, bringen, und welche es nicht besser vermögen, diese Tafeln und Formen vor sich nehmen und dem Volk von Wort zu Wort vorbilden; und nämlich also:

Auß erste, daß der Prediger vor allen Dingen sich hüte und meide mancherlei oder anderlei Text und Form der zehn Gebote, [des] Vaterunsers, Glaubens, der Sacramente usw., sondern nehme einerlei Form vor sich, darauf er bleibe und dieselbe immer treibe, ein Jahr wie das andere. Denn das junge und alberne [schlichte, einfältige] Volk muß man mit einerlei gewissem Text und Form lehren; sonst werden sie gar leicht irre, wenn man heute sonst und über ein Jahr so lehrt, als wollte man es bessern, und wird damit alle Mühe und Arbeit verloren.

Das haben die lieben Väter auch wohl gesehen, die das Vaterunser, Glauben, zehn Gebote alle

Preface of Dr. Martin Luther.

Martin Luther to All Faithful and Godly Pastors and Preachers: Grace, Mercy, and Peace in Jesus Christ, our Lord.

The deplorable, miserable condition which I discovered lately when I, too, was a visitor, has forced and urged me to prepare [publish] this Catechism, or Christian doctrine, in this small, plain, simple form. Mercy! Good God! what manifold misery I beheld! The common people, especially in the villages, have no knowledge whatever of Christian doctrine, and, alas! many pastors are altogether incapable and incompetent to teach [so much so, that one is ashamed to speak of it]. Nevertheless, all maintain that they are Christians, have been baptized and receive the [common] holy Sacraments. Yet they [do not understand and] cannot [even] recite either the Lord's Prayer, or the Creed, or the Ten Commandments; they live like dumb brutes and irrational hogs; and yet, now that the Gospel has come, they have nicely learned to abuse all liberty like experts.

O ye bishops! [to whom this charge has been committed by God,] what will ye ever answer to Christ for having so shamefully neglected the people and never for a moment discharged your office? [You are the persons to whom alone this ruin of the Christian religion is due. You have permitted men to err so shamefully; yours is the guilt; for you have ever done anything rather than what your office required you to do.] May all misfortune flee you! [I do not wish at this place to invoke evil on your heads.] You command the Sacrament in one form [but is not this the highest ungodliness coupled with the greatest impudence that you are insisting on the administration of the Sacrament in one form only, and on your traditions] and insist on your human laws, and yet at the same time you do not care in the least [while you are utterly without scruple and concern] whether the people know the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, the Ten Commandments, or any part of the Word of God. Woe, woe, unto you forever!

Therefore I entreat [and adjure] you all for God's sake, my dear sirs and brethren, who are pastors or preachers, to devote yourselves heartily to your office, to have pity on the people who are entrusted to you, and to help us inculcate the Catechism upon the people, and especially upon the young. And let those of you who cannot do better [If any of you are so unskilled that you have absolutely no knowledge of these matters, let them not be ashamed to] take these tables and forms and impress them, word for word, on the people, as follows: —

In the first place, let the preacher above all be careful to avoid many kinds of or various texts and forms of the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, the Sacraments, etc., but choose one form to which he adheres, and which he inculcates all the time, year after year. For [I give this advice, however, because I know that] young and simple people must be taught by uniform, settled texts and forms, otherwise they easily become confused when the teacher to-day teaches them thus, and in a year some other way, as if he wished to make improvements, and thus all effort and labor [which has been expended in teaching] is lost.

Also our blessed fathers understood this well; for they all used the same form of the auf eine Weise haben gebraucht. Darum sollen wir auch bei dem jungen und einfältigen Volk solche Stüde also lehren, daß wir nicht eine Silbe verrüden oder ein Jahr anders denn das andere vorhalten oder vorschreiben.

Darum erwähle dir, welche Form du willst, und bleibe dabei ewiglich. Wenn du aber bei den Gelehrten und Verständigen predigst, da magst du deine Kunst beweisen und diese Stüde so buntfraus machen und so meisterlich drehen, als du kannst. Aber bei dem jungen Volk bleibe auf einer gewissen ewigen Form und Weise und lehre sie für das allererste die [diese] Stüde, nämlich die zehn Gebote, Glauben, Vater unser usw. nach dem Text hin von Wort zu Wort, daß sie es auch so nachsagen können und auswendig lernen.

Welche es aber nicht lernen wollen, daß man denselben sage, wie sie Christum verleugnen und keine Christen sind, sollen auch nicht zu dem Sacrament gelassen werden, kein Kind aus der Taufe heben, auch kein Stüd der christlichen Freiheit [ge]brauchen, sondern slechts dem Papst und seinen Offizialen, dazu dem Teufel selbst heimgewiesen sein. Dazu sollen ihnen die Eltern und Hausherrn Essen und Trinken versagen und ihnen anzeigen, daß solche rohe Leute der Fürst aus dem Lande jagen wolle usw.

talibus hominibus victum, et pulchre quoque fecerint, si efferatis illis hominibus indicent, eam principis esse sententiam, ut in exilium aliquo delegentur et eiiciantur e patria.

Denn wiewohl man niemand zwingen kann noch soll zum Glauben, so soll man doch den Haufen dahin halten und treiben, daß sie wissen, was recht und unrecht ist bei denen, bei welchen sie wohnen, sich nähren und leben wollen. Denn wer in einer Stadt wohnen will, der soll das Stadtrecht wissen und halten, das er genießen will, Gott gebe, er glaube oder sei im Herzen für sich ein Schall oder Bube.

Zum andern: Wenn sie den Text wohl können, so lehre sie denn hernach auch den Verstand, daß sie wissen, was es gesagt sei, und nimm abermal vor dich dieser Tafeln Weise oder sonst eine kurze, einige Weise, welche du willst, und bleib dabei und verrüde sie mit keiner Silbe nicht, gleichwie vom Text jetzt gesagt ist, und nimm dir der Weise dazu. Denn es ist nicht not, daß du alle Stüde auf einmal vornehmest, sondern eins nach dem andern. Wenn sie das erste Gebot zuvor wohl verstehen, danach nimm das andere vor dich und so fortan, sonst werden sie überschüttet, daß sie teils wohl behalten.

iam exacte tenuerint, quidnam primum praeceptum postulet, tum ad secundum esse pergendum, ut sic omnia doceantur certo ordine; alias enim fiet, ut nimia copia obrutae et perturbatae mentes nihil prorsus retineant.

Zum dritten: Wenn du sie nun solchen kurzen Katechismus gelehrt hast, alsdann nimm den Großen Katechismus vor dich und gib ihnen auch reicheren und weiteren Verstand. Dasselbst streich ein jeglich Gebot, Bitte, Stüd aus mit seinen mancherlei Werken, Ruß, Frommen, [Ge]fahr

Orationis unam eandemque certis verbis descriptam formam in ecclesia esse. Illorum diligentiam nos imitari convenit, et danda opera est, ut simplicioribus et iunioribus sic illa proponamus, ut ne una quidem syllaba immutetur, quotiescunque tandem Catechismum doceas, et ut perpetuo sui similis sit tractatio.

9] Quamcunque igitur tibi delegeris praedicandi Catechismi formam, eam perpetuo retinebis neque unquam ab ea discedes. Alia autem ratio est, si in turba doctorum hominum evangelium doceas; ibi enim eruditionis tuae specimen edere potes, neque prohibeo, si apud illos tractationem varies et subinde alium atque alium vultum dicendo fingas. Apud simpliciores autem perpetuo eadem certis verbis descripta forma uteris. Et debet is primus esse labor, ut Decalogum, Symbolum, item Orationem Dominicam de verbo ad verbum nude et simplicissime doceas, ut eadem saepius audita ipsi quoque auditores referre discant.

11] Quodsi qui adeo religionem contemnunt, ut discere haec nolit, illi monendi sunt, quod Christum negent, et quod nihil minus sint quam Christiani. Atque illi neque admittendi sunt ad sacramentum altaris neque ad catechistarum officium, qui pueris baptizandis adsunt, et si Christianae libertatis iure uti velint, ubi eis est commodum, non est illud eis concedendum, sed potius ad papam atque eos, quos vocant officiales, et ad ipsum quoque Satanam sunt ablegandi. Parentum autem

13] Quamquam enim eis sentiam, ad fidem neminem vel posse vel debere cogi, hoc tamen omnino faciendum est, ut teneat vulgus, quid ius, quid item contra ius illorum sit, cum quibus vivit et suum quaerit victum. [R. 362] Hoc enim requiritur, ut quisque suae civitatis iura, quibus ceu privilegio quodam uti volet, norit et observet, sive credat vere, sive perditus aliquis sit nebulo.

14] Secundum: Cum simpliciores illi iam Catechismi verba bene annuerare didicerint, tradenda post quoque est eis explicatio, ut ea etiam intelligant. Potes autem vel hac nostra forma, quam hic praescriptam vides, vel alia

15] quadam uti. Sicut autem, ut ante monui, Catechismus nudus iidem semper verbis vulgo proponendus est, ita in expositione Catechismi cuperem perpetuo eandem tractationem sequendam, ne quidem immutata unica syllaba.

16] Sumes autem eam rem satis temporis; neque enim necesse est omnia simul proposuisse, sed sunt faciendi ordines, et in tractando alterum alteri rite convenit subiicere. Ut si

17] Tertio: Postquam hanc brevem Catechismi expositionem absolvisti, tum illam longiorem tractationem ingredieris, ut plenius omnia auditores intelligant. Ibi singula praecepta, singulas Symboli et Orationis Dominicae partes suis illustrabis coloribus, varia

Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments. Therefore we, too, should [imitate their diligence and be at pains to] teach the young and simple people these parts in such a way as not to change a syllable, or set them forth and repeat them one year differently than in another [no matter how often we teach the Catechism].

Hence, choose whatever form you please, and adhere to it forever. But when you preach in the presence of learned and intelligent men, you may exhibit your skill, and may present these parts in as varied and intricate ways and give them as masterly turns as you are able. But with the young people stick to one fixed, permanent form and manner, and teach them, first of all, these parts, namely, the Ten Commandments, the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, etc., according to the text, word for word, so that they, too, can repeat it in the same manner after you and commit it to memory.

But those who are unwilling to learn it should be told that they deny Christ and are no Christians, neither should they be admitted to the Sacrament, accepted as sponsors at baptism, nor exercise any part of Christian liberty, but should simply be turned back to the Pope and his officials, yea, to the devil himself. Moreover, their parents and employers should refuse them food and drink, and [they would also do well if they were to] notify them that the prince will drive such rude people from the country, etc.

For although we cannot and should not force any one to believe, yet we should insist and urge the people that they know what is right and wrong with those among whom they dwell and wish to make their living. For whoever desires to reside in a town must know and observe the town laws, the protection of which he wishes to enjoy, no matter whether he is a believer or at heart and in private a rogue or knave.

In the second place, after they have well learned the text, then teach them the sense also, so that they know what it means, and again choose the form of these tables, or some other brief uniform method, whichever you like, and adhere to it, and do not change a single syllable, as was just said regarding the text; and take your time to it. For it is not necessary that you take up all the parts at once, but one after the other. After they understand the First Commandment well, then take up the Second, and so on, otherwise they will be overwhelmed, so as not to be able to retain any well.

In the third place, after you have thus taught them this Short Catechism, then take up the Large Catechism, and give them also a richer and fuller knowledge. Here explain at large every commandment, [article,] petiund Schaden, wie du das alles reichlich findest in so viel Büchlein davon gemacht. Und insonderheit treibe das Gebot und Stüd am meisten, das bei deinem Volk am meisten Not leidet. Als: das siebente Gebot vom Stehlen mußt du bei Handwertern, Händlern, ja auch bei Bauern und Gefinde heftig treiben; denn bei solchen Leuten ist allerlei Untreue und Dieberei groß. Item, das vierte Gebot mußt du bei den Kindern und gemeinem Mann wohl treiben, daß sie stille, treu, gehorsam, friedsam sein, und immer viele Exempel aus der Schrift, da Gott solche Leute gestraft und gefegnet hat, einführen.

quantum praeceptum apud imperitum vulgus et minores natu potissimum urgere convenit, ut sint quieti, bona fide omnia agant, pareant magistratibus et parentibus, publicam pacem non perturbent. Sunt autem haec sacrarum literarum historiis illustranda, ubi Deus vel graves poenas a transgressoribus huius praecepti exegit, vel illorum, qui servarint, omnia coepta mirabiliter fortunavit.

Insonderheit treibe auch daselbst die Obrigkeit und Eltern, daß sie wohl regieren und Kinder ziehen zur Schule, mit Anzeigen, wie sie solches zu tun schuldig sind, und wo sie es nicht tun, welches eine verfluchte Sünde sie tun; denn sie stürzen und verwüsten damit beide Gottes und der Welt Reich, als die ärgsten Feinde beide Gottes und der Menschen. Und streich wohl aus, was für greulichen Schaden sie tun, wo sie nicht helfen Kinder ziehen zu Pfarrherren, Predigern, Schreibern usw., daß Gott sie schrecklich darum strafen wird; denn es ist hier not zu predigen; die Eltern und Obrigkeit sündigen jetzt hierin, daß [es] nicht zu sagen ist; der Teufel hat auch ein Graujames damit im Sinne.

calamitate carere potest, aliquando deligi possint. Hoc quoque addes, Deum gravissimas poenas pro illo peccato a parentibus expetiturum. Et sane haud scio, an sit alius locus, qui aequae merebatur tractari atque hic. Neque enim dici potest, quantum hac in parte a magistratibus et parentibus nostro saeculo peccetur. Non autem dubium est, quin id a Satana fiat eo consilio, ut in maximam calamitatem Germaniam coniciat.

Zuletzt, weil nun die Tyrannei des Papstes ab ist, so wollen sie nicht mehr zum Sakrament gehen und verachten's. Sie ist aber not zu treiben, doch mit diesem Bescheid: wir sollen niemand zum Glauben oder zum Sakrament zwingen, auch kein Gesetz noch Zeit noch Stätte [be]stimmen, aber also predigen, daß sie sich selbst, ohne unser Gesetz, bringen und gleich [gleichsam] uns Pfarrherren zwingen, das Sakrament zu reichen; welches tut man also, daß man ihnen sagt: Wer das Sakrament nicht sucht oder begehrt zum wenigsten einmal oder vier des Jahrs, da ist zu besorgen, daß er das Sakrament verachte und kein Christ sei, gleichwie der kein Christ ist, der das Evangelium nicht glaubt oder hört; denn Christus sprach nicht: Solches laßet oder solches verachtet, sondern: „Solches tut, sooft ihr's trinket“ usw. Er will es wahrlich getan und nicht allerdinge gelassen und verachtet haben. „Solches tut!“ spricht er.

audiant. Neque enim Christus, quum institueret sacramentum, dixit: „Hoc omittite vel contemnite“, sed: Hoc facite, quotiescunque biberitis etc. [1 Cor. 11, 25.] Hoc certe vult, ut faciamus; non vult, ut aut prorsus intermittamus aut contemnamus; sic enim ait: Hoc facite.

Wer aber das Sakrament nicht groß achtet, das ist ein Zeichen, daß er keine Sünde, kein Fleisch, keinen Teufel, keine Welt, keinen Tod, keine [Ge-]fahr, keine Hölle hat, daß ist, er glaubt der keines, enumerabis opera, varios fructus et commoda, quae inde enascuntur, item pericula et damna quoque, in quae coniciuntur, si minus ea praestemus. Invenies autem ista passim piorum hominum scriptis copiose explicata. Porro 18] maxime urgebis illa praecepta, in quae potissimum committere tui loci homines vides. Et ut eius rei exempla subiiciam, septimum praeceptum potissimum urgebis apud mercatores et apud illos, qui manuarum exercent operas. Commode quoque hoc praeceptum apud agricolas, servos et servas urgetur; illi enim pessima fide cum hominibus agunt et variis modis committuntur furta. Sic [R. 363

19] Hoc quoque imprimis eo loco ages, ut communeas sui officii magistratum et parentes, ut summa diligentia publica munera obeant et suos liberos ad literarum studia adhibeant. Sic autem commonendi sunt, ut sentiant se debere illa ex divino mandato, quae si minus faciant, gravissime a se esse peccatum. Quid enim illi faciunt aliud, quam ut simul et divinam et humanam administrationem tollant, non aliter atque infensissimi 20] tum Dei tum hominum hostes? Atque hic ceu in tabula spectandum propones, quam gravia damna rebus publicis dent illi, qui suos liberos non adhibent ad literas, ut in parochos, in ministros Verbi, item ad alia officia, quorum haec vita non sine magna

21] Postremo: Quoniam papae tyrannis imminuta et labefactata iam est, multos passim invenias, qui ad sacramentum nunquam accedunt, sed contemnunt plane ceu rem inutilem et non necessariam. Illi quoque impellendi et urgendi sunt, hac tamen ratione: nolo ego quemquam neque ad fidem neque ad sacramenta cogi, et male faciunt illi, qui leges, certa tempora aut certa loca ad tales res praescribunt. Sic tamen docere illi, [R. 364] qui in officio Verbi sunt, debent, ut sine nostris legibus ultro sua voluntate coacti auditores ad nos veniant et nos ministros Verbi cogant quasi ad porrigendum sacramentum. Id quod tum fiet, si sic doceas periculum esse, ne ii contemnunt sacramentum, neque digni sint, qui in Christianorum numero censeantur, qui non in anno quater ut minimum sacramentum sumant, quemadmodum neque illi in Christianorum numero censendi sunt, qui evangelio vel non credunt, vel illud non

tion, and part with its various works, uses, benefits, dangers, and injuries, as you find these abundantly stated in many books written about these matters. And particularly, urge that commandment or part most which suffers the greatest neglect among your people. For instance, the Seventh Commandment, concerning stealing, must be strenuously urged among mechanics and merchants, and even farmers and servants, for among these people many kinds of dishonesty and thieving prevail. So, too, you must urge well the Fourth Commandment among the children and the common people, that they may be quiet and faithful, obedient and peaceable, and you must always adduce many examples from the Scriptures to show how God has punished or blessed such persons.

Especially should you here urge magistrates and parents to rule well and to send their children to school, showing them why it is their duty to do this, and what a damnable sin they are committing if they do not do it. For by such neglect they overthrow and destroy both the kingdom of God and that of the world, acting as the worst enemies both of God and of men. And make it very plain to them what an awful harm they are doing if they will not help to train children to be pastors, preachers, clerks [also for other offices, with which we cannot dispense in this life], etc., and that God will punish them terribly for it. For such preaching is needed. [Verily, I do not know of any other topic that deserves to be treated as much as this.] Parents and magistrates are now sinning unspeakably in this respect. The devil, too, aims at something cruel because of these things [that he may hurl Germany into the greatest distress].

Lastly, since the tyranny of the Pope has been abolished, people are no longer willing to go to the Sacrament and despise it [as something useless and unnecessary]. Here again urging is necessary, however, with this understanding: We are to force no one to believe, or to receive the Sacrament, nor fix any law, nor time, nor place for it, but are to preach in such a manner that of their own accord, without our law, they will urge themselves and, as it were, compel us pastors to administer the Sacrament. This is done by telling them: Whoever does not seek or desire the Sacrament at least some four times a year, it is to be feared that he despises the Sacrament and is no Christian, just as he is no Christian who does not believe or hear the Gospel; for Christ did not say, This omit, or, This despise, but, This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, etc. Verily, He wants it done, and not entirely neglected and despised. This do ye, He says.

Now, whoever does not highly value the Sacrament thereby shows that he has no sin, no flesh, no devil, no world, no death, no ob er wohl bis über die Ohren darin steht, und ist zweifältig des Teufels. Wiederum, so [be-] darf er auch keiner Gnade, Leben, Paradieses, Himmelreiches, Christus', Gottes noch einiges Gutes. Denn wo er glaubte, daß er so viel Böses hätte und so viel Gutes bedürfte, so würde er das Sakrament nicht so [ungebraucht] lassen, darin solchem Übel geholfen und so viel Gutes gegeben wird. Man darf [müß] ihn auch mit keinem Gesetz zum Sakrament zwingen, sondern er wird selbst gelaufen und gerennt kommen, sich selbst zwingen und dich treiben, daß du ihm müßest das Sakrament geben.

Darum darfst du hier kein Gesetz stellen wie der Papst. Streich nur wohl aus den Noß und Schaden, Not und Frommen, [Ge]fahr und Heil in diesem Sakrament, so werden sie selbst wohl kommen ohne dein Zwingen. Kommen sie aber nicht, so laß sie fahren und sage ihnen, daß sie des Teufels sind, die ihre große Not und Gottes gnädige Hilfe nicht achten noch fühlen. Wenn du aber solches nicht treibst oder machst ein Gesetz und Gift daraus, so ist es deine Schuld, daß sie das Sakrament betrachten. Wie sollten sie nicht faul sein, wenn du schläfst und schweigst? Darum siehe darauf, Pfarrer und Prediger! Unser Amt ist nun ein ander Ding [ge]worden, denn es unter dem Papst war; es ist nun ernst und heilsam [ge-] worden. Darum hat es nun viel mehr Mühe und Arbeit, [Ge]fahr und Anfechtungen, dazu wenig Lohn und Dank in der Welt. Christus aber will unser Lohn selbst sein, so wir treulich arbeiten. Daß helfe uns der Vater aller Gnade! Dem sei Lob und Dank in Ewigkeit durch Christum, unsern Herrn! Amen.

27] perferendae, tamen neque laborum praemium neque gratias in mundo meretur. Verum nihil nos illa mundi ingratitudo cum summa impietate coniuncta moveat. Christus ipse nobis satis ampla praemia proposuit, si modo fideliter in eius vinea laboraverimus. Id autem ut commodius possimus, faxit Pater omnis gratiae, cui sit laus et gloria in saecula per Christum Iesum, Dominum nostrum! Amen.

Das andere Gebot.

Du sollst den Namen deines Gottes nicht mißbrauchen.

Was ist das? — Antwort.

Wir sollen Gott fürchten und lieben, daß wir bei seinem Namen nicht fluchen, schwören, zaubern, lügen oder trügen, sondern denselben in allen Riten anrufen, beten, loben und danken.

infernum habeat, hoc est, quod prorsus nihil horum credat, quamquam totus immersus sit peccatis et in Satanae regno gravissime teneatur captivus; contra, non gratia, non vita, non paradiso, non coelo, non Christo, non Deo neque ullo alio bono opus habeat. Nam si crederet se peccatis obrutum longissime a gratia abesse, sine dubio hoc sacramentum non contemneret, in quo contra peccata remedium et tanta omnium bonorum copia nobis exhibetur. Neque etiam huic ullis legibus opus esset, quibus ad sacramentum sumendum coereretur; ipse sua sponte accederet, coactus peccatorum mole, et te potius cogeret ad porrigendum sibi sacramentum.

Hoc fac, ut oratione, quantum potes, huius sacramenti commoda et incommoda, pericula et bona, item necessitatem cum summa utilitate coniunctam exaggeres: tum fiet, ut ultro accurrant et ipsi se cogant. Debemus Deum timere et diligere, ne per nomen eius imprecemur, iuremur, incantemus, mentiamur aut dolis fallamus, sed in omni necessitate illud invocemus, adoremus et cum gratiarum actione laudemus.

danger, no hell; that is, he does not believe any such things, although he is in them over head and ears and is doubly the devil's own. On the other hand, he needs no grace, life, Paradise, heaven, Christ, God, nor anything good. For if he believed that he had so much that is evil, and needed so much that is good, he would not thus neglect the Sacrament, by which such evil is remedied and so much good is bestowed. Neither will it be necessary to force him to the Sacrament by any law, but he will come running and racing of his own accord, will force himself and urge you that you must give him the Sacrament.

Hence, you must not make any law in this matter, as the Pope does. Only set forth clearly the benefit and harm, the need and use, the danger and the blessing, connected with this Sacrament, and the people will come of themselves without your compulsion. But if they do not come, let them go and tell them that such belong to the devil as do not regard nor feel their great need and the gracious help of God. But if you do not urge this, or make a law or a bane of it, it is your fault if they despise the Sacrament. How could they be otherwise than slothful if you sleep and are silent? Therefore look to it, ye pastors and preachers. Our office is now become a different thing from what it was under the Pope; it is now become serious and salutary. Accordingly, it now involves much more trouble and labor, danger and trials, and, in addition thereto, little reward and gratitude in the world. But Christ Himself will be our reward if we labor faithfully. To this end may the Father of all grace help us, to whom be praise and thanks forever through Christ, our Lord! Amen.
